Correspondents must enclose full name and address, and necessarily for each additional insertion. Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 23, 1879.

To the Republican Voters of Garrett county.

You are hereby requested to meet in your respective districts on

Saturday, Sept. 6th, 1879,

for the purpose of selecting five delegates
from each district to meet in county convention, in Oakland on

Wednesday, Sept. 10th, 1879,

for the purpose of selecting three delegates
to represent Garrett county to the State nominating convention which meets in Baltimore
on September 12th, and three delegates for said delegates, and those delegates of the State Central Committee for Garrett Co.

The members of the district committees are requested to make the necessary arrangements for the primaries named in this call.
By order
A. G. STUBBS,
Chairman.

FOR THE CAMPAIGN.

The coming campaign promises to be one of the most exciting on record.
Much is at stake and it behooves
every citizen of this county to prepare himself to vote with intelligence and judgment on the 4th of next November.

As the regular perusal of a live newspaper will give a clear idea of the issues at stake, and as the leading points between the Republican and Democratic parties will be clearly
and distinctly submitted in the columns of THE REPUBLICAN, this paper will be sent to any address in the county, from now until November 15th, 1879, for 25 cents.

Let every Republican in the county
act as an agent for THE REPUBLICAN
and enlarge its circulation so
that no voter in the county can plead ignorance. Send in your orders immediately.

The Frederick county Banner of Liberty suggests the following as a most excellent Republican ticket:
For Governor, Hon. Geo. A. Pearre;
For Attorney General, Hon. John E.
Smith; for Comptroller, Hon. H. H.
Goldsborough; for Clerk to Court of Appeals, Hon. Francis S. Miller. It asks, "How can a better ticket than this be made?"

Was there ever a year—a fiscal year
we mean—under a Democratic administration in this country when such a report could have been made as is contained in Commissioner
Raum's late statement to Secretary Sherman? The fact that there were no deficiencies, and that the Government did not lose a cent of the taxes collected by the Internal Revenue Bureau last year, stands alone as a Republican achievement, and one which the Democracy never attained.

A Bourbon exchange says "the Democratic party of old Maryland, though by no means in danger of defect, is, perhaps, in a more precarious condition than it has been during some years past." Quite likely.
With a notorious gambler dictating its nominations in the city, and the Ring Managers in the counties using it as a bearer of their poor relatives into office, it is a wonder it has held its own so well and long. But a party that has so many ballot-box manipulators at its back can be guilty of more unreasonable doings than these and still keep on top.

The Herald, of last week, again inflicts upon its readers a mixture of buncombe, misquotations and misstatements which we consider worthy of but brief notice from us. Here is one statement, which is a fair sample of all the rest: "We say to you that two-thirds of the whole army were Democrats, and are still Democrats." If the Union army is here meant, the absurdity of the statement is apparent to all. If the Rebel army was in the mind's eye of the editor of the Herald, he should have said three-fourths; but if he meant the two armies combined, he was nearer the truth than he usually is. The article is so fully answered by a correspondent in this issue, that we deem further editorial notice unnecessary.

We will send THE REPUBLICAN to any address in the county from now until the November election, for 25 cents, invariably in advance.

What the Republican Party has Done Senator Chandler, of Michigan, in a late speech speaks of the past record of the Republican party. It is well when we are preparing to enter upon a fresh campaign, to take a retrospect of what we have done and to contemplate the nature of the results already achieved. The results of the war and of the financial efforts of the party are really so gigantic, that it should be emboldened to enter upon the next campaign confident of its strength and eager for the victory
which is possible to it:

"It is said the Republican party has fulfilled its mission, and ought to die. No party is better prepared to die. On its monument can be written that it has fulfilled every pledge
it ever made to the American people.
Ought it to die? Thank you, gentlemen, we have made our arrangements. It took the country from the lowest depths of humiliation, and raised it to the highest pinnacle of prosperity. It found the 5 per cent.
bonds worth 68, and now the 4 per cent. are worth 102. It took the railroads which the country needed, and it has improved the rivers and harbors. Of these works labor has received the benefit. The party saved the national life by rejecting its pledge, and it redeemed another on the first of January, and saved the national honor. The panic of 1873 was worse than that through which we have passed, but we got down to hard pan in 1872, and an era of prosperity ensued. Now go over the country, and there is work for all who want it. The wheel is turning and nothing can stop it unless the people deliberately decide to tamper with an honest dollar."

More Democratic Check.

The VIIth plank of the Democratic platform for this State, adopted last week, declares that when the Democratic party regained power in the Congress of the United States it enforced an economical administration of public affairs, and made the resumption of specie payments a possible event. It will be its duty to maintain the advantage thus gained by firmly establishing the credit of the country upon the basis of coin exchangeable in all the markets of the world.

They would have us believe, from this, that the Democratic party has been the life-long friend of the resumption of specie payment, and that it was through that party that resumption is now an accomplished fact. The very reverse of this is the truth, and that party has all along been the persistent enemy to the resumption measures of the Republican party and throw every obstacle in the way to prevent their success.

And yet with bald-faced impudence now publicly claim the credit of that act. "Did you ever?" But we will let the N. Y. Tribune answer them:
"The cold wave must have started from Baltimore, and in the neighborhood of the Maryland Democratic Convention. Surely the money must have dropped several inches when that eminently respectable body calmly remarked yesterday (Thursday) that 'when the Democratic Conservative party regained power in the Congress of the United States, it enforced an economical administration of public affairs, and made the resumption of specie payments a possible event.' Fortunately there was no one to call on them for specifications of the methods by which the Democratic party had made resumption 'a possible event.'"

It was the Democratic party which denounced in its National Convention, the Resumption Act by which it was made not only "a possible event," but a reality. The Democratic party supported almost in a body the worst schemes of inflation, whether of greenbacks or silver, that were proposed in Congress, and gave the same generous aid to every attempt to delay and obstruct resumption. The country has reached specie payments in spite of the Democratic party, and not because of it, and a large share of the organization, well represented by the Democratic candidate for Governor of Ohio, is hoping and praying and preaching that resumption cannot last. The idea that Congressionaries "economized" brought it about is too absurd to be discussed. For the Democrats of Maryland, therefore, to smile in a patronizing manner upon the accomplished task and to remark that their party did it all is a masterpiece of impudence not often beheld even in politics.

The Maryland Democracy.

Maryland, we are assured, "is overwhelmingly Democratic." The convention which met on Thursday supplies a suggestive commentary on the fact by speaking in the name of the "Democratic-conservative party," as distinguished from Democracy pure and simple, and by demanding radical reform in the Democratic administration of State affairs. One-third of the platform constitutes an arrangement of the legislation and government for which the Democratic party alone responsible. Under other circumstances the resolutions in question might be set aside as the truisms of which respectable asserts itself when required to formulate the party's creed. But in Maryland they cannot be so interpreted. The reiteration of ancient maxims is at once the polite and the judicious method of imputing to the dominant section of the party sin-

of concession and omission which could not be specifically alleged without endangering the party's harmony. Thus read, the case of the Democratic-Conservative against the Democratic legislature and the army of Democratic office-holders deserves to be put on record. Extravagance prevails everywhere. Taxation is oppressive, and its proceeds are squandered, to a great extent upon unnecessary offices and officers who do not earn their salaries. The public service is prostituted to base partisan ends. And the vicious system operates in all branches of government,—State, county and municipal.
Moreover, the legislature makes no attempt to remove the abuses or to satisfy other public wants. Justice is dispensed with an uncertain hand, tardily and wastefully. Elections are neither free nor pure. If these accusations emanated from the Republican minority, they would be attributed to partisan malignity. They cannot be so disposed of. Conservative Democrats are the accusers, and the accused are the Democrats who have contrived to acquire and to keep the supremacy which is now quickly assailed.

Mr. Hamilton, whom the convention nominated for the Governorship, declares that "there is unrest; there is discontent." The unrest and discontent which obtained restrained expression in the platform of the party are not now heard of for the first time. Decent Democrats have again and again protested against the tendencies that rule in State and local affairs. Like the early opponents of Tammam, however, they have protested apologetically, with bated breath, and in the end have been found helping the men they despised.
Confident of their ability to work the machine in their own way, the dominant class have grown more and more audacious. State affairs have gone from bad to worse. The inflation has extended to counties and municipalities, whose tax-payers are in many instances learning that they are helpless in the hands of thieves.
At last, the complaints have become audible. Quite recently, a representative gathering in one of the counties brought to light some of the details of the waste which local taxation is required to sustain, and a disposition was manifested to undertake a non-partisan movement with the view of bringing the politicians who are at the bottom of the mischief to their senses. Maryland, with all respect be it said—is a groggy, en-gorged State; and its people, with evidence of extravagance and general misadministration on every side, are not yet wide enough awake to grapple with their Democratic masters.

They are not sure that it is not better to submit to Democratic thievery and misrule than to endanger the national interests of the party by the depriving it of Maryland's support.
Only on this ground is it possible to understand why the better class of the party allow themselves to be made the tools of its worst elements,
or why an independent movement does not give adequate expression to the unrest and discontent which the Democratic nominee could not wholly disregard. Evidently, however, the feeling deepens. The ingeniously constructed indictment which the convention embodied in its resolutions, is a tribute to the strength of this feeling and a warning to the party whose continuance in power it gradually endangers. The causes that are operating are identical in their nature with the causes that led to the independent movement in Mississippi, and to a growing spirit of independence wherever Democracy ascendancy is as absolute as it has been in Maryland and Southward.

Another of the Maryland resolutions sounds strangely if read in connection with the faint echo of indignation against the Federal Election Law. The State is responsible for Baltimore, which, with much that is admirable, combines an unenviable reputation as regards partisan ruffianism and fraud, particularly at elections. More Southern in its politics than many parts of the South proper, it contains characteristics of which other localities have become ashamed.
And the habitual slowness of the State,—the dogged prejudice and partisanship which repel from its borders the energy and enterprise that would otherwise be attracted by its position,—may have facilitated the employment of Baltimore tactics beyond their natural sphere. Hence the complaint of the Democratic-Conservatives with regard to the failure of the legislature to require a trustworthy registration of voters.
"Elections should be free and pure,"
the convention says, speaking with reference to its own State; and the inference, strengthened by the context, is that, there, elections are neither free nor pure. Did not it the fact derives freshness from its presentation by a Democratic convention. It does not seem to have occurred to the assembled delegates that, primarily, the justification for the exercise by the Federal government of the authority constitutionally vested in it by the Election Law, is derived from the remissness and corrupt abuse of power to which,

according to this convention, Maryland is guilty. Other States have been equally false to their duty where the freedom and purity of elections are concerned; the responsibility in every case resting upon Democrats.
The Federal government needs no other vindication for interference than that which is furnished by local indifference, or by local complicity with Democratic frauds and violence.
—N. X. Times.

When the Democracy were in a minority in Congress, and the Republicans were responsible for legislation, our friends had a habit of looking into the crooked conduct of the opposition. Whenever anything presented a peculiarly ugly look, demanding the attention of Congress, the habit was to appoint a committee of investigation. This was not a new custom, but has obtained for years and years. Nevertheless the Democrats always strenuously objected to the practice. And good reason they had for it, for the result generally exposed some of their nefarious conduct.

When they preached so loudly against these investigations we naturally supposed they were opposed to them on principle and would never themselves follow so odious a fashion.
But what did they do when they came into power? Investigating committees sprang up like mushrooms. Everybody and everything was subjected to the most thorough and in many cases useless inquiry.
Nobody was spared. Dying Dr. Lindenn was hurried to his grave by the unjust and inquisitorial conduct of Congressman Glover's committee.
Private acts of scores of individuals were needlessly dragged before the public. All sorts of immunities and insinuations were set afloat in the country, and no effort was spared to blacken the character of Republican officials. Spies and detectives and eaves-droppers were employed to do the dirty work.

And not only was this the case, but committees were set roaming (at government expense) all through the North, to inquire into the alleged grievances of soreheads and bun-nagers, characterless and worthless rascals, who were seeking a way to "get even" with the Republican party and its leaders.

One committee went to Boston to look into the charges that none but Republicans were appointed deputy marshals, and that the Republicans carried the Massachusetts election by immense frauds. Here is what that committee developed:

Commissioner Hallett stated that Republicans, Democrats and Green-backers were appointed deputy marshals. Hon. Joseph M. Weighman, chairman of the registrars of voters,
testified that there were very few names on the voting list last fall that should not have been deleted down to thirty-seven cases, and but two were convicted of fraud. In regard to the reading and writing test for voters the witness said he was in favor of it because it compelled, to a great extent, the masters of the State to read and write. In regard to the poll taxes he said that they were, to a considerable extent, paid by party organizations or candidates.

Another committee went to Rhode Island to look into a charge that soldiers had been turned out of office to make room for civilians. An associated press telegram says:

The principal witness was Jerome
B. Greene, the memorialist, whose brother was dismissed from a sailors' dismal place. It did not appear that his brother was a disabled soldier, though he had been in service, nor did he know that other soldiers who had been dismissed were of the disabled class. In regard to his charge that new appointments were mainly filled by relatives of Senator Anthony, he said he understood that two appointments were sons-in-law of Senator Anthony's consins.

Does it not create a feeling of mori-fication when one contemplates that Honorable Senators and Congressmen, paid by the taxpayers a per diem, mileage and expenses, should seriously engage in drawing out such "evidence" as the above? It is a shame that it is so. Yet this is Democratic legislation.

Besides the above, Hon. Hendrick
B. Wright, a member of the House, and company, afloat to Chicago and the Pacific coast on committee work, in an alleged effort to investigate the causes of the strike of 1877?

And Speaker Randall is summing up at Long Branch at the Government's expense, professing to reconstruct the Rules of the House!

Verily, Humbug thy name is Democracy, and investigating committees are thy "profit"—when anybody wants to go summing at the Government's expense.—Cum. Daily News.

Democratic State Platform.

On reading the conglomerate issued by the late Democratic State Convention, one finds like exclamation
"has been taken his place among the prophets?" The party that has become notorious for excessive extravagance, onerous taxation, creation of new offices for the special reward of party-men, general recklessness of legislation, and wholesale rape of the ballot-box, comes forth, with sanctimonious face and solemn whine, to lament the existence of such cor-ruptions, loudly declaring that "it is the duty of the next General Assembly" to bring relief from all these weighty grievances. Why did not the General Assembly during these many years that the State has been in the hands of the Democrats, try to bring relief? Why was the investigations into the fraudulent returns of Mr.

Carroll as Governor, so speedily squashed by the Assembly of 1872?

It would have been far more appropriate for the party to have donned the sackcloth and ashes of the penitent, and to have asked forgiveness for its past offences, than to have stolen white robes of sanctity
so that it might propose to cleanse the filth and corruption with which it has filled the Angan stables.

The Republican plank, incorporated in the Democratic platform, are not at home in the wondrous piece of music. The voters of the State will not be deceived by their presence in it to mistaking the Democratic ticket as one, from which any college-bound student can be obtained, or of relief from the misrule and extravagance that are justly chargeable against that party in this State.—Annapolis Gazette.

The Democratic press is circulating
a very plausible attack upon the late letter of Commissioner Raum in regard to the amount of revenue collections during the year, and his statement that all of it has been accounted for during the past year, and all but $2,768 up to the present time under the present administration. To make this appear as a misstatement, quotations are made from a statement of the First Comptroller in a communication to Congress, stating the amount of unadjusted collectors'
claims up to the 30th of June, 1875, as $3,769,000, and that this sum remained in default up to the 31st day of May, 1878. The failed to state, however, that about three million dollars of this sum were defalcations which occurred under the Andy Johnson regime. The balance has been considerably reduced by compromises, congressional bills of relief and the collection of judgments, but about three million dollars of it is considered as probable loss, although constant efforts have been made to collect it. Of this amount $200,000 collected but unaccounted for is one that prominent Ohio Democrat, General James B. Steadman, the fact remains, however, that the total shortage under President Hayes' administration has been about $2,750, and that the bondsmen who are responsible for this are amply able to pay it.

Another form of attack upon the same letter calls attention to the decrease in revenue receipts, and points to that as a reason for holding that the collection of a sum several million dollars less than that collected in previous years is no great credit to the administration. This decrease, however, is accounted for by the main by the enactment of Democratic legislation in extending the time for spirits to remain in bond, by which the revenue for the three under consideration was reduced by about $2,700,000. The continued agitation of the question of reducing the tax on whiskey and tobacco has a tendency to unsettle the market and decrease the production. The estimated loss from the reduction of the tobacco tax for the first year was about three million dollars. These two items, with the general depression in business for the two years named, fully accounts for the decrease in the revenue, without supposing any dereliction of duty upon the part of the collectors.

Russian merchants recently returned from the interior of China to St.
Petersburg have furnished terrible details respecting the famine which has for some time past prevailed throughout certain provinces of the Celestial Empire. They deplore having seen people die in the streets of many towns and villages from sheer starvation, and state not only that anthropophagy is practiced upon the bodies of the dead, but that hungry men attack the living and prey upon them with ferocity. One of them alleges that he was present at the examination of a mendicant who had been arrested for some petty theft, and in whose professional wallet the mangled remains of an infant were discovered. This man confessed exclusively upon the fresh flesh of human beings, as he could not surmount his antipathy to that of dead bodies. Another appalling case which came under the notice of a young man who had persuaded his father to assist him in murdering and subsequently eating a girl to whom he was betrothed. Men have been executed for killing and eating their own children, and sons have slain their fathers in order to appease the pangs of hunger. In some of the northern provinces where villages stand empty, their inhabitants having one and all perished for want of food.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 19, 1879.

That Secretary Evarts has succeeded in gaining attention in Great Britain to our grievances in connection with the Dominion fisheries question is shown in many ways. A dispatch received yesterday says the London Times "urges the necessity for an effectual settlement of the fishery dispute, but thinks the question of money value in respect of the inshore fisheries should not be lightly reopened, or submitted to fresh arbitration, and suggests an international convention on the subject." Mr.
Evarts has in many ways in the last eighteen years, earned the good-will of his countrymen, but in no way more than by the vigorous and effective manner in which he has conducted the business of his present office.
He has given more life to the State Department than it has had since the time of Daniel Webster. Probably his reward will not come for many years, for the fruits of labor such as he is performing are slow to appear. But he can wait.

The unfortunate Conkling-Sprague affair has such prominence in the daily papers that it can hardly be ignored. Quarrels which have for participants such persons as a daughter of Secretary Chase, and a leading Senator, and an ex Senator who was once the foremost business man of the country, have an interest for all of us, however much we may regret the quarrels themselves. It is now a saying of the present one that the lady in the case has been indiscreet in permitting herself to talk and write of the affair, but that there is nothing but idle gossip to show any wrong doing on her part, or on the part of Senator Conkling, is apparent to all. It is the verdict here, where all the parties are known, that this gossip has no foundation whatever in fact.

The brilliant but erratic Col. "Baz" Ingersoll has another idea. He has thought of establishing a new paper.
He has given liberally to many charitable objects, and he leaves his money drawer open so that his children and servants can take what they wish. Not satisfied with these means of disposing of his spare cash, and not having accomplished the reformation of the world, he proposes to start a new political party and pay its expenses. It will, he says, "stand for the largest liberty." LOGAN.

A constable financier in Maine declared that Greenbackism is another Christianity. A bystander remarked that it lacked one important element of the Christian religion. What is that? demanded the orator. The plan of redemption, quietly replied the unconverted disciple of honest money.

TELEGRAPHIC.

A NEW WAY OF CHECKING THE NEGRO EXODUS.

ST. LOUIS, AUGUST 18.—It happens that the party of colored men who passed through East St. Louis last night was gotten up by merchants and planters in Mississippi, with the view of giving such negroes as wish an opportunity to go West to judge of the country for themselves, and if they like it to remain; otherwise, return, the expense of the trip being nominal.

Many planters apprehend that after the present cotton crop is picked there will be an extensive exodus of negroes from the South. Some of them, therefore, got up this excursion, believing that other representative colored men who might go would be disappointed with Kansas, and return, or that their unfavorable accounts would have strong influence with the negroes generally, preventing any extensive migratory movement. Quite a large number of whites, who took advantage of the cheap rates obtained, also joined the party, and a considerable number of them have gone on to Kansas.

THE YAZOO PLAN APPLIED TO THE MORMONS.

RALEIGH, N. C., Aug. 11.—The Mormons and their opponents are having lively times in Clay and Cherokee counties. This seat has multiplied amazingly in those counties. A few days since the people of the county turned out en masse, and going to the Mormon settlements gave them thirty days in which to leave North Carolina. If they did not leave they were told that they would be made to. As soon as the party left one of the Mormon elders dispatched a courier with a letter to Gov. Jarvis, bitterly complaining of this abridgment of their religious liberty, and requesting the Governor to interfere in behalf of his people, especially the new converts. The Governor has instructed the solicitor of the district and the sheriffs of the two counties to see that order is preserved. A big row is expected.

LOCAL NEWS.

—Thos. Martin's child aged about 8 months, died Monday morning.

—Miss Anna Rogers, of Morgantown, W. Va., is visiting in town.

—Senators Thurman and H. G. Davis were in Oakland this week.

—D. E. Offutt is having his new store house painted. Blake Ward is doing the work.

—Prof. Max Beckmeier, teacher of music at Everett, Pa., is spending a few days at Rev. B. Ison's.

—200 sacks G. A. Salt for sale at Wm. P. Totten's Cheap Cash Store, Oakland, Md.

—The hall at the Deer Park Hotel Monday night was one of the most brilliant affairs of the season.

—The Republican will be furnished to subscribers from now until the close of the campaign this fall for 25 cents, in advance.

—The Odd Fellow's picnic next Wednesday promises to be the greatest event of the kind ever held here. An immense crowd will be in town.

—Senator Wiley, of Morgantown, lectured in the M. E. Church Wednesday evening last, on "Hymnology," to a large and appreciative audience.

—Hon. Simon Wolf lectured at the Charles Hotel, Wednesday night, for the benefit of the Oakland Presbyterian church, to a large and select audience.

—Among the guests at the Oakland Hotel are three members of the Chinese legation, Tam Kin Cho, Tung Mui Kiu and Tso Shoo Ke, all well educated and polished in their manners.

—Mrs. Hoopes Tuesday last received from the U. S. Treasury an order for $286.11, being the amount of prize money due her son, who was in the U. S. navy during the rebellion, and lost his life in his country's service.

—Dr. W. P. Fundenberg, Oculist, and Aurist, from Cumberland, Md., is in the "Davis House," where all those suffering from diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat can consult him. All consultations free. Hours 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. July 19.

Church Services—Sunday.
Stone Church, Preaching at 8 P. M., by Rev. John A. Scott.

Lutheran Church, Rev. Oliver C. Garrison will preach on the subject of "The Sabbath," at 10 A. M.

St. Matthew's P. E. Church—Morning Prayer and Service every Sunday, at 11 A. M. Evening Prayer at 6 P. M. Holy Communion 1st Sunday in each month, at 11 A. M. Evening Prayer every day in the week at 6 P. M.

The Soldiers' Reunion.
The date of the Soldiers' Reunion to be held in Cumberland, has been changed to Wednesday, September 3. All other arrangements stand as before announced.

Market Gardening.
Mr. H. Weber, of Cumberland, who recently purchased the Hoyer farm, adjoining town, is now here superintending the transplanting of 20,000 strawberry plants. Mr. Weber proposes to carry on his market gardening here in all its branches, in conjunction with his garden at Cumberland. We wish him abundant success.

Amors for September Term.
The following is the names of those drawn to serve as jurymen for the September term of the circuit court:

Name	District	Name	District
Samuel Kitzmiller	1	David Evans	1
Joseph Lashburn	1	Edward Foster	1
John Friend, Jr.	1	Joseph Platter	1
Benjamin St.	1	James W. Taylor	1
John Wagoner	1	John M. Albright	1
Chas. T. West	1	Charles Smith	1
Thos. Beckman	1	Joseph F. Evans	1
E. E. Brown	1	Wm. Conner	1
Geo. H. Wilson	1	Edward Hoyle	1
Brother Jackson	1	Geo. F. Longbridge	1
John Latham	1	David L. Kuhn	1
John Turner	1	Alex. E. Osborn	1
Thos. H. Campbell	1	J. T. Boyers	1
Isaac Myers	1	Henry S. Joseph	1
Alfred Sider	1	James W. Smith	1
John Sider	1	John H. Hays	1
Ed. E. Frazier	1	John F. Butler	1
E. E. Frazier	1	Philip E. Jacob	1
Wm. H. Gentry	1	John M. White	1
Wm. H. Gentry	1	John W. Wilson	1
Joseph Michael	1	Samuel Young	1
Andrew Mullin	1	Michael Dorris	1

The Sunday Excursion.
Sunday last an excursion train from Cumberland was run to Deer Park and Oakland, which was taken advantage of by citizens of the former city to visit the mountains. Members of the Washington Marine band came up on one of the early morning trains and gave what some were pleased to call a "sacred concert" at Oakland in the morning and at Deer Park in the afternoon. A disturbance occurred at the Oakland Hotel in the evening, between some of the excursionists, two of whom were arrested and fined by the corporation authorities. The citizens generally and most of the visitors desire that there be no Sunday excursions in the future or if there should be, that the fare of the railroad company's hotels be closed.

New Subscribers.

A large number of new subscribers have been added to our already large list during the past two weeks, and still they come. There is room for many more, and we hope our friends will attend to sending in the names of good people who want to read a good county paper.

Old-Fellow's Pic-Nic.

The following programme has been arranged for the Old-Fellow's picnic, to be held here on Wednesday next, 27th instant:

On the arrival of the trains the members will proceed to the grove, and after arranging for the comfort of their families and friends, will put on their regalia, the chief marshal, with one aid from each Lodge, will form the Lodges in procession and parade through the streets of the town, the bands playing alternately while going over the route. Returning to the grove they will take their position in front of the stand, when prayer will be offered, followed by an address of welcome by Thos. J. Peddicord, Esq., of Oakland. Music by the Oakland band. Rev. E. W. Lynn, of Gratton, will then deliver an address appropriate to the occasion, followed by music by the Oakland band, which will conclude the exercises, and the balance of the day will be devoted to fraternal intercourse and enjoyment.

Death of an Old Citizen.

Died at his residence in Oakland, Monday evening, August 18th, 1879, after a long and painful illness, William Coules, aged 80 years and 5 days.

Deceased was born near Frostburg, Allegany county, Md., Aug. 13th, 1799, and has lived in Allegany and Garrett counties all his life, except a year which was spent in Ohio. He engaged early in life in the mercantile business, which he followed actively and successfully up to a few years ago. He was a pioneer in the coal field of Allegany county, served in the Maryland Legislature in 1818-19, and filled the office of County Commissioner in 1829-30.

Though never attached to any branch of the Christian church, he was always looked upon as a moral, upright and thoroughly honest man, and he died in the full hope of a blessed immortality, almost his last words before his death being "Glory! Glory!" "Death was no sting." The sacrament was administered to him by Rev. John M. Davis a few hours before his death.

He leaves a wife and five children. The funeral services were held in the M. E. Church at 2 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, conducted by Revs. B. Ison, O. C. Miller, John M. Davis and P. Hamill. The remains were interred in the Odd Fellow's cemetery.

An Engineer Killed.

A terrible accident occurred Sunday morning, about 7 o'clock, on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, between Rawlings Station and Black Oak Bottom, about sixteen miles west of Cumberland. A freight train, drawn by engine No. 43, run into the rear end of a stock train, drawn by engine No. 63. The stock train had been delayed by a disabled freight train. Both trains were going at a good rate of speed, and the force of the shock was such as to throw the freight engine down the steep embankment at this point. The engineer, John Ellis McDonald, who lived at Martinsburg, W. Va., was instantly killed, and the fireman was severely, but not dangerously injured. No one else was injured. The freight engine and several cars were wrecked and a large quantity of stock killed. All trains going east and west were delayed at this point, as the road was completely blocked. McDonald, the engineer, was 31 years old, and leaves a wife and three children at Martinsburg.

Influence of Newspapers.

A school teacher, who had been engaged a long time in the profession and witnessed the influence of a newspaper upon the minds of families and children, writes as follows: "I have found it to be a universal fact, without exception, that scholars of both sexes and of all ages who have access to newspapers at home, when compared with those who have not, are:

1. Better readers, excellent in pronunciation, and consequently read more understandingly.
2. They are better spellers, and define words with ease and accuracy.
3. They obtain practical knowledge of geography in almost half the time it requires of others, as the newspapers have made them acquainted with the location of the important places, nations, their government and doings on the globe.
4. They are better grammarians, for having become so familiar with every variety of style in the newspaper, from the commonplace of advertisements to the finished and classical diction of the statesman. They more readily comprehend the meaning of the text, and constantly analyze its construction with accuracy.

5. They write better compositions, using better language, containing more thought, more clearly and more correctly expressed.

6. Those young men who have for years been readers of newspapers always take the lead in debating societies, exhibiting a more extensive knowledge upon a greater variety of subjects, and expressing their views with greater fluency, clearness and correctness.

WHEN TO DRINK WHISKY.—Eat oysters only in the months that have an "r" in their names, and drink whiskey only in the months that have a "k" in their names.—Exchange.

They spent October in Garrett with a "k."—Frostburg Journal.

It seems that the Journal man never will get done pecking at our county. Last month he, in obedience we suppose, to the behest of A. P. Gorman, the "grand harmonizer" of Democracy, visited Oakland, or rather, visited the aforementioned gentleman, for so engrossed was he with other matters that he forgot to call on his brother printers. We guess the reason he did not call was because he forgot a little too much the latter part of the above mentioned injunction. To the outside world he was supposed to be just fresh from the Philological convention which had just closed its labors in Philadelphia. This opinion was based upon the fact that with smiles and grins and lies and other little unpronounceable interjections, he insisted upon spelling daily thusly: Zungheide.

Garrett does not want any changes in hers.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending August 21:

Henry Fuller and wife in Matilda Darst, lot on National road, west of Jessville; $1.

Jas. W. Wilson and others to H. G. and T. B. Davis, Military lot No. 4229; $250.

Robert Lee and wife to George D. Lee, part of a tract of land containing 25 acres; $150.

John M. Miller and wife to Jefferson Guard, part of a tract of land containing 6 1/2 acres; $109.

OAKLAND, MD., Aug. 18, 1879.

ED. REPUBLICAN, Dear Sir:
Since the announcement that The Republican will be furnished for the campaign at the reasonable rate of 25 cents per copy, I now quite a gratifying increase in its circulation. This is an encouraging indication of the success of the party at the coming election.

There never was greater necessity for the general dissemination of wholesome truth than there is at this time. Utterly regardless of truth and decency, the Herold is cramming the minds of its readers with the most absurd perversion of the truths of history, as well as of current events, evidently depending upon a low order of intelligence and the general ignorance of its readers to permit it from its well-merited scorn for its credulity. Nobody, not even Democrats, care to be treated weekly to a tirade of nonsense which everybody who has sense enough to enjoy good health knows to be palpable and ridiculous fabrications. Is the truth, above all things, is what the Democratic politicians would keep from the people. Then send along The Republican and let every voter in every nook and cranny have a chance to pursue its columns, and while the Herold disseminates the poison, let the antidote accompany it and let us see to it that we send out plenty of the antidote.

The readers of the Herold will never know by reading that paper what The Republican says, any more than they will know what is transpiring in the political world, or what has in fact occurred. "Check," in lieu of fact, should be the head line of its every pointed utterance.

In its last week's issue appears, in quotation marks, quite an array of alleged admissions by The Republican, of the worst sentiment of party, not a word of sentiment of which was correct. Now if a newspaper assuming to teach, to instruct and to enlighten its readers, has not the courage to quote faithfully the language of an opponent, a trick so easily exposed, how can it be accepted as a faithful chronicler of events of which the reader can have no personal knowledge. The Saint Louis whiskey ring has, on more occasions than one, been the subject of comment in the columns of the Herold. The amount stolen by the Republicans there, if I remember right, is modestly put down at a thousand million dollars. The Herold would have its readers believe that said ring was composed solely of Republicans.

So far as my observation extends three fourths of the distillers, as well as vendors of whiskey are Democrats; but did a democrat—white souled cherub that they are—ever think of evading the tax or defrauding the revenue? Oh! no, no, no; perish the thought!

Whatever of opposition to the tax on whiskey was developed in Congress came from the Democrats, for no less an advocate of free whiskey than of free fraud at elections, both being essential to the success of his party. The recent adventures of U. S. Marshals and detectives in the "bright, sunny South" with the "moon-shiners" of that section, attest the innocence, as well as the honesty of thirsty Democrats.

Gen. Babcock, the President's private Secretary, against whom nothing was ever proven, was surmised to have had dealings with the St. Louis whiskey ring; the Herold, therefore, at this distant day, lifts its hands in holy horror, and points at an imaginary billion of stolen booty, which, it complains, went into the wrong camp.

Bellevue, whose crime was that he allowed his wife to speculate in post trade-ships, the never was accused of stealing or in any way misappropriating a cent of government funds, was promptly tried and dismissed the public service, and was not "screened," as the Herold says.

But the cheekiest thing ever gotten up in the history of journalism, is the declaration by the Herold, that two-thirds of the Union soldiers were, and are, Democrats. Oh! shame, where is thy blush? This astounding announcement is only equalled by Ben Hill's recent declaration that the Democratic party had always been for the Union, while the Republicans had always been against it. Everybody knows better than that; Democrats as well as Republicans.

Nine Democrats out of ten will tell you, if they are honest, that they could not under any circumstances have been induced to enter the Union service. When they were drafted they ran away and joined the rebels, or hid themselves in the woods, or if they enlisted they did it for the bounty and deserted on the first favorable opportunity.

In the South the Democrats were generally in the army; and I should not be at all surprised any day to see solemnly announced in the Herold, that they fought for the Union.

In the North, there were of course, some noble exceptions; some as good soldiers as we had, were Democrats, but being Democrats did not make them better soldiers. They acted outside of their party and against its spirit and its teachings; but they were the exception and not the rule.

No sir, Mr. Editor, this country was not saved from dismemberment by Democrats. They were found croaking, grumbling, complaining, doing and saying what they could to hamper, to embarrass and to discourage the cause of the Union. They were found furnishing information and supplies to the rebels; organizing secret societies in the Northern States, such as the Knights of the Golden Circle, &c., to strike the Government in the back in case an opportunity offered. It was the Democratic party in Ohio, which nominated and supported Vallandigham for Governor, in 1861, because he was known to be a blatant, outspoken rebel, and had on that account been tried by a court-martial and banished from the country.

They were Democrats, who, in July of the same year, engaged in the draft riots in New York city; who mobbed Republican newspapers, burned negro orphan asylums, hung negroes up to lamp posts for no offence only they were black; who plaged and plundered the city, and held high carnival until the boys in blue suppressed them. It was the Democratic National convention which in 1861 declared the war a failure, and demanded peace at any price. It was the Democrats who were peace men in time of war, and were great war men in time of peace.

While, as you say, we had our Blaines, our Shermans, our Wilsons, and our Colfaxes, you had your Voorhees, your Vallandighams, your Curs and did what they could to encourage the prosecution of the war, while yours said and did what they could against it.

When you say that we spent 200 millions on the Navy in 11 years from 1855 to 1866 while the Democrats and Whigs spent only a little more than half as much in the preceding fourteen years you must remember that Capt. Ericsson's monitors revolutionized naval warfare and the iron platted monitors of to-day cost many times more than the wooden craft of ante bellum times; that the 12 and 21 pounders formerly used in the navy are more toys by the side of the guns now in use; that, in fact, the whole navy had to be recast, so as to conform to modern requirements.

When you say we took away from the people, territory equal in extent to all the New England States, New York and Pennsylvania, they ought to know that we did not move the property, that we returned every alternate section, which being nearly the railroads sells readily for double the amount, so that the Government loses nothing, and the people have a homestead of 160 acres of Government land anywhere, or 80 acres in side of a railroad grant simply by living on it; that under this arrangement the people are more than satisfied, and the North Western States and territories are filling up at a rate that will soon deprive the Solid South of its power to do mischief.

When you say we spent $42 millions in the Indian Department in 15 years while in the preceding 29 years the cost was only 70 millions, I answer that formerly the Indians roamed at will over the Territories, but since the construction of the Pacific railroad and its branches, and the developments of the mining interests in the Rocky Mountains, the Indians have been either lured out or whipped out and are now on reservations.

When you say we spent in the War Department in the four years from 1866 to 1870 357 millions while it only cost $21 millions to whip England and defray all of the expenses of the Department for fifty years, I—well, I don't believe that.

When you say nobody outside the ring, whatever that may be, had a chance to make any money, you forget that your late Presidential candidate, your own, cleared several millions, and by tough sweating avoided paying his taxes, managed to keep it.

Very Truly,

P. S.—We are pickeling a rodaleo.

The amount of Internal Revenue collected for the year ended June 30, 1879, was $113,115,830, every dollar of which was paid into the Treasury without the loss of a cent. This is unprecedented in the history of this Nation. The cost of collecting, too, was less than 3 1/2 per cent, including all expenses; which is less than it costs the British Government to collect her revenue with her boasted civil service system.

Facts like these are the delight of taxpayers. What business man is there in Garrett County who manages his business without loss? In what State and in what County are the taxes collected for less than 3 1/2 per cent, including all items of expense? In the light of such indisputable facts as these, what becomes of the assertions, loudly made, of Democratic Congressmen, that our civil service is honeycombed with corruption and waste? Under what Democratic Administration was the Treasury Department managed with such ability and efficiency, as it is now being run by Honest John Sherman?

Commissioner Baum's letter reporting to Secretary Sherman the condition of the internal revenue accounts is a remarkable showing. During the past fiscal year $12,000,000 have been collected and paid into the Treasury without any loss or deficiency, and the entire amount which is in default upon the collections of three years, amounting to $213,000,000, is just $2,756. This sum will be recovered by suits. And yet Democratic members of the Senate strove to show at the last session of Congress that the public service was honeycombed with corruption and wastefulness. When they can prove that any private business, however scrupulously conducted, is managed with so small a percentage of loss, the country may listen to their complaints, but not while there is such a balance sheet as this before it.—N. Y. Tribune.

It was announced a few days ago that Mrs. Chisholm had bravely determined, against the advice of her friends, to return to Mississippi to testify against the assassin of her husband. Mrs. Chisholm, however, will not go alone, nor will she be friendless at the trial. Hon. Stewart L. Woodford, United States District Attorney in New York city, has offered to accompany the heroic woman and will take his two daughters along as companions for her. This will probably put a different aspect upon affairs. The State's attorney in Kemper county will not dare neglect his duty in the prosecution of the murderers with one of the best New York lawyers watching the proceedings.

THE TOURNEY.—The Baltimore daily News ridicules the tournament after the following fashion:

"The young farmer may now be seen charging on horseback at small rings in secluded places on his farm, preparatory to sticking a rooster in his hat and calling himself 'Knight of Podunk' or 'Swamp-poodle,' which will entitle him to poke a fence rail through an inch ring nine times and put a gilt bridle on the head of some other knight's sister and listen to an hour's oration by a building orator on the revival of chivalry."

The St. Louis Protestant argues that William Lloyd Garrison was an infidel because he did not believe that the Bible justified negro slavery. This is a revival of the logic of the religious defenders of slavery twenty years ago.

The right thing in the right place is without doubt Dr. Bull's Body Syrup, the best remedy for babies badly teething. Price 25 cents a bottle.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

COMMISSIONERS' MEETING.

OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, OAKLAND, MD., AUG. 21, 1879.

In compliance with the Act of Assembly of 1878, the Commissioners will meet in their office in Oakland.

On Monday, Sept. 8th, 1879,

for the transaction of such business as may come before the Board.

By order, W. H. HAGANS, Clerk.

S 233

ORDER NISI.

Andrew Umbel and others, Exs. Equity, in Isaac Meyers, and others, J. for Garrett Co.

IT IS ORDERED this 14th day of August, in the year 1879, by the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, as a Court of Equity, that the said made and reported by Isaac Meyers, Trustee for the said of the real estate of Jacob Meyers, dec'd, be ratified and confirmed unless before the 14th day of September, in the year 1879, a copy of this order, in the year 1879, be shown to the said Orphans' Court, at Oakland, at least once a week for three successive weeks before the 14th day of September next.

The report states the amount of sales to be $20.

JOSEPH DOWDIT, C. J. O. C.

ANDREW L. M. DAVIS, J. O. C.

WILLIAM HARVEY, J. O. C.

True Copy. Wm. L. RAVENSON, Register.

AUG. 21-30

NOTICE.

I hereby warn all persons from buying or trading for two notes given by John Shaker to Lewis Lininger, as I will not pay them.

JACOB SHAKER, Auctioneer, Md.

S 234

Notice to Contractors.

OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, OAKLAND, MD., AUG. 11, 1879.

Notice is hereby given, that sealed proposals will be received by the County Commissioners of Garrett county, until

Monday, September 8th,

at 2 o'clock P. M., for the building of a bridge over the North Fork of Cashman's River, on the site of the old bridge on the road leading from McHenry to Grantsville. Plans and specifications as follows:

Length of bridge about sixty feet; 14 feet wide; 2 stone abutments to be built of split stone, about the same height as the former abutments; double chords, King posts and braces; weatherboarded with white pine shingles; chords to be of white pine; all other timbers to be of good, sound white oak. The bridge and approaches thereto to be completed and ready for travel on or before the 1st of December next.

Amount for building said bridge to be levied at the annual levy of 1880. The Commissioners reserve the right to reject any and all bids. By order County Commissioners. W. H. HAGANS, Clerk.

S 164

Notice to Tax-Payers.

Jasper Guard, Collector for 3d Collection District, will be in Oakland on Thursday, 21st day of August.

Persons wishing to pay the 5 per cent. will do well to call and settle up at that time, as I have no duplicates for 1879, and this will be the only chance in the present month. All persons owing taxes for 1878 will please come in and pay up, or I will proceed to collect by law.

Notice to Contractors.

OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, OAKLAND, MD., AUG. 11, 1879.

Notice is hereby given, that sealed proposals will be received by the County Commissioners of Garrett county, until

Monday, September 8th,

at 2 o'clock P. M., for the building of a bridge over Buffalo Creek, opposite the Kinross place, from its mouth to the road leading from McHenry to Grantsville. Plans and specifications as follows:

Length of bridge about fifty feet; width, 14 feet; 2 rough stone abutments, built substantially on solid foundation; double chords, King posts and braces; weatherboarded and roofed with white pine shingles; flooring and all other timbers to be of good, sound white oak. Said bridge and approaches thereto to be completed on or before the 1st day of December next.

The amount for building the above bridge to be levied at the annual levy of 1880. The Commissioners reserve the right to reject any and all bids. By order County Commissioners. W. H. HAGANS, Clerk.

S 164

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS.

OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, OAKLAND, MD., AUG. 11, 1879.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That Sealed Proposals will be received by the County Commissioners of Garrett county, until

Monday, September 8th,

at 2 o'clock P. M., for the building of a bridge over the Yongelohony River, at Ashby's ford.

Said bridge to be built on log abutments, with a triangular log pier in the middle of the river and to be ballasted with stone. Timbers to be hauled across the span and planked over, with a railing on each side, similar to the bridge across Snowy Creek near its mouth. Said bridge and approaches thereto to be completed on or before the 1st of December next.

The amount for building said bridge to be levied at the annual levy of 1880.

The Commissioners reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

By order County Commissioners. W. H. HAGANS, Clerk.

S 164

A Clergyman Who Ought to Be Encouraged.

Not long since a clergyman within four thousand miles of the Connecticut River resigned his charge. He was a preacher of more than average ability, a strong, original thinker, a good writer, and a man of unblemished character. Soon afterward a leading member of his church, a deacon, was met by a well-known Hartford divine, and something like the following conversation ensued:

"I was sorry to hear that Brother Blank had resigned. I have always liked him. He is regarded as a very able man, isn't he?"

"Well, yes, he is" (hesitatingly). "O, yes, he is an able man."

"But he is a first-rate preacher, isn't he?"

"Yes, yes; he's a very good preacher."

"And he's a man of the highest Christian character, so we have always thought here."

"Well, yes, O, yes, he's a good Christian."

"But there must be something the matter, deacon? Why do you hesitate so, and say 'Well, yes,' has Brother Blank been guilty of anything wrong?"

"I know of a church that I think he is just the man for, and I mean to recommend him very highly. Have you any reason to suppose that he would not give satisfaction?"

"Well, deacon, Mr. Blank is all you say about him, but I'm afraid he's not calculated to make a successful pastor."

"Why not, deacon? You surprise me very much."

"Well, I will tell you one reason. Mr. Blank lived next to a neighbor whose hens and chickens troubled him very much by digging up his garden. He spoke about it several times, but it did not go; those fowls kept in his garden all the time. And what do you think he did? Instead of shooting some of them, or building a high board fence around his garden, he came here to Hartford and bought the best game-cock he could find and took him home and turned him loose in the garden. The next day that neighbor heard a great commotion among the poultry, and when he looked over the fence there were all his hens and chickens lying in windows and the game-cock walking over the bodies and crowing. Now, you can't say that that was unchristian conduct, but it was certainly calculated to destroy Mr. Blank's usefulness in that section."

"And when the Hartford divine heard the full extent of Brother Blank's offense he roared with shoulder-shaking laughter, which might have been heard at Talcott tower, and he said that any clergyman who could devote to effectual a method of disposing of his neighbor's chickens deserved an additional diploma, and he wondered what the proper letters should be and whether it should be on sheep-skin or chicken parchment."

—Hartford Courier.

A Cat's Chicks.

Mrs. Thomas Leonard, wife of a bricklayer, living at 73 Fifth street, South Brooklyn, has a very natural out and a very simple-minded brood of chickens. The chickens were left motherless before they had cracked the shell by the cruel desertion of the hen to whose care the eggs had been consigned. The cat immediately took possession of the nest, hatched out the chickens, and is now educating them, according to her lights. Mrs. Leonard, who is very proud of the queer family, said to a reporter yesterday:

"I put six eggs in my old hen, and she took care of them until about three days before the chickens were expected to come out. One evening I noticed that she was not acting like a setting hen, and I went to the nest in a barrel, thinking she would be spoiled. The barrel was lying on its side, with the mouth towards the fence and only far enough from it to allow the hen to pass in and out. I put my hand into the barrel, and was surprised and scared to feel a soft, warm fur. Then I heard a cat mew and I called 'Tibbie.' The cat mew and again I found it was my own. I tried to coax her out, but she wouldn't come. She was lying with the eggs gathered under her and I concluded to let her stay there. She stuck to the nest for three days, coming out occasionally to get something to eat and scampering back as soon as she had satisfied her appetite. A week ago last Sunday morning I went into the yard and heard the 'peep' of some chickens. I looked into the barrel and there saw five chickens which the cat was lying. The sixth shell was broken but the chicken had not come out. I ran in and told Tom—that's my husband—of my discovery, but he laughed at me and said I was trying to fool him into getting up early on a Sunday morning. That evening the cat brought five chickens up into the kitchen. The sixth had died. I carried the barrel in and put it in the front room and they took possession of it and seemed comfortable. But within a day or two so many people came to see them that Tibbie got nervous and carried off her family. She hid them under an old closet down stairs, where I found them. I brought them up again, and put them in this big cage in an out-of-the-way corner, and there you can see how contented they are."

Tibbie was lying curled up on a feather pillow in the cage with her foster family around her. Two of them were straddled over her back and two more were nestled between her legs. The fifth was absent, having been purchased by a lady of Brooklyn Heights. Mrs. Leonard took the chicks in her hand and carried them into the back room. The cat lay perfectly quiet until she heard their cries of distress; then she ran out of the cage, bounded over the board which Mrs. Leonard had placed across the foot of the doorway to confine the chicks to the limits of the front room, and hurried out. She mew gently, and the chickens ran to her. Putting her paw under one she seized it with her mouth and carried it gently to the nest. When she reached the board at the door she did not jump over hastily as a commonplace cat would, but rose on her hind legs with maternal gentleness placed her fore paws on the top, and with a swift but easy motion slid to the floor on the other side without jarring the chicks. She laid it in the nest and repeated the operation until all four were brought back, when she lay down beside them contented. Tibbie is about eighteen months old and is a real tortoise shell.—N. Y. World.

A Merited Rebuke.

I had been told that our young friend Spooling and his wife did not live as happily as they might, but I could not credit it.

They had been married not two years yet and I had known them both from childhood. I had known Spooling for a smart, bright-faced, healthy boy who was called the best scholar in school. He was honorable to a fault and kind—or, at any rate he meant to be kind.

I had known that he was very methodical in all he did and that he was rigid in his observation of certain rules of life and speech. And it seems he had tried to make Lottie as precise and particular as was himself, but it could not be done. She was too light-hearted, too gay and frolicsome, too prone to snarl a chord from the first string that came to her hand. And yet she was full of practical common sense, and as good at heart as women can be.

Some time after a supper party at Parker's, I met Spooling and his wife, the happiest and gayest of the happy ones.

At length Mrs. Spooling, urged there by a lady who sat at my side, began to tell me some of her life and how she had thrown from her carriage on one of the mountains in Switzerland and she must have perished but for the accidental arrival of an English party.

"For," said she, "I had left my husband at a little mountain inn and we were a party of ladies on that trip altogether. Why, where I fell was full twenty feet below the road-bed and only the intervening trees and bushes and tangled vines saved me from being crushed to death."

"Keep within bounds, Lottie dear. You do not mean twenty feet," corrected the husband, with one of the very smoothest and most patronizing of smiles.

"I mean just twenty feet, George, I call it just as it looked and appeared to me. There was twenty feet of calamity at my feet."

"But, my dear, you know we measured the ledge or cliff and found it to be twelve feet and four inches. That is not quite twenty, is it?"

"Did you ever," cried the wife, flushing but still holding hard upon her good nature. "That husband of mine beats Thomas at doubling. If he were to prove St. Peter's den by his measuring tape and find it half an inch below Michael Angelo's standard, I do verily believe he would announce the whole trick as a fraud. Now, don't stick to that absurd measure of yours. Let it go as I told it, twenty feet, for I know and shall declare that I fell twenty feet."

"Then," said Spooling, with a red spot on either cheek, for everybody was laughing at him, "you will declare what is not true."

"I say it, Lottie."

"Say I would tell an untruth?"

"If you say you fell twenty feet on that occasion upon the Swiss mountain, I will believe you."

"George Spooling, you are a brute! Just exactly a brute!"

"Lottie—"

"Stop, sir. We are in company. Don't tempt me further here. I warn you!"

And with a gulp, and with bitter grace, he accepted the warning.

After the supper was over a few of us were standing in one of the deep bay windows when George Spooling joined us.

"I am sorry, gentlemen," he said, in tones as sorrowful and oily as could be commanded, "that my wife so exposed herself this evening. I beg you will believe that she possesses grand qualities, notwithstanding her unfortunate weakness."

Colonel Lynde was of our number—a gray-haired veteran of a hundred pitched battles on the contested field—a man standing six feet in his stockings and built like a Hercules—a man ordinarily as mild and gentle as a child, and towering in his bursts of righteous indignation.

"Mr. Spooling," said the Colonel, "with a look of concern and hesitation, 'I marked well the whole course of your passage with your wife at the supper-table, and were I that wife's brother I should be strongly tempted to horse-whip you if you did not make to her the most complete and humble apology! What was it to us whether the exact measurement of a certain Swiss rock was twenty inches or twenty miles? The lady simply in the freedom and fulness of her heart gave us her impressions on the occasion. The only salient fact in the whole affair was just as she stated it. You, sir, snapped her up with a needless and idiotic correction, and then crushed her by giving her the lie. She told you the truth, sir; you acted the brute outright to-night, and I fear not to wager $100 to be given to the poor of our town, that not a man or woman of the present company will dispute me."

Spooling cast his eyes around, and saw but too plainly that he had no sympathy there.

Of course the remainder of the evening was far from joyous to him; but I am able to say that the event proved a blessing to him.

He did meditate upon the speech of the Colonel, and when he found that others—all, in fact, whose opinion was worth having, were equally emphatic in condemnation of his course he concluded that it would be for his interest to turn over a new leaf.

Since that evening of the supper party he has not corrected his wife in public. I do not know what he has done at home, but if we might judge from the sunlight always upon Lottie's face, we should say he had given up the evil habit altogether; a habit easy enough to fall into, but with consequences hard to overcome.

The wise country cousin now gets an account of the burning of his house inserted in the papers and sends it to his city relatives.—Boston Post.

Marrying His Own Sister.

The following story is well authenticated. The names of persons and places are changed for obvious reasons. Years ago a family, consisting of father, mother and two children, lived in a small town in Eastern Ohio. The head of the family, Mr. Lawton, was a lawyer and speculator, and had been a merchant. He had grown rich, partly for those days, and was noted for his keen business sagacity and his honest and kindly heart. His wife had been a delicate, pretty girl when he married her, and after her second child was born her health broke down, and she became a confirmed invalid. The couple had two children—a boy named Michael, who was, at the time referred to, about eight years old, and Mabel, who was then a "baby," and was about five years old.

Mabel was a pretty child, and her parents petted her and dressed her in a style that made her the envy of all the mothers in the neighborhood.

One day Mabel went into her mother's room and told her she wanted to go and play with some other little girls who lived on the next street.

Mrs. Lawton gave her consent, but told her to be sure to come home to dinner.

Mabel promised, kissed her mother and ran out of the room—out of the world, as far as the poor mother was concerned, for she never saw her again.

Mabel did not come home to dinner, and at supper time Michael was sent after her. He soon returned, with a pale, frightened face, and told his father that his sister had started for home at noon, and no one knew where she was.

Search was made for her in every direction, but without success. No trace of the lost one could be discovered.

A month afterward the mother died heart-broken and the father sold his property and became a homeless wanderer, with but one object in life—the finding of his lost one.

Taking his son with him, he traveled from State to State, visiting public institutions where children were cared for, and going through cities making inquiries which brought him no result.

From the United States the search was extended to Europe, and, finally, in a Spanish city Mr. Lawton caught a local fever and died, leaving his son, then a boy of nineteen, all that he had—no near relative except a brother, who had gone to California in the first flush of the gold fever and had never been heard of afterward.

Michael Lawton came back to this country and still holding hard upon his good nature, that he deterred him from law in the office of a famous New York lawyer, and after being admitted to the bar he went West and made his home in a newly-settled State, where he soon took up his abode.

His sister, Mabel, a young girl, Lawton went to New York to visit a college chum, Marchmont, who had married and gone into business. Marchmont had several young sisters, and one, Merton Lawton, was introduced to Michael.

Brought to the city by a mutual friend, the couple fell in love with each other, and they were married the following spring, and went to Lawton's western home, where they lived happily for six years, during which time two children were born to them.

Miss Letcher told Lawton after their engagement that she was an orphan, that her parents had died when she was a child, and she could not remember them at all. She had been named by a kind-hearted lady in Eastern Ohio. She had taught school and made sufficient money to enter a school in the East, where she studied music, and after she had graduated she got a class of girls for pupils, and while thus engaged she met Lawton.

Lawton was sitting in his office one day, when an odd-looking elderly man came in and asked for "Mr. Lawton."

An introduction took place, and, after the usual preliminaries, the stranger said he was a lawyer from San Francisco.

He then asked Lawton if he would tell him his father's name and where he had been born. Although surprised at the questions, Lawton complied, and the stranger named by a kind-hearted lady in Eastern Ohio.

"You have heard your father speak, I suppose, of a brother who went to California a good many years ago, and who did not write home for a long time. Well, I am his representative, and I have been here an hour he died. Years ago he went to — (mentioning the town where Lawton was born), and there he heard of the manner in which your little sister, Mabel, had been named by a kind-hearted lady in Eastern Ohio. He tried to find him for awhile, but did not succeed, and then he went home again."

"He made up his mind to find your sister if it was possible. He employed a great deal of money in the search. A year ago he died, and in his will he directed that you should be his heir and your sister was discovered. In that event she was to have half of his property. I saw your name in a paper some weeks ago, and, on making inquiries, I became convinced that you were the nephew of the man who was my friend and who intrusted me with the care of his property, and now—here the speaker paused a instant—"now I have something still more strange to tell you. We have found a trace of your sister. She was stolen by a party of vagrants for the clothes and trinkets she wore, and was taken to a place in Ohio. She was taken ill, and was left with a good-hearted lady, who adopted her as her daughter. After her recovery she could not remember her name or where she had lived. When the lady died Mabel taught school for several years, and then she went East to study music. After she left school, I think she went to New York, but I cannot say. We have no trace of her for six years. She was named after the lady who adopted her, and was known as Mabel Letcher."

"Known as what?" screamed Lawton.

Mabel Letcher.

"Great God, now she has been my wife for six years." It was so, indeed. Further examination showed beyond question that Mabel Letcher and Mrs. Michael Lawton were one and the same person.

The agony of the two people can be imagined. In their eyes they had shared beyond hope, captivity. They separated. Mrs. Lawton is still living in a town in Massachusetts, where she has been for many years.

The children are at school, and Michael Lawton is in his grave. He gave up all his business, grew frightfully dissipated, and after spending nearly all the money he had reserved for himself, he wandered to the lovely little Maryland farm, where he strove to bury his past, and where he lived a life of only one clover blossom as he sweet about his grave and the wild flowers bloom as sweetly there as though he who sleeps in that quiet nook was at last at rest.—Reading (Pa.) Eagle.

A Romantic Story.

The romantic vicissitudes of the early life of the Countess Solange de Kramer have once more become the talk of the Paris salons, and they are, indeed, so extraordinary, that, used as materials for a novel, they would spoil the book by their lack of verisimilitude. One night, in 1891, a little girl about a year old was deposited in the drawer of the Foundling Hospital at Brest. She was dressed with much finery, and a note, attached to her skirts, told that her name was Solange, and that she would be raised by her father. The claim was never made, however, and in due time the child was transferred to the Orphan Asylum, to be educated there. As she grew up, she developed a most extraordinary beauty, but her intellect appeared to be very weak, and she suffered from frequent nervous fits. When she was twelve years old she was sent into the streets to sell flowers, and her beauty and modesty attracted many people's good will, but she grew weaker and weaker, and at last she died. According to French custom, she was buried in an open casket, and, as it was winter, the soil was frozen, she was laid into the grave, only covered with a thin layer of sand. During the night she awoke, and, pushing the sand away, she crept out from this grave. Not exactly understanding what had taken place, she was not so very much frightened, but, in crossing the glacis between the cemetery and the fortifications, she was suddenly stopped by the outcries: "Qui vive," and, as she did not answer, the sentinel fired, and she fell to the ground. Brought into the guard-house, her wound was found to be very slight, and she soon recovered; but her singular history and also her great beauty had made so deep an impression on a young Lieutenant of the garrison (Kramer) that he determined to be her protector, and sent her to one of the most fashionable educational establishments in Paris. During the next few years Kramer was much tossed about by the war, but when, in 1818, he returned to Paris, he found Solange a full-grown woman, not only beautiful, but accomplished and spirited, with no more trace of intellectual weakness or nervous fits. He married her, and for several years the couple lived happily in Paris. Meanwhile, the investigations were made concerning the girl left, in 1801, in the Foundling Hospital at Brest, and as these investigations were made by the Swedish ambassador, and in a somewhat official manner, they attracted some attention. Captain Kramer heard about the affair, and saw a note to the effect that, a month later on, the Ambassador was in state to bring Mme. Kramer's formal acknowledgment from her father, the former General Bernadotte, the present King Charles XIV., of Sweden. Captain Kramer and his wife went immediately to Stockholm; they were ennobled, etc., and their son has just now been appointed attaché to the Swedish Legation in Paris.—Paris Letter.

A Semanahist's Freak.

A strange story comes from St. Francis County. In the St. Francis River bottoms there lives a man named George H. Toban. With him live a wife and a thirteen-year-old son. This family has resided in a quiet way, so far as any one knows, until recently, when the first strange bubble arose on the lake of the family's every-day life.

One morning, just after the yellow fever epidemic began, the father, upon opening his door, found a card lying on his doorstep. On the card were written the words: "Yellow fever, watch and caution was paid to the matter, but when again and again similar cards were found, Mr. Toban became concerned, and not being as clear of superstition as a festival is of conscience, he regarded the cards as ominous, and as a warning of an approach of the terrible disease. Every night he'd read gloomy reports from Memphis, and every morning found the card "yellow fever." Finally he determined to watch and caution himself, and on the doorstep remained all night. No one appeared, but when the darkness was dispelled by the streaks of daylight he saw a card lying on the step beside him. Catching it up and examining it, he saw the words "yellow fever" written in exactly the same hand that had marked the cards before. Then there was indeed anxiety in the family. The fever reports grew gloomier, and the family settled in the bottom lands contiguous to the place dried up, and the alligators not only appeared in great numbers, but began a warfare on his live stock. He determined to organize a party and make an incursion into their camp, and arming themselves with an ax, a shot-gun and a boat-hook they sallied forth. The latter implement was, however, most useful, as the fathers had narrowed the banks of the bayous, and it was only by running the boat-hook down and disturbing the quiet, that they could be invited to the top, the animal in every instance becoming enraged, and grasping in its teeth the handle by which he was brought to the surface and dispatched. The mode adopted worked well, as eight were killed on the first day, seven on the second, and the third attempt brought out sixteen, the largest of which measured ten feet six inches. In addition to this about one barrel of eggs was captured and destroyed and snakes without number were slaughtered.—Pensacola (Fla.) Gazette.

The Next Astley Belt Contest.

The New York Herald says arrangements for the fourth international walking match for the Sir John Astley belt, now held by E. P. Weston. The managers of the Madison Square Garden in this city have made a contract with Weston to select their establishment as the ground for the match. The walk is the result of a challenge from Rowell to Weston on the 22d of June last, at which time he deposited $500 in the office of Bell's Life in London. Since that time a considerable correspondence has been held with Weston, who finally accepted the offer of the Garden and cabled his consent on Thursday.

Yesterday John Ennis, the walker formerly entered the match, and sent his $500 entrance money to the office of Bell's Life by cable. "Blower" Brown and Panchot have also entered. It is expected that O'Leary will send his money across also. In a communication to the managers of the Garden Weston says that he will leave England for America on the 16th of August. He will be accompanied by Sir John Astley, who has announced his intention of witnessing what will probably be the greatest match for the belt yet.

The track will be eight feet wide, eight laps of which will constitute a mile. The cabins for the contestants to rest in during the walk will be arranged much as before. The arrangements for the gate money will be different from the previous matches. The managers have guaranteed a certain fixed sum to all contestants who cover 450 miles in six days. The match will, of course, be "go as you please," and will begin the first minute after twelve o'clock on Sunday night, September 21. The track will be lighted by electric lights. Should any of the contestants fail to cover 450 miles his expenses while at the Garden will be paid.

Yesterday Ennis visited the Garden and talked over the terms of the match with the managers. He read the contract and subscribed to it. He announced his intention of going into training at once. In this he will be imitated by all the other men, who will continue to train until they leave for this city, where they will get themselves into good form for the struggle.

Rowell and Brown look upon their chances as even, and Panchot is rather looked down upon by them. O'Leary is now in good condition, but has not yet announced his intention of either going into the match or training.

His entry is considered as settled beyond a doubt, by his intimate friends and backers, who say that O'Leary would not miss this chance of regaining the belt for worlds.

It is likely that a novel contestant will enter this match in the person of a famous Yuma Indian mail carrier from Los Angeles, Cal. This man is quite a celebrated runner and walker in the far West, and has a record of 150 miles in twenty-four hours. The record was made carrying a letter over the California hills, and after a few hours' sleep carried back the answer over the same ground and in the same time. A few days ago the Indian friends wrote to the management of the Garden, asking that he be entered for the match. In the letter his friends say that he will eat nothing but his regular journeying diet of jerked beef, and when he rests it will not be on a lounge or bed, but will roll himself in a blanket and sleep on the ground. His style of going is a loping trot peculiar to Indian "fag" runners. It is said by sporting men that he will have a great advantage over all others. An answer was sent back giving all necessary details of the match, and saying that, if the Indian could not raise $500 to enter, a pool would be formed in New York and his entrance thus secured.

The Decline of Whaling.

Whales those who are vitally interested in our merchant marine reflect with dissatisfaction upon the activity and pecuniary prosperity of the lake commerce a few years ago contrasted with the comparative stagnation of to-day, it would be well for them to contemplate the ruin which has overtaken the proud and wealthy commercial marine of New Bedford. This small seaport of Massachusetts, which in 1854 led the whole world in the prosecution of the whale fishery and sent out during that year 410 whale ships fully fitted, equipped, and manned at her own wharves, now, to-day, though she still leads, instead of dispatching a fleet like that mentioned above, claims but 170 vessels!

Whale oil has been to a great extent superseded first by hard oil and then by mineral, seal, and vegetable oils, and hence followed the speedy dismantling and decay of the one great industry of all others which prepared and supplied us with thorough seamen. In the days of prosperity the best young blood and brain of New England went on the whaler's deck and before the mast, for the result of a three years' cruise then was invariably equal to the degree of intelligence and energy exerted. Such a trip was then justly considered an excellent discipline for the youthful sailors, no matter whether college graduates, the sons of owners or capitalists, or the profits of the voyage were usually such that the time was better spent in a pecuniary sense than had it been employed by the same hands in enterprises on shore. The skill as navigators, the intelligence, daring, and good sense combined in the persons of captains and crews of our whalers did more than all other causes combined to raise and place us at the head of the commercial marine powers of the globe in 1850, and but for the rebellion and its consequences there still instead of standing so much lower than Great Britain to-day.

There are at present only 160 vessels, great and small, engaged in the whaling business, while in 1854 there were 608, and out of this number not more than 25 are from seaports outside of New Bedford. The receipts of oil in 1854 were $38,000 barrels against $40,000 in 1878, while the whalebone looked up 5,652,000 pounds in the first named period to the receipt of only 207,259 pounds last year. But in this matter of bone the whole vitality of what is left of the business is disappearing. In 1854 it did not bring more than 30 or 40 cents per pound when it is now valued at $2.50 to $3.00 for the same weight. If the oil had held its own in this advancing as it became more scarce with each successive season, then the whaler would have but little to complain of. Nowadays, however, the chances of the "catch" for a three years' outfit and cruise are so uncertain that the high type of men and boys who used to ship with alacrity for these long ventures refuse to come forward, and their places are supplied chiefly with Portuguese, so that the morale of what is left of the great American whaling fleet is demoralized. If the news brought from the same waters where they formerly abounded, but they are few and far between where they once rose into sight from the deep ocean water on every side and at every hour of the day, and the smoke of "fog fires" by day and their glare by night never left the horizon of Behring Sea and the North Pacific from the beginning to the end of the seasons when those waters were first entered by the fleet.

Recent advices from New Bedford give us to understand that the owners of the seventeen vessels belonging to them, now in the North Pacific and above Behring Straits, are awaiting with much interest for the return of tidings from them, though the season will not close up there until the 1st or 10th of October. If the news brought down, as expected this month by their dispatch boat, is good, then the fleet of idle vessels now chafing at the wharves in that town and in Nantucket, Provincetown, Fairhaven, and New London will be fitted up and sent out for a three years' cruise. Some New Bedford parties are building a steam whaler for service in high Alaskan waters, stimulated thereto by the success which has attended a small fleet of the Scotch steam whalers and sealers in Baffin's Bay and contiguous waters. If this vessel succeeds as well as the Scotch steamer, then the last of the sailing whalerfleet will probably have been fitted out this year and the lofty spars and swelling canvas of these vessels speedily fade from the mind of the simple Eskimo, who have learned to look for their regular loom on the June horizon in the Arctic Seas with the same faith and expectancy as they do for the coming of the birds and fish penitence to their rugged country and existence.—Cleveland Herald.

Surched With Death.

THREE THOUSAND human corpses but a few months since incased in loosely jointed wooden boxes and interred superficially beneath the surface of the earth in close proximity to a city, the location and other conditions of which at all times are detrimental to the health of its inhabitants, exposed to and roasting day after day for months under the tropic heat of a summer sun, and emitting through a scant and porous covering, that barely hides the blackened, ghastly forms from view, a most sickening and deadly effluvia, which, being rarified by the heated air of day, ascends to the upper strata of the same and is wafted away and scattered by the breeze; but by being condensed by the cooler air of night it settles down and commingles with the falling dew and is drunk into the system of every inhabitant, where it produces its specific effects in a degree commensurate with the peculiar natural acquired susceptibility of the different persons thus exposed. The nocturnal air of Memphis is surcharged with death; and it is destined there to yield its legitimate fruit—not yellow fever alone, but other and kindred diseases; yet, although it may not assume an epidemic type, for the peace and quiet of our citizens and good name of our country, it is perhaps best to hold the fort against Memphis.—Little Rock (Ark.) Gazette.

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

—Bishop Crowther, a colored African Bishop, has received an autograph letter from the King of Belgium, congratulating him on his successful missionary work on the Niger.

—The next annual meeting of the American Board, being the seventieth, will be held at Syracuse, beginning Oct. 7, and closing Oct. 10. President Magoun, of Iowa College, will preach the annual sermon.

—The Belgian Government decides to permit only communal burial grounds, open to all denominations and for any kind of peculiar rites, churches may think necessary in the consecration of individual graves.

—The Protestants have, in New Zealand, 429 clergymen to 62 Roman Catholic priests. Of the Protestant clergymen, the Church of England has 186, the Presbyterians 103, and the Methodists 102 clergymen.

—Mr. W. E. Forster complains that the English schools above elementary schools, especially to girls, are in a sad condition, and adds that America has in many respects an advantage over England in point of education, and particularly with regard to girl schools.

—Protestant missionaries in Turkey say that young Turks who are sent to America to be educated, in order that they may return and labor for Christianity among their countrymen, aim to obtain a medical rather than a religious education, so as to practice medicine profitably when they get home.

—M. De Montaigne having referred to the famous case of the boy Mortara, in his speech favoring the French Education bill, Mortara himself replies to the Deputy, and declares he will not suffer his name to be abused in the interests of an attack on the freedom of the Church, and that he is a Catholic in principle and by conviction, and ready to defend the Church with his blood.

—The Evangelist, in reply to the assertion that religion is losing ground and is on its way to becoming obsolete, points to the large donations for religious and charitable purposes made the past year as a sufficient answer. "Indeed to the thoughtful and penetrating mind, the modern world seems to palpitate with the elements of religion, which, instead of dying out, was never more truly alive than now."

—The wife of the Anglican Bishop of Athabasca, Bishop Bompass, writes that "the Bishop can hold service in Tukuhiti, Slav, Chepewyan, Dog Rib, Cree, Beaver, Husky, or Esquimaux. He enjoys with good appetite the white fish we have to live upon for four or five months of the year at Athabasca; also the few rats which are brought us there in the spring, and which we stew, fry, or bake. He likes the moose, squirrel, and beaver, and he speaks with approval of a new dainty which consists of cakes made of sea weed, poplar bark, and spaw, bitter berries, a sauce made of fish."

—The former days were as funny as these in many respects. In one at least they differed. Methodist ministers itinerated much more than they do now, and went much more cheerfully, with no error they were sent. Old Phineas Rice was one of the quaint types of itinerants. He had a hard patch to cultivate once, and when he made his report to the Conference following he reported the church "looking up." The Bishop presiding expressed his pleasure, but asked for an explanation, because no one expected success in that parish. Dr. Rice was equal to the occasion, and added: "Well, Bishop, the church is on its back, and can't look any other way." There was a roar of laughter all over the Conference.

The Lottery in Italy.

A letter to the Springfield (Mass.) Republican from Florence, Italy, contains the following: "Francesco Natali and his wife were doing what would be called a third-rate trade in wine, when they were tempted by some story to invest in the lottery. But instead of playing in the usual way they took an 'old number,' one which had not been out for some time, and played regularly every week for eight weeks, when the number very unexpectedly appeared and they found themselves the happy possessors of a thousand fives. Francesco completely lost his head, and talked incessantly of his winnings to all his neighbors, until one day he fell in with an unscrupulous horse-dealer, who persuaded him that a man who was making so much money ought to have fine horses; that they were always good property to have, and when he was tired of them they could always be converted into ready money. So Francesco bought two valuable horses of this man, knowing no more about horseflesh than a dog about diamonds. He played every week in the lottery, but his luck seemed to have turned; week after week he invariably lost the grape season proved poor that year, and the wine not so good, his shop was not thriving, therefore, and to add the last straw that broke the camel's back, his horses both fell ill, and had to be nursed and cared for. Debts accumulated, beggary stared him in the face, the shop had to be sold, then the horses for anything they would bring. Fortunately Natali had no children. His wife went as cook and he as coachman. They have never regained their former footing. They are as poor as poor can be, and regret their past, knowing that they have no one but themselves and the lottery to thank for it.

"But unfortunately such lessons teach them nothing. Let an Italian be as poor as a mouse, and he will still himself in food to play the two or three sons in the lottery. If they see an accident or any one falls in the street, they run to the nearest Banco di Lotto and play on the number of the accident or the fit. In passing the headquarters of the Brothers of the Misericordia (that excellent brotherhood which carries patients to the hospitals and buries the dead), I have seen a crowd collected around the door, apparently anxious for news of the sufferer who had just been carried in; and have thought: What a sympathetic people the Italians are! Not at all; in a few minutes a priest appeared, and in a very hardened manner announced to the crowd that it was an accident from being run over. A woman close by said to her neighbor: 'What number?' 'Seventy-six,' replied the neighbors, and off they all went to play seventy-six at the nearest corner.

"When a stranger suggests to an Italian that the lottery should be stopped, as being immoral in its tendencies and keeping Italy in a low state of morals and aims, he merely shrugs his shoulders, and says: 'What will you have? If there were no lottery there would be a revolution at once. It creates a little excitement in the minds of the people, and keeps up a hope that each week they may make something. It would be a most difficult thing to do away with, well-nigh impossible.'"

The Chinese Famine.

Mr. Forrest, the English Consul at Tientsin, reports his belief that during the late famine in China the deaths from starvation and want reached the enormous total of 9,500,000—that is to say, that a population more than twice that of Portugal was swept away within a few months. This estimate would appear scarcely credible were it not supported by Mr. Hiller, of the Consular service, who has lately visited the desolated provinces. His account of the condition of things is deplorable in the extreme. Towns which a few years ago were busy centers of trade, and villages where people were as numerous as bees, are now silent and deserted; while houses which used to teem with life are now only tenanted by the dead and the few survivors who are left to tell the miseries they have undergone. Shocking as the sight must be of the mingling of the dead with the living, the explanation is even more ghastly. When the famine was at its height the starving people, goaded by the pangs of hunger, and unable to obtain food for their families, resorted to the bodies of the dead, and the survivors preferred, therefore, to share their homes with the corpses of their deceased friends rather than run the risk of committing them to the uncertain keeping of the ground.

On the sides of the road are strewn with the whitened bones of wanderers who had lain down to die where their strength failed them; and the horror of the scene is aggravated by the presence of troops of wolves. Soon after the outbreak of the famine large quantities of stores were collected by the Chinese Government at Tientsin and elsewhere for transmission to the famine-stricken districts, but, owing to bad roads and inefficient means of transport, they arrived on the spot in such small quantities that they failed to do more than relieve the sufferings of a few. "Camels, oxen, mules and donkeys," were hurried along in the wildest confusion, and so many were killed by the desperate people in the hills for the sake of their flesh, that the transit could only be carried on by the hauled junction for the journey, and grain, assisted by the train-hands or militia. The way was marked by the carcasses or skeletons of men and beasts, and the wolves, dogs and feral soon put an end to the sufferings of any wretch who lay down to recover from or die of his sickness in those terrible deserts."

Old-Time Banking.

Some funny stories are told of business methods in the olden time, one of which will bear repeating as an illustration of the advantages silver dollars possess as a bank reserve.

The old Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank was established in Detroit in 1839. In 1845, owing to some disastrous operations in Ohio, it was temporarily badly crippled, and to tide over the crisis the directors lent their best energies. The bank had a large volume of notes outstanding, all redeemable in coin on presentation, and it was apprehended that the moment the condition of the institution became known a run would ensue which would compel the closing of the doors. Now, as a bank officer would throw up the sponge under such circumstances, and suspend payment like a little man, but then bankers were both bold and fertile of expedient. The coin had run down very low, and there was no time to be lost. The services of a friend of the institution was secured, and he was privately sent to a large creditor (Lyell, the subsequently defaulting banker, by the way), to whom the credit status of the bank was explained, and the wisdom of some measures for self-protection suggested. Lyell snapped at the bait, and upon a hint from the officious visitor, rushed around to the nearest court and got an injunction against the bank to pay out any more coin pending the order of the court. This effectively saved the concern, for, when note holders subsequently presented the bank's paper for redemption, they were politely met with the reply, "We should be very happy to oblige you, sir, but unfortunately we are for a few days tied up by a process of the Wayne Circuit Court. We hope the injunction will soon be dissolved, when," etc.

It was late in the afternoon when the injunction was served, and the stock of coin had some hours previously dwindled to $53. The Cashier meantime was on needles, if that injunction did not come quickly the concern was ruined. At every opening of the door the poor man trembled in his shoes, lest the new-comer should be a noteholder in quest of coin.

He was as nervous as a cat, and the demand would close the concern forever. Slowly the clock ticked off the minutes full thirty of which must yet elapse before the hour of closing. Would that injunction never come! At last the door opened, and a nervous, bustling man hurried to the counter.

The Cashier saw at a glance that it was all up with him, but while there was life there was still a little hope, he thought. "Here, Mr. Cashier, I've got $500 of your notes I want coin for."

The Cashier endeavored to preserve a placid exterior while he deliberately bethought himself how he might delay a refusal of payment for a little while, until, perchance, and officer would come in with the hoped-for injunction.

"So you want coin for your bills, do you?" suavely remarked the Cashier, glancing with the corner of his eye through the open window into the all too quiet street.

"Why, yes!" I live in Dexter, and I want to catch the four o'clock train; so please hurry up the specie."

"All right! What's the news in Dexter? How do the crops look? How's my old friend —?" Is he living or still? And by the way, what in the world could you do with specie in that little country town that Farmers' & Mechanics' bills won't accomplish?"

"Of never mind. Give me my money so that I can catch the train. The fact is, there is a little hurry out there about the safety of your bank, and I want to make sure of my money."

"Ha! ha! ha!" laughed the Cashier; "afraid of our bank, are they? Well, they must be getting pretty fastidious when the conservative old Farmers' & Mechanics' won't suit them. Why my dear sir —"

"Never mind the pedigree of your bank, but give me my money or I shall miss my train."

"Certainly, my dear sir." (Another glance through the window, but still no Sheriff in sight.) Aside: "What shall I do?"

"There, I've got only ten minutes to catch my train. If you will assure me upon honor that it is all right, and that the bank is not going to bust, I won't wait now, but if you are going to shut up I want my money. Come, how is it, old fellow?"

"Really, sir," replied the polite Cashier, "you place me in a very delicate position. If I tell you the bank is safe, and anything happens hereafter, you will blame me on the other hand, if I tell you it is shaky I shall be unfaithful to my employers, and shall very justly be discharged. I prefer not to make any statement, but simply count out your 1,000 half dollars."

(Half dollars being the principal coinage in circulation at that time.)

Turning, screw-driver in hand, to a strong wooden box, apparently tightly screwed together, such as silver coin was usually packed in, in those days, but which the Cashier knew very well to be absolutely empty, he wiped off his brow and set himself to work as if to a herculean task.

The man glanced at the clock, then at the iron-bound coin-box, and then at the sides of the road are strewn with the whitened bones of wanderers who had lain down to die where their strength failed them; and the horror of the scene is aggravated by the presence of troops of wolves. Soon after the outbreak of the famine large quantities of stores were collected by the Chinese Government at Tientsin and elsewhere for transmission to the famine-stricken districts, but, owing to bad roads and inefficient means of transport, they arrived on the spot in such small quantities that they failed to do more than relieve the sufferings of a few. "Camels, oxen, mules and donkeys," were hurried along in the wildest confusion, and so many were killed by the desperate people in the hills for the sake of their flesh, that the transit could only be carried on by the hauled junction for the journey, and grain, assisted by the train-hands or militia. The way was marked by the carcasses or skeletons of men and beasts, and the wolves, dogs and feral soon put an end to the sufferings of any wretch who lay down to recover from or die of his sickness in those terrible deserts."

Remedies for Strokes.

Dr. James of the New York Board of Health has issued the following circular:

Stroke is caused by excessive heat, and especially if the weather is "muggy." It is more apt to occur on the second, third or fourth day of a heated term than on the first. Loss of sleep, worry, excitement, close sleeping rooms, debility, abuse of stimulants, predispose to it. It is more apt to attack those working in the sun, and especially those who are out of doors in the morning and four o'clock in the afternoon. On hot days wear thin clothing. Have as cool sleeping rooms as possible. Avoid loss of sleep and all unnecessary fatigue. If working indoors, and where there is artificial heat, use a fan, and see that the room is well ventilated. If working in the sun, wear a light hat (not black, as it absorbs heat), straw, etc., and put inside of it on the head a wet cloth or a large towel, and frequently lift the hat from the head and see that the cloth is wet. Do not check perspiration, but drink what water you need to keep it up, as perspiration prevents the body from being overheated. Have, whenever possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella, when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun. When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after a hot day. In the morning, in very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately, lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold clothes to the head and neck, and if possible, an additional shade, as

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, AUGUST 30, 1879.

NUMBER 27.

VOLUME 3.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, etc.

D. E. OFFUTT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Machines, Musical Instruments,
Cams, Pistols, etc.

G. W. LIGGIE,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Second & Oak sts.

D. H. LOAR,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, etc.

I. W. STALNAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third and Oak Street.

L. BUSH & SON,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third & Oak sts.

J. A. GRANT,
Dry Goods, Notions & Groceries,
SPECIAL LINE OF TOBACCO.

DAVIS & TOWNSEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agents Agricultural Machines,
Opposite Daily's Park.

C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Nations, Clocks, Confectionery, etc.,
Next to Coddington's Hotel.

RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods, Fruit, etc.

HOTELS.
CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,
W. M. CODDINGTON, Prop'r,
Main St., Opposite Jackson's Millard School.

LIVERY STABLE.
THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND TINWARE.
G. A. SHIRER,
Oak Street, near Second.

PHYSICIANS.
DR. J. LEE MCCOMAS,
Office on Main Street.

DR. E. U. PARSONS,
offers his professional services
to the people of Oakland and vicinity. Office in the old Olfitt building.
38 3m

PLASTERER.
JAMES ARNOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street.

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.
W. M. WAGNER,
Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.

W. E. LOUGHRIDGE,
Leave orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.
J. B. BLANT,
Surveyor, Auctioneer and
Conveyancer,
Oakland, Garrett county, Md.

JOHN HARNED,
Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.
A. B. WOODCOCK,
In Wm. Starnes's Building,
Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY GOODS.
MRS. M. E. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store.
Millinery, Gents' Furnishing
And Fancy Goods, and Shoes.
Main Street, Opposite Mr. McComas' office.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.
GEO. C. STURGIS,
Drugs, Medicines,
Perfumery, Toilet articles, Stationery,
Tobacco and Cigars.

G. W. MERRILL,
Near Depot.
Pure Drugs, Medicines, Toilet Goods, Stationery, Cigars and Tobacco, French Cigars, Fruits, Fishing Tackle, etc. Physician's prescriptions accurately compounded.

PAINTING & PAPER HANG-
ING.
E. J. FRINGER,
House and Sign Painter.

V. B. WARD,
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER
Shop near Davis House.

BLACKSMITHS.
CHAS. SINCELI,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS
JOHN M. JARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,
Residence on Liberty St. nearly opp. Depot.

P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
Residence on Centre street.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Residence opp. School house.

JOSEPH M. CHIM,
Residence on Alder Street.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.

CABINET MAKERS AND UN-DERTAKERS.
A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SHATZER,
Shop on Second Street.

H. T.

HELMBOLD'S

COMPOUND

Fluid Extract

BUCHU.

PHARMACEUTICAL

A SPECIFIC REMEDY FOR ALL

DISEASES

OF THE

BLADDER & KIDNEYS.

For Debility, Loss of Memory, Indisposition to Exertion or Business, Shortness of Breath, Trembling, Thoughts of Disease, Dimness of Vision, Pain in the Back, Chest,
and Head, Rush of Blood to the Head, Pale Countenance and Dry Skin.

If these symptoms are allowed to go on,
very frequently Eclampsy, Fits, and Consumption follow. When the Constitution becomes affected it requires the aid of an invigorating medicine to strengthen and tone up the system—which

"Helmhold's Buchu"

DOES IN EVERY CASE.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

IS UNEQUALED

By any remedy known. It is prescribed by the most eminent physicians all over the world.

Rheumatism,
Spermatorrhea,
Neuralgia, Nervousness,
Dyspepsia,
Indigestion,
Constipation,
Aches and Pains,

General Debility,
Kidney Diseases,
Liver Complaint,
Nervous Debility,
Epilepsy,
Head Troubles,
Paralysis,
General Ill Health,

Spinal Diseases,
Sciatica,
Deafness,
Decline,
Lumbago,
Catarrh,
Nervous Complaints,
Female Complaints, &c.

Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Cough,
Fizziness, Sour Stomach, Eruptions, Red
Taste in the Mouth, Palpitation of the Heart, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and thousand other painful symptoms, are the outgrowths of Dyspepsia.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

Invigorates the Stomach.

And stimulates the torpid Liver, Bowels,
and Kidneys to healthy action, in cleansing the blood of all impurities, and imparting new life and vigor to the whole system.

A single trial will be quite sufficient to convince the most hesitating of its valuable remedial qualities.

Price $1 Per Bottle,

Or Six Bottles for $5.

Delivered to any address free from observation.

"Patients" may consult by letter, receiving
the same attention as by calling.

Competent Physicians attend to correspondents. All letters should be addressed to

H. T. HELMBOLD,

DRUGGIST AND CHEMIST,

Philadelphia, Pa.

CAUTION!

See that the private Proprietary Stamp is on each bottle.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

my10-lyt.

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LESSONS.

SUNDAY, AUG. 31, 1879.
PRACTICAL RELIGIONS.

GENERAL STATEMENT.

In the south-western part of Phrygia near Hierapolis and Laodicea, and on the highway of traffic between Ephesus and the Euphrates, stood the prosperous city of Colosse. A Christian Church had been planted among its inhabitants, not by Paul, but by his friend, Epaphras, who carried to the apostle at Rome the tidings of its condition, and of its danger from the broods of a false and enrapturing philosophy. Paul sent from his prison in the Pretorium this epistle, written at the same time and borne by the same messenger as the epistles to the Ephesians and to Philemon, who dwelt at Colosse. In it he describes the person and redemptive work of Christ, warns against the errors of false teachers, and exhorts to the practice of Christian duties, and in our lesson gives precepts concerning the world, the flesh, and the devil, and the duties of a Christian in the relations of husband and wife, of children and parents, and of servants toward masters.

Col. 3. 16-25.
Memory Verses, 16-20.

16 Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing
one another in psalms and hymns, and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord.

17 And whatsoever ye do in word or deed,
do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him.

18 Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as to the Lord.

19 Husbands, love your wives, and be not like the church, which cleanseth herself with water by the word.

20 Children, obey your parents in the Lord:
this is the right.

21 Servants, obey in the Lord them that are your masters, as the Lord.

22 And whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men.

23 Knowing that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of inheritance; for ye serve the Lord Christ.

24 But he that doeth wrong shall receive for the wrong which he hath done; and there is no respect of persons.

HOME READINGS.

M. Practised religion. Col. 3. 16-25.
Th. The good husband. 1 Pet. 3. 16-25.
W. The good wife. Prov. 31. 10-31.

26 The good servant. 1 Pet. 2. 18-25.
S. The good master. Col. 4. 1-6.
S. The good friend. Prov. 27. 1-10.

GOLDEN TEXT.

And whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men. Col. 3. 23.

LESSON. Hymns, 8, 31.

God will support our hearts. 8, 31.

With might before unknown:
The work to be performed is ours,
The strength is all his own.

His he that works to will,
His is the power which we meet,
His be the glory too.

QUESTIONS ON THE OUTLINE.

1. CHURCH LIFE, v. 16, 17: 1 Cor. 11, 15. What is the word of Christ? How may that word dwell in us? What is the command known that word from childhood? 2 Tim. 3. 15.

What is said in Psa. 119, 11? What is said of singing in verse 16? How is this recommended in Eph. 5, 19? What is the command of the Golden Text? How is this stated in 1
Cor. 16, 2? How should we give thanks?

In what things should we give thanks? 1
Thess. 5, 18.

2. HOW LIVE, v. 18-25; Eph. 5, 15, 16. What direction is given to wives? What direction to husbands? What is said to children?

Which of the ten commandments speaks of this duty? What reason is given for obedience to parents? What warning is given in Deut. 27, 16? What advice is given to fathers?

What direction is given to servants? What reason is given? And, Work done only when under the eye of a master? What good advice do we find in verse 23? Who shall reward faithful service? Whom do we serve?

What shall the reward be? What is the command of the Golden Text? How is this stated in 1 Cor. 16, 2? How should we give thanks?

TEACHINGS OF THE LESSON.

Where in this lesson do we find—

1. How to sing? 2. How to speak? 3. How to act?

WORDS WITH LITTLE FOLKS.

1. Sing with praise in your heart. 2. Be thankful to God for his mercies. Be obedient to your parents.

Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord. Col. 3. 23.

DOCTRINAL SUGGESTION: The impartiality
of God.

ADDITIONAL PRACTICAL LESSONS.

1. The social relations of life should have the aid and benefit of mutual counsel and instruction. v. 16.

2. The social relation should be graceful and cheerful by the music of Christian songs. v. 16.

3. In the relation of marriage, the wife should exhibit a spirit of yielding, and the husband a spirit of tenderness. v. 18, 19.

4. Children should be guided by the law of obedience, and parents by the law of kindness. v. 20, 21.

5. Those who serve should be faithful, devoted and loyal, living the consciousness of God's eye upon them. v. 22, 23.

6. All should calmly wait for the day of God to right wrongs and bestow rewards. v.
24, 25.

It looks more and more as if Jefferson Davis would be again elected to the United States Senate without being a candidate for the office. The other candidates are voluntarily offering to stand aside for him, and we are assured that when one of these alluded to him in a public speech as "Mississippi's great and peerless favorite," a "loud and hearty cheer" thrilled the open heavens above." His election would send a very different kind of thrill through the North.

The best is the cheapest. Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup is acknowledged to be the safest and most reliable medicine for babies. Price 25 cents.

(From the Toledo Blade.)
Mr. Nasby Takes a Little Turn thro' Ohio and Reports.

PETTUSVILLE, Wich is in the State of Ohio.)
August 28th, 1879.

I felt it my duty to heed the Massachusetts cry which the Democracy of Ohio yelled, "Kum over and help us!" and I went, to do a little missionary work in the Southern part of the State, for that 'possession unlimited money, that harbinger of good times, General Ewing. I wish I was back in the Corners, and shed get there just as soon as the Central Committee lets me leave this most thoroughly discouraging kentry.

Of the rest of the State is anything like this cockshun, Ohio is gone up.
I don't know, Ohio, and the State is driven full tilt into it.

I met with no success at all, which wuz not my fault, ez the condishuns are agin me. I wuz never so disappointed in my life, and hope never to be so agin.

I expected to find a people ready to receive Democratic doctrine. I expected to find a distrest kentry filled with farmers bemoaning the hard times, and mechanics layin idle, with their families starvin. I expected to find a sheaf, hatful, coatful community of wuz, which hed bin ground down by the money power till they wud be willin to receive any promise uv a change with joy and gladness. I expected to see factories silent, and farms deserted, shops shet up, and only nashnel banks and sich open. I expected to find pale men, weak-eyed from hunger, and pall-faced, despairin women, starvin themselves that they might keep life in their angel babies.

I hev bin reedin Dimecratic papers,
you see, about the people bein groun
under foot, and I hied me to Ohio,
with the most joyous antispishens.

When I struck Pettusville it occurred to me that I must hev got in the wrong place. I arrived in the nite, and I noticed that the landlurd uv my hotel weighed suthin over 200 pounds, and his wife suthin heavier, but theed not affect me. In all strictly Dimocratic localities, landlurds git fat, no matter who else groes lean, which they generally do. I turned and hugged the idee to my buzun that I shud hev easy work to do in that place.

The fust thing I noticed in the mornin wuz a string uv teams a mile long, more or less, waitin to onload wheat at the warehouse on the railroad. The men onto the loads wuz about ez hale and hearty a set uv fellows ez I ever seed. They wuzn't pale, nor wan nor nothin. They wuz hefty specimens, and lookt ez tho' they hed three square meals a day all their lives.

To my horror I noticed that the shops wuz all open and the mechanics all very hard at work, and that the three factories in the town had torrents of smoke a pilin out uv the chimneys.

Bein entirely shoor that I hed ben sent to the rite place I spite uv these discouragin appearances, I approached a farmer which hed just sold his load and wuz a goin into a bank with his wife.

"My friend," sed I, "you are a victim uv the money power?"

"Wat?" wuz his reply, lookin ez
tho he thot I wuz a escaped loonatic.

"You are a serf, bondman, and are held in the iron grip uv the bloated bondholders, which yiz a squeeze in the life blood out uv you?"

"Is that?" sed he "I never thot uv that. But I kin beet em. I really havn't time to discuss the matter,
for, you see, I'm goin to be bonded bloatholder myself. I hev jest sold my wheat, and am jest goin in to buy a bond or two. I want to be a aristocracy myself awhile.

And he eloodid me, leavin a button in my hand.

Repeatin the same remark to another, he merely remarkt, "O git out you ass! Wheat thirty bushels to the acre and a dollar a bushel, gold.
I want a great many years more uv this kind of rooin. Where you from anyway?"

Abandonin the farmers in disgust,
for I got the same answer from all uv em, I attempted to get in my work on the distrest mechanics must hev been rooined by resunshun, but my success wuzn't any better. I don't know but I could hev convinst em that they wuz all rooined of I hed hed a fair show, but the alarmin fact wuz they wuz all too bizzzy to listen to me, for it happened to be pay day.
Every man uv em went out uv the offis with his money in fall, and every man uv em declined to hear a word I sed.

It wuz in vans I urged that they wuz scrif; it wuz in vans that I told em they wuz bein ground into the dust by the nashnel banks; it wuz in vans I told em resunshun wud hev their rooin, for every cussid one uv em filed past me and went and deposited their spare earnings in one uv these cussid octopusses, the nashnel bank uv the place.

I can't understand what Ewing sent me to sich a place fur, and I tel-graphed him. The Democratic Central Committee answered:

"Hold on awhile. A heavy frost may come in August and kill the corn, and fetch em to their senses.
Then they will know what Sherman has done for em. Suthin must be left to Providence."

And so I am sittin in the tavern, watchin the thermometer. It is a corn kentry, and the farmers depend upon that crop for the half uv their profits. Ef the Lord wud only take pity on the Dimecrisy and send a heavy frost, a regular black frost,
this month, I shud hev some show.

It wud derange things and tear up matters to sich an extent that it wud give us a chance. But then the wheat crop was so heavy that I'm not shoor that even the totle destruchun uv the corn crop wud save us. The hog cholera can't come soon enuff, and ez for cattle and horses, I never seen em so disgustinly healthy.

Still, I shet sil and watch the thermometer and cuss John Sherman, ez the Central Committee direx. It is possible that some distrest man may come upon the kentry before October, tho reely I see no encunridgin signs.

PETROLEUM V. NASBY.
Distrest Financier.

TRYING TO STOP THE EXODUS.

WASHINGTON, August 17.—The negro exodus question is every day becoming more vitally important to the Southern people, and, notwithstanding their apparent indifference to the matter, they are seriously disturbed about it, and are secretly exerting every means to prevent the further departure of colored people.

Only a few days ago the Governor of Kansas, in a private letter, mentions the fact that a delegation of Southern gentlemen visited Topeka in the interest of the Southern planters, and had used every effort in their power to induce the refugees to return.

After being among the refugees at-most daily for several weeks these gentlemen failed to induce any to return. Up to the 9th of August about 7,000 colored refugees had gone to Kansas, and of these none had returned. All of them, with the exception of about 100, are self-supporting. In another part of his letter the Governor says: "While the State of Kansas has never done anything to encourage this emigration, yet it never has, nor ever will, close its doors against any who are willing to come and put forth a faithful effort to make an honest living. Our society has established a colony in Wa-banssee county, about fifty miles west of here, which we have undertaken to provide for. Of course we are dependent upon the charity of the philanthropic people of the North.

"So far the contributions received amount to $8,500, which sum has been faithfully expended where it has been most needed among the destitute colored people, and it is gratifying to be able to assure you that none who have come among us have been permitted to suffer for the want of food or clothing, and we have given to them as comfortable quarters as the circumstances and means at our command would admit of, and I doubt now whether there are a hundred out of all have come that could,
for love or money, be induced to return to the states from which they came."

The Southern people, and especially the planters of Southern Mississippi, and, in fact, of all the Southern states, are secretly of the opinion that as soon as the cotton is taken care of for the season there will be a second flight of negroes northward. In comparison to which the exodus to date will have been a puny thing. A letter from a well-informed gentleman in St. Louis, on this subject, says:

"To prevent this departure of the negroes, if possible, is what the planters are seeking, and the excursion which passed St. Louis Wednesday was but a step in the programme laid out. It is held by the planters that if the negroes could be fully informed of what the change from the South to Kansas is, and of the reception which awaits them in the West,
the negro would cease at once.

Hence the idea of taking some hundreds of the leading negroes of the cotton regions to Kansas, giving them a view of the country, and then bringing them back to tell their people what the land of promise is. The money was raised among the planters. Railroad men co-operated in the movement, half a thousand negroes readily acquiesced in the idea of the long, free trip, and the excursion is now doing Kansas under the guidance of cicerones who by no means exaggerate the State's advantages."

This scheme, however, bids fair to count for nothing, as the serious blunder was made of taking the negro excursionists to Kansas at a time when the State is in its most prosperous and inviting condition. A few weeks or months later the conspirators would have stood a better chance,
when the bleak winds sweeping across Kansas prairies would have been sufficient to chill the unacclima-tized blacks to the bones. As it is there is danger that the five hundred excursionists will be so impressed with the country and the accounts which they will receive of it from their pioneer brothers now settled there, that the whole number will either settle there now or very soon after they can go home and return to the land of peace and freedom.

WHAT MR. TILDEN HAS TO SAY.

WASHINGTON, August 12.—In the Star of to-day Mr. W. C. McBride, the Washington correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer, gives a very interesting account of a talk which he had last week with Congressman Springer at Ocean Grove N. J. The latter, it seems, had been up spending a day or two with Tilden at his summer residence near Yonkers, and if the account of the palaver is strictly accurate, the Gramercy Park chieftain must have entirely uncovered his mouth upon that occasion. It may have been a "confidential" talk, but the garrulous Springer has given it all away, and puts in circulation one of the best arguments in favor of the Republican party that has yet been made by any Democrat. When asked if Tilden was not moving heaven and earth to secure the Democratic nomination in 1880, Mr.
Springer replied: "He did not so impress me. Indeed, he told me that whether he was the nominee or not,
that he desired Democratic success.
Mr. Tilden is of the opinion that within the next four years the country will be blessed with a remarkable season of prosperity; that times will be easy, and that an impetus will be given to every branch of trade and industry. 'Now,' said Tilden, 'I will tell you, Mr. Springer, why it is important that the Democratic party should succeed, and why I desire its success above any personal ambition I may have to gratify. If the Democracy can ride into power on the wave of prosperity, which I think is coming,
it will remain in power indefinitely.
On the other hand, should the Republicans retain power, they are liable to hold on for a half

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.

OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

A COMMON STORY.

My old love whom I loved not,
Is this your friendly hand?
Your very voice, with a tremble in it,
Said: "Come, my old love, and stand."
My old love whom I loved not,
After so many years,
Parting in silence and in pain,
To meet with smiles, not tears.

My old love whom I loved not,
Do you regret—oh, I—
That all died out which, just were dead,
All lived which could not die?
Till the last word, "I love you,"
Kept your silent secret safe,
Which no one understood.

You will leave a name behind you,
A life pure, calm, and long;
But mine will fade from human ears,
Like a forgotten song.
You have lived to suffer, and to love,
Over a great, long done;
You will die with children round your bed,
But I shall die alone.

O kind love, whom I loved not,
O faithful, firm, and true!
Did one friend linger near my grave,
I think it would be you.
Could I wish one heart to hold me,
A little, only, for a day,
I think I would be heart of yours,
My love—whom I loved not.

A MODERN DOLLAR.

John Riddle was a young man in whom confidence was justly placed by Messrs. Moonstone & Co., jewelers, his employers, in whose establishment, at the time we became acquainted with him, he occupied the post of foreman. He was not a "self-made man" as yet, but he was on the road to it. For, as we all know, Providence has still the advantage of priority in this particular; it makes its man (such as he is) at a comparatively early date, whereas, when a man makes himself, he seldom accomplishes it before he is five-and-forty at the very least—when, indeed, the other cannot be compared with him. John never drank, except a glass of beer with his early dinner; he never smoked, nor did he care to do so; he never handled anything in the shape of a billiard cue, unless it was his beatty and tightly rolled-up muller; he never—I was going to add he had no weakness as regards the ladies, but I hardly dare to write, because of the extreme attention he paid to his very fine head of hair. Why should any man, not being a Narcissus, take such great pains with his hair, unless to make an impression on the ladies? Yet even here I must hasten to do John Riddle justice; it would have shocked him to have supposed that he had any general views in this direction. Still, he cultivated that fine head of hair, harnessed it with a tortoise-shell comb, drove a furrow straight across it from his brow to the nape of his neck, and top-dressed it with maceassar oil and other unguents. It shone in the sun as brightly as any of Messrs. Moonstone & Co.'s costly wares, over which he presided.

There were other assistants in the shop, and with them I am sorry to say Mr. John Riddle was not popular. The young men in the shop, who were associated so much with him as he resided in his own home, and especially if that virtue has not been its own reward, but has enabled its possessor to walk over their heads and stop there. There was hardly one among them, but at some time during his servitude with Messrs. Moonstone had mislaid a ring or a trinket for a few hours, or had even caused some loss to the firm, not much through carelessness as from not being quite as wide awake as a weasel. For the way of a jeweler's assistant is set with springs. It is calculated that about one per cent. of the customers at such establishments are rogues and vagabonds, people who come to spy out, not the nakedness of the land, but its riches, and if possible to possess themselves of them by force or fraud. And these look as little like rogues as a wife (and a cunning one) does to a husband. Notwithstanding all that has been written upon the deceitfulness of riches, it is difficult to believe that a gentleman who drives his own mail phaeton, or a lady who comes in a chariot upon C springs, are brigands in disguise. Yet the young men at Messrs. Moonstone's had been, most of them, taken in by appearances, and at least once in the lives of each their employers had paid for the experience. One of them had taken jewelry to a newly-married couple at a fashionable hotel "on approval," and had been so successful in his recommendations that they had "colored" the whole lot, and given him such a dose of chloroform in exchange for them that he was unable to give any clear account of his adventures for hours afterward. Another had been set upon by a whole gang of thieves, in such a promiscuous and overwhelming fashion that he could recall nothing of what happened except that he had been "struck with an instrument like the ace of spades," which the newspapers expressed the hope would afford some clue to the police; they thought it showed, I suppose, that the perpetrators of the outrage must be either gardeners or gamblers; but nothing came of the suggestion. Others, again, had been exposed to the seductions of the fair sex, and in losing their hearts had sacrificed the diamonds of their employers.

In this last regard Mr. John Riddle, being adamant, was invaluable. His youthful as well as handsome looks attracted these ladies of industry, who, on entering the shop, gravitated toward him quite naturally. A man of that age, as they flattered themselves, and one so particular about his hair, must surely fall an easy victim to their fascinations. Thieves as they were, they were still women, and perhaps they allowed their feelings to carry them too far; if they had stopped half way, where Mr. Riddle the Cashier sat, or at the desk over which Mr. Malton (the hero of the ace of spades) presided, they would have had a better chance; but Bolby was bald and Malton was gray, and women never will understand that it is from forty to fifty that men are most impressionable with respect to female charms. Your conceited young fellows think it nothing surprising that any lady should fall in love with them, but when a man comes to that more period which we call (or at least I call) the prime of life, he appreciates the compliment.

I do not say that Mr. John Riddle had not some admirers among the fair sex who loved him for his own sake. Indeed, it was whispered among his detractors that, like the first Duke of Marlborough, and other great men who ought to have known better, he derived pecuniary advantage from their devotion to him; the sums expended in maceassar-oil, etc., for the adornment of his appearance, came back to him twenty-fold in substantial tokens from Duchesses and Countesses, and the like. Goodness knows whether there was any truth in such stories. Perhaps it pleased his rivals to invest the drudgery that was their daily lot with this halo of romance. For my part my taste is sensational, and I do what I can to make my beliefs correspond with them; but, on the other hand, my strong common sense declares for moderation as regards Mr. Riddle and the ladies of rank; therefore I draw the line at Duchesses. But he was equally as fascinating as he was hard-hearted. When any lady customer who was unknown to him got out of her brougham—for no one ever came in a cab to Messrs. Moonstone's establishment—he would lead her through his half-shut eyes—for they were of the "dreamy" order of beauty—and murmur to himself: "Now, is this a swindler or a bona fide party?" and many a bona fide party did he serve with much external politeness who little dreamed of the suspicion which she excited within him.

He thought it a bad sign when they took off their gloves, and under such circumstances would always decline to show them those specimens of rough diamonds which a wet finger can carry away with it. And when they offered to pay for their little purchases by check it was quite pretty to hear him explain, in his soft voice, how the "system" of the firm was a ready-money one, and that no exception could be made in favor of any one, however highly connected, who was not personally known to it.

You might have thought, perhaps, that the entertainment of such suspicions, not to mention the "evil communications" (when they turned out to be well founded) to which he was so rarely exposed, would have corrupted his own integrity; but this was not the case; his employers trusted him quite liberally with untold gold, and he was the last man to have abused their confidence. And yet, as I have said, he was not popular. Indeed, the story which I am about to relate concerning him, and which is certainly of a character to arouse sympathy and compassion, was told me by his fellow-clerk, Mr. Malton, (who to his credit be it said, was quite as good a fellow as the rest of the staff, with a great deal of waggishness and enjoyment.

One afternoon a brougham stopped at Messrs. Moonstone's establishment with a widow in it; about the brougham there could be no sort of doubt; it was not a private vehicle, but one of those which are hired by the day or hour; the appearance of the driver, not to mention that of the horse, proved the propriety of the person who employed it. If she thought to be set down among "carriage people" because she used such a conveyance, she must have been sanguine indeed. And so, as I have said, she was not popular. People that came to rob on a scale worth mentioning, (I am not thinking of those who slipped any one's trinket, such as a ring or a spray, into their hands, and bowed out of the shop into the arms of a policeman in plain clothes who stood at the door)—people, I say, who wanted to swindle, were always very particular about the vehicle that brought them; and the eye of Mr. John Riddle was the watchful eye of Mr. John Riddle was the widow herself. Like Weller, senior (though without his matrimonial experience to excuse it), he had a prejudice against widows; but not in the way of shops; nor, I am bound to confess, was it altogether without grounds; the garb and the mein of sorrow being the stalking horses under which a good deal of knavery is accomplished. And when this widow was so bewitching to look at that he was naturally alarmed; from every neat plait of her beautiful hair, and every fold of her modest suit of mourning, there seemed to him to flutter a danger sign; and he knew she was after no good from the first moment he set eyes on her; but that statement must, I think, be received with caution. If his face grew severe and his manner painfully polite, as she came up to him, it was because he knew that Bolby and Malton had got their eyes upon him and were looking out for some sign of weakness.

"I wish to see some rings," she said, in a soft and gentle voice; "mourning rings," and then she took off her gloves, displaying the whitest little hand imaginable.

Of course, he could not help seeing her hand, nor yet her face, from which she had put back her veil. It wore an expression of sadness, but also one of enfranchisement and content; it seemed to say, "My late husband was very worthy of me; but he has left me free, and I forgive him." Who has not seen such widows, who wear their weeds almost as if they were flowers, and who have apparently selected black as their only wear, because it is becoming to them? I have often thought, if I could have the choice of my own calling, that, next to a companion to a lady, I should like to be a young jeweler trying on rings.

Mr. Riddle said, "Allow me, madam, in his most honeyed voice, and slipped (it seemed to me) a ring after ringer upon the widow's dainty finger. "I hope I am not hurting you," he murmured.

"O, no," she sighed; "there was a time, but that is passed now—when I would have given me pleasure. I mean," she added, hastily, and with a modest blush, "when rings would have done so; but jewels and gewgaws have no longer any attractions for me." Mr. John Riddle by no means felt certain of this, but he had an eye for number, and would have missed a ring from the tray in an instant, though he had been exhibiting a thousand. At last she made her choice (it was the most expensive of the whole lot), and produced from the prettiest little bag in the world—a check book.

"Pardon me, madam, we do not take checks except from—ahem—old customers."

"Well, I am not a very old customer," she said, smiling. ("No; but you're a queer one," he thought, "or I'm much mistaken.") "Still, I should have thought in the case of a lady like myself."

"Madam," said this crafty young man, "if it lay in my power to oblige you, there would of course be no difficulty in the matter; the rule of the firm is, unhappily, what I have stated."

"Then the firm will take my last sixpence," she rejoined with tender playfulness; and from the most elegant of "porte-monnaies" she counted him out the sum required, when its contents in truth were quite exhausted. "I am lodging at Del la Bois', the court hairdresser," she said; "my name is Mrs. Montfort. However I will not trouble you to send the ring, as I shall have to go home to get some more money."

Then she rose and sailed down the shop, carelessly glancing at this or that (chiefly in the hair and mourning department) as she passed out. "If she is not on the square, she does it uncommonly well," thought Mr. Riddle; "perhaps I have done her an injustice, poor dear."

On the third morning after her visit the widow called again, sailed quite naturally up to our hero, and cast anchor under his eyes. "You will think," she remarked, "that I have been very foolish, but I am very changeable in my tastes; but I am not come this time upon my own account; I want to see some diamond lockets for a friend."

This is quite the usual course with ladies and others who victimize the jeweler. They buy a ring for ten pounds, and after having thus established themselves—cast out their sprat to catch a herring—they patronize the establishment. Singular to say, however, this did not rouse Mr. Riddle's suspicions. Notwithstanding his pretense of indifference to Mrs. Montfort's charms, he had privately sent to Del la Bois' to have the lady's dress made up, and on the first floor, he had done it, of course, in the interests of the firm, and in case she should call again, but perhaps he would not have been so pleased with the result. Indeed, the story which I am about to relate concerning him, and which is certainly of a character to arouse sympathy and compassion, was told me by his fellow-clerk, Mr. Malton, (who to his credit be it said, was quite as good a fellow as the rest of the staff, with a great deal of waggishness and enjoyment.

One afternoon a brougham stopped at Messrs. Moonstone's establishment with a widow in it; about the brougham there could be no sort of doubt; it was not a private vehicle, but one of those which are hired by the day or hour; the appearance of the driver, not to mention that of the horse, proved the propriety of the person who employed it. If she thought to be set down among "carriage people" because she used such a conveyance, she must have been sanguine indeed. And so, as I have said, she was not popular. People that came to rob on a scale worth mentioning, (I am not thinking of those who slipped any one's trinket, such as a ring or a spray, into their hands, and bowed out of the shop into the arms of a policeman in plain clothes who stood at the door)—people, I say, who wanted to swindle, were always very particular about the vehicle that brought them; and the eye of Mr. John Riddle was the watchful eye of Mr. John Riddle was the widow herself. Like Weller, senior (though without his matrimonial experience to excuse it), he had a prejudice against widows; but not in the way of shops; nor, I am bound to confess, was it altogether without grounds; the garb and the mein of sorrow being the stalking horses under which a good deal of knavery is accomplished. And when this widow was so bewitching to look at that he was naturally alarmed; from every neat plait of her beautiful hair, and every fold of her modest suit of mourning, there seemed to him to flutter a danger sign; and he knew she was after no good from the first moment he set eyes on her; but that statement must, I think, be received with caution. If his face grew severe and his manner painfully polite, as she came up to him, it was because he knew that Bolby and Malton had got their eyes upon him and were looking out for some sign of weakness.

"I wish to see some rings," she said, in a soft and gentle voice; "mourning rings," and then she took off her gloves, displaying the whitest little hand imaginable. Of course, he could not help seeing her hand, nor yet her face, from which she had put back her veil. It wore an expression of sadness, but also one of enfranchisement and content; it seemed to say, "My late husband was very worthy of me; but he has left me free, and I forgive him." Who has not seen such widows, who wear their weeds almost as if they were flowers, and who have apparently selected black as their only wear, because it is becoming to them? I have often thought, if I could have the choice of my own calling, that, next to a companion to a lady, I should like to be a young jeweler trying on rings.

Mr. Riddle said, "Allow me, madam, in his most honeyed voice, and slipped (it seemed to me) a ring after ringer upon the widow's dainty finger. "I hope I am not hurting you," he murmured.

"O, no," she sighed; "there was a time, but that is passed now—when I would have given me pleasure. I mean," she added, hastily, and with a modest blush, "when rings would have done so; but jewels and gewgaws have no longer any attractions for me." Mr. John Riddle by no means felt certain of

this, but he had an eye for number, and would have missed a ring from the tray in an instant, though he had been exhibiting a thousand. At last she made her choice (it was the most expensive of the whole lot), and produced from the prettiest little bag in the world—a check book.

"Pardon me, madam, we do not take checks except from—ahem—old customers."

"Well, I am not a very old customer," she said, smiling. ("No; but you're a queer one," he thought, "or I'm much mistaken.") "Still, I should have thought in the case of a lady like myself."

"Madam," said this crafty young man, "if it lay in my power to oblige you, there would of course be no difficulty in the matter; the rule of the firm is, unhappily, what I have stated."

"Then the firm will take my last sixpence," she rejoined with tender playfulness; and from the most elegant of "porte-monnaies" she counted him out the sum required, when its contents in truth were quite exhausted. "I am lodging at Del la Bois', the court hairdresser," she said; "my name is Mrs. Montfort. However I will not trouble you to send the ring, as I shall have to go home to get some more money."

Then she rose and sailed down the shop, carelessly glancing at this or that (chiefly in the hair and mourning department) as she passed out. "If she is not on the square, she does it uncommonly well," thought Mr. Riddle; "perhaps I have done her an injustice, poor dear."

On the third morning after her visit the widow called again, sailed quite naturally up to our hero, and cast anchor under his eyes. "You will think," she remarked, "that I have been very foolish, but I am very changeable in my tastes; but I am not come this time upon my own account; I want to see some diamond lockets for a friend."

This is quite the usual course with ladies and others who victimize the jeweler. They buy a ring for ten pounds, and after having thus established themselves—cast out their sprat to catch a herring—they patronize the establishment. Singular to say, however, this did not rouse Mr. Riddle's suspicions. Notwithstanding his pretense of indifference to Mrs. Montfort's charms, he had privately sent to Del la Bois' to have the lady's dress made up, and on the first floor, he had done it, of course, in the interests of the firm, and in case she should call again, but perhaps he would not have been so pleased with the result. Indeed, the story which I am about to relate concerning him, and which is certainly of a character to arouse sympathy and compassion, was told me by his fellow-clerk, Mr. Malton, (who to his credit be it said, was quite as good a fellow as the rest of the staff, with a great deal of waggishness and enjoyment.

deeper deprecation than before, "how can you? Of course, I will come whenever you please."

"Very good; as my brougham is here, I will drive you home in it." In five minutes he had packed up all the lockets and was following her elegant though stately figure down the shop.

"There he goes with another Duchess," whispered Malton to Bolby; "see how he runs his hand through his hair."

"Let us hope that she will come to him," answered Bolby the bald, thinking of that happy pair who had seemed all in all to one another, but had not been so preoccupied as to prevent them giving him the chloroform.

"I believe she's no more a Duchess than you are."

Months rolled on, but though you had gone over so many times into Messrs. Moonstone's establishment, you would not have seen Mr. John Riddle. His flowing cataract of hair no more adorned the foreman's desk, over which gleamed in its place—like moonlight over sunlight—the bald and shining head of Mr. Bolby. And yet our hero was in the shop; he stood at the counter in the further corner, where the youngest assistant was always placed, in a charge of the mourning jewelry, with not to mention the Duchesses—would never have known him. He had fallen from his high estate, and was beginning life again on the lowest rung of the ladder.

This is how it happened. Mrs. Montfort and her niece, a young lady only less charming than herself, dwelt, as I have said, on the first floor of Mr. Del la Bois' the court hairdresser. They had lodged there for several weeks, and by punctual payments and earliness concerning the domestic accounts had won the heart of their susceptible landlord. He saw that she had an inward grief—passing that of the ordinary widow—and he ventured to inquire what it was.

"Alas!" she said, "I have a dearest only nephew whose condition gives me the greatest uneasiness. He has overworked himself, and is threatened with brain fever; the doctors say that if we could only get him to have his head shaved, all might be well, but he has a splendid head of hair—indeed, a great deal too much of it. No argument of mine will induce him to part with it. This touched Mr. Del la Bois' professional feelings. "Dear me, madam, how I pity the young gentleman! It is a terrible thing to part with one's hair, but still—we could shave him better than at any other establishment in the Kingdom, and quicker."

"O, I did not care about the quickness," answered Mrs. Montfort, hastily, "the thing is to get it done thoroughly. I would give fifty pounds if I could only submit to it. Don't you think, if he came with me one morning, you could get it done whether he would or not?"

"Well, really, madam, that would be a strong measure, still, if it is for the young man's good."

"They tell me, Mr. Del la Bois, nothing else will save his wits; he is half mad already; entertain the strangest delusions—that everything I have said is a falsehood—belongs to him. They will belong to him some day, poor fellow—that is," she added with a sigh, "if he lives to enjoy them."

"Poor dear young gentleman! And you are fifty pounds, I think. Well, I think it can be managed for you. If you will name a morning, I will have four of my strongest young men in readiness, and if you will bring him here I will promise you he shall have his head shaved."

"Very good; I will take him out shopping with me; he is fond of shopping; thinks he is a shopkeeper sometimes when his head is bald. He shall come here in my brougham. You will find him in a moment by his magnificent head of hair."

"Just so; and in five minutes nobody shall know him, madam."

"Don't be in a hurry about it. Let me do it thoroughly," she answered. And so it was arranged.

Accordingly, when Mr. John Riddle arrived in the widow's carriage at Mr. Del la Bois', and had just placed the parcel of diamond lockets upon her seat, there was an incursion of four strong young men, with combs in their hands and aprons round their waists. Since those

"Four-and-twenty brisk young fellows," as they were called, "were there has been no such outrage. They carried him into a back room, fastened him into a chair, and in spite of his babbling about how he was a jeweler's foreman, and was being robbed with his hair, or worn so much of it, such a wretched fellow, they shaved his head."

They not only effected this with great completeness, but took their time about it, so that in the meantime she got it done thoroughly; she was never heard of her afterward, nor of her niece, nor of the diamond lockets. It was supposed to be the completest "shave," in the slang sense, that had ever been effected. Never since Sam's head has been so cropped so severely from being cropped; for Mr. John Riddle not only lost his hair, but his situation. The Messrs. Moonstone declined any longer to trust his business to a foreman who had fallen into such a shallow trap, and lost them thereby a thousand pounds' worth of jewelry. They declared that it was all through his insufferable conceit, and that if he had not taken such pains with his hair, or worn so much of it, such a wretched fellow never had entered the head of that modern Dollish, Mrs. Montfort.

An official publication lately issued in France shows that the phylloxera is assailing about a third less land to be planted with vines than was under that crop a few years ago. The department of the Gard (on the Mediterranean) has suffered most by the scourge this year. It has lost 96,000 out of 99,000 acres. French brewers who have made progress of late will now be looking up Paris, especially, has for some time been "beery."

A TELEGRAPH station just opened at the Riffelberg, above Zurich, in Switzerland, is said to be the highest station of the kind in the world.

VARIETIES.

—A drunken brawl may well be styled a spirited contest.

—It is not definitely known where Cotewayo is spending his summer.

—A wood man is a great deal rarer than a wooded woman.—Lowell Courier.

—The blind should go to Holy Land, where even the Deaf Sea.—Salem Standard.

—H. Sudds is cashier of the Governors Bank. He handles the soap.—Rome Sentinel.

—The best thing in the long run. Not honesty, but a good stout pair of lungs.—Puck.

—The proverb "fair exchange is no robbery" didn't refer to church fairs.—Robbery Post.

—A rich uncle's heir, who waited long was finally worth his wait in gold.—N. Y. Herald.

—A young clergyman won a boat race at Lake George by practice and not by preaching.

—If blood will tell, a mosquito should be confessing nearly all the time.—Philadelphia Sunday Item.

—The picknicker who can't tell when codliver oil is mixed with ice cream deserves to be made sick.—Free Press.

—It is so much what a man can lift, as what he can hang onto, that shows his actual strength.—Josh Billings.

—The Chicago Tribune didn't think much of the dead prince, who once had a chance offered him of living in Chicago.

—We hear of men sowing wild oats, but who ever heard of women sowing anything but tares?—St. Louis Times-Journal.

—What is to be done for a man who has no mind of his own?—Albany Argus. Put him on a jury.—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

—The Yonkers Gazette has an article entitled, "What do we eat?" That depends. If you live in a boarding-house no human being can tell.—N. Y. Express.

—A Western paper says of the loss of a vessel: "The Captain swam ashore, so did the chambermaid; she was insured for $15,000, and loaded with iron."

—An Irishman who had on a very ragged coat was asked of what stuff it was made. "Bedad, I don't know; I think the most of it is made of fresh air."

—Diamonds, it is said, attract the lightning to a dangerous extent. Duell the thinner was small and the undergrowth light he thought he would be able to get through without much difficulty. When he entered the burning district the wind seemed to increase and the fire moved with such amazing rapidity he could hardly keep pace with it. After driving through the fire three or four hundred yards the smoke became so dense that the travelers were almost suffocated, and a few seconds later were compelled to lie down on the bed of the wagon to prevent being smothered. The smoke so blinded Mr. Uffner that he could hardly see the road, and consequently he allowed the horses to go along pretty much as they pleased. A half mile was traveled in this way, when the smoke suddenly cleared away, and the flames on either side of the road increased in strength so rapidly that they almost paralyzed the now thoroughly frightened travelers. Seeing that if they did not escape very soon the entire party would be burned to death, Mr. Uffner tried to urge the horses to a gallop, but this was of no avail, as the horses by the time they had started, they were so frightened that they hardly moved, and at last came to a standstill, and began backing off the road. Fearing that the wagon would be pushed into the fire, Mr. Uffner jumped out, and, taking the reins by the bits, managed to quiet them until he found a good, stout stick. Then ordering his wife to take the reins, he proceeded to belabor the horses until they struck a gallop and dashed along the road, the fire, however, succeeded in clambering into the wagon as the horses ran, and, taking the lines from his wife, urged them on at the top of his voice. This race was continued over the rough mountain road for several hundred yards, with the flames roaring on both sides and myriads of sparks falling in and about the wagon. Mrs. Uffner's dress caught fire, and her husband dropped the reins to assist her in extinguishing it, when she fainted in his arms. While he was endeavoring to bring his wife back to consciousness the horses were tearing along at breakneck speed, and the wagon swerved, jolted and swung around in anything but a comfortable manner. Mrs. Uffner became conscious in a few seconds, however, and just then her husband saw a cloud of black smoke enveloping the road and knew that they had reached the outskirts of the fire, and were safe. The travelers were all slightly burned. Some idea of the terrible heat they passed through may be had when it is stated that the paint on the wagon was burned entirely off, and the horses' hair was scorched in hundreds of places by the clouds of sparks that fell on them.—Pottsville (Pa.) Miner.

—Not one single paper in America has this year had an item about paying an outlawed and forgotten debt. Fact is, we are all pretty well satisfied if a man can pay his debts at last week.—Free Press.

—He was inclined to be facetious. "What quantities of dried grasses you keep here, Miss Stebbins! Nice room for a donkey to go into!" "Make yourself at home," she responded, with sweet gravity.

"I know I shall go straight to heaven if hung," remarked a Virginia murderer, "but yet I would a little rather be pardoned by the Governor." Few men would throw away such a fine chance.—Free Press.

—A young lady's graduating essay was entitled, "Who Will Be Next?" From which it would appear that she intends to engage in the barber business—become a tonsorial artist, we mean.—Norristown Herald.

"Ma," said a little girl, "do men want to get married as much as women do?" "Ishaw! what are you talking about?" "Why, na, the ladies who come here are always talking about getting married; the men don't."

—The Boston Commercial-Bulletin says: "Talk about Cleopatra's Needle on the banks of the Thames! Just wait till James Gordon Bennett brings back the North Pole and sets it up in Central Park. What's the needle to the pole?"

—Two railroaders saw a fashionably dressed lady coming up the street. She had on a very long train, which caused the soberest of the two to remark: "I say, Bill, she'll never make the hill without a header. The track won't hold her."—McGregor News.

—A Marshfield man, who lost his good character some time ago, was severely handled by some of his former friends. "I know it, boys, I know my character's gone—lost entirely. And," he added, rather pointedly, "it's too conformed but for it was the only one in the place worth saving."

—A gentleman in a draper's shop had the misfortune to tread on a lady's skirt. She turned round, her face flushed with anger, but seeing the gentleman was a stranger she smiled complacently, saying, "I beg pardon, sir, I was going to be in a dreadful passion. I thought it was my husband."—French Paper.

—The foolish man takes his wife to a church so-called and spends $5 for ice cream and cake. The wise man allows his wife to serve on the Refreshment Committee, and when the evening comes he goes to that church so-called with a market basket. If his wife has improved her opportunities, he comes away ahead of the game.—Washington (Ind.) Democrat.

—The young woman who desires to have herself published in the newspapers as "fascinating, beautiful and accomplished," will please pack up her clothes in a dirty towel, crawl out of the back up-stairs window, some dark, rainy night, and elope with the man who carries her dad's horses. It's a big price to pay for compliments, but it will bring them just as certain as a dirty rain-water barrel will begot mosquitoes in July.—Waterloo Observer.

—Seldom does one find a humorous Chinaman. But there is a story told of a Mongolian domestic in Reno, which shows that there is at least one comic Asiatic in the town. A gentleman who is fond of fishing recently sent his Chinaman into the garden to dig some earth worms for bait. Shortly afterward he heard the Chinaman laughing loudly in the garden. When John came in, the gentleman asked the cause of his merriment. John said: "Me dig worms in garden. Lady come along and say: 'What you going to do with worms, John?' Me say, 'make soap—belly nice soap.' She put up her hands and say 'oh! oh!' then she run heap quick."—Reno (Nev.) Gazette.

—One of the editorial staff of the Inter-Ocean has recently been traveling in the far west where Indians are numerous. At a store in Prescott, Arizona, one day a large number of the Navajo maidens were assembled and the editor attracted their curiosity. Peters, the merchant, held up a newspaper and explained to the delicate maidens that the coming man was an editor. The fair Navajos eyed the young man for some time when one of them called him "Woop-tak-kah-o-re-hup-ha-quintoo-si-cho-quack-a-loop." The man of the pencil blushed at what he took to be a very complimentary name, but his feathers drooped a little when some time after the interpreter explained to him that the name meant "Old-man-with-the-seat-of-his-breeches-worn-out."

—Thrilling Experience of a Family in a Forest Fire.

Between eight and nine o'clock one evening last week Robert C. Uffner, his wife and a daughter twelve years of age left Frankfort, Ind., in a brougham, an ordinary farm wagon drawn by two horses. After driving a short distance, Mr. Uffner on looking ahead a half mile or so saw that the woods were on fire on both sides of the road. The fire, however, was small and the undergrowth light he thought he would be able to get through without much difficulty. When he entered the burning district the wind seemed to increase and the fire moved with such amazing rapidity he could hardly keep pace with it. After driving through the fire three or four hundred yards the smoke became so dense that the travelers were almost suffocated, and a few seconds later were compelled to lie down on the bed of the wagon to prevent being smothered. The smoke so blinded Mr. Uffner that he could hardly see the road, and consequently he allowed the horses to go along pretty much as they pleased. A half mile was traveled in this way, when the smoke suddenly cleared away, and the flames on either side of the road increased in strength so rapidly that they almost paralyzed the now thoroughly frightened travelers. Seeing that if they did not escape very soon the entire party would be burned to death, Mr. Uffner tried to urge the horses to a gallop, but this was of no avail, as the horses by the time they had started, they were so frightened that they hardly moved, and at last came to a standstill, and began backing off the road. Fearing that the wagon would be pushed into the fire, Mr. Uffner jumped out, and, taking the reins by the bits, managed to quiet them until he found a good, stout stick. Then ordering his wife to take the reins, he proceeded to belabor the horses until they struck a gallop and dashed along the road, the fire, however, succeeded in clambering into the wagon as the horses ran, and, taking the lines from his wife, urged them on at the top of his voice. This race was continued over the rough mountain road for several hundred yards, with the flames roaring on both sides and myriads of sparks falling in and about the wagon. Mrs. Uffner's dress caught fire, and her husband dropped the reins to assist her in extinguishing it, when she fainted in his arms. While he was endeavoring to bring his wife back to consciousness the horses were tearing along at breakneck speed, and the wagon swerved, jolted and swung around in anything but a comfortable manner. Mrs. Uffner became conscious in a few seconds, however, and just then her husband saw a cloud of black smoke enveloping the road and knew that they had reached the outskirts of the fire, and were safe. The travelers were all slightly burned. Some idea of the terrible heat they passed through may be had when it is stated that the paint on the wagon was burned entirely off, and the horses' hair was scorched in hundreds of places by the clouds of sparks that fell on them.—Pottsville (Pa.) Miner.

THE following cruel disclosures of one of the secrets of the Chinese toilet, in humble life, is made by a correspondent of the Celestial Empire: "I have lately discovered the way in which Chinese girls paint their faces in Pekin. They first take a quantity of sugar candy, which they rub lavishly over their hands. They then 'amarm' this delectable cosmetic over their cheeks and forehead till they are as shiny as the moon and as sticky as though they had washed themselves in treacle. The surface thus prepared, they proceed to lay on the white powder, which they spread thickly from ear to ear; and then they put on the rouge. Their subsequent sensations must be imagined. I never heard them described."

SCANDAL mongers may learn this lesson from the frog: Once overpassed the season of his adolescence he gives up tail-bearing.—Yonkers Gazette.

A KNOWLEDGE of mankind is necessary

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1 50
Six months, 75
INvariably in advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, $1 per square of 8 lines;
50 cents per square for each additional insertion. Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 30, 1879.

To the Republican Voters of Garrett county.

You are hereby requested to meet in your
respective districts on

Saturday, Sept. 6th, 1879,

for the purpose of selecting five (5) delegates
from each district to meet in county convention, in Oakland on

Wednesday, Sept. 10th, 1879,

for the purpose of selecting three (3) delegates
to represent Garrett county in the State nominating convention which meets in Baltimore
on September 12th, and three (3) alternates
for said delegates, and three (3) members of
the State Central Committee for Garrett Co.

The members of the district committees are
requested to make the necessary arrangements for the primaries named in this call.
By order
A. G. STURGIS,
Chairman.

FOR THE CAMPAIGN.

The coming campaign promises to be one of the most exciting on record.
Much is at stake and it behooves
every citizen of this county to prepare himself to vote with intelligence
and judgment on the 4th of next November.

As the regular perusal of a live
newspaper will give a clear idea of
the issues at stake, and as the leading
points between the Republican and Democratic parties will be clearly
and distinctly submitted in the columns of THE REPUBLICAN, this
paper will be sent to any address in
the county, from now until November 15th, 1879, for 25 cents.

Let every Republican in the county
act as an agent for THE REPUBLICAN
and enlarge its circulation so that no voter in the county can plead ignorance. Send in your orders immediately.

Does anybody still wonder why the colored population are anxious to get out of Mississippi?

If the Mississippi shot-gun continues its wonted activity Republican campaign expenses this fall need not be heavy.

At a meeting of the Republican Executive Committee of Baltimore city, held on Thursday evening, it was unanimously decided to place a full Republican ticket in the field for all the offices to be filled this fall.

The most important thing in the shape of a man that one sees on election day is an unregistered voter.
His political friends feel like booting him, and his opponents are not sufficiently interested in him to treat him. So attend to your registration the first thing Monday morning, September 1st. Don't put it off until next day, but attend to it at once.
Remember that procrastination is the thief of time.

Blackburn, the yellow fever Governor of Kentucky, has spoken at last, but only to remark that he does not care a d—n what the Republican newspapers choose to say about him.
But he did not say whether he is the same Luke P. Blackburn that attempted to infect the North with yellow fever and small-pox during the war. He might as well keep quiet until he is ready to answer that leading question.

Senator Pendleton made a speech in Cincinnati the other day in which he said the Republicans would not give up the power to use troops at the polls. The Republicans never claimed or desired the power to influence elections by the presence of troops. Years ago they themselves put a law on the statute book making it a misdemeanor for any military officer to bring soldiers to a polling-place, save to keep the peace and enforce the laws of the United States.
Last season the Democrats in Congress sought to take away from the Government the ability to compel obedience to its laws in places where an election might be going on. This the Republicans resisted, and the Democrats backed down. Finally they sought to conceal their retreat by renegeing in different language the old Republican statute relating to troops at the polls as a rider to the Army bill, and this the President signed. No one knows these facts better than Mr. Pendleton, and his attempt to deceive his Democratic followers is unworthy of him.

The Congressional investigations in Massachusetts and Rhode Island have turned out to be just about as valuable as that in Cincinnati, and old Hendrick B. Wright's excursion in search of hard times. However, the country still has the blessed consolation of knowing that it foots the bills for the investigators' traveling expenses and elegant recreation during the heated term, without which their able devotion to the good of the nation might wither and dwindle
away.

CULMINATION OF THE YAZOO
PLOT.—The bulldozers of Yazoo county were not satisfied with Henry M. Dixon's promise that he would retire from the independent movement, and to make sure of the matter James Barksdale, Democratic candidate for Chancery Clerk, employed the buckshot contents of a double barreled gun into Mr. Dixon with fatal effect on Tuesday. The mur-derer was arrested and the next day released on $15,000 bail.

In referring to the recent Yazoo bulldozing, the Democratic New York World says that "it will be the yielding of communities at the south in such cases to a mob, and the failure of the States at the South properly in time of need to call for Federal assistance, which will eventually lead thousands of conservative northern people to insist that the Federal bayonets must be sent there uninvited." The most objectionable Radical could hardly put the point stronger than this.

The Baltimore Globe (Dem.)
makes the following slightly sarcastic remark in regard to the press report of the Yazoo murder:

"The careful and conservative dispatches from Yazoo City say that the cause of the killing of Dixon by Barksdale on Tuesday last is unknown, that the affair is 'shrouded in mystery.' In absence of details we must conclude that Mr. Barksdale destroyed Mr. Dixon because he was an infidel in religion. It is necessary occasionally to whoop up the heretics in Mississippi."

The most contented man in the United States at this time is Mr.
Hayes. He beat the majority in Congress; he is not an aspirant for renomination; he knows that the success of his administration has wonderfully strengthened the Republican party, and he can calmly
look forward to a Republican successor. Prosperity has returned to the country, and the corn-stalk financiers are more noisy than dangerous. Counting in all these things, President Hayes has a right to take the world easy.

Here is a little keen satire on the late extra session of Congress from an ultra Southern Democratic journal: "How can the great Democratic party of the Union go before the country arguing in favor of free elections, while the Democrats of Mississippi are enforcing mob law and deciding political contests before a vote is cast? What arguments can be used against troops at the polls while a Mississippi mob warns a candidate not to submit his claims to the suffrages of the people?" Several millions of voters in the North give it up, Mr. Democrat.

The State Taxpayers' Convention is the only body of a representative character thus far in this campaign that has deigned to notice the claims of the local optionist. Local option has been denied admittance into several county platforms, but the convention received it with open arms.
The local option resolution passed at the Taxpayers' Convention on this subject is specific, and calls upon the legislature to allow each county that so desires, to decide by a direct vote of the people whether or not liquor shall be sold within its limits as a beverage. This is undoubtedly one point gained by the local optionists, while in Baltimore county it is more than probable that a fusion of the taxpayers and temperance parties will be made, and an independent and nonpartisan county and legislative ticket put in the field.

Dennis Coppers, the Chief Engineer of the Brooklyn Fire Department, who died recently from the accidental discharge of a fowling piece in the hands of his nephew, Mr.
Jones, left directions for his burial beside his wife, his mother and two children. The lot is in Calvary Cemetery, but on the arrival of the funeral at the ground his friends found that the grave had not been dug, Vicar General Quinn having given orders that the burial could not take place, as the deceased was a Free Mason. The coffin was placed in the receiving vault, and legal steps have been commenced to decide the question. The defence will be that the dead man was a Mason, and hence not entitled to burial in consecrated ground, and that this condition, as well as others, is set forth in the deed to the property.

The Pivotal Question.

The political contests of this Fall, whether they turn upon financial issues or not, will depend at last upon the question so tersely stated by the late Senator Morton, and afterward by Senator Chandler: Is the United States a Nation or a League? The financial issues, when closely studied, turn mainly upon the desire of the people to maintain the power and the credit of a central nationality. If national existence is nothing to them, and if public credit is nothing, abolition of National banks might be favored with some show of reason. Behind all the questions commonly called political the same sharp divergence of opinion appears.
There are men who believe that each State should have power to snap the tie that binds the States together, and they are naturally Democrats. They naturally believe that the Union should be crippled as much as possible, in its executive power, in its Army, in its credit and financial resources, and in its control over elections. On the other hand there are men who believe that the United States, as one great Nation, should be responsible for the protection of every citizen in his rights; for the purity of Congressional elections; for the strict enforcement of law in every part of the land; for the payment of debts and the soundness of currency in circulation. The differences are radical. In some places they are financial; in some political;
but at bottom they involve the question whether the United States is a Nation or a mere league of States.

The Republican party is the only National party this country has ever seen. It is the only party which has resisted the fatal theory that the Union can be broken by the will of one or more States. It is the only party which has ever asserted the right of the Union to suppress treason and punish traitors. It is the only party which has made any effort to uphold and establish the credit of the Union, and has steadfastly resisted those repudiating tendencies which would make the United States as powerless as Minnesota or Mississippi to raise armies, to enforce respect for treaties, to suppress resistance to its laws, or to establish a safe and wholesome currency. It is the only party which has insisted upon a currency equally good in Maine or Oregon; the only party which has opposed repudiation of National obligations; the only party which has suppressed a rebellion, and refused to strip the Government of power necessary to the suppression of rebellions hereafter. In reality it is the only National party; the only party which ever has claimed that the United States ought to be a Nation, and tried to establish and uphold National power, National honor or National citizenship.

We shall see this year what the people think of such a party and of its ideas. There will be little chance to dodge the issue. Fortunately, the Democrats in Congress have taken such a course that the very existence of the Union is threatened by their assault upon the Executive power, and not less by their warfare against the honor and credit of the United States. Financially, the Democrats want "wild cat" banks, created by the States, and regulated or restrained only if the States please to regulate or restrain them. The question will go to the people: Do they prefer the old State bank note circulation, by which all poor men were saddled, and the West and the South were continually taxed and plundered, to the currency issued by the National banks, and secured by pledge of United States bonds? Politically, the Democrats want for each State power to make every election a farce, as South Carolina did at the last "appeal to the people," and as the citizens of Yazoo county, Mississippi, are doing now. It rests with the people to say whether they want elections in which the rights of every citizen, whether rich or poor, armed or unarmed, white or black, shall be protected. It rests with them to say whether they want a strict and faithful enforcement of the laws as to all citizens alike.—N. Y. Tribune.

The Yahoos of Yazoo.

It is a generous concession on the part of the bulldozers of Yazoo county, Mississippi, to what they doubtless deem to be a mistaken public sentiment, to make a semi-official explanation of the events which occurred in that amiable and wholesome community some four weeks ago. They seem to have heard that the decent sentiment of the country has condemned their proceedings as having been disgraceful, lawless and the very soul and essence of mob tyranny; and so, although such a rebuke must seem to them an unwarranted interference with home rule,
they have unhesitatingly sought to explain why the candidates on the independent county ticket were successfully urged at the muzzle of the shot gun to retire into the shades of private life. The bulldozers' account of the affair is published in the Cleveland Plaindealer, with the assurance conveyed in the head lines that it is "The True Story." It consists of a report of the proceedings of a meeting of the Democratic citizens of Yazoo City, called, they say, because of the "false reports promulgated as to the occurrence which took place here on the 25th of July." The report states that the "individuals who engineered the 'occurrence' were no lawless mob, 'but men of respectability, intelligence and property, of honest vocations, identified with the prosperity and material interest of the country, as well as the peace and good order of its society.' This may be a fact. All terms are merely relative, and in the Yazoo county code of ethics peace and good order may be synonymous with an attempt by violence and threats of murder to prevent men from engaging in an opposition to the local dominant party. But at the same time the Yahoos of Yazoo cannot expect to convert to that opinion people who are not under the peculiar influences of that neighborhood, and have not had the advantage of being trained in its remarkable ideas of right. They pay their most particular attention to Dixon, the independent nominee for sheriff, and leader of the independent movement. We learn from them that he "is a man of violent and desperate character,

whose career here has been marked by strife and turbulence, who has been reckless of human life and of the law." His recklessness of human life and of the law are not to be questioned. As a regular Democrat he displayed that cheerful trait as far back as 1875, when he was a prominent agent in carrying the state on the Mississippi plan; but we do not see why it should be brought up against him now by the very men who passed him a vote of thanks and presented him with silver plate for his services in that campaign. There is a good deal of inconsistency here,
and we do not find the key to it until we read further along, and discover that this bold, bad Dixon is now endeavoring to inaugurate a war of races, and that the most respectable citizens "looked with gloomy forebodings to the recurrence of the scenes of anarchy, strife and bloodshed which marked the race contest of 1875." Thus we see that to oppose the regular ring Democratic candidates is to inaugurate a race issue.
Dixon hoped to bring out a propo-tion of the negro vote for the independent ticket, and for fear that this would cause a revival of the race contest, with the attendant evils that the pronunciamento so graphically describes, the truly good citizens, who are not a mob, stann out the movement, and in their action they see no anarchy, no lawlessness and no provocation to strife or bloodshed.
Even the national organ of the Democracy, the New York World, says that "no community can be called civilized or said to live under the protection and guarantee of law in which citizens individually are allowed to take the protection of society upon themselves, as did those who combined to compel Mr. Dixon first to leave the county and next to abandon his candidacy." Let us suppose that Dixon and his supporters had been strong enough to defend their rights. If they had been organized and armed a sanguinary conflict would in all probability have taken place. Would the responsibility for it then have rested upon the attacked or attacking faction? The Mississippi plan may work very well when its practitioners wield the strongest arm, but it can lead to nothing else than blood rioting if the intended victims of it are not too hopelessly weak to resist. That was their condition in Yazoo county, but the South is growing and strengthening, and it will not forever submit to being cowed down. The World has a clear perception of this certainly in pointing out that in the war of mobs that is likely to ensue if the Yazoo business is repeated the Southern states will find themselves unable to repress the disorders, and there will be nothing else to do but to call for the federal bayonets. This prospect is all the more serious because such a man as the present Governor Stone, of Mississippi, either sympathizes with the tyranny of the ring or else is too cowardly to strike a blow at it. Perhaps the gentlemen who composed the Yazoo picnic,
which was not a mob, do not appreciate the dangerous future which they are inviting. This is all the more probable because they can discover only a malicious foe in everybody who does not agree with them. The Vicksburg Herald, whose Democracy will not be questioned, has been giving them sound advice, and they retorted by resolving in public meeting that it "be declared an enemy to this community."—Balto. American.

Every Republican in the county should have THE REPUBLICAN.

What if the Democrats Prevail?

Suppose you should prevail, not only in this State, but on the national field—how would your success affect the business movements, the prosperity of the country? At present business feels under its feet again the firm ground of a reasonable stability of current values. Safe business calculations can be made. Confidence is reviving; capital and enterprise venture forth more freely. Now, by substituting greenbacks for national bank notes the currency is made irredeemable again, and Congress is to determine its volume, and, as Gen.
Ewing says, to raise or lower values.
Does not every sane man see that from that very moment the business community will stand still, all its energies paralyzed by the uncertainty as to what Congress, or its motive power, the Democratic caucus, will do next? For, he it remembered, however august a body that caucus may be, it cannot be said to have inspired the country with superlative confidence in its wisdom.

Superfluous fears! says General
Ewing. We shall enjoy the confidence of the business community, for are we not going to increase the volume of the currency, and thus raise values and set business kiting again?
Indeed! Can he really imagine that such proceedings can possibly be received by the business community with anything but the deepest distrust? If so, he must be unmindful of several important circumstances.
In the first place a thing so utterly unprecedented, so inconceivable to the common sense of mankind, as a wholly unnecessary, wanton suspension of specie payments immediately after successful resumption, in time of peace, of reviving business and growing prosperity, with a treasury full of coin will impress the whole civilized world with the belief that the financial affairs of the country must be governed by a gang of sharpers or a set of lunatics. Such a return to irredeemable paper money, and subsequent inflation, might indeed raise the hopes of some foolish people, who have learned nothing and forgotten nothing. But the present generation of American business men are not of that kind. They have gone through the process of raising values by the expansion of irredeemable paper money already once. They have learned to appreciate the deceptive prosperity of such a ballooning period at its true value, and they painfully remember the crash following upon it, which overwhelmed them with disaster. And let me add, their distrust will be all the greater just because the financiers of the Ewing school predict a good result.
They will remember that as prophets these gentlemen were a sorry failure;
that whenever they predicted a storm, you could safely arrange for a picnic; and, when sunshine was on their bills, it was time to take out your waterproof.—Secretary Schurz's Cincinnati Speech.

The records of the Treasury Department show a decided increase in the building of steam vessels for the year ending June 30. The returns are not as yet complete, but it is supposed that the steam tonnage will foot up about 88,813, as compared to 81,860 for the previous year, being an increase of nearly 8 1/2 per cent. This is exclusive of sailing vessels, barges and canal-boats. The evidences of a revival in ship-building throughout the country are very gratifying, and it is to be hoped that Baltimore will at some time enter into the competition by the establishment of works for the construction of iron and steel steamers, in connection with the second dock now in progress. The workers in iron and wood at Wilmington, Del., and Chester and Philadelphia are now rejoicing at the prospect of having extensive orders for steam cruisers from Russia, that government having resolved to expend nearly twenty million dollars in adding fast-going cruisers to its navy. This has been contemplated for some time, and estimates have been furnished for three different classes of vessels by Messrs. Cramp and Neale & Levy, and Pusey &
Jones, of Philadelphia; Harlan & Hollingsworth, of Wilmington, and John Roach & Sons, of Chester. It is supposed that the Cramps have the inside track, having already furnished four cruisers that are said to be entirely satisfactory. One of the firm is now in Russia, and John Roach has also an agent there in the person of William Webb, an old New York ship-builder. The Russians have shown such a decided preference for American vessels that there can be but little doubt that the new contracts will be divided among the firms that have submitted plans and estimates. Such a colossal contract would reanimate business not only along the Delaware river, but extend to the furnaces and rolling mills, the coal and iron mines, and give employment to thousands in all the trades usually employed in fitting up and fitting out steamships.—*Balto.
American.*

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 26, 1879.

While it seems certain that Mr.
Tilden will be the next Democratic candidate for the Presidency, it is equally certain that there will be powerful opposition not only in his own State but in that part of the country which has been supposed to favor his candidacy most. Senator Wade Hampton is reported as saying to an interviewer that Thurman or Bayard will be the next Democratic nominee for the Presidency. Hampton's choice was thus announced: "I prefer Bayard; I prefer him as a man.
I like his principles." The Senator thought that Sherman rather than Grant would be the Republican nominee. The word of Hampton goes a long way in South Carolina and other Southern States.

A strong effort is being made to get the standard silver dollar into circulation. The U. S. Treasurer has recently issued an order that one-tenth of all the amounts drawn from the Treasury in this city shall be paid in standard silver dollars. The local bankers are complaining loudly
against the enforcement of the order, as they have not storage room in their vaults for the silver received.
On the 1st of next month all the clerks in the Departments here will receive one-tenth of their salaries in silver dollars. Every attempt heretofore made by the Department to put the new silver dollar into general circulation has failed.

Washington has reason to be proud of one of her citizens. He was one of the bondsmen of a defaulting bank cashier, and has not only promptly made up his share of the bond, but relieved the other bond-men of their share of the loss. He was the defaulter's father-in-law.

Five thousand is the majority Senator Blaine claims for the Republican ticket in Maine. Others believe it will be more. All Republicans unite in claiming the election of Governor and both branches of the Legislature. In the words of an intelligent Washingtonian now in that State "the woods are full of deserters from the Greenback wreck."

LOGAN.

The experiment has been made of sowing oats and wheat together with a view to obtain a winter covering for the wheat. The seed, in the proportion of one kind oats in two parts of wheat, was sown in the fall, and the oats sprang up quickly and were killed by the early frost, the stalks and leaves lying on the ground all winter, keeping the snow from blowing away and preventing the sun from thawing the frozen ground. In the spring the dead oats made a good top dressing for the growing wheat.
The crop of wheat in the following season was reported to be excellent,
while wheat on the adjacent land, planted in the usual manner was of no value.

TELEGRAPHIC.

THE DREAD FEVER.

MEMPHIS, August 21.—The Howard Association appeals for help for Memphis sufferers. Their expenses are $1,000 per day and are increasing.
They have expended the $20,000 that were in their treasury when the fever appeared, and have no means to continue the fight unless the North again responds in the same liberal manner as last year. The various secret organizations, as usual, are working nobly at the present time, and have done so since the advent of the epidemic. Foremost among these organizations stands that of the Knights of Honor. The present epidemic is putting their strength to the test, but from the way they have been managing things they are equal to the emergency. They have a well-organized board of relief, which is carefully watched over by the Supreme Lodge. All the money necessary for their relief is promptly given and a watchful eye is ever kept over it. They watch over and alleviate the sufferings of their sick and let them want for nothing. The various relief societies are supplanting the Christian churches here.
During the present crisis the ministers for the most part have fled, leaving their flocks to the ravages of the fever. Were it not for the charitable organizations the distress would be increased ten-fold.

MILLIONS COMING TO AMERICA.
LONDON, Aug. 23.—The Paris correspondent of the Financier says that over twenty millions of francs have been shipped from French ports for the United States during the last three weeks. The Bank of France has now sold, wholesale, its small stock of bar gold and foreign gold coin. One of the chief bullion houses of Paris estimates that the insufficient crops of England, France and Germany will necessitate purchases in the United States to the amount
of $100,000,000.
The Standard, in its financial article this morning, says: "It is thought that a million and a half pound sterling more will leave France for the United States."

LOCAL NEWS.

—Mr. J. R. Bishop is having his residence and store room painted. "Billy" Kennedy is doing the work.

—Miss Marie Adair, who has been visiting Miss Jennie Delawder, returned home Tuesday.

—John O. Michael, Esq., was called to Baltimore Tuesday last, by the death of a sister.

—Died.—At Grafton, Monday, Aug. 25th, 1879, Maggie A., daughter of Mr. Theo. C. Lynch, aged 13 months.

—A large number of our citizens expect to attend the reunion at Cumberland next Wednesday.

—200 sacks G. A. Salt for sale at Wm. P. Totten's Cheap Cash Store, Oakland, Md. a26-tf.

—THE REPUBLICAN will be furnished to subscribers from now until the close of the campaign this fall for 25 cents, in advance.

—Oakland is still thronged with summer visitors, notwithstanding the unpleasant weather of the past week.

—Josiah Summers, of Sang Run district, this county, has killed so far this summer 281 rattlesnakes. He ought to be pensioned by the County Commissioners.

—Mr. Thane Miller will hold a children's meeting Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock, in the M. E. Church. This will probably be the last meeting he will conduct this summer.

—The Granger picnic at the Red House, this county, Thursday, was well attended, and gave general satisfaction to the participants. The Oakland brass band furnished music for the occasion.

—The following visitors from Cincinnati, Ohio, are sojourning with W. H. Hagans, Esq.: Misses Clara H. Brown, K. Alice Holabard, E. St. Clair Sherwood, Mrs. Geo. Holabard, Mrs. L. Anderson Lyford, Mr. George Lyford.

—Dr. W. F. Funderberg, Oculist, and Aurist, from Cumberland, Md., is at the "Davis House," where all those suffering from diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat can consult him. All consultations free. Hours 9 A. M. to 1 P. M. J319.

—Died.—At Reedsville, Preston county, W. Va., Sunday evening, August 24th, 1879, Mrs. Charlotte, wife of William Wheeler, Esq., in the 74th year of her age. Deceased had been a consistent member of the Lutheran church since her childhood.

—Mr. Tower last week received notice of the death of Susannah Durst, an insane pauper committed to the Montevue Hospital March 1st, 1875, by the Circuit Court of this county, which occurred on the 21st inst. Her remains were interred in the hospital grave yard.

—Mayor Delawder deserves the thanks of the citizens of Oakland for the excellent order preserved on Wednesday. By his appointment of several special policemen, with instructions to arrest any person that showed any disorderly tendencies, comparative quiet was maintained in the vast crowd in Oakland that day.

—A very interesting meeting was held in the M. E. Church Monday evening presided over by Mr. Thane Miller, which was designed especially for the colored people, a large number of whom were present and took part in the exercises. A similar meeting will be held in the same church next Monday evening, commencing at 8 o'clock.

—Prof. W. O. Ison, A. M., the recently elected Professor of Military Science and tutor in the Preparatory Department of the State University, has accepted the position, and will be present to begin his work at the opening of the Fall Term. He is a young man of accurate scholarship, and good moral character. Since his graduation in 1876, he has been successfully engaged in teaching.—W. Va. Journal of Education.

—In all towns where a newspaper is published, every business man ought to advertise in it, even if it is nothing more than a card stating his name and the line of business in which he is engaged. It helps to sustain the paper, and lets the people at a distance know that the town is full of business men. The paper finds its way into hundreds of places where a hand-bill cannot reach. A card in a paper is a traveling sign board, and can be seen by every reader. "Think of these things" and let your light shine.

—On Saturday Patrick Cunningham, a miner employed in the New Central Koonitz mine at Lonaconing, met with a horrible death, being run over by loaded mine cars and killed instantly. He was entering the mine and walking on the left hand track, used by the loaded cars, and the supposition is that, confused by the noise of approaching empty cars in the rear, he was struck unawares by those in front, all of which passed over him, dragging the body forty yards before the accident was discovered.

Cunningham was a single man, thirty years of age, and much respected in the neighborhood.

Church Services—Sunday.

St. Matthew's P. E. Church.—Morning Prayer and Sermon every Sunday, at 11 A. M. Evening Prayer at 6 P. M. Holy Communion 1st Sunday in each month, at 11 A. M. Evening Prayer every day in the week at 6 P. M.

Lutheran Church.—Preaching in the morning at 10½ o'clock, by Rev. O. C. Miller.

M. E. Church.—Preaching in the evening at 7½ o'clock, by Rev. B. Ison.

Dentistry.

Dr. J. Daily, resident dentist at Westernport, will be in Oakland September 8th, and remain one week.

Half Sheets.

We have been compelled for several weeks past to give our exchanges half sheets. This is on account of our rapidly increasing subscription list. We know our exchanges will pardon us under the circumstances.

Information Wanted.

On June 14th, 1864, Wm. T. Morrow, of Company F, 1st West Va. cavalry fell from a troop train at or near Cranberry Summit and was killed by the train passing over him. It is said that his remains were brought to Oakland and buried by Masons or Odd-Fellows. Mr. Morrow being a member of each order. Any information concerning his grave or where his remains have been removed to will be gratefully received by the family. Address, W. E. Powell, Parkersburg, W. Va.

Closed his Bar.

We have learned that during the very interesting and successful meeting held in Moorfield a short time ago, by Rev. S. W. Haldaway, Mr. W. H. Heltzel, proprietor of the North Branch Hotel, was converted and joined the church, immediately thereafter closing up his bar. He now proposes to keep a strictly Temperance Hotel. We think that the traveling public, and particularly temperance people, would do well to make a note of this fact.—Piedmont Herald.

The National Road.

We are informed that Mr. G. W. Blocher, supervisor of a five-mile section of the National Road between our county line and Grantsville, completed his repairs Thursday, and that he has executed a superb job. This he has done in advance of obtaining the county appropriation with his own means, in order that the people may enjoy the earliest benefit of the improvement. Travelers over the repaired portions say "the old road doesn't look like itself," the restoration has been so complete.—Frostburg Journal.

Elisba E. Friend Killed.

Mr. John Wilhelm, writing from Venice, Madison county, Ill., says that, on the 2d of August, at 8 P. M., Elisba E. Friend, who has relatives living in Garrett county, Md., while walking on the track of the Washburn railway, was struck by a locomotive and instantly killed. The body was thrown about 100 feet. A funeral sermon was preached over the remains by the Rev. T. M. Boyle, from Hebrews 9: 27, after which they were buried. The deceased came to Illinois from Maryland about March 1st and was employed on the farm of D. S. Fries.

Registration.

The officers of registration, as will be seen by reference to our advertising columns, will open their offices throughout the county, on Monday, the 1st of September, and will remain open until Friday evening following. We trust that no Republican who is entitled to register will neglect to have his name put upon the registry list. It is expected that the Republicans of the different districts will see to it that all are duly registered. To secure this, however, to the fullest extent, there should be a combined effort on the part of Republicans in each district, who should make it their business to look after voters in their respective neighborhoods, and impress upon them the importance of getting registered.

The Odd-Fellows' Pic-Nic.

The picnic at this place Wednesday, given under the auspices of the Grafton Lodge, I. O. O. F., was a grand success in every way. The number present was estimated from 2,500 to 3,500, about 900 of whom came from the west on a special train and about 150 from the east, on the accommodation. The trains arrived here between ten and eleven o'clock, and after disembarking and taking their families and friends to the grove in the Oakland Hotel grounds, a procession of Odd-Fellows in regardia was formed, with J. W. Clayton, of Grafton, as chief marshal, and G. W. Sheets, of Westernport, and W. H. Tower, of Oakland, as assistants, headed by the Grafton brass band, with the Newburg band in the centre and the Oakland band in the rear, marched through the principal streets of the town. Returning to the Oakland Hotel, prayer was offered by Rev. — Plannigan, of Grafton, and an address of welcome was delivered by Thos. J. Peddicord, Esq., of Oakland. After an intermission for dinner, Rev. E. W. Ryan, of Grafton, addressed the crowd in the grove in front of the hotel. The balance of the afternoon, until the departure of the trains, was spent in fraternal enjoyment. The best of order was maintained throughout the day, and taking into consideration the large crowd, there was but little drunkenness, or disorderly conduct of any kind. The day will long be remembered by the Odd-Fellows and their friends.

Died.

Ida Maria Combs was born at Westernport, Allegany county, Md., March 18th, 1841, and died in Pittsburgh, Pa., Thursday, Aug. 21st, 1879. She was a dutiful child, with tender heart and a loving disposition, thinking always of other's happiness before self. At the age of 16 she joined the M. E. Church at Piedmont, W. Va., and has ever since been an active, consistent and working member. She was married in 1863 to Rev. Geo. W. Morgan, of the East Baltimore Conference. She died peacefully and happily; leaving a husband and six children, the oldest being but 13 years and the youngest an infant, born the morning of its mother's death. The children could not all be brought, and the father had to remain with them. Services were held at the residence in Pittsburgh, and the parting of husband and children was a heart-rending scene. Her remains were brought to Oakland Saturday and interred in the Odd-Fellows' cemetery Sunday, after services in the M. E. Church, conducted by Rev. B. Ison.

Railroad Up the Yough.

We understand that a survey is about to be made for a railroad up the Youghiogheny river from the neighborhood of Connellsville, under the direction of the Pennsylvania Central Company. This road has been talked of for several years, but on account of the general business depression has been postponed from time to time. We hope and believe the enterprise will now be pushed forward. A railroad up the Yough would open up a section rich in coal, timber, iron ore and lime stone, and one of the best agricultural portions of Garrett county. We hope land owners along the proposed route will offer every facility in aid of this enterprise.

The Cumberland Reunion.

The Soldiers' Reunion at Cumberland on Wednesday next, promises to be a grand affair, and will no doubt be attended by a large number of citizens from Garrett. A special train will leave Cranberry Summit at 6:05 A. M. and arrive in Cumberland at 8:50 A. M.; returning leave Cumberland at 5 P. M., arriving at Cranberry at 7:50 P. M. The rates of fare for round trip are as follows: Cranberry Summit, $2.50; Hutton's Switch, $2.35; Oakland, $2.15; Deer Park, $2.00; Altamont, $1.80; Wilson's, $1.60; Swanton, $1.65; Frankville, $1.45; Bloomington, $1.20; Piedmont, $1.10; Keyser, 95 cents.

The Lochiel Lumber Mill.

Although we have neither the proper amount of time or space to give a thorough description of such an extensive establishment, we will endeavor to give a brief outline of the mill, its machinery and capacity. The building is 128 feet long by 62 feet wide, with a wing 96 feet long by 50 feet wide. It is two stories in height, with a "sky-light" 45 feet long. There are 3 steam engines, one with a 16 inch cylinder and a 30 inch stroke, one with a 14 inch cylinder and a 26 inch stroke and one with a 10 inch cylinder and a 30 inch stroke. There are 3 boilers 42 inches in diameter and 30 feet long, 2 boilers 30 inches in diameter and 36 feet long and one steam pump with 16 inch cylinder. The company have also erected a steam dry kiln, which will dry 30,000 feet of lumber in 21 hours. But we must return to the machinery within the mill. We shall next speak of the saws. One circular saw 68 inches in diameter, three slab saws 36 inches in diameter; one lat gang with 36 inch gauge, runs 30 saws; one gang edge saw 50 inches in circumference; also, nine box saws on the lower floor and seven on the upper floor, and one automatic feed saw for flooring. The facilities for supplying the establishment with an abundance of water is complete, about 1,000 feet of pipe having already been laid, and extending throughout the building in such a manner as to render accident by fire almost impossible. The pipe is 2½ inches in diameter, and fire plugs have been put in at intervals, which with the assistance of a number of Connolly fire extinguishers, also constantly at hand, to put out a fire would be but the work of a moment. As to the capacity of the mill for sawing, we have been told that 70,000 feet is an average day's work. We have omitted the Planing machines which we can only say cannot be excelled anywhere. Mr. J. I. Livingston, one of the proprietors, is now at the mill assisting in the management, and a more clever gentleman one will not find in a day's ride. Mr. R. V. Arnold is foreman in the mill and Mr. James Cunningham chief engineer. We shall have to close, but before doing so we must not forget our esteemed friend Mr. Geo. Houck, the company's superintendent. They certainly deserve to be congratulated upon their selection.—Piedmont Herald.

List of Letters.

List of letters remaining unclaimed in the Post Office at Oakland, August 26, 1879.

Persons calling for them will please say they are advertised.

Geo. Burns, Lillie Bowen, A. D. Barton, Wm. Brown, Mary H. Cuthers, Emily Coad, C. Collins, Sophia Constair, Amanda Carter, Mary Comh, Lucy Davis, 2 Maria Davis, Wm. E. Davis, Phil Doffert, Robert Dera, Jas. A. Davis, M. E. Goldsmith, Laura Hardon, A. V. Heath, Annie Holloway, Emma King, 2 Miss B. Kelly, J. W. Kines, Rose Kerner, J. A. Lewis, H. A. Lyford, D. H. Law, Lizzie Miller, Charlotte Michael, Jno. Melvel, Louisa Mays, Geo. Miller, M. F. Miller, B. P. Maddox, Rev. C. K. Nelson, A. M. Packard, Lieut. U. S. N. Ida Powell, C. H. Patterson, Mrs. A. A. Perry, A. M. Pritts, Maj. George A. Reynolds, Mrs. C. Rhett, E. O. Russell, A. Saunders, 2 Mrs. E. H. Summers, Mrs. M. E. Smith, Margaret Sullivan, M. Stein, Mr. Thos. Carr, B. Tyler, A. C. Vallemilla, 2 J. P. Y. Whitfield, 2 Wm. T. Wright, Frank Wood, Elizabeth Wherrett, Leunie Waggoner, Margaret Walters.

R. THAYER, P. M.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending August 28:

Lucia Kahl and Henry Kahl to John E. Ganagy, Lot No. 2 in the town of Accident containing 1 acre; $925.

Henry Shank to John W. Shank, Military Lots Nos. 3241, 4143, 4144 and 1681; 109.47.

The Tunkers have bought Mount Morris Seminary, Illinois, of the Methodists, and opened it as a seminary and collegiate institute. Higher education has hitherto been discouraged among these simple people. Preparatory instruction is to be given in the academy, and classical, eclectic and commercial courses are provided for in college. The prospectus announces that all pupils will be required to dress plainly. No dress hats, or tucks, ruffles, etc., or jewelry will be allowed. No holiday will be given in the scholastic year, except Christmas day. The college is unendowed.—Moravian.

The Ring managers, the "boss" of whom is Mr. Gorman, gave Mr. Hamilton the nomination not because they wanted to, but because they were driven to it by stress of party opinion. The masses of that party were for Hamilton, but the Ring has always been opposed to him, for reasons only known to themselves. How much concession was made by both sides no one outside of the "charmed circle" will ever know. The nomination is perhaps the most popular in the party they could have made at this time, and will undoubtedly command the full vote. Mr. Hamilton, in his speech accepting the nomination, makes fair promises. If he carries them out after his inauguration, it will be well for the State but bad for the corrupt rings that have ruled at Annapolis, Baltimore, and throughout the State. Can he do this? How much has he already surrendered to secure the party nomination without rupturing the party organization? You may be certain the Ring has not dis-banded, and the election once over Mr. Hamilton will find himself withering in their coils, and his power for reform paralyzed. We believe Hamilton is honest in his promises; but the Ring will be the Governor after all. When you elect W. T. Hamilton you virtually elect to continue the Canal Ring in its present place and power in this State. In the campaign of 1875 the cry was, "Reform within the party." The last Democratic legislature added half a million dollars to the funded debt of the State in order to defray current expenses of the government. This is the kind of reform we got for the last promise; what pledge of the future can Mr. Hamilton give us better than that of 1875?—Bonabono Odd-Fellow.

We take the following from the Baltimore Evening Bulletin, one of the leading Democratic papers in the city. It indicates a restlessness among the better part of the Democratic party under the rulings of the "come man power" of this State, which has already shown signs of open revolt. Read it:

"HARMONY" IN THE PARTY.

We observe that much has been said about the "harmony" which characterized the deliberations of the recent Democratic State Convention, and there seems to be a general disposition among all classes of Democrats to rehabilitate themselves upon that fact. "Harmony" is a good thing in its way, but it does not necessarily imply a healthy condition of affairs. When it exists within a political organization it may indicate one of several things. It may represent unanimity of feeling and of purpose—and this sort of harmony is generally to be desired and commended. It may also represent a general paralysis of individuals—the sort of paralysis which is generally produced when one man is permitted to exercise an undisputed control of affairs—even in the minutest details. Of course there is "harmony" when only one man's opinions are to be consulted. But is this the sort of "harmony" which is to be commended or desired? Above all it is the sort of "harmony" which is suggested by the spirit and the traditions of Democracy? Is it not rather a shameful surrender of personal manhood to one individual's will?

With the work accomplished by the convention we have no fault to find. As already indicated in these columns the ticket and the platform are admirable—they leave nothing to be desired; but the manner in which the business of the convention was transacted affords the most positive evidence that the one-man power which has striven to rivet its hold upon the party organization, was able so to order the proceedings, that they were simply the confirmation of its own desires.

One-man power, as we have indicated, is hostile to the primary traditions and principles of Democracy; it remains to be seen whether the Democratic party in Maryland has the courage and the power—as we believe it has—to destroy this un-Democratic system of party government and to force a return to those principles without which the name of Democracy is a fiction and a snare.

Senator Thurman passes a curious commentary upon his own party, in the brief talk which is reported in the New York Tribune. He frankly admits that there are Democrats in Ohio who strongly dissent from Gen. Ewing's financial views, but he adds, as if with a chuckle, "but when the day of election comes, they will be found voting for him, and it is the votes which count on that day—not opinions." In other words, Democrats will sacrifice any principle at the behest of their party; they may believe a candidate's views to be wrong and pernicious, but if the majority require it, "they will be found voting for him;" the party may always endure, as long as it chooses, the submission of its members. Mr. Thurman has only spoken the truth concerning the organization in which he is a chief. There are few campaigns which do not witness some such sacrifice on the part of the better class of Democrats as they are now making in Ohio. But there is something almost revolting in this blunt and complacent statement by a leader that his followers are not independent citizens, but the slaves of a party.

In April, 1878, a Chinaman in San Francisco was convicted under a city ordinance relating to lodging-houses of being found sleeping in an apartment not so large as the law required. He was fined ten dollars, and in default of payment, was sent to prison, where the sheriff ordered his queue to be cut off. He made complaint as a subject of the Emperor of China against the sheriff for maltreatment, the maltreatment consisting "in having long wantonly and maliciously cut the queue of the plaintiff, a queue being worn by all Chinamen, and its deprivation being regarded by them as degrading and as curtailing future suffering."

The case came before the U. S. Circuit Court for California, where it was tried, Justice Field of the U. S. Supreme Court presiding and giving the decision, which is that the city ordinance was unconstitutional and invalid, being an assumption of State authority, a form of special legislation, and an unnecessary either as a regulation of discipline or as a sanitary regulation. And he adds:

"The claim put forth that the measure was prescribed as one of health, is notoriously a mere pretence. A treatment to which disgrace is attached, and which is not adapted as a means of security against the escape of the prisoner, but merely to aggravate the severity of his confinement, can only be regarded as punishment in addition to that imposed by the sentence. If adopted without regard to the sentence, it is wanton cruelty."

The judgment of the Court was in favor of the Chinaman. The workman's candidate for the mayoralty of San Francisco, Rev. L. S. Kallack, was shot and seriously wounded by one of the editors of the Chronicle, of that city, on Saturday last. The workmen are in a high state of excitement over the affair, and if Mr. Kallack should die there will probably be a bloody scene enacted. The election takes place in San Francisco next week.

Roll of Honor.

The following persons have paid us an account of subscription, advertising, &c., since our last report:

Charles Brown,	S. T. Wiley,
John P. Miller,	John L. Kanner,
B. M. Schaffer,	Rev. Walter Stacey,
John McDaniel,	John H. Wiley,
Asa H. Friend,	Philip Dufford,
John Fritz, Jr.,	John Ault,
Thos. Giddington,	W. H. Chapman,
John Siner,	Geo. W. Lutz,

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Mortgagee's Sale

Of Valuable Real Estate in Garrett county, about 8 miles South East of Grantsville.

BY VIRTUE OF THE POWER VESTED in the undersigned mortgagee, by mortgage from Frederick Nangle, and his wife Mary Nangle, G. B. Johns, W. B. Meadham and his wife Annie B. Meadham, to me, and to Lieut. Wm. E. Davis, of the County of Garrett, one of the Land Records of Garrett county, I will offer at Public Sale, to the highest bidder, for cash, in front of Nathan Siler's Hotel, in the town of Grantsville, Garrett county, on Thursday September 25th, 1879, at 2 o'clock P. M., all of the following described property, situated about 8 miles South East of Grantsville, Garrett county Md., and being all that piece or parcel of land known as part of the tract of land called "BEAR CAMP," surveyed by Benjamin Vaughan, beginning at a large pine tree marked with nine knots, standing at the end of 40 perches on the South line of Lot number 10, and with it reversed N 80° E. 4 perches to the end of the 40th line of the whole tract, and with the 40th line N 20° E 7 perches, thence N 20° West 20 perches thence South 80 degrees West 34 perches North 20° East 10 perches to the 14th line of the whole tract, and with the 14th line thence North 60° West 20 perches, South 82° West 18 perches and then by a straight line to the beginning, containing two hundred and thirty-seven acres of land more or less. And also all that piece or parcel of land also situated in said Garrett county Maryland, and adjoining the above described piece or parcel of land, and known as LOT NO. 12, being part of the said tract called "Bear Camp," surveyed as aforesaid, and thus described: Beginning at a large chestnut tree marked with nine knots standing at the end of 40 perches on the 6th line of the whole tract, and with the 6th line thence North 60° East 20 perches, South 82° West 18 perches and then by a straight line to the beginning, containing two hundred and eighty acres of land, more or less, making in all five hundred and seven acres of land, more or less, with two tracts of land containing one hundred and twenty acres of land, together with all the improvements thereon, consisting of two dwelling houses, stable, small barn, saw mill, and also a valuable body of white pine timber, growing thereon, and a portion of the same is underlaid with limestone.

LOT NUMBER 11

Terms of sale as prescribed by said mortgage, are CASH. JOEL BEACHY, Mortgagee.

ORDER NISI.

Andrew Embel and others, No. 8, Equity, in vs. Isaac Meyers, and others, for Garrett County.

IT IS ORDERED this 12th day of August, in the year 1879, by the Orphans' Court for Garrett county, as a Court of Equity, that the said Isaac Meyers, and others, do execute the decree for the sale of the real estate of Jacob Meyers, dec'd., be nullified and confirmed unless cause to the contrary thereof be shown on or before the 12th day of September next, 1879. Provided a copy of this order be inserted in some newspaper printed at Oakland, at least once a week for three successive weeks before the 6th day of September next.

The report states the amount of sales to be $800. JOSEPH DEWITT, C. J. O. C. LEWIS W. MILLER, CLERK. WILLIAM HARVEY, J. O. C. True Copy—Test. W. L. RAWLINGS, Register.

JOHN RICHARDSON, Manufacturer of and Dealer in WAGONS AND FARMING IMPLEMENTS, GRAIN CRADLES A SPECIALTY. 424 Main Street, Improved Reapers and Saws, full size. Near the Depot, Oakland, Md.

Notice to Contractors

OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, OAKLAND, MD., Aug. 14, 1879.

Notice is hereby given, that sealed proposals will be received by the County Commissioners of Garrett county, until

Monday, September 8th,

at 2 o'clock P. M., for the building of a bridge over the North Fork of Costlemans River, on the site of the old bridge, on the road leading from McHenry to Grantsville. Plans and specifications are as follows:

Length of bridge about sixty feet; 14 feet wide; 2 stone abutments to be built of split stone, about the same height as the former abutments; double chords, King posts and braces; weatherboarded with White Pine and roofed with white pine shingles; chords to be of white pine; all other timbers to be of good, sound white oak. The bridge and approaches thereto to be completed and ready for travel on or before the 1st of December next.

Amount for building said bridge to be levied at the annual levy of 1880. The Commissioners reserve the right to reject any and all bids. By order County Commissioners.

W. H. HAGANS, Clerk.

8164

Notice to Contractors.

OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, OAKLAND, MD., Aug. 14, 1879.

Notice is hereby given, that Sealed Proposals will be received by the County Commissioners of Garrett county, until

Monday, September 8th,

at 2 o'clock P. M., for the building of a bridge over Buffalo Creek, opposite the Kinnel Free farm, in district No. 2, according to the following plans and specifications:

Length of bridge about fifty feet; width, 14 feet; 2 rough stone abutments, built substantially on solid foundation; double chords, king posts and braces; weatherboarded and roofed with white pine shingles; flooring and all other timbers to be of good, sound white oak. Said bridge and approaches thereto to be completed on or before the 1st day of December next.

The amount for building the above bridge to be levied at the annual levy of 1880. The Commissioners reserve the right to reject any and all bids. By order County Commissioners.

W. H. HAGANS, Clerk.

8164

A Remarkable Movement.

Moored at the Castle Garden Dock yesterday afternoon, and apparently a little impatient to get under way, lay the dirty little steamer Vulcan, half ferry and half freight boat, under an engagement with the Fryer Cutlery Company, of Bridgeport, Conn., to take about 130 cutlers, who arrived from Sheffield in the Algeria on Tuesday night, to that enterprising Connecticut town. The men are accompanied by their families, and speak with less sadness than would be pardonable under the circumstances of leaving their English for American homes. The majority of them are still young, between twenty and thirty-five years of age, perhaps, and are, Mr. Fryer says, fair physical and intellectual samples of the open, hospitable, quick-tempered, improvident British workman—fond of his beer, taking no thought for the morrow, having no social or political ambition, content to be kicked by his superiors, and to retaliate by kicking his inferiors, if he should be so fortunate as to find them. There were some sad and weather-beaten, but no sullen and brutal faces in the lot. The points, perhaps, which would be most readily noticed by an acute observer familiar with American workmen of the same class, was a certain look of firmness in the contour of the mouth, and of decision of movement. The compression of the lips which one marks as a universal American trait, is replaced by the slightly open mouth and a listless, gawky expression. The walk lacks the direct, unwavering movement of the American. Strong, well-knit, broad-shouldered as he is, the man rolls and swings from side to side, instead of forward straight as an arrow from the bow. He is curved like a plover-jogger, wants suppleness in the region of the hips, and drags his feet after him in lieu of lifting and putting them down. But a glance at his face, and a vast amount of work in him, and a vast amount of good-nature, combined with an invincible obstinacy when he has once made up his mind. Splendid material for a workman, but neither so rapid nor so inventive as the American workman.

It was nearly four o'clock when, having been directed this way, that way and the other way, and having threaded all the passages and windings, and sniffed all the smells of the catacombs of emigration, the Times reporter saw through a narrow gangway waves tossing in the sun. Under the superintendence of Mr. Fryer the men were carrying their luggage on board the Vulcan. Some of it was done up in bedsteads, and there were boxes of all conceivable sizes, colors and modes of construction that must have descended from the fifteenth century, but scarcely a modern trunk among them all. It was primitive, but fresh, and as peculiarly as the stout, stolid-looking women made no more than the men of shouldering twenty-five cubic feet of box, and carrying it on board as if it had been but a handbag containing the latest fashions in hat or bonnet. Less suppleness was never exhibited by a colony of emigrants. The men talked freely of their condition at home, of the cutlery business in Sheffield, and of the loss in wealth and position of the world which England has suffered of late. The Times reporter sat down upon his box with one of the most intelligent of them, and talked over the situation: how the British cutler lives, what he earns at home, how he spends his money, and what prospect he has of rising in the world. To the last question the answer was, "None at all. But," said the honest fellow, candidly, "if our people could only get a fair share of the money they spend in beer, there would be some prospect of keeping out of the work-house in old age." A workman who did not drink beer and spend his money freely would, however, find Sheffield a very unpleasant place to live in. It is in the Sheffield code of ethics that he who has no love for beer in his soul is fit for murder, stratagems and spoils, or possibly meditates a plot to burn the town. The women stop as openly at the bar of a public house to take a glass with each other, or alone, as the men, and see no impropriety in doing so. Although Sheffield is not a large city as compared with New York, these people are fresh from tenement-houses that are worse than those now under inspection here by the Board of Health. Two or three rooms suffice for the eating, drinking, and sleeping of a large family. Carpets are unknown, and the American carpet-bagger, cooking-stove, is quite out of the question. An excavation in the wall serves as a fireplace to burn a few scraps of cannon coal. When the British mother wants to roast a piece of beef or a stew of mutton, she goes to a suitable distance above the fire by a stout string, and the coals are left to spit and sputter with the dripping of fat and juices. In the place of the meat-broilers in use here, they use long iron forks, and the steak or mutton is laid upon the coals, and turned frequently to prevent burning. Tea and coffee are not in general use. The universal beverage, at home, abroad, at the table, on the way to market, everywhere, indeed, is beer, and yet complete inebriety, such as is witnessed too often on the streets of an American city, is not a common sight in Sheffield. The British workman name the border-land may be called—but he is seldom seen actually drunk. Tenements of the kind the Sheffield cutler inhabits cost less there than here. The men talk of twenty dollars and twenty-five dollars per year as good prices, while their little frame houses, ranged in rows, with a little garden in the rear, will cost them forty dollars a year in Bridgeport. They have, however, plenty of space, and can be kept very habitable, with a little care. The wages which the men will make here are not materially in excess of English wages. With steady employment at home they earn from nine dollars to fifteen dollars per week, but no trouble is that there are thousands of men out of employment in Sheffield, and hundreds of others are working on half time, earning not more than from five dollars to eight dollars a week. They are to work by the piece, not by the day, at Bridgeport, and at the rates stipulated, expect to earn from one dollar and fifty cents to two dollars and fifty cents per day. Saving rents, the necessities of life can be obtained at about the same schedule of prices as at home. But one of the main points, the men say, is to get where a man can save something if he wishes, and where a public sentiment has not irrevocably set against a man trying to make something of himself. In conversation with Mr. Fryer the Times reporter was informed that comfortable tenements in East Bridgeport had already been provided for the newcomers, and that they would be immediately set at work, producing cutlery of the finest quality. Each man's tenement has a little garden, which he can cultivate if he will, and each workman will be encouraged in every feasible way to found a pleasant home for his family. The Company pays all the expenses of transportation from Sheffield to Bridgeport, landing them at their new thresholds free of cost and of lien upon their wages. Twenty or thirty were brought over as an experiment several weeks ago, and in October about 500 English and German cutlers will be furnished with transportation to Bridgeport and set to work. The Sheffield papers speak very disparagingly of the new movement, which is understood to involve capital as well as skilled labor. The philosophy of it is briefly set forth by Mr. Fryer. Owing to the high tariff on knives in this country, and the free trade in men, capitalists have conceived the idea that it is better to bring their factories and workmen over before they are shut out, than to have no tariff to pay, than it is to keep on contending against American manufacturers with a large discrimination in favor of the latter. The removal of the operatives who arrived yesterday is practically the removal of an old and well-established Sheffield factory, and the transfer of its capital and labor to America. A new aspect of the tariff question is that of the attraction of foreign capital to the United States, to American manufacturers; but, should the venture of the Fryer Cutlery Company prove successful, it will, no doubt, be imitated by other manufacturing interests.—N. Y. Times.

The Smuggling Dodge.

Among the many swindling games practiced on credulous people of Philadelphia none is so popular as the "smugglers' game." Frank, honest-faced, sailor-like lads will go around the city, wearing a blue coat and vest, navy cap and sailor trousers with an imitation indigo-hued lining slung across their shoulders. Any body, to look at them, would take them for sailors. They invariably have the sailor's ruddy cheeks, bronzed complexion, and are up to the ways of seafaring life, in speech and conduct. They are not content to deceive the sharpest of old salts, and make the casual observer swear at a glance that they were genuine sailors. They may be found at certain seasons in every part of the city. Always in the neighborhood of the docks, across the shoulders and always its destination appears to be the back streets and alleys, usually occupied by poor laboring classes. As the rubber bag gets into such places, the sailor-like men, who they have no other business, and who frequently are seen in various parts of the city.—Philadelphia Times.

"Discipline" in the French Army.

A Paris writer in reviewing this discussion in the House of Commons, gives some facts about the French army. He says: "During the war of 1870-1 soldiers were shot in the armies of Faidherbe, Clinchant, and Chanzy for offenses of the most trivial kind; but no one ventured to murmur, because the exigencies of discipline seemed to render these executions imperative. Indeed, the French articles of war decree death as the penalty for almost every peccadillo committed before the enemy. A soldier who served in General Clinchant's army told me that one day while his regiment was on the march a soldier of his company, feeling tired, removed his knapsack and laid it on a gun-carriage which was jolting on in front of him. At a point where four roads met the artillery and infantry diverged, and the soldier, having forgotten to remove his knapsack from the gun-carriage, it was carried miles away from him. At evening parade, however, the soldier's account of how he had lost his knapsack was not believed. The man was tried by drum-head court-martial and sentenced to be shot, and the sentence would certainly have been executed had not the prisoner's started off across country and luckily recovered the knapsack just in time to save him. In Clinchant's army, again, two Zouaves one night slunk out of camp to forage for potatoes in the fields. They were old soldiers, who had seen a good deal of service, and bore excellent characters, but they were sentenced to death, and the General would not hear of showing mercy; so they were shot. This kind of thing is what the French call firmness, whereby it is but more unreasoning cruelty."

A Washerwoman at Leadville.

But it is not alone in mining operations that fortunes have been made. Mrs. Sarah Kay, an old Irish washerwoman, who was among the earliest settlers, has a somewhat romantic history. Her stock in trade when she came consisted of a pair of tubs and a washboard. She began business under odd pin trees on the Hillside, having no means of hiring a house. She soon, however, got together with her own hands, a rude slab cabin, and as business was good at $2.50 per dozen for washing, she gradually began to provide for her wants, and got a camp stove, and, after furnishing her cabin comfortably, began to accumulate money. The town began to grow in the direction of her cabin, and after a while she employed laborers to put up a log house. As there was a great demand for miners' boarding houses, Mrs. Kay concluded to abandon the wash-tub and start a boarding house in a new edifice. In this idea she received great encouragement, and the house was opened with flattering prospects. In this venture she proved to be very successful, made money and finally saved it. By the growth of the city, her house got to be in the very center, and, as the streets were laid out, it proved to occupy a location on the corner of Harrison avenue and State street. Business was good, and she continued to make money, which she invested wisely. She built another log house and rented it. Then she put up a frame building, which she rented before it was finished. About this time some of the land grabbers disputed her title to the land, and tried to dispossess her. But the old lady had so many determined friends among the miners that the effort was given up. Several months ago she refused an offer of $10,000 for her property, and since that time has built a two-story block, fronting on Harrison avenue, and as desirable a piece of property as any in Leadville. She still lives in her log house, but she now intends to tear it down and erect a two-story block in its place. When her improvements are completed she will have an income of more than $1,000 a month—a pretty good record of business success for an old washerwoman.—Boston Herald.

Unfiling Love.

I SHALL never forget an exhibition I once attended. Shortly after schools for the imbecile were commenced in Europe, a young man, moved with benevolence, crossed the ocean to examine their mode of operation and success. Assured of their utility, he returned, and commenced a similar institution. He advertised for the most idiotic and hapless child that could be found. Among those brought to him was a little boy of five years of age. He had never spoken or walked, had never shed a single tear, and had given a look of recognition to a friend. He laid on the floor, a mass of flesh, without even ability to turn himself over. Such was the student brought to his school.

The teacher fruitlessly made effort after effort to get the slightest recognition from his eye, or to produce the slightest intentional act. Unwilling, however, to yield, at the hour of noon he had the little boy brought to his room, and he lay down beside him, and soon discovered that the child was uneasy, and was trying to move itself a little, as if to turn towards him. The teacher flashed upon his mind—the sound of my voice. He turned his head slowly to it, brought his mouth near the child's head, and after repeated efforts, the little fellow succeeded in placing his finger on the teacher's lips, as if to say, "Make that sound again." The teacher said that at that moment he felt he had control of the boy. He gained his attention, and, by careful manipulation of his muscles, succeeded in teaching him to walk, and then to read; and then, at the end of five years, he stood at the head of the class, and recited the names of the Presidents of the United States, and answered accurately a number of questions on our national history.—Extract from Bishop Simpson's Lectures at Yale.

Indians as Stage-Drivers.

After breakfast I got Superintendent Parker to tell me about his stage line. It runs from Vinita, Indian Territory, to Las Vegas, New Mexico. He says, besides, it passes through some of the most dangerous Indian country in the world. It has 108 drivers, thirty of whom are native Indians. The line carries the United States mail daily, and what passengers get, although Mr. Parker is not yet the only white man who has been over the entire route.

"Can you trust your Indian drivers?" I asked. "O, yes," said he. "Everybody that I trust couldn't do anything with them, but I had to do something for the redskins had a habit of killing off the white drivers in some localities. I got some of them broke in at last, however, and they do very well. They like the salary, for it enables them to put on style above their brethren, and I tell you they do like to dress. It catches the squaws, and the young men like that as well as you fellows down east. One day an Indian driver ran off after a buffalo and was gone two or three days. I sent men to hunt him up, but he came back before they found him, with a dead buffalo and Uncle Sam's mail as unconcernedly as if the hunter had been a white man. He and it taught the others a lesson. You ought to see them hunt paths at night. If they can get a glimpse of a single star they can find their way the darkest night that ever was. Some of the great astronomers of the world have an idea that there was once a great flood which covered the whole earth. Everybody was drowned but seven chiefs who were strong enough to climb to the top of the highest mountain in the country. They would have been destroyed also had they not prayed to the Great Spirit so fervently that their supplications were answered. They lived to a great age and replenished the earth. When they died they each became a brilliant star in the heavens. These Indians know the principal stars by the names of departed chiefs. This belief is prevalent among nearly all the savage Indians in the southern part of the Indian territory."

"Are any of your Indians desperate characters?" "Some of them. Six of my drivers saw the Custer massacre. They probably took part in it, but they claim that they were near by herding ponies. They describe the whole bloody affair, but will not tell who killed the whites. Custer has many friends, and they are afraid of them."

"Have any of your Indians ever seen the cars?" "Yes, seven chiefs went up to Vinita one day and I got them to look at a locomotive. It suddenly whistled and blew off steam, and you ought to have seen those seven Indians wilt. They fell down on their knees in consternation and began to pray to the Great Spirit. I guess they thought the engine was the Great Spirit, but I don't know as to that."—Las Vegas, N. M. Cor. Buffalo Courier.

Our Young Folks.

LIKE HIS DAD.

I hear his mother's chiding voice?
"How came your trousers torn?
And black as ink, sir, is that shirt?
You put on clean this morn."
"Your feet are wet, too, I declare;
You're muddy to your knees;
It is too bad; you only care
Your mother, sir, to tease."
"And those nice shoes—your Sunday best,
That but three times you've worn,
Are scuffed and scuffed and all run down.
The best of one is gone."
"Your hair is twisted in a snarl,
And just look at that hand!
It's as black as your shirt, and never washed—
How dare you say 'tis tanned?"
"You've been a-fishing, sir, I guess—
What? been to see the match?
You'll have 't of us, sir, if
A pretty codd you'll catch."

And thus she talks for half an hour,
And only stops to say—
"Your father'll hear of this to-night;
I wonder what he'll say?"
My friends in complimentary Declare to me they see
A close resemblance—very marked
Between the boy and me.
But nothing that they see in him,
In either form or feature,
Reminds my son of his pranks—
In those my own I trace.

And why should I at tattered clothes Busy little bodies, and all very
In him I have my youth again—
God bless the boy! he's mine!
—Parker Transcript.

ABOUT BEES.

How doth the little busy bee
Improve each shining hour,
And gather honey all the day,
From every opening flower?
I know you have seen them—those wonderful little workers—gathering honey from the flowers, but perhaps you did not know quite how they managed.
If you have noticed bees very closely,
you may have seen that they are not all alike in size. The drones, the idle ones, who never work at all, are the largest, and make a great buzzing, like many idle people. They have no stings, so they cannot defend themselves against their enemies. These idle ones would be glad to live in the hive all winter and eat up the honey, but the working bees know better than that to let them do that, and as soon as summer over they are all driven out of the hive, and perish outside, or are stung to death by indignant comrades within.

The workers are smaller, are provided with sharp stings, and are very busy little bodies. They are divided into two kinds, the nurses and the wax-workers. The former are the weakest and smallest, and attend to the lighter work. They keep the hive clean, help to finish the cells which the others have commenced, feed the grubs and gather honey. The wax-workers collect materials for constructing the cells, and do the most burdensome part of the provision in the hive; prepare wax; defend the hive from enemies; so that they have very little time to be idle, and are probably a great deal happier than the drones who eat up the workers' honey.

But, beside the drones and the workers, there is a very important personage in the hive, called the queen, who requires a great amount of attention from her subjects. The welfare of the hive depends upon the life and prosperity of the queen, and every worker is ready to feed and defend her at the sacrifice of its own life. She is longer than the other bees, and has very short wings, by which she may easily be distinguished from the workers. She is also longer than the workers, and is very politely treated by every one. She leads a very idle life, yet is provided with a powerful sting, that she may defend herself, and thus the same advantage, in this respect, as the workers. So important is the queen, that if she dies or is killed, the whole hive is in confusion, and if another queen cannot be produced, the swarm dwindles and dies.

You may wonder that such little creatures can carry so much material and do so much work, but if you examine them carefully you will find they have hands and backs, and are fitted, by a wise and kind Creator, for the very work they have to do. The workers have six legs, and the hind pair is provided with curious little baskets or pockets, bristling with many hairs around the ends, which prevent any material deposited within them from falling out during the bee's flight. Here is placed all the necessary material for use in the hive, which is carried home safely. At the top of the legs are little hooks by which they can hold themselves securely wherever they may wish to be, and they are also of such a shape that they may be used to grapple or handle, and answer the place of hands. The two pairs of front legs are furnished with numbers of little hairs, which answer to brush the pollen from their legs and bodies, and are useful little brushes, for you know the pollen is the heart of the flowers on which the bees feed, and so carried home or deposited in the little pockets, which seem to be the safest and best way. The honey could not be carried in the little pockets, as they would be unfit for other purposes; so the workers are each provided with a membrane or bag, in the under part of the body where it is deposited, and from whence it is put into the cells prepared for it in the hive.

The very first thing the bees do in taking possession of a new hive is to cement it all around with a resinous substance, called propolis, taken from the buds of trees, with which every chink is filled, and the top of the hive well coated, that they may the easier fasten the combs to it. They then divide into little companies, and drawing small pieces of wax from their bodies by means of their little hooked hands, shape them into tiny balls with the top of the mandibles, and secure to the top of the hive. So they go on drawing wax from their bodies, kneading it and attaching it to that which they put on before, and by pressure form it into the six-sided cells, which are wonderful buildings for such insects to make. But if you think the making and kneading and fashioning of wax into six-sided cells is wonderful, who will you say when I tell you that these cells have about them that which is still more wonderful? When the comb is all made ready for use the queen bee is sent for, and she goes over the whole comb, laying an egg in every cell. The eggs are all alike, but the cells in which they are put are of three different sizes, and the future of the young bees which are to come from the eggs, depends entirely upon the size of the cell into which each egg may fall. One size produces only drones, another size produces only workers; the royal cells are reserved for the queens. The attendants who follow the queen while depositing the eggs, watch carefully that only one remains in each, and if, by accident, two should be deposited, they quickly take it out and destroy it. The young bees, when hatched, soon as possible envelop themselves in silken coverings, called cocoons, and are fed by the nurses with food intended to develop them into drones, workers, or queens, according to the size of the cell, so that the size of the cell determines the future condition of the little bee in the cocoon.

I have told you that there can only be one queen in a hive at a time, yet there are many young lady queens in the royal cells, fed with the silken jelly only used for queen babies. These tiny queens grow in their cocoons until one of them, more forward than the rest, throws off the silken covering and comes out a full-blown queen, ready to rule over the dominion she is wise enough to know falls to her right. But what do you think the despotic lady does to begin with? Why, walks to every cell containing a cocoon, and every baby queen, and stings each poor little thing to death, and then proceeds to drive out the old queen. This seems like a very cruel business, but as two queens cannot exist in the same hive, so the young queen does the deed of course the whole hive is thrown into great confusion by the arrival of this second queen. The workers collect in impenetrable ranks around their old sovereign and prevent a personal attack, and to the matter has to come, of course, and, generally, the oldest inhabitant flies out of the hive, in a great flutter, leaving it to the new queen, and followed by all her devoted attendants, who cluster about her wherever she may see fit to alight, hanging to the object and to each other with their little hooked hands till they sometimes form a complete ball. This is called swarming, and is a very curious sight, when the swarm will alight when it leaves the hive, for scouts are sent out in advance to select the place, and these, by going and coming with great bluster and importance, give some notion of the business of the bees as to what is to be done.

After the swarm has come out of the hive and settled, it is only required to strike the object, from which they are suspended, a quick blow, at the same time holding the object in the air. The bees at once cluster about the new abode and take possession. After the old queen and her attendants have left the hive, the young workers see the necessity of going at once to work to provide for themselves and their young queen. The cells in which they were hatched are of course empty; so these they fill with honey, and business goes on with the young people who occupy the hive just as it used to do with the old.

Bees do many strange things showing their ability to reason in case of emergency. No greater proof of this can be found than that given by the sagacity of the little creatures in times of calamity, when enemies come into the hive, or when they are by accident deprived of their queen. In the latter case they do a very curious thing. They select one of the common workers, and make it lavish every attention upon it; feed it with the food kept only for queens; enlarge its small cell, and by care convert it into a royal personage, so that, when it leaves the cell, instead of a common worker it comes out a queen. How this change is produced merely by change of food and enlargement of cell, we do not know, but that the common little grub becomes a real queen, are very sure.

Bees, as you see, are very curious little insects, and the more we learn of them the more astonished we become at the wisdom and goodness of God, who has fitted them so entirely for the work they have to do, and has given them even to creatures so small powers so wonderful. —Geo. Klinge, in N. Y. Observer.

How Deeply Does the Earth Quake?

The recent earthquake at Virginia City was not noticed in all the mining depths, but only by people on the surface. Their famous earthquake of some years ago, which shook down chimneys, fire-walls, cracked brick buildings, and did other damage, was merely noticed by some of the miners working in the upper levels, but it did no damage, not even shaking down loose stones and earth. The station men in the various shafts felt it the strongest, and the deepest point where it was noticed was by the station tender at the 900-foot level of the Imperial-Empire shaft—900 feet below the surface. He said it felt like a sudden faint throb or pulsation of the air, as though a blast had been set off somewhere at a distance, above, below, or in some indefinite direction. In some of the mines the shock was not noticed at all, even by the station men. Commenting on this peculiar fact at the time, the Gold Hill News remarked that the earthquake seemed to be an electrical disturbance, proceeding from the atmosphere and not from the depths of the earth.—Sacramento (Cal.) Union.

THE OLD, OLD STORY.
"Tis told an Eastern monarch great
From triumph won, returned in state,
And made a grand parade.
And at her latticed window high
To watch the gorgeous train pass by
There sat a lovely maid.
Eager to see, she pressed her face,
The slight frame broke with sudden crash,
And fell into the street.
A splinter struck a gallant knight,
He upward glanced, there met his sight
The little maiden sweet.
She blushed; he smiled; you know the rest—
My tale you have already guessed.
The end of course is plain.
The maid, confound, drew back from view;
The knight passed on, amidst his crew.
They never met again.

"REVENGE is sweet," says the Boston Post, when you're at the right end of the insect.

ments

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 3.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 6, 1879.

NUMBER 28.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, etc.

D. E. OFFUTT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Implements, Mustard, Pickles,
Guns, Pistols, etc.

G. W. LEGGIE,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Second & Oak sts.

D. H. LOAB,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jew-
elry, etc.

L. W. STALNAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third and Oak Streets.

L. BUSH & SON,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third & Oak sts.

J. A. GRANT,
Dry Goods, Notions & Groceries,
SPECIAL LINE OF DRY GOODS.

DAVIS & TOWNSEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agents Agricultural Implements,
Opposite Bailey's Park.

C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Notions, Clocks, Comforters, etc., Next to Callaghan's Hotel.

RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods, Fruit, etc.

HOTELS.

CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,
W. M. CODDINGTON, Prop'r,
Main St., Opposite Hamilton's Billiard Saloon.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

G. A. SHIRER,
Oak street, near Second.

PHYSICIANS.

DR. J. LEE MCCOMAS,
Office on Main Street.

DR. E. U. PARSONS,
offers his professional services
to the people of Oakland and vicinity. Office in the old Olin building, 3 & 5th.

PLASTERER.

JAMES ARNOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street.

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.

WM. M. WAGNER,
Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.

GEO. F. LOUGHRIDGE,
Leave orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.

J. B. BRANT,
Surveyor, Auctioneer and
Conveyancer.

JOHN HAINES,
Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.

A. B. WOODCOCK,
In Wm. Swanwick's Building,
Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY GOODS.

MRS. M. E. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Gents' Furnishing
Goods, Fish, etc., etc.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

GEO. C. STUBBINS,
Drugs, Medicines,
Toiletries, Toilet articles, Stationery,
Tobacco and Cigars.

G. W. MERRILL,
Near Depot,
Fine Drugs, Medicines, Toilet Goods, Stationery, Cigars and Tobacco, French Confectionery, Fish, etc., etc.

PAINTING & PAPER HANG- ING.

E. J. FRINGER,
House and Sign Painter.

S. V. B. WARD,
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER
Shop near Davis House.

BLACKSMITHS.

CHAS. SINCELL,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

JOHN M. JARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,
Residence on Liberty St., nearly opp. Depot.

P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
And Builder.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Residence opp. School house.

JOSEPH M. CRIM,
Residence on Alder Street.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.

CABINETMAKERS AND UN- DERTAILERS.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SHATZER,
Shop on Second Street.

II. T.

HELMBOLD'S

COMPOUND

Fluid Extract

BUCHU.

PHARMACEUTICAL

A SPECIFIC REMEDY FOR ALL

DISEASES

OF THE

BLADDER & KIDNEYS.

"Helmhold's Buchu"

DOES IN EVERY CASE.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

IS UNEQUALED

By its remedy known. It is prescribed by the most eminent physicians all over the world. It is

General Debility,

Kidney Diseases,

Liver Complaint,

Nervous Debility,

Epilepsy,

Head Troubles,

Paralysis,

General Ill Health,

Spinal Diseases,

Sciatica,

Deafness,

Lameness,

Cataracts,

Nervous Complaints,

Female Complaints, &c.

Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Cough,

Dizziness, Stomach, Eructations, Bad

Taste in the Mouth, Pimples on the Face,

Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a thousand other painful symptoms, are the

outpourings of Dyspepsia.

And stimulates the torpid Liver, Bowels, and

Kidneys to healthy action, in cleansing the blood of all impurities, and imparting new

life and vigor to the whole system.

A single trial will be quite sufficient to convince the most hesitating of its valuable

remedial qualities.

Price $1 Per Bottle,

Or Six Bottles for $5.

Delivered to any address free from observation. "Patents" may consult by letter, receiving

the same attention as by calling.

Competent Physicians attend to correspondents. All letters should be addressed to

THE "PULLIAM" EXPEDITION.

Written for THE REPUBLICAN.

As promised in our last edition we lay before our readers a brief description of the expedition which left this place on Wednesday of last week

upon a piscatorial visit to the tem-ing waters of Cheat river. As it will be necessary to occasionally refer to some of the individual members

composing this excursion, I will briefly state that the party numbered six persons, being a detachment of the "A. of D.," and commanded by

Gen. Wardwell in person; second in rank and first in importance was

Gen. John Swan, whose genial manner, versatile conversation and disposition made him the life of the party. Next in order comes the pleasant and well-mannered gentleman from Ohio, Maj. Gen. J. B. Ty-

tus, who also, in the language of our esteemed fellow-townsmen, ("Dandridge Coley," Esq.) made things

cheerful by his "pleasant address-ments and agreeable observations." Our next introduction is Col. Davies

Swan, son of the distinguished gentleman before mentioned, and whose joyal disposition was on this occasion only second to that of his illustrious sire. The Colonel was indeed most full of life, and furnished the greater part of the music for our entertainment, with such choice selections as "Hardly Ever," "Roasted

Pea Nut Man," &c. Our next illustrious presentation, who looms into prominence from the doughty deeds performed, is Corporal "Gannymede," surrounded the "Familiar," of whose prossess more anon. Last, but hardly least, comes the Master of the Horse that great Sir Gallahad of all cavalry, private Thos. Swaney, the great rival and compeer of the Seven Sleepers.

And now having presented to you

each of our party personally, I must come to our journey itself. Transition is abrupt, not to say dangerous,

from Heaven to Hell between the gigantic mountains, reminding one of Milton's grand description in Paradise Lost. And now we begin the descent of the mountain, observing with admiration the beautiful foliage, flowers and vines which grow

in rich profusion and density over the entire mountain side. Clambering up the sides of the gigantic poplar vines and evergreens making a perfect shade and reminding the traveler of tropical views in the sunny of the Orient. Gen. Swan pointed out to us the skillful engineers who had graded the road, which wound around the mountain like a spiral staircase. The road itself is a lovely sight, crossing as it does from

in and out the recesses of the mountain, bordered on each side by stately poplar, linden and walnut trees,

which seem like sentinels guarding the mountain pass. The road itself is in most excellent condition, and is quite a credit to West Virginia—in fact we found but one fault with it, and that was its great length. Indeed so long it seemed that Gen. Swan shared over and over again that some one had cut the bottom of it off. But all things have an end, and so at last we finished the mountain and entered the plain below; and here, for the first time, we caught a glimpse of the free and angry though majestic

"Cheat," flowing noisily over the foot of the great precipice we have just described. Oh, peerless stream!

may thy course never be checked, and may thy boldness, existing with a god-like strength, to rend a passage to the ocean.

As stated in our former number

we had reached the river's bank and a halt having been ordered, a hurried causation was held among the Generals, and it was determined to throw out a strong skirmishing force at once with a view to finding our enemies' whereabouts, and feeling quite strongly, Gannymede, who descended rapidly by way of the centre, full upon the enemy's middle host, and whilst gallantly pressing forward to success and victory, was suddenly checked in his headlong career by the vigorous onslaught of an unseen though not unfelt foe,

death or capture, or even both,

seemed inevitable. The whole army was stricken dumb with consternation and apprehension; but the brave

Colonel (though losing all else), did not lose his voice. Throwing away his arms and looking above for aid,

he shouted with stentorian though somewhat hysterical voice, "somethings got me! something got me!"

and with strides that would have put to blush the greatest efforts of the "Fast Waders," he struck for the banks "whereon the wild thyme grows," and having reached them he was so relieved that he felt in his pockets to see if he was safe, and finding that "twas even so," he made his heart glad and fortitude his courage with a neck drop of the rectangle, and amid the loud plaudits of his companions in his again rushes

boldly into the forest of the rays of the setting sun, crying wildly, "how far is it to where we stop to-night?"

After this sad adventure the spirits of the command being somewhat depressed, we massed our forces and followed by a forced march to reach the main body, but General

Swan having heard the loud and discordant cries of his offspring

thought it would not do to risk the condition of the entire Swan regiment, and pushed on as fast as the valley could speed toward safety, assistance and Fort Deakins. Gen

Wardwell finding he could not effect

a junction with the main body, resolved to cut his way through, and moving Tytus and his "Guns" upon his close right, with Col. Swan's

"Three of a kind" protecting the rear, the march down the river was resumed. Two more desperate encounterattacks ensued between the

"Scalys" and the "Fast Waders" and

"Guns," in both of which the enemy were worsted and Gannymede was again made happy in the posses-

s

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

HONEY-SUCKLE.

How fair they were, my darlings twain,
Who walked alone the grassy lane
That early August days
Charmingly of the gracious charm
That floated round them, arm-in-arm.
They wandered on that way
One wore her raven tresses low,
Close-hung over a brow of snow,
Like some grand Roman dame,
Here were those luminous, large eyes,
From whose depths depths strange gleams arise
And broke in sudden flame.

Around her sister's gentle face
The frown hair rippled, tender grace
Was in her form and look;
A wild rose colored her cheek,
Brown, loving eyes, contented, meek,
And clear as summer brook.

I sat beneath a shadow tree,
And heard their laughter floating free,
Through idle, happy hours,
I saw them gather to the way,
The struggling clusters, sweet and gay,
Of honey-suckle flowers.

I watched them weave their scented spoil,
In eager haste, with playful toil,
And laughter-brimming eyes;
The sweet of their feet fell low,
Ah, Heaven, I have that garland now,
A sacred, mournful prize!

Was it because they were my own,
I fancied even their footsteps set
More sweet than other sounds?
Was it because I saw them forth,
I thought that nowhere in God's earth
Could fairer things be found?

Was it but doing mother's love?
Or were my darlings far above
The playmates of their time?
I know not then, nor do I know,
It is so many years ago,
They scarcely reached their prime.

But this I know, 'twere then and me Kissed, yet the world is full of
That parts their world from this,
And will I know that where they are,
There is no need of sin or star,
Nor need of mother's kiss.

For ever my honey-suckle wreath,
My sweetest heart of golden hair
A prayer for those bright hours,
When I may see my daughters stand,
Each holding for me in her hand,
Honey's enamoured flowers.

At the Year Round.

THE "DEATH RAIN."

The old man sat looking into the fire,
His elbows resting on the arms of his chair, while he gently tapped together
the tips of his fingers. "We Yankees," said he, thoughtfully, and with a pause
at almost every sentence—"we Yankees have but a meagre conception of the negro character, the real plantation negro—a fact I did not admit forty years ago. Oway—or, as everybody called him, Ot—Rainsford and I were room-mates at Harvard. He was a fine fellow to look at, and a very fine fellow to be with—full of life, overflowing with fun, wild, not so much because he was a full-blooded Southerner, as because he was an orphan with his fortune in his own hands. Most young men, North or South, who be wild who have a plenty of money, which, not having earned, they do not know how to value.
One night, with a yawn, he threw down his book and stretched himself on the bed. I stood with my back to the fire, looking at him. Presently I said, "So you are going home for the holidays, Ot?"

"Yes—Christmas on the plantation," he said. "They say the negroes are to have their freedom at your death. Is that so?"
the Dutchman says."

"Dot is sho," replied Ot with an other yawn.

"I wonder you are not afraid to go among them," said I.

"He laughed with genuine amusement, and I asked if any other white person would be on the plantation.

"The overseer," said Ot. "But suppose you go with me, old fellow?"

"But suppose the negroes make away with me too?"

"Well, you will be no great loss,
that I can see," replied my companion;
and, adopting his view of the subject, I went with him.

Arrived at the plantation, we had the house all to ourselves, for the next of kin was a married sister who lived in the adjoining State, but we had as many chambermaids and dining-room servants, and servants of every other age, sex and calling, as though Ot had been a patriarch.

"The third morning after our arrival
we were waiting over the breakfast-table, each of us with a newspaper in his hand. Plantation negroes were more of a curiosity to me than to Ot, so he was giving his entire attention to his paper, while mine was divided.
First appeared Aunt Fanny, the ideal Southern cook, shining black, portly, and jolly even when on duty; every hair confined by a gorgeous turban; her broad hips encircled by a huge cotton apron. The bill of fare was always made out by herself—a most excellent bill it was, and she came everyday to inquire if her young master desired any change in the menu. This morning, however, I observed her entrance with surprise, because we were not more than half through breakfast, and she stood silently out of range of Ot's eyes. Next appeared one of the housemaids, who asked in a loud, apologetic whisper if anybody had "seed her broom." No one appeared to have seen it, and she took up her station near the cook.

Petrarch, the head waiter, stood with his eye on the door, and none of his subordinates budged from their places, though the supply of buckwheat cakes was exhausted.

"Go get some cakes," whispered Cicero.

"You go yo' self," returned Jim.
"Ot was still reading, and observed neither the omission nor the whisper-
ing."

Soon appeared another housemaid to look for her broom. Misery loves company; so, not finding what she sought, Housemaid No. 2 planted herself by the side of No. 1. Then appeared the coachman, who always came to receive orders for the day. He seemed content to await his master's leisure, and stood in dignified silence, waiving, however, the prominence due to his position, for he stationed himself in the rear of the cook. Next came one of the hostlers, I suppose in search of the coachman. A few moments after appeared another woman servant—
Housemaid No. 3 apparently, for she made various feints toward the sideboard, peeping under it, dashing round it and muttering intelligibly something about her "duster."

This attracted Ot's attention, and he glanced over his shoulder at the group assembled behind him. Then he turned in his chair, placed his open hands on his knees, his elbows sticking out at right angles, and stared solemnly at the crowd. The crowd began to giggle and seemed amused, for the cook tripped on the coachman's toes and the housemaids snickered behind their aprons. The hostler hid behind his next-door neighbor, and, spite of the toes, the coachman sought the rear,
Thus, in a giggling, disorderly mass,
they huddled together near the door, each trying to hide behind the other.

"Ot turned to Petrarch, the only one who retained his place by right. What the deuce does this mean?" he asked.

"But before Petrarch could reply
there appeared in the doorway a stalwart negro, and behind him two or three others, who appeared to be urging him forward with nudges and whispers and encouraging digs in the ribs.
The fellow twisted a peaked old tan-colored felt hat between his fingers, and appeared half dead with embarrassment.
He wore the most comical expression of bashfulness you ever saw in your life. It would not have been so funny if he had not been such a great strapping dog; but as he lagged at the door, and twisted his shoulder, and hung his head, and almost crept back, and nudged each other and giggled, and I must confess I joined them. (I soon understood that the fellow belonged to a neighboring plantation, and was here to ask Ot permission to come courting on his premises.)

"Ot looked solemn as an owl. "Well, Jack?"

"Savvy, Mars Ot."

"Ot looked at Jack, and Jack looked at Ot, and the negroes looked at both, and nudged each other and giggled. Finally, Jack looked down at the floor, fairly wringing his old hat with embarrassment, and broke into a laugh which betrayed an expanse of scarlet gums and white teeth truly appalling.

"What's your will if you had it, Jack?" asked Ot.

"Which I cum ober, sah, for ter ax you de liberty of de plantation, sah."

"Ot turned to the cook, and she asked Ot, and turning to the cook, added, "Step out, Aunt Fanny; Jack wants you."

"There was a shout of laughter, and Aunt Fanny's fat sides shook as she recoiled, contemptuously. "Lor, Mars Ot! I done spank dat nigger too often for stealin' biskit out'n de nbben an'
foolin' 'roun' my kittle an' paus' 'Tain't me he's arter."

"Who is it, Jack?"

"Well, Mars Ot," said Jack, who, having made the plunge and survived the shock, spoke with renewed confidence in himself—well, Mars Ot, if I had my ruther, I ruther have Lucinda."

"Let Lucinda appear," said Ot, solemnly.

"Whereupon a posse of curious house-maids, with feigned vivacity and tittering haste, went to fetch Lucinda.

"Lucinda came, Ot, as the dinky maid appeared with drooping head and sidelong glance, half willing, half afraid—Lucinda, Jack wants to marry Aunt Fanny."

"Lor, now, Mars Ot! Lucinda, she know better 'n dat," remonstrated Jack, with a reassuring glance toward his fair.

"Me, seh?" said Lucinda, scornfully, to Ot. "Me, seh. No, sir, I ain't no maneuverer, no humbugger, rumming words together and ostentatiously turning her back on Jack; 'specially of Aunt Fanny, she ain't."

"I didn't mean Aunt Fanny; Jack says 'specially of Aunt Fanny, she ain't.'"

"O' sho' now, Mars Ot! and Lucinda seemed attempting to escape from the detaining hands of her sister house-maids, but, abashed perhaps by Jack's tender glances, she ran in every direction except toward the open door.

"You see, Jack, you had better go
home," said Ot, resuming his paper
(Lucinda did not run so fast), "or, better still, suppose you take one of the others." (They all let go Lucinda, and
she might have run as fast as she
pleased.)

"Jack confusedly turned his hat inside out, and virtually rejected this of-
fer. Ot continued: "Take yourself off
now, Jack, and you are to come on my
plantation except toward the open door."

"You see, Jack, you had better go
home," said Ot, resuming his paper
(Lucinda did not run so fast), "or, better still, suppose you take one of the
others." (They all let go Lucinda, and
she might have run as fast as she
pleased.)

"Jack confusedly turned his hat in-
side out, and virtually rejected this of-
fer. Ot continued: "Take yourself off
now, Jack, and you are to come on my
plantation except toward the open door."

"You see, Jack, you had better go
home," said Ot, resuming his paper
(Lucinda did not run so fast), "or, better still, suppose you take one of the
others." (They all let go Lucinda, and
she might have run as fast as she
pleased.)

"Jack confusedly turned his hat in-
side out, and virtually rejected this of-
fer. Ot continued: "Take yourself off
now, Jack, and you are to come on my
plantation except toward the open door."

"You see, Jack, you had better go
home," said Ot, resuming his paper
(Lucinda did not run so fast), "or, better still, suppose you take one of the
others." (They all let go Lucinda, and
she might have run as fast as she
pleased.)

"Jack confusedly turned his hat in-
side out, and virtually rejected this of-
fer. Ot continued: "Take yourself off
now, Jack, and you are to come on my
plantation except toward the open door."

"You see, Jack, you had better go
home," said Ot, resuming his paper
(Lucinda did not run so fast), "or, better still, suppose you take one of the
others." (They all let go Lucinda, and
she might have run as fast as she
pleased.)

"Jack confusedly turned his hat in-
side out, and virtually rejected this of-
fer. Ot continued: "Take yourself off
now, Jack, and you are to come on my
plantation except toward the open door."

"You see, Jack, you had better go
home," said Ot, resuming his paper
(Lucinda did not run so fast), "or, better still, suppose you take one of the
others." (They all let go Lucinda, and
she might have run as fast as she
pleased.)

"Jack confusedly turned his hat in-
side out, and virtually rejected this of-
fer. Ot continued: "Take yourself off
now, Jack, and you are to come on my
plantation except toward the open door."

"You see, Jack, you had better go
home," said Ot, resuming his paper
(Lucinda did not run so fast), "or, better still, suppose you take one of the
others." (They all let go Lucinda, and
she might have run as fast as she
pleased.)

"Jack confusedly turned his hat in-
side out, and virtually rejected this of-
fer. Ot continued: "Take yourself off
now, Jack, and you are to come on my
plantation except toward the open door."

"You see, Jack, you had better go
home," said Ot, resuming his paper
(Lucinda did not run so fast), "or, better still, suppose you take one of the
others." (They all let go Lucinda, and
she might have run as fast as she
pleased.)

"Jack confusedly turned his hat in-
side out, and virtually rejected this of-
fer. Ot continued: "Take yourself off
now, Jack, and you are to come on my
plantation except toward the open door."

"You see, Jack, you had better go
home," said Ot, resuming his paper
(Lucinda did not run so fast), "or, better still, suppose you take one of the
others." (They all let go Lucinda, and
she might have run as fast as she
pleased.)

"Jack confusedly turned his hat in-
side out, and virtually rejected this of-
fer. Ot continued: "Take yourself off
now, Jack, and you are to come on my
plantation except toward the open door."

"You see, Jack, you had better go
home," said Ot, resuming his paper
(Lucinda did not run so fast), "or, better still, suppose you take one of the
others." (They all let go Lucinda, and
she might have run as fast as she
pleased.)

"Jack confusedly turned his hat in-
side out, and virtually rejected this of-
fer. Ot continued: "Take yourself off
now, Jack, and you are to come on my
plantation except toward the open door."

"You see, Jack, you had better go
home," said Ot, resuming his paper
(Lucinda did not run so fast), "or, better still, suppose you take one of the
others." (They all let go Lucinda, and
she might have run as fast as she
pleased.)

As we rode through the magnificent old woods I could not but be struck by the very different animal spirits, the exuberant life, of my companion. Life!
Life! Life! Every tone of his voice, every look of his blue-black eyes, every motion of his fine athletic figure, gave evidence of the idea of life and the enjoyment of life. He whistled and sang and joked and laughed, till I saw that he appreciated the fact of his having nothing to do but to enjoy himself.

He presently stopped at a bend in the creek along the banks of which we were riding.

"Hallo, Uncle Jake! looking for yarns?" This to the funniest-looking old negro you ever saw, who seemed to be stealthily peering about him, as if he were very close to a trap.

He appeared to be at least a hundred and fifty years old, was as black as ink, and wore a natural skull-cap of gray wool.
The rest of him was made up of wrinkles and two little red eyes, which, when he was close to a trap, gave him an expression of extreme cunning. I was not surprised to learn that he was a trick-doctor, "conducting" great ceremonies and taking advantage of every opportunity to perform his outlandish tricks.

"Yes, sah," said he in reply to Ot.
"I'm arter yarns for de fever, which I will bit de plantashun naix dark o' de moon."

"That's the Christmas-log, I suppose?" said Ot, pointing with his whip to a dark object bobbing up and down in the water. Turning to me, he explained: "The negroes have holiday as long as they can keep the Christmas-log burning, so the rascals usually get the biggest specimen of black gum they can find—you know what a line-grain it has?"

"And so," he said, "I'm arter it, and so, too, is George; there's no telling how long the thing will last."

"An' de Death comes ter de planta-shun while de log's a-burnin', all de niggers helps to splash it, an' de plantashun he's de Ten to one!" said Uncle Jake impressively, compressing his lips.

"Is dat sho?" inquired Ot.

"I ain't neber seed de squinchin'
o' de log but once, forty year ago. Dey calls it de 'death-rain' down dar."

"I wonder if you'd all 'squinch'
the log and give up your holidays if Death should take me for a Christmas-gift to my master some fine morning?"

"In cert'n, in cert'n, Mars Ot;
but I hope you ain't gwine try us, sah."

"Ot laughed, and we rode on.

"I wonder, Ot," said I, "that you allow that old fellow to put 'snooze' in the negroes' heads. Ten to one (from what I've seen of them), they will all fall ill when the moon waxes."

"Like as not," said he carelessly;
"but their faith in him as a prophet,
which makes them fancy his words ill,
is counterbalanced by their faith in him
as a doctor, which will make them all well again; so you see it's as broad as it's long. Now, Hawthorne, if you will turn to the right and follow that road, you will have several capital views of a smooth gallop. I am going over to Hensley's to look at that mare, but I am going by the Devil's Path, and you might not fancy it."

"How then, we parted, Ot turning in his saddle when he had gone about twenty yards to ask me to let Hensford the overseer to meet him at the foot of the mountain at three o'clock."

I delivered the message to Herndon, and at the proper time he set out, but the true word that is spoken in jest seemed in this instance verified, for he did not return till night; and when he came, you may guess what views of the portico. We stood talking a while;
then I went with him a little way down the avenue.

There were four of Mr. Hensley's negroes carrying a rough bier. On it rested a richly-made pine coffin. A couple of other negroes held torches that smoked and flared and let fall great drops of blazing turpentine. They smoked and flared and seemed to struggle with the pale, uncertain light of the full moon; and the magnolia-leaves—
I never heard the hard dry rattle of magnolia-leaves without seeing a rough coffin colored by the red light of pine torches, the heavy black smoke curling and about, casting its sullen shadow over all—the rough coffin and among the magnolia-branches, and into the faces of the awe-stricken negroes who held the bier.

Here the old man paused and looked thoughtfully into the fire, till some one asked him to go on.

"The news spread like wild-fire that Otway had been thrown from his horse while coming down the Devil's Path on his house-ride from Mr. Hensley's, and the place was filled with the wildest lamentations. I cannot assert that I ever witnessed what appeared to me more genuine grief than the negroes evinced on hearing of the death of their young master."

"The coffin was borne into the house, but remained unopened, young Hensley and Herndon agreeing that the mutilated remains should not be disposed. Although the house and grounds were crowded with negroes, they were not allowed to enter the room more than two or three at a time. In some instances the scene was very affecting.
When his old master came in and dropped down by the side of the coffin
(I knew she really had been faithful, and the boy loved her, his mother had been dead many and many a day), she didn't cry; it was only a feeble, pitiful kind of whine. I—well, I felt sorry."

After a while old Jake came in and asked that they might drench the Christmas-log and end the holiday rejoicing. Herndon gave permission, and the scene that took place thereafter was really pathetic. There were certainly not fewer than five hundred negroes present, men, women and children; and there were, it seemed to me, hundreds of pine torches swayed about in the wind. Under Jake's supervision they had selected an open space in the forest, and dragged into it the half-consumed log, that looked like one solid, living coal, and placed near it a huge vessel of water on which were moss and stones, which gave it the appearance of a natural spring. Here a number of them gathered and commenced a series of wild

but apparently concerted movements of the most grotesque nature conceivable, throwing themselves into uncounted attitudes, their arms in the air and heads back or resting almost on their shoulders, using frantic gestures—bending their foreheads to the earth, joining hands and dragging each other round in circles, to part suddenly, precipitating themselves almost into the flames—even their lips and eyes partaking of the strange contortions. It was almost impossible to find such a scene enacted in the nineteenth century.

Then they began a low murmuring
chant, exceedingly sweet and plaintive, and sang hardly above breath, yet so numerous were the voices that it must have been heard at a great distance;
and as the sound was taken up, spreading like a wave, they began to file slowly before the Christmas-log, each one as he passed throwing on it a handful of water from the spring. Jack and Lucinda went forward hand in hand and helped to quench the now dying embers, but separated there and walked away by different paths, symbolizing, as I afterward learned, the postponement of their union. The death-rain had continued a long time,
the glowing coals of the Christmas-log were growing black and lifeless, and the murmured chant was slowly dying away, growing fainter every moment, while the torches began to disappear, here, there, everywhere one by one, in every direction, till there was little light left but that of the moon, which gave in indistinct outline the crowd of dark figures extending into the forest.

"O, honey! honey!" cried Ot's mammy as she tottered up and the water fell in a tremulous shower from her poor old fingers—oh, honey, my mammy is done, she's dead, and dis-day ter squinch de log. De de-rain for her boy is done out de light in yo' ole mammy's heart."

"Hallo, mammy! don't cry. Your boy's come back," said a familiar voice, and in our midst appeared a fine athletic fellow with blue-black eyes and a long moustache and a jolly voice, such as never dead man had; yet so great was the pain that many of the negroes groaned, and women, actually fainted from fright. Those who could command their muscles fled screaming from the place, and as we afterward found, some of them ran till they fell, exhausted on the road, miles away from home.

"But Ot gave them a rattling good time to make up for it. There was no end of fun for the rest of the holidays.
Jack and Lucinda were married, and every negro within a circuit of ten miles came to the wedding. Ot declared that if nobody else would dance with his old mammy, he would do it himself; and he dragged her—she was as stiff in the knees as a pair of tongs,
and as weak in the ankles as a month-old baby—out on the floor, and twirled
her around, and held her arms above her head, and made her trip up and down the floor, and bow her head twice, her back, and bow backward and forward, to the right and to the left, while she begged and prayed and laughed till her turban fell off, and we were all fairly shouting, and the evening was too exhausted to remember or laugh any longer. Ah, a jolly boy was Ot!"

"What became of him?"

"He got married, grew fat, and was a good family-man; the last I heard of him was in the 'Lippincott's Magazine.'"

The Mystery of the So-Called Seeming Sight Explained.

Clairvoyance, or "second sight," as practised in places of public amusement, is of so puzzling a character that there are not wanting those eager assertors of its reality who, when the method adopted to bring about the apparently inexplicable reading of another's thoughts is, however, extremely simple, and may be readily made clear to all. The first exhibition of the kind was given by the Englishman, John Henry Anderson ("the Wizard of the North") performed it with the assistance of his daughter and the clever Frenchman, Honin, trained his little boy, Eric, to become marvellous in quick in describing, sometimes minutely, articles taken indiscriminately
from the audience.

The conjuror's art of clairvoyance rests entirely with two persons, one of whom is the "seer," and the other puts questions to the "clairvoyant," and the other one who replies, and all that is required for this striking piece of humbug is a capital ventriloquist on both sides and a careful arrangement of signals, conveyed by words, between the two. Thus the clairvoyant may be and usually is blindfolded without redering the task any more difficult.
But you will observe that he, or she, cannot describe any article unknown to themselves, unless the person acting in collusion with them has seen the same and been able to explain its nature in the question put to the performer.

In public exhibitions of this character
the mystery is frequently heightened by having confederates amongst the audience with strange documents, etc., hidden away in pocket-books, which can,
of course, be readily deciphered by the clairvoyant, and the interest is increased by carefully elaborated, but seemingly impromptu sallies of wit.

As we have observed, the signals are conveyed by words, or combinations of words, and it may appear startling to the person who is to become marvellous, but he is usually carried about the person
near it a huge vessel of water on
which were moss and stones, which
gave it the appearance of a natural
spring. Here a number of them gathered and commenced a series of wild

gloves and other miscellaneous contents of our pockets, while the umbrellas, sticks, reticules, etc., would form quite an inconsiderable addition to the list.
Besides, the person who puts the questions knowing the pre-arranged code—can reject or ignore any article for which no signal has been provided.

A greater stumbling-block to the uninitiated than this is that mentioned above, viz., the questions do not seem to present sufficient variety to enable a person blindfolded and mentally in the dark, to get at the nature of the multifarious objects presented to the interlocutor. In reality this is easily got over by the arrangement of money,
precious stones, colors, etc., in groups,
and as the questions put in each of these are nearly alike, they need present few peculiarities to the audience.

We shall see how the grouping system stands the performer in such good stead in the examples hereafter given.

Sometimes the cue is given to the "clairvoyant" by the person who interrogates in an absurdly simple manner without exciting suspicion; as "Is it open or shut?" "It is shut?" or "Is it shut or open?" "It is open." "Is it perfumed?" "Yes." "Is there a stone in it?" "Yes." Etc., etc.

For ordinary articles a well-understood code must be arranged between the performers, and all who take to this line of business have their own systems, altogether or in part, which have grown out of the shifts they have been driven during past performances.
We may here indicate sufficient to enable our friends to get some grasp of the subject and give a groundwork upon which to build a desirous introducing this pleasing and astonishing art to the family circle. Of course to attain to the perfection of some of the modern professors of this very puzzling trickery is out of the question with those whom we now address, such experts have spent, possibly, years in perfecting their systems, they are constantly in the practice of clairvoyance and are adding to their word-code
daily, besides which, as we have said,
their confederates lend an added mystery to a performance which in its simplest form eludes the detection of ordinary observers.

We will now give some questions,
with the ideas conveyed to the clairvoyant, afterwards proceeding to give one or two groups of subjects, colors, etc., and then apply the whole to show how the system is worked.

Name this. A pocket-book.
What is this? A letter.
What have I here? A purse.
Do ladies or gentlemen? Ladies. A pin-cushion.

Now, can you tell me this? (May I open it, sir?) Yes, it's a pocket-book.
This will puzzle you. Not at all. It is courtpiercer.
This! Speak loud. It is a letter.
(Don't be afraid, sir; I will whisper it to you.)
Is this of any use? Certainly; it is an almanac.

Do you admire this? Yes, it's a brooch.
Is anything in it? Yes; a portrait.
A lady or gentleman? A gentleman.
His hair, please name the color? Red.
(Ladies, madam the young lady should have said, "I like it.") To light a cigar.

What should be done with this? Put it in your pocket;
you like a cigar going home.
(Good advice, I'll say, and I'll say it all right!
Thank you, sir.) A toothpick.

Tell me this. A letter.
Who gave me this? A letter.
Has it a color? It is white. Some say it is a color. It is a color. It is a color.

What is the flower? It is a Camellia.
What is this green stuff? Maiden-hair fern.
What is the flower for? (I thought she'd say so; you've no objection I think.) Thank you, sir. It is a name. You can have that.

(Well, Miss Min, if ever you got their deserts well would escape whipping; please; hem.) Do you see this? (Hold rather, sir; I'm looking up a ring.) one myself.

(Are you a nice poor man, that's all.)
This and much more, and the professor will perhaps declare that the clairvoyant can read any sentence written by the audience (unintentionally taken from a newspaper, or a hat), which has neither been seen by

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year..... $1.50
Six months..... .75
INvariably in advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, 10 cents per square of 10 lines;
20 cents per square for each additional insertion. Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 6, 1879.

To the Republican Voters of Garrett county.

You are hereby requested to meet in your
respective districts on Saturday, Sept. 6th, 1879,
for the purpose of selecting five (5) delegates
from each district to meet in county convention, in Oakland on

Wednesday, Sept. 10th, 1879,
for the purpose of selecting three (3) delegates
to represent Garrett county in the State nominating convention which meets in Baltimore
on September 12th, and three (3) alternates
for said delegates, and three (3) members of
the State Central Committee for Garrett Co.

The members of the district committees are
requested to make the necessary arrangements for the primaries named in this call.
By order
A. G. STURGEON,
Chairman.

FOR THE CAMPAIGN.

The coming campaign promises to be one of the most exciting on record.
Much is at stake and it behooves
every citizen of this county to prepare himself to vote with intelligence
and judgment on the 4th of next November.

As the regular perusal of a live
newspaper will give a clear idea of the issues at stake, and as the leading
points between the Republican and Democratic parties will be clearly
and distinctly submitted in the columns of THE REPUBLICAN, this
paper will be sent to any address in
the county, from now until November 15th, 1879, for 25 cents.

Let every Republican in the county act as an agent for THE REPUBLICAN
and enlarge its circulation so
that no voter in the county can plead
ignorance. Send in your orders immediately.

We are glad to announce that our friend and fellow townsman Capt. C.
H. Morgan, has received from Gov.
Blackburn, of Kentucky an appointment to an important office. He will assume the duties of the office on the 1st of October.

The Democratic Treasurer of Butter county, Ohio, was just killed enough to be caught in stealing $6,000
of the public money with the election only six weeks off and he a candidate for re-election. The local committee forced him to resign from the ticket, but that will hardly save the county for the party.

The Democracy have made a great to-do over an election device of a ballot-box transfixed by a bayonet. The New York Graphic offers a new one
—a ballot-box insecurely propped up on shot-guns. Preference will be given to orders from Yazoo county, Miss.

The Philadelphia Times, like Harper's Weekly, is waving the bloody shirt. The Times says: "If the white people of Mississippi really want to stop the colored exodus the first thing for them to do is to suppress the advocates of the 'Yazoo plan' in politics. Nobody can blame a negro, or a white man either, for wanting to leave a State where such outrages are permitted." As such outrages have been permitted in that State for several years, the sudden waking up of papers like the Times is as amusing as it is encouraging.

The Old Democrat, of Cumberland,
in speaking of the State ticket recently nominated in Baltimore, says:
"We are ready to give this ticket, which is a good and strong one in every respect save one, an honest, and cordial support whenever we are convinced that in so doing we are not contributing to foist upon the people of this State a second edition of the administration of John Lee Carroll. When Mr. Hamilton depels the impression, now almost deepened to conviction, that he has surrendered to the ring for the sake of the gubernatorial office, and deserted not only his old friends, but his former position as a Democrat, and silently agreed to work kindly in the harness of the men who control the expiring
State administration, then the old Democrat will gladly wheel into line and give their all to the success of the ticket."

Local Option.

The following is given as the Testimony of five counties in this State for Local Option:

CAROLINE COUNTY.—"When we abolished whiskey by local option we abolished tramps; our jail is of little importance; our almshouse has fewer inmates than ever before; the criminal records of our Court never became so near running below zero."

CALVERT COUNTY.—"The good effect of the law (local option) is seen in the improved industry of the people and the more thrifty appearance of house and farm. Give us ten years of the good enforcement of this law
and we will show you an empty jail,
lawyers with scarcely a brief,
judges without criminal cases, taxes largely reduced, churches better filled and universal good order."

TALBOT COUNTY.—"When the law
first went into effect here there were seventeen persons in jail and in eight-teen months after there was not one,
and the Sheriff said he could now afford to go live on his farm, as there was nothing to do about the jail, and that this was the result of local option."

WORCESTER COUNTY.—"In one year after the law was in force in this county the State's Attorney stated that his fees went down from $1,700 per annum to $300."

DORCHESTER COUNTY.—"Local option is no longer a disputed benefit to our town (Cambridge). To those who sometimes see persons intoxicated on our streets, it may appear as of little merit, but to those who lived here before the act became a law and saw the amount of liquor drunk by the young from fifteen to twenty-five, and now note the almost total abstinence among this class, can make some estimate of the great good already accomplished and form some correct idea of the untold good that the future can alone reveal."

Reforms Demanded.

The Republican party for the last decade has complained of the very abuse, which the tax-payers' convention in some of the counties are now denouncing. Its speakers are now stump, its conventions through their platforms, and its journals have reiterated the same complaints. The Ring, that has so long controlled the State, was charged with being responsible for these abuses, extravagances and gross oppression of the people. But the Ring, regardless of all such complaints, so long as its power was not jeopardized, continued
its career, and not only did not attempt any legislation offering redress and relief, but opposed and prevented anything of the kind. Now feeling that its days are numbered,
the verdict "unworthy of public confidence" is about being pronounced upon it.—It narrates with delicious and the evils under which we are laboring in Maryland, and offers to undertake the task of abolishing.
Does anybody believe that such an offer will be honestly carried out?
The disguise is altogether too thin!
—Frederick Examiner.

It is now a month since the importation of coin and bullion from England and France into the United States began. Less than half a million dollars was received during the first half of August, but during the second half over five millions were received, making a total for the month of $6,100,000. The most remarkable fact in regard to this is that about one-sixth of this amount was received direct from Havana and South America. The remittances from these southern commercial centres have of late been so universally made to London that this large diversion of coin to this country is a very agreeable surprise. It is estimated by English authorities that upwards of $10,000,000 more has been or will be sent thence to New York in coin for wheat and provisions already sold to Europe. This does not include bills yet to be drawn in settlement of exports of breadstuffs in future, which will be very great, so that shipments of gold to this country will probably be larger this and next month than during August. Certainly, a more fortunate state of trade for the maintenance of specie payments could not be imagined, but so long as the greenback issue is outstanding there will always be danger of a crash.

While the war was raging the news of a Union victory on the battle field caused the heartiest rejoicing in the North, and when the Confederates were triumphant a grand hurrah went up throughout the South. Now we have a victory of peace in which both sections can join their acclama-tions. It is the big boom of business, in which are united the magnificent grain crops of the West, the cotton yield of the South, the commercial activity in the trade centres and the revival of all industrial pursuits. The man who cannot time his voice to a sonorous cheer is no true patriot, or else he is too lazy to make a living.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 2, 1879.

California, Maine and Ohio are the early voting States. Kentucky, where none but Democrats vote,
"does not count." In regard to California estimates are worth little, for outside of the political parties, there are combinations of wholly unknown strength. But in Maine and Ohio there are materials for careful and reliable calculation. Following the election of last year in Maine the Republican State Committee made a thorough canvass of the State, ascertaining what Republicans had voted the greenback ticket, what ones had remained away from the polls, &c.
They entered into the present campaign, therefore, intelligently. They have made it the warmest the State ever knew, and will keep it so down to the day of election. All the leaders in every section are confident of success. Senator Blaine promises a majority of about 5,000. In Ohio, judging, as in the case of Maine, from letters daily received here, Republican victory is certain. Victory in these States will do half the work in 1880.

Gen. F. A. Walker, superintendent of the census, gives notice to vomen applicants for the position of enumerators, that he will leave their appointment, but he will leave their selection to the discretion of the supervisors of the census when appointed. He favors the best clerks in the Treasury, War and Interior Departments are ladies. It is a "refuge of barbarism" that, when equally efficient, they are not promoted as fast as male clerks.

The Evening Star says Mr. Bently, Commissioner of Pensions, will resign as soon as he can complete his annual report. There is no doubt that the ex-soldiers of the country would be much pleased to have one of their own number in this important position.

The following is some of the business Capt. Jas. B. Eads goes to Enrapelotransact. He will visit London and Paris, in the first place, with reference to the Panama canal, after which he will proceed to Hungary in connection with some engineering he has been engaged to do. To repair the damage caused there by the disastrous overflow of the Theiss last summer. He will then go to Egypt, for the purpose of taking observations of the Suez Canal. Apart from business of this scientific and engineering kind, he is commissioned by Mississippi Valley Association to do what he can in England and on the Continent, more especially at Anti-werp Bremen and Rotterdam, to stimulate direct trade with New Orleans and St. Louis, by showing the immense advantage of the jetty to shipping, and the cheapness of the Mississippi route for the Western grain trade.

LOUAN.

In 1822 the Democratic State of South Carolina in the name of State rights, undertake to nullify a law made by the National Congress, in pursuance of the Constitution; in 1861, in the name of States' rights, eleven Democratic States undertook to secede from the Union, because Abraham Lincoln was elected, in a Constitutional manner, President of the United States; from 1861 to 1865
these eleven Democratic States fought on a hundred battle-fields, to overturn the Constitution and to destroy the Union created by the Constitution; in 1861, the Democratic party, in the name of State rights, declared the war for the preservation of the Union and the maintenance of the Constitution a failure; in 1878, the Democratic party declared the Amendments to the Constitution, which were made a part of it in the manner prescribed by the Constitution, "revolutionary, null and void"; in 1879, the Democratic party, in control of the National Congress, and in the name of State rights, and at an enormous expense to the Nation, sought to strip the President of the United States of a power given him by the Constitution, namely, the power to execute the laws of the Nation—a power that had been exercised by Washington, and Jackson, and Lincoln.

This Democratic party, notwithstanding all this, class itself the party of the Constitution!

The new constitution of the State of Louisiana provides that the State shall furnish artificial limbs to all rebel soldiers needing them. It does not use that exact language, but says to all soldiers not provided for by the United States. The loyal men of Louisiana, the negroes, produce all the wealth of that State, and of course pay all the taxes, now they are to be taxed to provide for the men who were crippled in endeavoring to destroy the Government and keep them in slavery. Who says the "exodus" is wrong?

General Grant in Japan.

The New York Herald's correspondent with Gen. Grant furnishes many interesting details of the honors extended to him in Japan. On the 7th of July the Emperor invited the General to witness a review of the army in Tokio. The Emperor is fond of his army, which has made many important advances in military art.
"One of the effects of the revolution which brought the Mikado out of his retirement as spiritual chief of the nation and proclaimed him the absolute temporal sovereign was the employment of foreign officers to drill and instruct the troops, teach them European tactics and organize an army. It is a question whether a revolution which brings a nation out of a condition of dormant peace in which Japan existed for so many centuries, so far as the outer world is concerned, into line with the great military nations is a step in the path of progress. But an army in Japan was necessary to support the central power, suppress the Daimios' clans, whose strifes kept the land in a fever, and insure some degree of respect from the outside world.

"The emperor was more anxious to show his army to General Grant than any other institution in the empire. Great preparations had been made to have it in readiness, and all Tokio was out to see the pageant.
The review of the army by the Emperor in itself is an event that causes a sensation. But the review of the army by the Emperor and the General was an event which had no precedent in Japanese history. The hour for the review was nine, and at half-past eight the clatter of horse men and the sound of bugles was heard in the palace grounds. In a few moments the Emperor's state carriage drove up, the drivers in scarlet livery, and the panels decorated with the imperial flower, the chrys-santhemum. General Grant entered, accompanied by Prince Dairi, and the cavalry formed a hollow square, and our procession moved on to the field at a slow pace. A drive of twenty minutes brought us to the parade ground, a large open plain, the soldiers in line, and behind the soldiers
a dense mass of people—men, women and children. As the General's procession slowly turned into the parade ground, a group of Japanese officers rode up and saluted, the band played
"Hail, Columbia, and the soldiers presented arms."

At the close of the review General Grant and party drove off the ground in state and were taken to the Shill place, located in a delightful spot near the sea, where they took breakfast with the Emperor. A number of royal princes and princesses and all the members of the cabinet were present. General Grant was seated next to the Emperor, and Mrs. Grant beside Prince Arinagawa, the nearest relative of the Emperor. "The Emperor conversed a great deal with General Grant through Mr. Yoshida and also Governor Hennessey. His Majesty expressed a desire to have a private and friendly conference with the General, which it was arranged should take place after the General's return from Nikko. The feast lasted for a couple of hours, and the view from the table was charming. Beneath the window was a lake, and the banks were bordered with grass and trees. Cool winds came from the sea, and, although in the heart of a great capital, we were as secluded as in a forest. At the close of the breakfast cigars were brought and the company adjourned to another room.
Mrs. Grant had a long conversation with the princesses, and was charmed with their grace, their accomplishments, their simplicity and their quiet, refined Oriental beauty. At three o'clock the imperial party withdrew and we drove home to our palace by the sea."

The following extract is not taken from a Northern Republican paper, but from a Georgia Democratic journal: "If the Governor of Mississippi feels that he is unable to cope with the political bashi-bazouks that infest the State, it is his duty either to convene the Legislature or to call upon the Government for troops to suppress the outbreak; for it cannot be denied that the wisest, most just and easiest solution of millianism that has outgrown the powers of a State is the bayonet." A Southern Bourbon organ calling for bayonets!
What is the Democratic party to do for issues?

It is rumored around that there will be four tickets in the field this fall in this county, viz: Democratic, Republican, Knights of Labor and one known as "The Honorable Bilks ticket"—the latter to be made up of supposed Democrats who are unable to fool the Democracy into nominating them on its ticket, and in revenge nominate themselves in some corner grocery and then claim an immense following. But it won't do. The people know them as well under one name as another.—Cynth. Times.

Mothers should take warning and stop dosing their babies with landanum while teething. Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup answers the same purpose and is perfectly harmless. Price 25 cents.

If your bowels are costive take a dose of Dr. Bull's Baltimore Pills; we know of no better medicine.

TELEGRAPHIC.

TRIAL OF THE CHISHOLM MURDERERS.

DE KALB, Miss., September 2.— The Chisholm murder cases were called on yesterday in the Circuit Court. The defendants made motions to quash the indictment, which were overruled, when the state and defendants announced themselves ready for trial, and special venire of 75 jurors were drawn in each case. The first case to be tried is that of Henry G. Gully for the murder of Miss Cornelia Chisholm, which is set for Friday. The other cases will be tried next week. General Woodford is here, and will remain until the close of the trial, but will take no part in the proceedings. He came as an escort to Mrs. Chisholm, who is a clerk in the Treasury Department, in Washington, and an important witness for the prosecution.

SOUND DEMOCRATIC ADVICE TO THE SOUTHERN BULLDOZERS.

WASHINGTON, August 31.—Gradually the more respectable Democratic journals of the North are getting on the right side of the question of human and political rights in the South, and are learning to properly appreciate the real situation in such Southern communities as Yazoo city. The Sunday Herald of this city is noted for its staunch support of Democratic principles, and yet it publishes to-day a leading editorial on the subject of "The Shootdown Argument," which, as a Democratic reader said this afternoon, "is as severe as it is truthful." The editorial is as follows:

Some Democrats are still struggling in the vain task of justifying the Yazoo association on political and sectional grounds. Some have actually appealed to the affair in San Francisco, where one political adventurer tried to assassinate another after an interchange of obscene abuse, as a bright example in point. But the San Francisco affair will have no influence on national politics. Barksdale's raffish deed will, some plain words must be spoken before we let the subject drop, to show our too chivalrous brethren that a society which has to be "saved" by deeds of violence and blood is hardly in many respects past saving.

If our Southern friends go on amusing themselves with shot-guns and revolvers, they must not be surprised to find the solid South confronted by a solid North. It will not serve to show that these occurrences have little relevance to national politics, for the fact remains that they have a powerful influence over the Northern vote. It will not help the Democracy to show in the face of them that the interests of the people require change of administration, for passion is often stronger than self-interest, and whatever affords the Republicans a chance to appeal to sectional feeling and prejudice will have its effect in making it more difficult for the Democrats to carry elections.

Southern men may argue that the shooting of Dixon was the result of personal hatred, but Northern men will distrust Southern society so long as Southern public opinion permits manslaughter and downright murder to be a recognized way of righting grievances. And there is reason in this, for if men cannot be trusted to execute the laws which make human life secure and maintain the peace in a state, is there not cause to fear that the same men cannot be trusted to execute faithfully the laws of the nation? General Grant served notice, not without cause, last winter that the Northern Democracy could not afford to be handicapped with the late rebellion and the more odious developments of Southern public outrage.

The Northern Democracy is making a gallant struggle for the principles of civil liberty and the most vital interests of the masses North and South. Its labors have been for a decade like those of Sisyphus, for every step it gained has been lost by some superfluous folly committed at the South. If fighting over the battles of the Lost Cause, eulogiums on Jeff Davis or the violent removal of political adversaries are the best contributions the South can make to the political array, the Northern Democracy have strong temptations to repudiate all responsibility for the solid South, or to go over in a body to the Nationals.

There is only one gleam of light about the edges of this dark cloud of political hysteria. Every deplorable incident of disorder makes it clearer than ever that the Republican candidate for President in 1880 can only be defeated by the candidate of a Union soldier, a Democrat sharply cut off from the worst excesses of the Southern spirit. It is possible to allay the long-suffering desire of turbulence by nominating Hancock or Evling.
Even then it would be an easier race
if there were no Yazoes hanging on our heels. We exhort our Southern friends to either silence their shot-gun by new "large game" laws, and make a close season in human life, or, better still, to hang a few of the shooting by order process of law, which may be awarded to take all romance out of homicide.

GENERAL HOOD'S DEATH.

NEW ORLEANS, August 30.—General J. B. Hood died at 4 o'clock this morning. It is believed his daughter Lydia will not recover. Edith Hood is also sick.

Gen. Hood had hopes of recovery to the last. Perceiving slight favorable symptoms he said to Dr. Bemiss,
"We may yet dislodge the enemy."
As a measure of precaution none of the military associations to which Gen. Hood belonged have been invited to the funeral. He was buried this afternoon. Gen. Hood leaves eleven children, the eldest ten years and the youngest twins of three weeks old. His physical condition had been bad for some time, caused, it is alleged, by anxiety arising from financial reverses and the terrible blow he received in the death of his wife. The General leaves manuscript of a history of the war, which he intended to have published this fall.

DRAIN OF GOLD FROM EUROPE.
LONDON, Sept. 1.—The Financial this morning says it is understood that £171,441 worth of bar gold due from the east, will go to meet the American demand. £100,000 brought by the steamer Acra last week has already been disposed of for America.
£180,000 are due from the east on the 25th inst. As these amounts are all that are now in transit from the east, the whole of whatever demand may arise from the United States will fall on the stock held by the Bank of England unless remittances from France come to our aid.

POLITICS AND MONEY.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1.—Secretary
Sherman was at his desk in the department to-day, and was exceedingly good-natured, not to say jovial, in answering questions of the many who called upon him. He looked somewhat fatigued from his trip through Ohio, but the self-satisfied, complacent smile which he wore in replying to inquiries about the prospects in Ohio was marked by all who conversed with him. He says that he has not the slightest doubt about the result in Ohio next month. He found Republicans everywhere enthusiastic and sanguine of success. When reminded of the fact that Congressman Morrison brought the intelligence to Washington that the people outside of Ohio were making more "fuss" about the coming election than those in the state, and that very little excitement prevailed, especially in the rural districts, Secretary Sherman replied that that is unquestionably true in respect to the Democrats. He found them very little enthused over the prospects. Whatever excitement they might feel would be attributable to fear of defeat. He declined to express any opinion as to the proposition of honest-money Democrats that would vote against Ewing. He thought a great many would refuse to vote for him, but said that, as a general thing, the mass of Democrats always voted the Democratic ticket, regardless of all other considerations. In spite of this, however, he felt sure that Foster would be elected by a good majority. At the close of these remarks the Secretary turned the conversation by referring to the very excellent showing of the public debt statement for the month of August. He regarded the decrease of the debt, $3,527,355.33, as very satisfactory, and said that the decrease would have been much greater, perhaps even exceeding the estimates, had it not been for the large sums paid for arrangements of pensions.
The congressional doctors of finance will in all probability be made to take several doses of their own silver medicine on their return to the capital next winter. The Star published the following interesting paragraph
this evening:

"Since the recent order of Secretary Sherman requiring payments in silver to be made to all employees of the United States in an amount equal to ten per cent. of the monthly salary of each, it is noticeable that the "dollar of our dads" is fast coming into general circulation, and is a good deal of a nuisance to business men.
The order is executed with strict impartiality, affecting not only the clerks, but the President, his cabinets, and members of Congress, who all receive their ten per cent. allowance of the silver coin. A day or two ago a check was sent to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House by Hon.
John T. Harris, of Virginia, for $200.
The messenger who bore it demurred to receive $20 of the amount in silver, but the cashier told the young man to tell Mr. Harris he had voted for the bill which made the coin, and that not only he, but all members of Congress, would be paid ten per cent.
in silver on their salaries hereafter,
as the Treasury made the Sergeant-at-Arms take it, and there was no other course left him than to pay it out."

It may be stated in this connection, however, that those who receive the silver coin show no disposition to hoard it. Of the 65,000 standard dollars paid out here mostly to government clerks, $21,000 have been redeemed and exchanged for silver certificates.

LOCAL NEWS.

—Dr. Funderberg will be at the "Davis House" every Tuesday for a short while longer.

—The County Commissioners will meet for the transaction of business Monday next.

—The September term of the circuit court for Garrett county will convene in Oakland next Monday.

—200 sacks G. A. Salt for sale at Wm. P. Totten's Cheap Cash Store, Oakland, Md.

—Prof. W. O. Ison left for Morgantown Monday last to enter upon duty in the West Va. University.

—Messrs. Arthur Townsend and Wm. S. Davis left for Morgantown, to attend the University, Tuesday last.

—William Moody, Esq., of Blomington, has received the appointment of chief salesman for the large house of Hurst, Miller & Co., of Baltimore.

—The REPUBLICAN will be furnished to subscribers from now until the close of the campaign this fall for 25 cents in advance.

—D. Funderberg will be at the Davis house hereafter on Tuesdays only. Persons wishing to avail of his professional services will bear this in mind.

—Only two marriage licenses were granted last month, one to Samuel J. Swanger and Rebecca J. Harman and the other to Charles A. Humberston and Loretta Collins.

—Mr. Daniel Smith community called the "Johnstown Bank" will be in Oakland next week with a caravan of peaches from his Harby county farm. Have your money ready.

—Mr. Rowan White is prepared to accommodate the traveling public, at his hotel near the Depot, Oakland, Md. He has stabling for twenty horses. Persons attending court will find this a good stopping place.

—Repairing Sewing Machines of any pattern, and furnishing attachments and needles, will be promptly attended to by Mr. L. W. Stonaker, Headquarters in the old Offutt building, Oakland, Md.

—At a regular meeting of Shalfield Lodge No. 122, I. O. O. F., Monday evening, a resolution was passed thanking the Oakland Cornet Band for their services on Wednesday, 27th ult., on the occasion of the picnic and parade.

—A grand Masonic Basket Picnic and Banquet will be held on Byrne's Island, Harper's Ferry, Thursday, Sept. 11th, next. Whilst all persons are invited to participate, still a special invitation is extended to all Masonic Lodges.

—Mr. T. Norman (Anningham), of Annesville, Va., extends his warmest thanks to his friend who was so kind as to send him a beautiful bouquet of the most delicate flowers, on August 16th. They may rest assured it was highly appreciated.

—William Davis, colored residing about twelve miles South of Oakland, in this county, Friday morning of last week, whilst laboring under a temporary aberration of mind, wandered from his home, and was not found until Sunday morning, although parties had been searching for him all of the day and night previous. He was found lying on the ground in a field about a quarter of a mile from his home, to which he was carried, being unable to walk. Dr. McConas was called and administered restoratives, and he is now out of danger.

Church Services—Sunday.

St. Matthew's P. E. Church—Morning Prayer and Sermon every Sunday, at 11 A. M. Evening Prayer at 6 P. M. Holy Communion 1st Sunday in each month, at 11 A. M. Evening Prayer every day in the week at 6 P. M.

Memorial Church—Preenching at 11 A. M. and 7 P. M., by Rev. J. H. Flannagan.

Dentistry.

Dr. J. Daily, resident dentist at Westernport, will be in Oakland September 8th, and remain one week.

Surgical Operation.

On last Saturday afternoon, Mr. Henry Beall, of Lonaconing, came to Cumberland to have his right eye taken out, the sight of which had been destroyed by a piece of iron flying into it five years ago, whilst at work in the machine shops at Mt. Savage. Recently the eye became very painful and also the sight of the left was beginning to fail, that it became a necessity to have the injured member removed, which operation was performed by our oculist, Dr. W. F. Funderberg, with that care and skill only acquired by extensive practice. Mr. Beall returns home to-day, fully relieved of all pain, and the sight of the remaining eye will soon regain its full power.—Cumt. Daily Times.

A Few Words to Our Friends.

Everybody, or nearly everybody, is coming to Oakland next week, to attend court, and we presume that most persons have made their financial arrangements accordingly. This is right and proper, and we want you all to come, and would suggest to those who are indebted to us for one, two or three years' subscription, to please deposit enough money in separate corners of their pocket-books to liquidate their indebtedness to us. We will be at home during the entire week. The REPUBLICAN office will be open every day from 7 A. M. to 6 P. M. to delinquents and all others having business with us. Come to see us—come prepared to pay.

Closing of the Oakland Hotel.

An order was received Tuesday last by Mr. Lambert, Manager of the Oakland Hotel, from Maj. Hill, General Superintendent of the B. & O. Co's Hotels, to close the Oakland Hotel Saturday, 5th inst., and transfer the guests to the Deer Park Hotel. The order created considerable feeling among the guests, and a protest was drawn up, signed by over seventy of them and placed in the hands of Mayor Delawder, who went to Baltimore Tuesday night and laid the matter before Vice Presidents King and Keyser. At the time of going to press (Thursday evening) the order has not been countermanded. The guests are unanimous in their determination not to go to Deer Park, and have secured rooms at the other hotels and boarding houses in Oakland; and they also affirm that in case the order is enforced, they will not in the future patronize any of the Company's hotels as long as Maj. Hill retains his present position. The people of Oakland are much incensed at the action of Maj. Hill.

A Big Day at Cumberland.

A grand re-union of veteran Soldiers took place at Cumberland Wednesday last. The lowering weather in the morning was a great drawback and served to keep many at home from the country. All business was suspended. Uniformed companies were present from Connellysville, Somerset, Bedford and Keyser, besides large bodies of veterans in citizens clothes.

The welcome speech, very eloquent, was delivered by Colonel S. A. Cox, and was responded to by Captain Seiff, of Somerset. At 12:30 the line of march was taken up, and presented a handsome appearance.

The houses and stores were handsomely decorated and many of the trunks were in the procession, with tools and machinery, prosecuting their work. Some of the veterans were elegantly and uniquely decorated. A fine dinner was spread for the military in the market house.

The Pittsburg train, which consisted of six or seven cars, did not arrive until 12 o'clock. It was crowded. A competitive drill, games, racing, band contests, a boxing contest a tub race and other pastimes were the order for the afternoon.

The number of visitors present was estimated at fully 10,000.

The Miners' Strike.

The strike of the miners of our coal region which has been impending for several weeks past culminated yesterday in an open antagonism to the various coal companies operating in the Georges creek coal mines. On Saturday and Sunday night last bills were posted in numerous localities calling for a meeting of the miners at Knapp's meadow about 1 1/2 miles northeast of Lonaconing, in this county. From an early hour, in the morning the miners were seen bending their steps in the direction of the meadows, and at the time the meeting was called to order the crowd was estimated to number 1,500 persons. The meeting was organized with Mr. Norman McDonald (a miner) in the chair, as president, and Mr. M. Frost, editor of the Lonaconing Valley Times, Secretary. The president stated the object of the meeting and several addresses were made, all in advocacy of an increase of price per ton for mining coal.

During the meeting it was stated by one or more that the price of coal having recently advanced it was proper for the coal companies to increase the miners' pay, and if this could not be done under the present price of coal, the price of the coal should be increased in the market.

A resolution was finally adopted by which the miners bind themselves to stop work unless the price for mining coal is increased to fifty cents per ton.

As soon as the result of the meeting at Knapp's Meadows was announced in this city we hastened to obtain the views of the agents and officers of the various coal companies resident here, and found them unanimous in opinion that the contracts for coal having in most instances been already made, there is no margin in prices given that would enable the companies to grant the demanded increase of pay.

That instead of an advance in the price of coal recently, there has been a marked falling off in prices of the commodity in the market. That the companies have been paying the existing price for mining coal 40 cents per ton when they could ill afford it, and leaving scarcely a margin of profit to the operatives of the mines. The result of this, they say, will be most disastrous to those who can least afford to bear it, namely about 2,500 miners, and nearly 2,000 boatmen rendered idle and without means of maintaining themselves and their stock. The strike will sensibly effect the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, the Consolidation and New Central Coal Companies and other mining and transporting companies. The agents and officers here express the firm conviction that the demanded increase of pay will not be given. Everything appears quiet and no great excitement exists here.—Cumberland Times, Tuesday.

The request of the coal miners in the Georges Creek valley for an increase of ten cents per ton in mining coal, to take effect September 1st, having been refused, on Monday the miners in all the mines except the Swanton, Barton and Potomac quit work. On Tuesday, we are informed, the hands in the Blaes Avon, Borden Shad and Consolidation received the advance asked, and went to work. The indications are that the advance will be allowed in all the mines. The miners have held several large meetings, but perfect order has been maintained. The strike throws out of employment about twenty-five hundred men.—Kaiser Echo, Tuesday.

Rights in the Road.

A recent judicial discussion in another State presents in a plain and simple manner the common law of the highway, and its points will be read with interest by those who use roads—and they are all the people—but who are not familiar with the law defining the rights of those who own land that bounds the road, and of travelers. The decision to which we refer says that if a farm is bound by, on or upon a road it usually extends to the middle of the roadway. The farmer owns the soil of half the road, and may use the grass, trees, stones, gravel, sand or anything of value to him, either on the land or beneath the surface, subject only to the superior rights of the public to travel over the road, and that of the highway supervisor to use such materials for the repair of the road; and these materials he may carry away and use elsewhere on the road. No other man has a right to feed his cattle there, or cut the grass or trees, much less deposit his wood, old carts or other things thereon. The owner of a drive of cattle which stops to feed in front of your land, or a drove of pigs which root up the soil, is responsible to you at law as much as if they did the same thing within the fence. No children have a right to pick up the apples under your trees, although the same stand wholly outside your fence. No private person has a right to cut or lop off the limbs of your trees in order to move his old barn or other buildings along the highway, and no traveler can hitch his horse to your trees in the side-walk without being liable, if he gums the bark or otherwise injures them. If your well stands partly on your land and partly outside the fence, no neighbor can use it except by your permission. No man has a right to stand in front of your land and insult you with abusive language without being liable to you for trespassing on your land. He has a right to pass and re-pass in an orderly and becoming manner; a right to use the road, but not to abuse it. But notwithstanding the farmer owns the soil of the road, even he cannot use it for any purpose which interferes with the use of it by the public for travel. He cannot put his pig-pen, wagons, wood or other things there, if the supervisor orders them away as obstructing public travel. If he leaves such things outside his fence, and within the limits of the highway as actually laid out, though some distance from the traveled path, and a traveler runs into them in the night and is injured the owner is not only liable to him for private damages, but may also be indicted and fined for obstructing a public way. And if he has a fence or wall along the highway he must place it all on his own land, and not half on the road, as in case of division fences between neighbors. But as he owns the soil, if the road is discontinued, or located elsewhere, the land reverts to him, and he may enclose it to the centre and use it as a part of his farm.—E.

CRANESVILLE, Aug. 30, 1879.

ED. REPUBLICAN:—Having last night at you for some years, I was exceedingly surprised to find your making your impression in the field of journalism in an editorial capacity.

I have not much of interest to write of Cranestown except the marriage of Wm. Trickett and Rebecca Browning. May a happy life be theirs.

If your paper was published for Cranestown and vicinity alone, and not for Garrett county, Maryland, and elsewhere, I might write of every little trivial circumstance taking place here, and take a half column of your space to write up somebody I might disagree with on something of no interest to any one but myself. If I should, however, forget and so do, I hope you may read it with that big waste basket of yours very close, and let it drop right down in it—clear to the bottom.

To the press of the land we look, as a mighty agency, for the dissemination of light and knowledge in this wonderful 19th century. May you ever stand true to what you may think right, and be fearless in its vindication through the columns of THE REPUBLICAN.

S. T. W.

OAKLAND, MD., Sept. 2, 1879.

Dear Republican:—I'm done gone; clean chewed up; drawn and quartered. The Herald man has come down on me flat footed, and I am nothing but debris. In fact, I can scarcely pull myself together sufficiently to see what I am. I had congratulated myself on the certainty of having a nice time. Judging by the deftness with which he turned things to account, and by the facility with which he handled facts and figures, I had supposed I was going to find in him an interesting subject.

I had, figuratively speaking, just sat me down to crack a few political nuts with him, when, lo! to my astonishment, nay, to my utter, blank amazement, he gets on his ear and stalks away, shaking off the dust as a testimony against me, misquoting and misconstruing as is his wont, a single sentence of my introductory communication, and he is gone, and I am forlorn, disconsolate.

It may be, so to speak, a mere optical illusion, but methinks, as his receding form vanishes from my longing gaze, I catch just the faint suspicion of a gleam, a shimmer of the white feather.

I am sorry that business or something else has called him away from me. Why, I am really "afraid" I've "spoiled" his "pickles." I had a great many interesting incidents to relate to him. I wanted to tell what a cunning old coon old "Uncle Sam" is; how he swore crooked to avoid paying his taxes, that he might save enough money to buy the Presidency in case he was not elected. I wanted to tell the difference between Democratic and Republican methods, connected with which is a very interesting episode about voting with the shot gun. It was my purpose to dilate somewhat on the sincerity of his party—on the consistency of its attitude in different times and places.

I had intended to refer to Democratic doings in Maryland. I wanted to enlighten him as to who is responsible for the heavy burden of taxation under which Marylanders groan, while they sustain a fraudulent State government, and a pack of Ring vamps who are sucking their life blood.

I wanted to bring him near home, and perambulate with him the political field of Garrett. I would have taken great pleasure in showing him how the property in the now territory of Garrett was assessed, and the work well done, under Republican rule in 1865, for less than $1,500, while under the economic management of his party it cost nearly five thousand dollars, or more than three times as much, while the work was only half done.

These and a great many other pretty things I had to tell him, but now he is gone, and I can only bid him an affectionate farewell.

Yours, truly,

Real Estate Transfers.

The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending September 3d:

John Dailey to John Shatzer, part of a lot of land situated between the B. & O. R. R. and Second street, Oakland; $800.

John Dailey to John M. Jarboe and Geo. D. Lundwehr, lot No. 4, on Dailey's Park; $600.

Peter Holland to Michael J. Chrysler, part of military lot No. 815, containing 5 acres; $250.

Jonathan Fichtner to W. H. Tower, part of military lot No. 815, containing 5 acres; $200.

Louis Lininger and wife to Henry Stark part of the tract of land called "The Rights of Man," 100 acres; $251.

THINGS WORTH KNOWING.—The boiling water will remove tea stains and many fruit stains; pour the water through the stain, and thus prevent it from spreading over the fabric. That ripe tomatoes will remove ink and other stains from white cloth, also from the hands. That a teaspoonful of turpentine, boiled with white clothes, will aid the whitening process. That boiled starch is much improved by the addition of a little spermaceti or a little salt, or both, or a little gum arabic dissolved. That beeswax and salt will make flatirons as clean and smooth as glass. Tie a lump of wax in a rag and keep it for that purpose; when the irons are hot rub them with the wax rag, then scour with a paper or rag sprinkled with salt. That kerosene will soften boots and shoes which have been hardened by water, and render them as pliable as when new. That kerosene will make tin tea-kettles as bright as new; saturate a woolen rag and rub with it; it will also remove stains from clean varnished furniture.

The Washington Sentinel is very much exercised over the enforcement of the Sunday laws of this State and charges that they are the New England Blue Laws, transferred here and to be enforced by genuine Puritanism. All this may be so, and yet it does not change the fact that they are the laws laid down in the Bible for the government of man by his creator, and if they are not wise and beneficent laws then God is not what we have been taught by His Word to believe He is. We believe that God knew what He was doing when He gave us those laws; we believe they are right because God cannot do wrong and never commanded man to do a wrong, and we believe that should, as far as man is able, be enforced. The Sabbath is God's day—the only one out of the seven He asks us to keep for him, and we should keep it sacred as His command.—Cumberland Times.

There has been great excitement among the Mormons at Salt Lake City since the announcement that the government intended taking measures to prevent their emigration from Europe to this country. The Deseret News uses the most violent language, threatening all who oppose the "Latter Day Saints" with the fate of Pharaoh, who would not let the Lord's people go. At the Tabernacle in Salt Lake City, on Sunday, the 15th inst., Joseph W. Smith made a violent harangue, denouncing Judge Foreman for committing to prison for contempt of court three executors of Brigham Young, and advising the people to arm themselves and to be ready to defend their rights. Some of the Mormons seem disposed to bring on a conflict with the United States government, and much wisdom and an equal amount of decision and firmness will be required in dealing with them.

It seems, says the New York Sun, that the Russian Czar is satisfied with the vessels built for him in the United States, and wants more, and parties have arrived in Philadelphia with full authority to make extensive contracts. One or two of the vessels already remodelled here are now occupied in conveying condemned nihilists to the Russian convict depot at St. Petersburg. It is noteworthy that an American firm supplied the Spaniards with the gunboats which did such effective service in running up the rivers and inlets of the Cuban coast during the recent insurrection on that island; an American firm furnished the Turks with the rifles which did such execution at Plena, and now the Russians themselves have recourse to America for a supplementary navy.

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LESSONS.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 8, 1879.

THE COMING OF THE LORD.

GENERAL STATEMENT.

We now turn back ten years in the history of the Apostle Paul, to the time of his second missionary journey, and the earliest mention of all his epistles. In the year 52 A. D., in company with Silas, he visited the large city of Thessalonica in Macedonia. The gospel was at first gladly received by multitudes of the people, both Jews and Greeks, but soon persecution arose, a riot was excited, and Paul and Silas were driven from the city. (Acts 17, 1-18.) He felt great anxiety for the newly planted Church from which he had been so suddenly separated, and sent Timothy to visit and encourage its members. At Corinth he received a favorable report of their condition, but learned that erroneous views had arisen among them concerning the second coming of Christ, which many believed so near that they neglected the ordinary duties of life. To show the true doctrine of the advent, to clear the Church under its persecutions, and to confirm its faith, the apostle at once sent this epistle, which was probably the earliest writing of all the books in the New Testament.

1 Thess. I, 1-18.

Morality. Verses 12-18.

12 But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope.

13 For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.

14 For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep.

15 For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first.

16 Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord.

18 Wherefore comfort one another with these words.

HOME READINGS.

J. The coming of the Lord, 1 Thess. I, 13-18.

Th. Its certainty, 1 Thess. I, 1-10.

Fr. Its time, unknown, Matt. 24, 36-51.

S. Its suddenness, Matt. 24, 1-10.

X. Its importance, Matt. 24, 11-30.

8. Its purpose, Matt. 24, 31-36.

GOLDEN TEXT.

And so shall we be ever with the Lord. 1 Thess. I, 17.

LESSON HYMN, 75 & 66.

Our hope and expectation,
O Jesus, now appear;
Arise, thou Sun so longed for,
O'er this benighted sphere!

With hearts and hands uplifted,
We plead thy blood for sin;
The day of earth's redemption,
And ever be with thee.

QUESTIONS ON THE OUTLINE.

1. THE COMING LORD, v. 13, 14.

What is here meant by "them which are asleep?"

Of whom is this expression used? Acts 7, 60.

How does Paul say we should feel concerning such?

Why do people sorrow for the dead? Who have no hope in death?

What does Christ say concerning the dead? John 11, 25.

What happened to Christ after his death? Of what is the resurrection of Christ a pledge?

How many we then feel concerning death? 1 Cor. 15, 57.

2. MEETING THE LORD, v. 15-17; Rev. 11, 12.

By what authority did Paul speak?

What did he say by the word of the Lord? Who are meant by "we which are alive?"

What is said concerning such?

What is meant by "shall not prevent?" (Ass. C. Shall not anticipate or enjoy higher privilege.)

When will the Lord come? Matt. 24, 36.

How should we look for it? Matt. 24, 42.

What will occur when the Lord comes?

What is the promise of his return? Acts 1, 11.

What should we do to accompany it? Who shall be the first to rise?

What is said concerning these? Rev. 20, 6.

What shall happen to those then living? EVER WITH THE LORD, v. 17, 18.

What precious promise do we find here? How is this expressed in John 11, 37?

For what did Christ pray in John 17, 21?

What exhortation do we find in verse 18?

Why is this truth a comfort to believers?

What is said in 1 John 3, 2?

TEACHINGS OF THE LESSON.

Where in this lesson do we learn—

1. That dead saints sleep in Christ.

2. That they who are dead shall live again?

3. That those who are Christ's shall live forever?

WORDS WITH LITTLE FOLKS.

1. Do not sorrow over the dead.

2. Come at those who are in trouble.

3. Be ready at all times to meet Christ.

Where I am, there ye may be also, John 11, 3.

DOCTRINAL SUGGESTION.—The second coming of Christ.

ADDITIONAL PRACTICAL LESSONS.

1. It will be a certain coming, promised by himself, John 11, 33, by the angels, at his ascension, (Acts 1, 11), and by Paul in many of his epistles.

2. It will be an unexpected coming, at the time unlooked for.

3. It will be a sudden coming, in a moment.

4. It will be a glorious coming, in the glory of a King.

5. It will be a joyful coming, to God's people, both the living and dead.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

FREE SCHOLARSHIP.

OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY SCHOOL BOARD, OAKLAND, MD., Sept. 2d, 1879.

Notice is hereby given that on Wednesday, September 10th, an examination of applicants for the FREE SCHOLARSHIP at St. John's College, will take place at 9 o'clock A. M., in the office of the Board of County School Commissioners. This application is for four years. The successful applicant is expected to be in Annapolis on Monday, the 15th.

E. H. BARTLETT, Secretary.

REGISTER OF WILLS.

ED. REPUBLICAN:—Please announce my name as a candidate for the office of Register of Wills of Garrett county, subject to the decision of the Republican County Nominating Convention.

W. H. HAGANS.

ORDER NISI.

IT IS ORDAINED, that the 12th day of August, 1879, by the Orphans Court for Garrett county, as a Court of Equity, that the said and reported by Thomas J. Peiffer, trustee for the sale of the real estate of deceased, unless cause therefor in a copy be shown on or before the 15th day of September, in the year 1879, provided a copy of this order be inserted in some newspaper printed at Oakland at least once a week for four successive weeks before the 15th day of September next.

The report states the amount of sales to be $126.

JOSEPH DEWITT, C. J. O. C.

ANDREW J. MICHAEL, J. O. C.

WM. HARVEY, J. O. C.

True Copy—Test—

18th Sept. Wm. L. RAWLINS, Register.

Notice to Contractors

OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, OAKLAND, MD., Aug. 10th, 1879.

Notice is hereby given, that sealed proposals will be received by the County Commissioners of Garrett county, until

Monday, September 8th,

at 2 o'clock P. M., for the building of a bridge over the South Fork of Cassin's River, on the site of the old bridge, on the road leading from McHenry (Cassinville). Plans and specifications are as follows:

Length of bridge about sixty feet; 14 feet wide; 2 stone abutments to be built of split stone, about the same height as the former abutments; double chords, King posts and braces; weatherboarded with White Pine and roofed with white pine shingles; chords to be of white pine; all other timbers to be of good, sound white oak. The bridge and approaches thereto to be completed and ready for travel on or before the 1st of December next.

Amount for building said bridge to be levied at the annual levy of 1880.

The Commissioners reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

By order County Commissioners,

W. H. HAGANS,

8 16 1 Clerk.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 3.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 1879.

NUMBER 29.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, &c.

D. E. OFFUTT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Machinery, Musical Instruments,
Cups, Pistols, &c.

G. W. LEGGIE,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Second & Oak Sts.

D. H. LOAN,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, &c.

I. W. STALNAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third & Oak Sts.

L. BUSH & SON,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third & Oak Sts.

J. A. GRANT,
Dry Goods, Notions & Groceries,
SPECIAL CASE OF TOBACCO.

DAVIS & TOWNSHEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Opposite Bailey's Park.

C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Notions, Clocks, Confectionery, &c.,
Next to Coddington's Hotel.

RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods, Fruit, &c.

HOTELS.

CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,
W. M. CODDINGTON, Proprietor,
Main St., Opposite Bailey's Park.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

G. A. SHIRER,
Oak Street, near Second.
A general line of Stoves and Tinware.

PHYSICIANS.

DR. J. LEE MCCLAM,
Office on Main Street.

DR. E. H. PARSONS,
Offers his professional services
to the people of Oakland and vicinity. Office in the old Offutt building,
3 & 3 1/2.

PLASTERER.

JAMES ARNOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street.

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.

W. M. M. WAGNER,
Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.

GEO. F. LOUGHRIDGE,
Leave orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.

J. B. BRANT,
Surveyor, Auctioneer and
Conveyancer.
Oakland, Garrett county, Md.

JOHN HARNED,
Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.

A. B. WOODCOCK,
In Wm. Stinson's Building,
Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY
GOODS.

MRS. M. E. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Gents' Furnishing,
And Fancy Goods and Shoes.
Main Street, Opposite Dr. McCann's office.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

GEO. C. STURGES,
Drugs, Medicines,
Furniture, Toilet articles, Stationery,
Tobacco and Cigars.
Alder St.

G. W. MERRILL,
Near Depot,
Pure Drugs, Medicines, Toilet Goods, Station-
ery, Cigars and Tobacco, French Candy, Cakes, Fishing Tackle, &c. Physician's prescriptions accurately compounded.

PAINTING & PAPER HANG-
ING.

E. J. FRINGER,
House and Sign Painter.
Leave orders at Bush's Store.

S. V. B. WARD,
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER
Shop near Davis House.

BLACKSMITHS.

CHAS. SINCELL,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

JOHN M. JARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,
Residence on Liberty St. nearly opp. Depot.

P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
And Builder.
Residence on Centre street.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Reside opp. School house.

JOSEPH M. CRIM,
Residence on Alder Street.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.

CABINETMAKERS AND UN-DERTAKERS.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SHAYLER,
Shop on Second Street.

H. T. HELMBOLD'S

COMPOUND

Fluid Extract

BUCHU.

PHARMACEUTICAL

A SPECIFIC REMEDY FOR ALL

DISEASES

OF THE

BLADDER & KIDNEYS.

For Irridity, Loss of Memory, Indisposi-

tion to Exertion or Business, Shortness of Breath, Troubled with Thoughts of Dismissal, Dimness of Vision, Pain in the Back, Chest,

and Head, Rush of Blood to the Head, Pale Complexion and Dry Skin.

If these symptoms are allowed to go on,
very frequently Eclampsy, Fits and Consumption follow. When the Constitution becomes affected it requires the aid of an invigorating
medicine to strengthen and tone up the system—which

"Helmhold's Buchu"

DOES IN EVERY CASE.

HELMHOLD'S BUCHU

IS UNEQUALED

By any remedy known. It is prescribed by the most eminent physicians all over the world, in Rheumatism,

Spasmodic Cholera,
Neuralgia,
Nervousness,
Dyspepsia,
Indigestion,
Constipation,
Aches and Pains,
General Debility,
Kidney Diseases,
Liver Complaint,
Nervous Debility,
Epilepsy,
Head Troubles,
Paralysis,
General Ill Health,
Spinal Diseases,
Sciatica,
Dizziness,
Headache,
Lameness,
Catarrh,
Nervous Complaints,
Female Complaints, &c.

Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Cough,
Tightness, Sour Stomach, Eruptions, Bad
Taste in the Mouth, Palpitation of the Heart,
Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a thousand other painful symptoms, are the outcroppings of Dyspepsia.

And stimulates the torpid Liver, Bowels, and Kidneys to healthy action, in cleansing the
blood of all impurities, and imparting new
life and vigor to the whole system.
A single trial will be quite sufficient to convince the most hesitating of its valuable
remedial qualities.

Price $1 Per Bottle,

Or Six Bottles for $5.

Delivered to any address free from observation. "Patients" may consult by letter, receiving

the same attention as by calling.
Competent Physicians attend to correspondents. All letters should be addressed to

H. T. HELMBOLD,

DRUGGIST AND CHEMIST,

Philadelphia, Pa.

CAUTION!

See that the private Pro-

prietary Stamp is on

each bottle.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

my 10-17.

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LESSONS.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 14, 1879.

THE CHRISTIAN IN THE WORLD.

GENERAL STATEMENT.

The two epistles to Timothy and the one to Titus belong to a period of Paul's life later than the record in the book of Acts, and concerning which little is certainly known.

The general belief is, that after two years of imprisonment the apostle was released, and spent some months in visiting the churches,

passing through Ephesus, where he left Timothy in charge, and through the island of

Crete, which he placed under the direction of Titus. From Macedonia, in the interval before his second imprisonment, which was soon to take place, and speedily to end upon the scaffold, he wrote this first epistle to Timothy. In whom he ever felt the deepest interest, and who in comparative youth had been placed in great responsibility. He warns him against the false teachers, and their corrupting influence, directs concerning the public services and officers in the Church; gives precepts concerning his own personal character, and points out the evils of covetousness and love of the world, which he saw in the Ephesian community, and needed strong protest from the Church.

1 Tim. 6, 6-16.

Memory Verse, 16-17.

But godliness with contentment is great gain.

7 For we brought nothing into this world,

and it is certain we can carry nothing out.

8 And having food and raiment let us be therewith content.

9 But they that will be rich fall into temptation, and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition.

10 For the love of money is the root of all evil; which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced their selves through with many sorrows.

11 But thou, O man of God, flee these things; and follow after righteousness, god-liness, faith, love, patience, meekness.

12 Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, wherein thou art also called, and has professed a good profession before many witnesses.

13 Give thee charge in the sight of God,

who quickeneth all things, and before Christ

Jesus, who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession.

14 That thou keep this commandment without spot, unchangeable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ:

15 Which in his time he shall show, who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords;

16 Who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light, whom no man hath seen, nor can see; to whom be honor and power everlasting.

Amen.

HOME READINGS.

M. The Christian in the world. 1 Tim. 6, 6-16.

T. The riches of the world. Mark. 10, 17-25.

W. The vanity of the world. Deut. 7, 1-11.

F. The wickedness of the world. Psa. 11, 1-7.

S. The hatred of the world. John 17, 8-11.

S. The Christian man of the world. John 17,

15-26.

GOLDEN TEXT.

They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. John 17, 16.

LESSON HYMN. L. M.

Forth in his name, O Lord, I go

My daily labor to pursue.

Thee, only thee, resolved to know,

In all I think, or speak, or do.

Thee will I set at my right hand,

Whose eyes my inmost substance see;

And labor on thy command,
And offer all my powers to thee.

QUESTIONS ON THE OUTLINE.

1. WHAT TO FLEE, v. 6-10; James 1, 7.

2. What reason is stated in Heb. 11, 5?

3. What should we do, v. 11-12?

4. What dangers are found by those that would be rich?

5. How does Christ state this? Matt. 13, 22.

6. What is the root of all evil?

7. What results of covetousness are named?

8. What is our duty concerning these things?

9. What is this expressed in the Golden Text?

10. WHAT TO FOLLOW, v. 11-16.

11. What six objects to follow are named in

v. 11?

12. Define each one of them.

13. What field are we bidden to engage in?

14. What did Paul afterward say of this fight?

15. 2 Tim. 4, 7.

16. On what should we lay hold?

17. What should we be engaged in?

18. What charge does the apostle give?

19. Before whom was the charge made?

20. How should this commandment be kept?

21. How was it spoken of in v. 12?

22. What names are given to Christ?

23. What is said of this dwelling-place?

24. May we hope to dwell with him? John

17, 21.

TEACHINGS OF THE LESSON.

Where in this lesson do we learn—

1. That contentment brings gain?

2. That covetousness brings trouble?

3. That faith requires warfare?

WORDS WITH LITTLE FOLKS.

1. Be contented with what God gives you.

2. Do not desire to be rich.

3. Be bold in confessing Christ.

4. Set your affection on things above, Col. 3, 2.

5. BETHUNAL SUGGESTIONS.—The eternal existence of Christ.

6. ADDITIONAL PRACTICAL LESSONS.

1. He has the true riches who possesses

God's grace and a contented mind. v. 6.

2. The only riches which are ours forever are the riches of grace. v. 7.

3. While the aspiration for heavenly riches gives victory over temptation, the addition of earthly gain endures us with danger.

v. 9.

4. The heavenly riches inspire holy desires, while the earthly breed evil passions.

v. 9.

5. The end of one's life is eternal glory, the end of the other eternal woe. v. 9.

6. One strengthens the soul in the faith,

the other insensibly leads from it. v. 10.

7. One brings only joy, the other pierces the soul with many sorrows. v. 10.

The Howard Association of Memphis is out of funds, and makes an appeal to the country for aid.

Republicanism in Maryland.

The Republican party of Maryland

is so constantly torn by intestine

factions that it does not discharge its duties as an opposition with the vigor and effect which its numerical strength and the intelligence of its membership should give to its action. If one faction secures control of the party organization the other faction seems often to prefer the triumph of the Democratic party to a Republican success. The conduct of the public business loses the advantage of the vigilant scrutiny and searching examination imposed by the activity of an energetic opposition, and the State suffers in consequence. That such an unfortunate state of affairs should exist is due chiefly to the benumbing sense of helplessness which oppresses the opposition to Democratic rule in this State. With registration lists dated back to 1864 and complete facilities

for the commission of fraud, the party in power has always been able to return its candidate, whether elected or not. In 1875, when the opposition was so overwhelming that the regular and usual frauds might have been quite insufficient, violence was resorted to, and voters were driven from the polls by gangs of ruffians.

The sense of impotence has produced its natural result in the political apathy that pervades this community.

Under such circumstances it is not at all strange that desire to obtain prominence among the forces directing the movements of the opposition. When Republican politics are defined as a perpetual squabble over the federal offices, it should be also said that owing to the suppression of free elections there has

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.

OAKLAND, CALIF. CO., MD.

"BILL," THE ENGINEER.

"All aboard!" "Splice-see chee—splice-see-choo!" And the iron horse moves his steel-timed hoof, And snorts from his chest his breath of steam, With a quickening pulse and warning scream: Moves out with his freight of human lives— A staccato chain of humming lives.

Around the turn is a rattling din, As the bright steel arms fly on and in, Till nothing is left save a deadening roar, As the train speeds on like a shooting star, With a long-drawn trail like a smoke pall Whose swirling folds envelope all.

"Stoke up!" shouts Bill, the engineer; "We must run this grade and the bottom clear With a monstrous bridge, to let my bill, Soldier, soldier, heavy train." All right, Bill! And the coal train and the freight train, And the coal train and the freight train, Watch by side the engine, from Bill with a shout.

Across the grade with an open throttle, They swing the grade as a switch, and away, The warp and woof of bush and clay, While steam and smoke and dust behind form moted clouds in the tormented wind.

Through the cut, and into the vale— Across the trestle that spans the ravine, There the willing, swift, now fading the way, And the iron starts, with a shriek away— Blown from in course—a shrill refrain— Mid the swirling mists of the flying train.

Beyond the curve, this side the hill, There runs the creek, the old saw-mill— A covered bridge, a switch, and away, The warp and woof of bush and clay, While steam and smoke and dust behind form moted clouds in the tormented wind.

"The just round the curve, in the shady wood That fringes the creek, his low hot stool; Where Jennie, with a smile, a pointing eye, With a lovely child and a loving wife, Naught now came their peace to mar, With a swift train's rattling jar.

To fame unknown, but to rosiest dear; For Jennie had watched from year to year— And more than that, she had seen her life, A girl and her lives from a watery grave, Since, broken in purse and form, she sat, He worked on the creek, a good watch still.

Hark! "The train," the mother's ear Leans to the sound, then a sudden leap, From her window she sees not her child; "O darling, O Maggie!" in accents wild, She starts from her seat, and the train is there, "Keep Maggie in when the train goes by."

She strains her eyes towards the creek, Where up the track, with ash and cheer, Healed the water, one pointing eye, Where Maggie lay in the engine's clutch— The waiting mother, with a gasp, she knew, She started to leap in their eager quest.

"Save her, Mary! For God's sake run!" Came Jennie's cry like a signal gun; The mother sprang like a startled deer, But the rushing train was now too near— She saw, she saw, she saw, she saw, That the engine's wheels were on the track.

Aye, pierced the beam 'round the curve so near, And smote on the ear of the engineer; Great grief, down the track, then a sudden leap, And Bill was out on the iron horse, Treading his little over the coming doom, With his nerve-strung bow as electric wire.

Alas! the engine's wheels so great; The lady dived in the path of fate! Yet Bill caught the force and laid the brake To lift a soul in such a race, With a rushing train and the child asleep, His hand's power in place must keep.

Still, reaching forth, with an iron grasp, He drew with his might this girl's task; Tearing the startled child from his grasp, He leapt to her in his high breast, Then, crushing it to his high breast, Kisses its cheeks with his love's best.

"More reckless," says Bill, for the mother's seen, And the engine and form of Jennie between, His wife and the train— that's the crash of the life— Of little and child, and the child, and the child, And Bill's grimy hand gives back a tear.

"Saved!" cries Bill, from the engine's front; "Saved!" echoes Jennie, his crutches shunt; "Saved!" shouts the mother, "Quick! Save from death!" "Saved," replies Mary, with a conscious breath, Then, leaping to her feet, "God bless you, sir, And Bill's grimy hand gives back a tear."

"All aboard!" "Splice-see chee—splice-see-choo!" And the iron horse moves his steel-timed hoof, And snorts from his chest his breath of steam, With a quickening pulse and warning scream: Moves out with his freight of human lives— A staccato chain of humming lives.

At the end of the road they gave him a purse; "I don't want this money," says the engineer; "But find me a place to stay, really too good! I was born under an evil star, Charley, and there never was the slightest use for a fellow to try and get the best of his ill luck."

This last really caused me to look up into the face of my companion with a glance of surprise. "Nonsense!" I replied, laughing at his cross visage. "What new misfortune has overwhelmed you now?"

We were seated—Richard Flanders and myself—upon the piazza of the near little summer hotel at Lakeview, on the Erie Road, and comfortably enjoying a quiet after-dinner smoke in the cool breeze of evening, which wafted to our senses the fragrant perfume of a thousand wild flowers, blooming about us on every side. We were in the middle of June, and the weather sultry and warm. There had been a little shower in the afternoon, just enough to keep us in-doors, and give Dick a chance to grumble a little.

I never knew why it was that we seemed to get on so nicely together; for we certainly were the very best and staunchest of friends. I had always borne a great liking for Dick; half, I suppose, on account of his genial manner, and half for the old way there was about him in everything he did or said. He was tall and good looking; his face was pretty and delicate as any woman's; his eyes were deep blue, and his hair almost golden. Beside physical favors, nature had indulged him in every respect; he had just stumbled into a small fortune that yielded him a couple of thousand a year, and certainly ought to make him a favorite with everybody.

But, despite his handsome figure and face, despite his graceful manner, despite the usual brightness of his conversation, it must be acknowledged that Richard Flanders had but few friends. He had one great fault; he was an habitual grumbler.

Nevertheless, he was a nice fellow, and I liked him all the more, perhaps, because he had never taken it into his odd head to complain of me, and everything had always gone on with astonishing smoothness between us.

"It's a downright shame!" he cried again, jumping to his feet and crossing over to my end of the piazza. "I really cannot see why I should always be the most ill-fated individual under heaven. It has been the same ever since I was a child; I have never had my own way in anything."

"You are certainly the most-to-be-pitied man in the world," I replied, in a tone of mock gravity. "What with your personal appearance, and a small little income, no cares, no troubles, no sorrows—it makes me shiver to contemplate your agonizing miseries."

"It is all very well for you to laugh, Charley," he snapped, ungraciously, and stopping direct in front of me. "I should like to see you in my place."

"So would I, with all my heart. I'll change shoes with you at once."

"It has always been a matter of meet nothing but disappointment and misfortune. And to say that it all comes through the great red-haired Louis Harold—"

"What?" I cried. "You must not say anything against Louis Harold before me. He is the very best fellow in the country."

"He has the reddest hair, if that is any recommendation. But he has not heard or seen the last of me yet."

"I trust not, for all our sakes, Dick," I added, good-naturedly. "Come, tell us the whole affair from beginning to end. Louis is too much of a gentleman to treat you shabbily, I am sure. I will bet you a box of cigars that you have only been again at your old habit of grumbling."

Richard crossed over again to the place where he had thrown the paper, and came back with the Journal in his hand.

"Look at that!" he growled, as he tossed it into my lap. "It was the Patterson Daily Journal that I held; half way down the first column an interesting paragraph caught my eye."

"We are pleased to hear of the safe return of Mr. Louis Harold—our rising young lawyer—with his lovely bride at the White Mountains."

"Well!" I said, without looking up, "there is nothing very extraordinary in that. You know that he was married, did you not? I met Louis in the cars, the other day, and he invited me very cordially to call on him."

"He did? Very kind, I am sure. He could not do less than invite us to call after the trick he has served me."

"Trick! I will vow it is no such thing; Louis has never been guilty of a mean action in all his life."

"Indeed? He must feel quite flattered to have one so eager in his defense. I call him a sneak, and I'll prove it, too. Why, confound him! I wanted to marry her myself."

"What?" I fairly leaped up, bursting into a loud laugh. "You wanted to marry Judge Reynolds' daughter? That must be a rich story you have to tell me, and I am all ears to hear in what way you succeeded in it, attracting the young lady's attention."

handed back the change to Louis. He winked at me then, as if to say, "I've got the best of you this time, my man," and I felt that he had. Every time I had a chance to be near the car afterward I looked in. They were chatting earnestly and laughing as merrily as if they had been passing near them, for some how I felt that it was all over with me.

"When I opened the door and called out 'Ridgewood!' Louis rose and helped the young lady out. I saw her run up the platform, and held up her cheek for him to kiss. Then she called Louis up and told her story."

"This gentleman, papa," I heard her say, "was polite enough to pay my fare when the rude conductor threatened to put me off the car."

"I am personally and deeply grateful, sir," the old gentleman said, offering Louis a dollar. "The impudence of these conductors is truly marvellous. I shall use all my influence with the company to obtain his discharge to-morrow."

"I ground my teeth when I heard this, and listened again; the young lady was speaking."

"O, please, not, papa," she broke in. "He is a friend of Mr. Harold's."

"The last thing I saw, as the train moved on, was that Louis had declined to take the old gentleman's money, and was walking down the platform between him and his lovely daughter. Three days later I met Louis in the street, and he rushed up and grasped me warmly by the hand."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

age angle of fifty-nine degrees, almost perfectly smooth and coated with glare ice. A little to our right a rope hung down these icy rocks from a considerable distance above, while just below it the rocks dropped away in the precipice facing the Z'Mutt glacier. I did not quite fancy the outlook, but concluded that if I dropped the guides must go with me, and that they knew what they were about, and would not take a certainty of being killed for only twenty dollars.

"This gentleman, papa," I heard her say, "was polite enough to pay my fare when the rude conductor threatened to put me off the car."

"I am personally and deeply grateful, sir," the old gentleman said, offering Louis a dollar. "The impudence of these conductors is truly marvellous. I shall use all my influence with the company to obtain his discharge to-morrow."

"I ground my teeth when I heard this, and listened again; the young lady was speaking."

"O, please, not, papa," she broke in. "He is a friend of Mr. Harold's."

"The last thing I saw, as the train moved on, was that Louis had declined to take the old gentleman's money, and was walking down the platform between him and his lovely daughter. Three days later I met Louis in the street, and he rushed up and grasped me warmly by the hand."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

Meteorite astronomy now takes rank as a scientific branch of astronomy, since it was ascertained that star showers are periodic. Even then, and for many years after, it was supposed there were but two, called the August and November showers. Now, not less than one hundred have been detected, and others are constantly being added to the list. The accounts of the showers that occurred in ancient times came down to us clothed in such extravagant language that, until the great star shower of November 13, 1833, astronomers were loathe to believe them. Now they know not only the cause, but are able to predict their recurrence with almost as much accuracy as eclipses, and the popular mind observes these displays with equanimity and delight instead of fear and alarm, or thinking the day of judgment has come. Science has dismissed not only them, but eclipses and comets as well, of their terrors.

"This gentleman, papa," I heard her say, "was polite enough to pay my fare when the rude conductor threatened to put me off the car."

"I am personally and deeply grateful, sir," the old gentleman said, offering Louis a dollar. "The impudence of these conductors is truly marvellous. I shall use all my influence with the company to obtain his discharge to-morrow."

"I ground my teeth when I heard this, and listened again; the young lady was speaking."

"O, please, not, papa," she broke in. "He is a friend of Mr. Harold's."

"The last thing I saw, as the train moved on, was that Louis had declined to take the old gentleman's money, and was walking down the platform between him and his lovely daughter. Three days later I met Louis in the street, and he rushed up and grasped me warmly by the hand."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you. Miss Reynolds is a splendid young lady, and I was dying for an excuse to get acquainted with her."

"He is a splendid fellow," he threw away upon me, old fellow, he said. "I am ever so much obliged to you.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:
One copy, one year, $1.50
Six months, $1.00
Three months, $0.50
IN ADVANCE.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING:
First insertion, $1 per square of 8 lines;
30 cents per square for each additional insertion. Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 13, 1879.

REPUBLICAN PRIMARIES

—AND—

County Convention.

The Republican voters of Garrett county are hereby requested to assemble in primary meetings in their several districts on Saturday, Sept. 27th, 1879,

AT 3 O'CLOCK P. M., at such place as the respective district committees shall determine, for the purpose of selecting FIVE DELEGATES from each district, to attend a County Convention to be held at Oakland, on

Friday, October 3d, 1879,

for the purpose of Nominating two Members for House of Delegates, one Clerk of the Circuit Court, one State's Attorney, one Sheriff, one Register of Wills, three County Commissioners, Three Judges of the Orphans' Court and County Surveyor.

By order of the Republican State Central Committee for Garrett county.

A. G. STURGEISS,
H. E. FRIEND,
W. O. MCGOWIN,
Committee.

This is what might be called an "off" year for the Democrats. At least, it has looked that way since the returns have come in from California and Maine.

The Anne Arundel county Democratic convention will be reconvened on the 18th inst. to settle the squabble about the two tickets now in the field.

The Democratic party seems to have pretty nearly dropped out in California. The Republicans carry the State by a plurality of over 23,000, and what offices they do not secure the Workingmen's party picks up. Kallach is elected mayor, and quite a number of other Workingmen's candidates have been successful.

The denunciation of extravagance, corruption, unnecessary offices, heavy burdens upon the shoulders of taxpayers, enormous salaries, as contained in the Democratic State platform, is very ludicrous, in view of the fact that that party has had control of the State for years, and never made a pretense of reforming these very abuses. Why was it not attempted before? Is this cry of reform a sign of impending dissolution?

According to the latest reports from Maine, the Republican victory in the State is as remarkable as it is gratifying. It comprises a majority for Davis on the gubernatorial ticket over the combined vote for Smith and Garcelon, and the election of a majority of the members of the legislature that is to choose a successor to Mr. Hamlin in the United States Senate. The Republican triumph is in fact complete as far as the returns have been received, and they include the most populous and doubtful sections. The Democratic vote appears to have dwindled down to almost a phantom, and the fight was really between the Republicans on a hard-money platform and the slush-money financiers of the Greenback party. The issue was squarely and fairly made; on the stump the currency question assumed the utmost prominence, by common consent; and the advocates of the sorry and wretched doctrine which would curse the country with an irredeemable circulating medium have been neatly and satisfactorily whipped in a State where only a year ago they made astonishing strides. But the extraordinary efforts of Secretary Sherman, Mr. Blaine, Mr. Garfield and other Republican orators to throw the strongest and clearest light upon the pending question have been rewarded with a grand success. Maine responds to California, and now for Ohio!

"Helen's Babies." This work is acknowledged to be the best selling article in our bookstores. Druggists, however, say that Dr. Hall's Baby Syrup sells better than any other medicine. It is always reliable.

The Last Mississippi Murder.

The coarse cruelty of Mississippi Democrats in heaping obloquy on the memory of Captain Dixon after they had murdered him can only be measured by the additional tortures which these unseasonable slanders must have inflicted upon the dead man's widow. It is the overwhelming grief of the doubly-stricken woman which adds such a profound pathos to her appeal—an appeal which has touched the sympathies of a million readers. And yet no ordinary murder, under whatever circumstances of cowardice or cruelty it might have been perpetrated, could kindle such widespread resentment; no merely private grief could cause such a universal outflowing of sympathy. The fact is that this crime has a National significance; it comes directly home to every citizen of the Republic, and every voter feels that he has some duties and responsibilities in the premises. It was not a typical Southern "encounter," although the principals were men of violence. It was not simply an evidence of the semi-barbarous condition of society in some of the Southern States, although it could have happened nowhere else. Dixon was killed by the organized force which holds the South solid, which has made it solid by other murders actual and possible, which comes to Washington and controls the majority in both branches of the National Legislature, and which our own representatives are compelled to face. General Garfield was right when he said at Biddford the other evening: "Every vote you cast in Maine against the Republican party is a vote to let the rascality of Southern caucuses control the country that you live in, and make the laws for you." And "rascality" is a mild word to characterize the shenanigan plan of conducting Southern caucuses.

Of course all Southern Democrats are neither murderers nor murderers. But none the less is the statement true that but for murder and threatened murder the South would not be solid to-day. It is a most significant passage in Mrs. Dixon's statement, published in yesterday's Tribune, where she recalls the day when her husband was crowned with laurel for service in the cause of Democracy, and when he drew his bravos up in review before Singleton and Lamar to receive the commendation of these leaders. Singleton and Lamar are not exceptionally violent men—in deed, they are rather more highly civilized than the average Southern Congressman. But here stand both these law-makers smiling approbation upon an armed array of lawless ruffians because they had won a political victory with shotguns. Did not these leaders thus formally recognize the potency of this new force in politics, and, at the same time, assume a share of the responsibility for all the blood spilled in stifling opposition to the Democracy? Singleton is on the stump in Mississippi to-day struggling to talk himself into the Senate. Does he utter a word of mildest censure upon the pastimes of Yazoo? And Lamar in Washington is dumb. What can they say when the seats they now occupy in Congress were both bought with violence, if not with blood?

This is the fundamental reason for the profound feeling aroused by this simple Mississippi murder. It is a representative incident. It illuminates the whole method of Southern solidification. It stands for a hundred other murders which have never been heard of, because the victims were poor Republicans, instead of eminent Democrats. It calls attention to the fact that one Democrat with a shotgun in the South has more political power than half a dozen Republicans in the North with nothing but a ballot apiece. These are matters of the deepest political importance not only to Mississippi and Mississippians, but to every citizen of every State. They are worth pondering over, and they are just what the Northern people are pondering over to-day. Maine and Ohio can never be Democratic in the face of such a reminder. The South solidified by murder will be confronted by the North solidified for justice. This last outrage has hastened forward the day, which always comes at last in this country, when enlightened opinion makes itself felt as a conquering force, in spite of bayonets and buckshot.—N. Y. Tribune.

Mr. Thomas Wilson, a retired merchant of Baltimore city, died on Tuesday night last in the 81st year of his age. He was one of Baltimore's earliest, most active and successful business men and accumulated a large fortune, estimated at $2,000,000, the bulk of which he bequeathed to charities. He was a widower without children and made his home with his nieces, the Misses Lead. Mr. Wilson was a member of the Society of Friends and took an active interest in everything pertaining to that denomination.

A "Boom" from Maine and California

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 6.—9:30 P. M. About 1,500 ballots remain to be counted in the city, and the canvass will probably be completed before morning. Kallach (Work.) now has 1,432 majority over Flint (Rep.), and is elected. The Workingmen have also elected the sheriff, auditor, district attorney, city and county attorney, tax collector, public administrator and surveyor. The Republicans elect assessor, coroner and superintendent of schools. The offices of treasurer, recorder, county clerk, superintendent of streets and police judge are still in doubt, with chances in favor of the Workingmen's candidates. Superior judges will probably be about equally divided. The Republicans are likely to elect four out of five justices of the peace. The Republican ticket for supervisors is believed to be successful, with perhaps two or three exceptions; also five of their candidates for school directors. The Workingmen have probably elected three, and there are four more in doubt. Boercher and Stoneham (Work.), and Cone (Rep.) are elected railroad commissioners. There seems to be no doubt that the Republicans have elected all four Congressmen.

The legislature is still undecided, but if the Republicans have not a majority, they will, in all probability, be able to control both houses. The result on the State ticket remains as heretofore reported, though it is not quite certain how the Supreme court will stand.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 8.—The complete count in the city gives the following result: The Workingmen elect the mayor, sheriff, auditor, treasurer, tax collector, public administrator, surveyor, district attorney, city and county attorneys, police judge, one supervisor, five members of the board of education and the railroad commissioner for the city district. The Republicans elect the assessor, recorder, coroner, county clerk, superintendent of schools, superintendent of streets, eleven supervisors, seven members of the board of education and a member of the State board of equalization, and re-elect Congressman Davis. The superior judges elected are mostly on the tickets of all the parties. Some of the officers are elected by majorities so small that the official count may result in some changes.

THE COUNT IN CALIFORNIA.

SAN FRANCISCO, September 8.—The official count of votes in this city, now going on, differs in some cases widely from the figures published in the city journals, and is likely to change the results in some instances. Returns from all counties in the Third Congressional district give McKenna (Rep.) 271 majority over Berry (Dem.). Some of the counties are early estimated, and full returns are expected to increase McKenna's majority.

AUGUSTA, ME., September 8.—Midnight.—Senator Blaine has just sent the following despatch to Senator Allison, of Iowa:

Hon. Wm. B. Allison, Debatable, Iowa.—The result of to-day's election may be briefly summed up thus: We have carried a large majority of the House of Representatives and a majority of the Senate apparently, though not certainly. We have given our candidate for governor a plurality of more than 20,000 votes over the Greenback candidate, and 10,000 over the Democratic candidate. Whether we have given him our absolute majority over both will only be determined by further returns, and possibly by the official count. On joint ballot in the legislature we shall have a large majority, thus controlling the Executive Council and the selection of all state officers. The majority against us last year was over 13,000, equivalent to 50,000 majority in Illinois, to 80,000 in Pennsylvania, or to 100,000 in New York. To overcome this enormous majority in an off year, with no general election pending, was, of course, a difficult task, and our Republicans feel that they have made a splendid fight, with most gratifying results.

(Signed,) J. G. BLAINE.

Chairman Republican State Committee.

The Republicans have made a large gain in the election, but it is not settled by the returns received whether Davis is elected by the people or not. The Republicans will have a large majority in the House, which will give them control of the legislature on a joint ballot even should the Senate have a majority of fusion members.

The character of the Senate is in doubt at this hour, but the Republicans think it may yet be in their power. The Republicans will be able by their majority on a joint ballot to elect the Executive Council and the subordinate officers, even though they have not elected a majority in the Senate.

WASHINGTON, September 9.—The Republican Congressional Committee building has been crowded all day with persons anxious to obtain information regarding the Maine election. Not satisfied with the press reports, the interested ones have been asking questions of their friends in Maine and receiving answers by telegraph throughout the entire day. The feeling of enthusiasm last night was unbounded, but to-day Republicans are not so demonstrative. It was noted that Davis, the Republican nominee for Governor, had been elected outright, but the probable contrary fact has acted as a quietus upon those who were disposed to let their joy run high. Still, Republicans are satisfied with the outlook, and are glad that the election is over. The result has for weeks past been in doubt, and has strained the nerves of many who take an interest in political affairs. The Maine people hereabouts are specially jubilant, and seem perfectly sanguine about Davis' chances for the governorship. They are preparing for a grand torchlight procession and glorification meeting, which, is said, will eclipse anything of the kind that has been known here for years. At this hour newspaper offices are besieged by inquiring friends, all anxious to know the latest returns.

PORTLAND, ME., September 9.—It is now certain that York has elected Republican senators, giving the Republicans not less than eighteen out of thirty-one and insuring the election of Davis by the legislature and the entire control of the state government.

At the Frederick county Republican convention last Saturday resolutions were adopted endorsing the course of President Hayes in vetoing the several partisan and pernicious bills passed at the late extra session of Congress, and of Mr. Usher in vetoing against those bills; also commending harmony in the party.

Mr. Usher made an admirable speech before the convention. He said the Republicans of Maryland now had a chance to elect their State ticket. He believed the signs of the times promised well for Republican success in Maryland if the party but did its duty. What was required was good ticket, and then for all men who cherish the principles of Republicanism to work harmoniously and earnestly to achieve success. Great dissatisfaction existed in various parts of the State with the Democratic party, and we heard of independent movements of tax-payers and others, if the people want reform they can obtain it by coming within the folds of the Republican party, and in no other way can reform in Maryland be achieved. We sometimes hear it said the ring has been broken, and that Mr. Hamilton will carry everything before him, but thoughtful men know that if the ring is broken a triangle has been substituted in its place, and every schoolboy knows that two sides of a triangle are always greater than the third. The centre of the ring is the board of public works, composed of the governor, the comptroller and the treasurer. If the Democracy succeeds the present comptroller will be continued, and they hope to have a majority in the legislature to elect a treasurer in sympathy with the comptroller, and then they will have two out of the three. The proper way to break the ring successfully is to elect a majority of Republicans to the legislature, also elect a Republican governor and comptroller, and then, and not till then, will permanent and substantial reforms be accomplished.—Cumberland News.

One of the reforms proposed by the tax-payers' organization is in the matter of legal fees and expenses. Ordinarily the costs on both sides of a case have to be paid by the unsuccessful suitor, and these costs include even the attorney's fee. If the side of a case always lost that had the least right, then this arrangement would not seem so hard, but it very often happens that the best sides lose through want of skill on the part of counsel or for some purely technical reason. It is urged that the administration of justice should not be thus made unnecessarily expensive, and that redress of wrongs and the enforcement of individual rights should be made as easy to the poor as to the rich, though it frequently happens that the bill of costs in a suit is in excess of the amount in controversy. Another reform that will be asked of the next legislature is to pay State attorneys a regular salary. It is conceded that he is a quasi-judicial officer, and as such it is no more right that his pay should depend upon the fluctuations of criminal business than should the pay of judges.

The elections Monday in Maine went in favor of the Republicans, although the election of a governor by the people is in doubt. They also carry the legislature, and so secure the election of a Republican successor to Mr. Hamlin in the United States Senate. The Democratic vote was very light, and the contest was really between the Greenbackers and the Republicans, the latter winning on a straight-out honest money platform. As the returns come in from California the magnitude of the Republican victory in that state is increased, and it appears that they have now elected all four Congressmen, including McKenna in the Third district.

TELEGRAPHIC.

JUDGE BALLARD'S SUCCESSOR.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6.—The President today decided to appoint Gen. Wm. H. Hays, of Springfield, Ky., United States district judge for the district of Kentucky, vice Judge Ballard, deceased. Gen. Hays was a lieutenant colonel and afterward succeeded Judge Harlan as Colonel of a regiment of Kentucky volunteers during the war. He is at present a very prominent lawyer in the State.

THE APPEAL OF THE HOWARDS CRITICIZED.

NEW YORK, Sept. 6.—A special to the Times from Memphis, Tennessee, states: The appeal made by the Howards to the people of the whole country for contributions and aid has been variously criticized in all circles to-day. It is held by some that the wealthy of Memphis and of the State should have been at first appealed to, and when that source was exhausted and the need for assistance still existed, then the general appeal should have been made. Others agree that the wealthy people of Memphis are cognizant of the straitened circumstances of the Howard association and are perfectly familiar with the existing distress, and their failure to come to the relief indicates a direct refusal to assist.

THE NEGRO EXODUS CONTINUING.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 4.—The Colored Refugee Board held a meeting to-night at which reports were made going to show that there has been but little falling off in the negro immigration Northwest, and that the numbers may be expected to increase after the crop is gathered. The members of the board state that a better class of colored people is coming, and that the demand for assistance is not so pressing and so general as it has been. Many of the latter immigrants are from sections remote from the river.

ALL SLAUGHTERED.

SIDRA, Sept. 6.—At a late hour of Thursday night a messenger traveling post haste reached Ali Khayl from Kabul, and informed Major Connelly, the British political agent, that the British embassy at Kabul had been attacked by several Afghan regiments which had assembled in that city, demanding the arrears of their pay, and that the military escort of the embassy were defending themselves.

The Ameer of Afghanistan confirms the intelligence of the revolt, and adds that the regiments which have fortified were joined by the populace. The Ameer's arsenal and stores were first plundered and destroyed, and the British Embassy was then attacked by overwhelming numbers. The Ameer declares that he was completely surprised by the outbreak. He endeavored to quell it and sent General Daud Shah to Major Cavagnari's assistance, but Gen. Daud Shah was unhorsed and fatally wounded. The Ameer then sent his son, with the Governor of Kabul and other influential personages, but the mob was wholly uncontrollable. The attack on the British embassy continued throughout Wednesday, when a fire broke out on the premises. The Ameer, writing on Thursday, says he is in great distress, and is himself besieged. The Viceroy of India is at present ignorant of the fate of Major Cavagnari and the other members of the embassy. Gen. Roberts has already started for the Peshawar Pass. The advance on Kabul will be made very speedily and will be strongly supported. The Viceroy's military secretary accompanies Gen. Roberts.

LONDON, Sept. 8.—The Standard's correspondent at Bombay asserts that symptoms of discontent have been noticed at Kabul for some time. The bearing of the population toward the members of the Embassy has been defiant. The force defending the Embassy numbers 70. They fought with the greatest bravery. It is said that the Ameer's son was fatally injured. A large number of the mutineers of the Embassy were fired the survivors sallied out and defended themselves desperately, but all were killed, including Major Cavagnari. Intense excitement prevails throughout India. It is believed at Paris and Vienna that the outbreak is due to Russian intrigue.

THE ADMINISTRATION AND NEW YORK POLITICS.

WASHINGTON, September 5.—The manner in which the administration regards the result of the New York Republican convention is, according to some, with consternation, and according to others, with a mild species of alarm. A diligent search to-day failed to discover either of these feelings predominating to any remarkable extent. While the members of the administration would have preferred the nomination of a candidate other than Mr. Cornell, the latter's success is not "crushing." If the administration had taken any part in the management of the convention the success of the candidate opposing its choice might have been construed as a "blow at the administration." But it took no such part. The regular Republican convention met, a number of men were put in nomination and Mr. Cornell was chosen as the candidate for governor. Everything was regular, and as he is the choice of the party there is good reason for saying the President has every hope of Mr. Cornell's success; and thinks and hopes that every Republican in the state no matter to what minor faction he may belong, should make it his object to properly do all in his power to secure the election of the nominee. He would so counsel any dissatisfied Republican who would apply for advice in the matter. The assertions are also made that Vice President Wheeler's attendance at the convention as a delegate was as a representation of the administration, and that his presence was a violation of civil service orders. The first assertion is untrue in every respect. The administration took no part in the campaign, either directly or indirectly. Mr. Wheeler represented no more than any other delegate to the convention. He may have been more influential than many of them, but that influence was individual. He did not violate the civil service order, as that order is properly construed. There is only one way in which fair minded men can construe that order. That is, decently. It is not intended to interfere with the political opinions or political actions of any officer-holder so long as those opinions and actions are expressed and carried out "decently."

As a citizen, Mr. Wheeler attended the convention and presided over it, as he had a perfect right to do. His presence meant no more than that of any other delegate present. There would have been an apt illustration of the construction to be placed on the order if Gen. Merritt, collector at New York, had taken a prominent part in the convention or presided over it. Such action on his part would have shown that, though collector, he was more politician, and his subordinates would act accordingly, of course, at his dictation. The one represented himself; the other would have represented the Government service.

THE PRESIDENT AND THE SARATOGA NOMINEES.

WASHINGTON D. C. Sept. 7.—Hon. Hamilton Ward, the Republican nominee for Attorney General of New York, paid a lying visit to the Capital yesterday. He denied that his presence here had any political significance, saying that he was engaged the greater part of the day in connection with a patent case in which he is attorney. He found time just before the close of business hours, however, to call upon the President, and states that he found him quite genial. The President talked freely about Ohio, and said that there was not the least doubt, in his opinion, of Foster's success. The President also spoke kindly of the New York ticket, and predicted a Republican success there next November. Mr. Ward said from the conversations he has had with public men here he believes that the administration entertains the kindest feeling possible towards the Saratoga nominees. When asked what he thought of Governor Fenton for Minister to England, Mr. Ward replied: "I think he is eminently qualified for the position, and feel certain that the entire Republican party of New York would be gratified at his appointment." Mr. Ward and Governor Fenton left for New York on the same train last night.

In the past few weeks contractors have been paying their workmen largely in silver dollars, and this, together with the silver that is being paid out semi-monthly in salaries to clerks, have put such an abundance of silver in circulation as to cause even some of the most extreme silver advocates to complain of the overflow. The Sunday Herald, a pronounced silver paper, to-day calls upon the Secretary of the Treasury to let the silver remain in the Treasury, declaring that there is no necessity for its actual circulation. It also says that no one ever asked to have these dollars paid out, and characterizes as a trick the method adopted by the Treasury Department to put its silver in circulation. Business men find the standard dollars the source of great annoyance, for the reason that is a general rule custom-ers refuse to take them in charge.

LOCAL NEWS.

—Mrs. Lucinda Roach was visiting in Oakland this week.

—Mr. D. E. Offutt started his hook mill last week.

—A lamp post has been erected in front of the Everstine House.

—Mr. C. H. Sineell is having his blacksmith shop remodeled.

—Hons. J. Welfley, W. R. Getty, G. W. Wilson and G. W. Blocher were in town during the week.

—Dr. Funderberg will be at the "Davis House" every Tuesday for a short while longer.

—Mr. Thos. J. Stanton left Oakland Friday night of last week, to attend school at Baltimore.

—Miss Kate M. Edwards, of Martinsburg, W. Va., has been visiting Mrs. L. C. Stalnaker.

—Miss Laura Stalnaker returned to Westminster College, on Thursday, to resume her studies.

—200 sacks G. A. Salt for sale at Wm. P. Totten's Cheap Cash Store, Oakland, Md.

—Died.—On September 9th, Arthur Edward, aged 7 months and 3 weeks, only child of Silas E. and Hallie P. Shirer.

—THE REPUBLICAN will be furnished to subscribers from now until the close of the campaign this fall for 25 cents, in advance.

—Heavy frosts prevailed throughout this county Wednesday and Thursday mornings, which did some damage to corn, buckwheat and garden vegetables.

—The Band of Hope will hold its regular meeting in the M. E. Church on Thursday evening next, at 7 o'clock. These meetings are free to all and every one is cordially invited to be present.

—Repairing Sewing Machines of any pattern, and furnishing attachments and needles, will be promptly attended to by Mr. L. W. Slomaker. Headquarters in the old Offutt building, Oakland, Md.

—President Hayes and party passed through Oakland Monday evening. A large crowd was collected at the depot, a large number of whom had the pleasure of shaking hands with the President.

—There is still considerable feeling over the closing of the Oakland Hotel and the effort to transfer the guests to the Deer Park Hotel. Only 9 out of 72 would go, the remainder finding quarters in town or going to their city homes.

—Married.—At the residence of the bride's parents, near Grantsville, this county, Thursday, September 11th, 1879, by Rev. J. A. Fullerton, D. D., assisted by Rev. B. Ison, Rev. Joseph Lee, of Guyandotte Station, W. Va. Conference, and Miss Ida May Engle, of Garrett county, Md.

—A Cumberland correspondent of the Frederick Examiner says that now as steam has become a success on the Chesapeake and Ohio canal the Western Maryland and railroad will sooner or later have a road-bed on the useless tow path, which will give it through connection with the Alleghany coal fields.

—The annual fair of the Agricultural and Mechanical Society of Western Maryland, at Cumberland, begins on Tuesday, October 7, and continues four days. The grounds and track are in splendid order, and the buildings are in better condition than ever before. The books of entry are now open, and can be found at the office of the polite and efficient secretary, Mr. Thos. L. Coulahan. All entries should be made on an early day, so that a proper arrangement and classification can be had.—News.

Church Services—Sunday.

St. Matthew's P. E. Church—Morning Prayer and Sermon every Sunday, at 11 A. M. Evening Prayer at 6 P. M. Holy Communion 1st Sunday in each month, at 11 A. M. Evening Prayer every day in the week at 6 P. M.

Sunday School Pic-Nic.

A Sunday School picnic will be held at the Sunny Side school house, September 25 instant, for the benefit of the Sunday School. Refreshments at reasonable rates. Good speaking and various amusements. Bring your baskets well filled.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending September 10th:

Francis McKenzie and wife to Jno. S. McKenzie, Lots Nos. 638 and 641; $1,400.

Jas. H. Frazee and others to W. H. Frazee, Lots Nos. 2855, 2856 and 2861, containing 150 acres; $500.

Joseph Spiker and wife to Patrick Dorsey, 20 acres and 20 perches of land, being part of Lot No. 19; and tract of land called "Walnut Hills"; $275.

Republican County Convention.

Pursuant to call the Republican county convention assembled in the Court House in Oakland, Wednesday, September 10th inst., at 3 P. M.

On motion H. W. Combs, Esq., was elected temporary Chairman and Mr. W. O. McGowan, temporary Secretary.

On motion the following committee on credentials was appointed: District No. 1, E. C. Tilton; No. 2, Isaac Myers; No. 3, E. B. Fuller; No. 4, D. J. Bevers; No. 5, H. E. Friend; No. 6, J. F. Frantz; No. 7, J. C. Dunham; No. 8, G. W. Wilson; No. 9, G. W. Blocher.

The committee, after being absent a short time, returned and reported the following delegates as being members of the convention:

District No. 1.—E. C. Tilton, S. W. Friend, J. Z. Browning, W. S. Pew, Daniel Wilson.

No. 2.—John Frantz, of J. Isaac Myers, Thos. Cuppett, Ira E. Friend, John Swalp.

No. 3.—Samuel J. Beachy, E. B. Fuller, Thos. Wiley, Jacob Nicholson.

No. 4.—W. O. McGowan, Thomas Bartlett, D. J. Bever, F. S. Cline, James Macgruder.

No. 5.—H. E. Friend, Edw. Margroff, Austin Speicher, J. W. Boyer, Michael Menhorn.

No. 6.—J. F. Frantz, L. H. Johnson, Daniel Smith, J. E. Otto, Wm. Cistead.

No. 7.—H. W. Combs, A. G. Sturgiss, John C. Dunham, J. W. White, Jas. A. Hayden.

No. 8.—Geo. W. Wilson, J. W. White, J. W. Lee, W. J. Wilson.

No. 9.—G. W. Blocher, Michael Dars, John Wilhelm.

They also recommended that the convention be governed by the rules of the last House of Delegates, and that the temporary organization be made permanent.

On motion the report was accepted.

On motion convention proceeded to the nomination of delegates to the State convention.

The names of H. W. Combs, J. Z. Browning and W. H. Tower were placed in nomination, when, on motion, the nominations were closed and they were declared the unanimous choice of the convention.

John Frantz, (of J.) G. W. Wilson and E. H. Glatfelter, were elected alternates by acclamation.

On motion it was determined by the convention that Districts Nos. 1, 7 and 8, should select one member of the State Central Committee for Garrett county, to serve two years, Districts 2, 5 and 9 select another, and Districts 3, 4 and 6 the third.

Districts 1, 7 and 8 selected A. G. Sturgiss.

Districts 2, 5 and 9 selected Henry E. Friend.

Districts 3, 4 and 9 selected W. O. McGowan.

After the business of the convention was completed H. W. Combs, Esq., was called upon for a speech. The gentleman declined to make a speech, but thanked the convention for the honor conferred upon him, and urged the Republicans of Garrett county to emulate the example set by those of California and Maine.

On motion the convention adjourned sine die.

Circuit Court.

The Circuit Court convened at 10 o'clock, Judges Pearce and Motter on the bench.

The following members of the Cumberland bar were present: Mess. J. H. Gordon, Robert H. Gordon, S. A. Cox, Jacob Brown, James M. Schley, William J. Read, Wm. M. Price, James E. Ellegood, J. Frank Seiss, Wm. Bruce and J. S. Grove; also Hon. A. K. Syster, from Hagerstown, and Hon. John Ritchie, from Frederick.

Hon. Geo. W. Wilson was appointed foreman of the grand jury.

The dockets were then called over, but most of the cases were continued, one removed to Allegany county and a few set for trial.

Below we give the cases disposed of to Thursday noon.

APPEALS.

W. C. Williams vs. B. F. Miller. Judgment reversed without prejudice.

Jno. Miller, Jr., vs. Burgess and Commissioners of Oakland. Judgment affirmed.

Isiah Boucher vs. George Stahl. Judgment reversed.

TRIALS.

Geo. L. Layman and others, vs. Samuel Johnson and others, removed to Allegany county.

W. D. Burton vs. County Commissioners of Garrett county. Appeal dismissed.

Floyd S. Cline vs. David J. Bevers and others. Dismissed.

Charles Goff vs. A. C. Good and wife. Judgment on terms to be filed.

M. J. Miller vs. A. C. Good and wife. Judgment on terms to be filed.

Jos. Shaffer vs. Samuel Specht. Judgment subject to application for benefit of Insolvent Law.

Hinckley & Co., vs. Charles H. Whitwell and Samuel Teets. Judgment on terms filed.

Thomas Browning and others vs.

Shaw & Adair, Dismissed.

CRIMINAL APPEARANCES.

State vs. Jacob Brown, assault and battery. Tried before court, found guilty and fined $20 and costs.

State vs. Hanson Brown, assault and battery. Tried before court, found guilty and fined $20 and costs.

CRIMINAL TRIALS.

State vs. Geo. Honck and Wm. O. McGowan, agents for Lough Lumber Co., obstructing public highway. Dismissed.

State vs. Matthew Callahan, assault with intent to kill. Jury out.

The Free Scholarship.

The examination of applicants for the free scholarship, at St. John's College, Annapolis, took place at the office of the School Board, in Oakland, Wednesday morning. There were three applicants, and after a thorough examination by Dr. Bartlett, County Examiner, the scholarship was awarded to Ed. H. Sineell, son of Charles H. Sineell of Oakland. We congratulate Edie on his good fortune and predict for him a bright future.

Meeting of County Commissioners.

The County Commissioners met Monday September 8th, at 1 P. M. A full board present.

Solved Proposals for building bridges were opened at 2 P. M., and found to be as follows:

Bridge over Young river at Song Run.

PENN BRIDGE WORKS.

30 foot Span, Iron Truss No. 1, $10.20 per foot.

do do do No. 2, 9.20 do

do do do No. 3, 8.20 do

do do do No. 4, 7.20 do

do do do No. 5, 6.20 do

do do do No. 6, 5.20 do

do do do No. 7, 4.20 do

do do do No. 8, 3.20 do

do do do No. 9, 2.20 do

do do do No. 10, 1.20 do

do do do No. 11, 1.20 do

do do do No. 12, 1.20 do

do do do No. 13, 1.20 do

do do do No. 14, 1.20 do

do do do No. 15, 1.20 do

do do do No. 16, 1.20 do

do do do No. 17, 1.20 do

do do do No. 18, 1.20 do

do do do No. 19, 1.20 do

do do do No. 20, 1.20 do

do do do No. 21, 1.20 do

do do do No. 22, 1.20 do

do do do No. 23, 1.20 do

do do do No. 24, 1.20 do

do do do No. 25, 1.20 do

do do do No. 26, 1.20 do

do do do No. 27, 1.20 do

do do do No. 28, 1.20 do

do do do No. 29, 1.20 do

do do do No. 30, 1.20 do

do do do No. 31, 1.20 do

do do do No. 32, 1.20 do

do do do No. 33, 1.20 do

do do do No. 34, 1.20 do

do do do No. 35, 1.20 do

do do do No. 36, 1.20 do

do do do No. 37, 1.20 do

do do do No. 38, 1.20 do

do do do No. 39, 1.20 do

do do do No. 40, 1.20 do

do do do No. 41, 1.20 do

do do do No. 42, 1.20 do

do do do No. 43, 1.20 do

do do do No. 44, 1.20 do

do do do No. 45, 1.20 do

do do do No. 46, 1.20 do

do do do No. 47, 1.20 do

do do do No. 48, 1.20 do

do do do No. 49, 1.20 do

do do do No. 50, 1.20 do

do do do No. 51, 1.20 do

do do do No. 52, 1.20 do

do do do No. 53, 1.20 do

do do do No. 54, 1.20 do

do do do No. 55, 1.20 do

do do do No. 56, 1.20 do

do do do No. 57, 1.20 do

do do do No. 58, 1.20 do

do do do No. 59, 1.20 do

do do do No. 60, 1.20 do

do do do No. 61, 1.20 do

do do do No. 62, 1.20 do

do do do No. 63, 1.20 do

do do do No. 64, 1.20 do

do do do No. 65, 1.20 do

do do do No. 66, 1.20 do

do do do No. 67, 1.20 do

do do do No. 68, 1.20 do

do do do No. 69, 1.20 do

do do do No. 70, 1.20 do

visitors with their seductions and importunities. Even at saloons whose surroundings are respectable and do not offend public decency the natural desire to encourage business in every way possible leads to practices that are highly immoral in their effect. There is nothing more vicious than the American habit of treating, but from obvious reasons this is encouraged in every way possible by saloon keepers. The establishment of clubs, which are virtually barroom attachments, is a species of enterprise that is now being industriously worked. Without any further discussion of details, it is very clear that the effect of free trade in liquor is to bring to the work of forcing alcoholic drinks upon the public the energy and activity that can find profitable employment at it. The question immediately presents itself whether it is just and right to allow the consumption of liquor by a community to be stimulated to the highest pitch in this manner.

There still survives in the law of this state a provision requiring the application of a married woman for a license to be signed by ten respectable householders of her village. This mere vestige of restriction at least recognizes a principle which is in force in England and other countries, and that is that the issuance of licenses shall be controlled in accordance with the interests of the community. In England licenses to keep public houses are granted in the discretion of the justices of the peace, who are generally large taxpayers and prominent men in their communities. In this way the number of public houses have been kept down, and it has even been complained that in many of the counties virtual monopolies are created by the limitation of the number of licenses issued. It is clear that under such a system applicants for licenses must in practice defer to the requirements of the magistrates as to the location and conduct of their houses. The only class of licenses in England the issue of which is not subject to magisterial discretion are those for the sale of liquor for consumption off the premises. These regulations have not been worked satisfactorily, and they have recently been investigated by a select committee of the House of Lords, which has proposed some radical changes. We instance them merely to show that under the laws of the nation from which our own civil polity has been derived, the sale of liquor is a privilege and not a right.

Whether or not the use of liquor may not be beneficial, is a matter upon which doctors disagree. It has been agreed that the liking for liquor of some kind displayed by every species of mankind is due to the fact that it supplies a universally felt need, but the weight of expert testimony is to the effect that the true reason is because it gratifies a propensity that is not the less bad because it is general. Dr. B. W. Richardson, who first introduced the use of hydrate of chloral in England, and who is a recognized leader among investigators in the nature and effects of intoxicating agents, has recently put on record his deliberate conviction that "these agents play no part in natural function or construction," and he decides that their use springs "from a perversion or unnatural provocation acquired and transmitted in hereditary line." In other words, mankind learned that it could play strange tricks upon its organism by the use of certain drugs, and it has created a hereditary appetite, the existence of which is now appealed to as a justification of its indulgence. The habituation of the organism to such indulgence, even so moderate as not to destroy self-control, is, however, a process of deterioration. Whether this opinion be correct or not, there is a general agreement upon the fact that the intemperate use of liquor is by far the largest tributary to the sea of human misery. There are some enthusiasts who think it may be dammed up altogether, but this belief ought certainly not prevent them from endeavoring to direct and regulate its course, so that so long as it does continue it shall flow in the least harmful channels. We are in favor of local option, but it would be as shocking neglect of the interests of this community to make no provision for the control of the liquor traffic in case of the rejection of prohibition. There would be very little difficulty in framing a law which would restrict the number of saloons, regulate the conduct of their business, give the residents of their vicinity some recourse against the establishment of disorderly houses, and secure to the State the value of the privilege of sale. It would greatly enhance the confidence of the moderate and conservative classes of the community in the Temperance Alliance if it would associate with its agitation of the local option movement a practical measure of reform, framed upon the principles we have indicated.—Baltimore American.

For practical purposes the country must be regarded as divided into two political parties, and no more. On the one hand there are the Republicans, possessing the administration of the federal government, solidly united, very ably led, and determined to retain the power which they have held for eighteen years. Opposed to them is a mob. Several parts of this mob call themselves the Democratic party; another part ranges itself under the "National" banner; another part under the Greenback flag, and still another shout "Anti-monopoly." All these factions or fractions fight each other as much as they fight the common opponent; and, as though this were not enough, in almost all the great and important states even the Democratic faction is split up into sub-factions, all bitterly quarrelling for predominance. In Massachusetts General Butler is carrying off a large part of the Democrats, leaving the remainder "in the air," so to speak; in New York we need not describe the situation which leads each of the two factions to welcome defeat rather than come to an understanding with the party; in Pennsylvania the Randall faction and the Wallace faction; in Ohio the Ewing and the Thurman men; in Indiana the McDonald and the Voorhees men; and so on all along the Western line; each faction labors for the defeat of a party rather than the success of a rival.

The Republican party is entitled to support not only because it saved the nation from ruin by secession, but because it has accomplished the more difficult matter of solving the problems of peace. We are to-day on the high road to a staple prosperity that has no menace save the existence of the Democratic party, with its insane schemes of inflation and repudiation. The immense debt that was incurred for saving the Union has been vastly reduced and funded at a low rate of interest. The nation's credit, which is the nation's honor, has been maintained, and redemption is an accomplished fact only through the strenuous and persistent efforts of the Republican party. The balance of trade is greatly in our favor, and a yellow stream of gold has been incessantly flowing hitherward from the great trade centres of Europe. On every side there are unmistakable signs of a new and vigorous prosperity. The Democratic party has no such record. It is simply an opposition. It has traded and dickered with the inflationists, repudiationists, communists, labor party—in fact, has always been ready to sell out for votes. The old cry of "hard times," which was its only stock in trade in the last Presidential campaign, is gone, and it has nothing else to make an issue of.—Cumb. Currier.

A Sensible Resolution.

The Republicans of Somerset county, at their county convention, last week unanimously adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That we heartily endorse the nomination of Hons. L. T. H. Irving, Eph. K. Wilson and Charles F. Goldsborough as judges of the first judicial district of Maryland, knowing them as we do to be judges upright, able and impartial, whose judicial robes have never been tainted by even suspicion of corruption and that in the opinion of this convention it is inexpedient to hold any judicial convention of the Republican party or to make any adverse or counter nominations.

That resolution has the ring of the true metal in it, and the Republicans of Somerset are deserving of all praise for rising above mere partisan feeling and endorsing worthy and honorable gentlemen nominated by their political opponents. Such an example is eminently worthy of being followed by other counties where circumstances are similar.

The coldness with which the people treat "the dollar of our fathers" must be very saddening to such anxious friends as the Cincinnati Commercial and Chicago Tribune. Although wild cries of baffled affection went up when it was decided that only a limited quantity should be issued monthly, yet it appears that even these are despaired and rejected of men. The poor things huddle in the vaults of the Treasury Department, and cannot be driven out by any possible device of the government. As fast as they are pushed out one way they get back by another. During August $1,800,000 were forced out in payments, but at the end of the month the government had nearly a million more than it had at the first, and there are now about thirty-one millions lying in the treasury vaults. Unless the constant accumulation is put a stop to, it will eventually displace the gold standard and clip over ten per cent. from the value of the paper currency.

A Frenchman claims to have discovered in two natural substances, inextinguishable in nature, the means of lighting and maintaining a fire without wood or coal; a fire instantly and completely extinguished, causing no dust, smoke, or trouble, costing one-tenth of ordinary fuel, and everlasting.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 9, 1879.

If the events of the Chisholm massacre, now being re-acted in court, in Keuper county, Miss., had occurred in Zululand or Afghanistan, the murderers being savages and the victims English men, British troops would have at once been put on the march for the place of the butchery. The ordinary individual murderer, killing his one victim or two and then punished, is a person to be abhorred, and he is abhorred in all really civilized communities. His offense is the offense of an individual, not of a neighborhood or section. Herein is the difference between the Chisholm massacre and the common murder. It was the community that killed the Chisholm family. It is the community which will secure the acquittal of the immediate performers of its will in the case. And this condition of affairs is not confined to any section of Mississippi or to that State alone. It, or something akin to it, extends over the whole South. The citizen, black or white, who does not conform in his political course to the prevailing sentiment, or who in other ways offends that sentiment, carries his life in his hand. He has no rights that his fellow citizens feel bound to respect. The force of trying the murderers of men, women and children of the Chisholm family will probably last for two weeks. It can have no result except that indicated above.

The result in Maine yesterday too indecisive, at this writing, on several points, must be accepted as a substantial Republican victory. For this result we find two causes:

First, The too early announcement by the Democrats, at the extra session, of the new programme of revolution in the South, and the recent political murders in that section.

Second, The personal popularity of the two Senators from Maine—Hamlin and Blaine.

As above stated, the victory is not all that could be desired, but it puts Maine again in the Republican line.

1000

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.

OAKLAND, GARRITT CO., MD.

TELLING THE BEES.

Here is the place; right over the hill
Thus the path I took;
You can see the gap in the old wall still.
And the stepping-stones in the shallow brook.
There is the house, with the gate red-barrel,
And the poplars tall;
And the barn's brown length, and the cattle-yard,
And the white horse tossing along the road;
There are the beehives ranged in the sun;
And down by the brook
Of the brook are her flowers weed o'er-run,
Pussy and daffodil, rose and pink.
A year has gone as the tortoise goes,
Heavy and slow,
And the same rose-blossoms, and the same sun-glow,
And the same brook sings of a year ago.
There's the same sweet clover-smell in the breeze;
And the blue-birds sing in the trees;
Tangles his wings of fire in the trees,
Setting, as then, over Fernside farm.
I mind me how, with a lover's care,
From my Sunday seat,
I brushed off the burrs, and smoothed my hair,
And cooed at the brookside my brow and throat.
Since we parted, a month had passed,— Down through the beeches I looked at last
On the little red gate and the well-worn near.
I can see it all now,—the slantwise rain
Of light through the leaves,
The sunlight a blaze on her window-pane,
The bloom of her roses under the eaves.
Just the same as a month before,
The house and the trees,
The barn's brown length, and the cattle-yard,
Nothing changed but the hives of bees.
Before them, under the garden wall,
Forward and back,
Went drowsily singing the choir-girl small,
Dressing each hive with a shroud of black.
Trembling, I listened; the summer's sun
Had the chill of snow;
For I knew she was telling the bees of one
Gone on the journey we all must go.
Then I said to myself: "My Mary weeps
For the dead too-true,
Happily her blind, old grandchild sleeps
The frost and the path of his age away."
But her blind, old grandchild, in a doorway still,
With his eyes on the eaves,
The old man said, and the choir-girl still Sung to the bees stealing out and in.
And the song she was singing ever since
In my ears sounds on:
"Stay at home, pretty bird, by no means!
Mistress Mary is dead and gone!"
—Greenleaf Whitaker.

THE CHILD SPY.

His name was Stenne, little Stenne.
He was a "child of Paris," thin and pale, and was ten, perhaps fifteen years old, for one can never say exactly how old those children are. His mother was dead, and his father, an ex-marine, was the guardian of a square in the quarter of the Temple. The nurses and babies, the old ladies who always carry their own folding chairs, and the poor mothers all that small world of Paris which seeks shelter from vehicles, in those gardens that are surrounded by pavements, knew Father Stenne and loved him. They knew that under his rough moustache, which was the terror of dogs and disturbers of benches, was hidden a kind, tender and almost motherly smile, and that in order to bring it forth
they had only to say to the good man:
"How is your little son?"
For Father Stenne loved his little son so much!

He was so happy in the afternoon when, after his school, the little boy would call for him, and together they would make the rounds of the paths, stopping at each bench to speak to the habitués of the square and to answer their good wishes.

But when the siege began everything was sadly changed. Father Stenne's square was closed and filled with petroleum, and the poor man, condemned to an incessant surveillance, passed his life in the deserted, upturned paths,
quite alone, not permitted to smoke,
and only seeing his little son late in the evening at his home. You should have seen his mistake when he spoke of the Prussians. . . . Little Stenne, however, did not complain of this new life.

A siege! Nothing is more amusing for such archers. No more school, no more studies! Holiday all the while,
and the streets are as exciting as a fair.

The child ran about all day till nightfall. He followed the battalions of the quarter to the ramparts, choosing those that had a good band. Little Stenne was well posted on that subject. He would tell you very glibly that the 96th's band was not worth much, but that the 56th's was excellent. . . .
Sometimes he would watch the mobiles training, and then there were the processions. . . . With his basket under his arm he would join the long files that were formed in the dark cold winter mornings, when there was no gas,
before the butchers' and bakers' shops.
There, with their feet in the wet, the people would make acquaintances and talk politics, and as he was Mr. Stenne's son, very body would ask him his opinion. But the most amusing of all were the afternoon games, especially the famous game of galuche, which the Breton mobiles made the fashion during the siege. When little Stenne was not at the ramparts or baker's shop you would see to find him at the square of the Chateau d'Eau. He did not play, however; it needed too much money; he was satisfied in watching the players with all his eyes.

One especially, a great fellow in a blue workman's blouse, who only played with five-franc pieces, excited his admiration. When he ran one, could hear the coins jingling under his blouse.

One day as he was picking up a piece that had rolled under little Stenne's feet, the great fellow said to him in a low tone: "That makes you wink, hey?
Well, if you wish, I'll tell you where they're to be found."

The game over, he took him to a corner of the square, and proposed that he should join him in selling newspapers to the Prussians. That he would make thirty francs for every trip. At first Stenne was very indignant, and refused, and what was more he remained away from the game for three days.
Three terrible days. He neither ate nor slept any more. At midnight he would see great heaps of galuches piled on the foot of his bed, and five-franc pieces moving over it, bright and shining. The temptation was too strong for him. The fourth day he returned to the Chateau d'Eau, saw the great fellow and was overcome. . . .

They sat out one sunny morning, a linen bag thrown over their shoulders,

and their newspapers hidden under their blouses. When they reached the Flinders gate it was yet hardly dawn.
The large fellow took Stenne by the hand, and approached the sentinel—a good civilian with a red nose and kind air—he said to him, with a plaintive tone:

"Let us pass, my good monsieur.
Our mother is ill and papa is dead.
We are going to see—my little brother and I—if we can't find some potatoes to pick up in the fields."

He cried, and Stenne, who was ashamed, lowered his head. The sentinel looked at them a moment, and then,
giving a glance over the white, deserted road, "Go quickly," said he to them, moving aside, and then they were on the road to Aubervilliers. How the large fellow laughed!

Confusedly, as though in a dream,
little Stenne saw the manufactories transformed into barracks, their tall chimneys, which pierced the fog and seemed to reach the sky, fireless and battered. Now and again they would see a sentinel and officers who were looking far off through their field glasses, and their small tents, wet with snow, which was melting before dying fires. The large fellow knew the way, and would take short cuts over the fields in order to escape the outposts.
But suddenly they came upon a large body of sharpshooters too late to escape them. They were in their little cabins, hidden in a ditch, half full of water, and encamped along the Soissons Railway. This time, though the large fellow recommenced his fearful story, they would not let him pass. As he was lamenting, an old Sergeant, white and wrinkled, and who looked like old Father Stenne, came out of the post guard's cabin.

"Well, little ones, don't cry any more!" said he to the children, "we will let you go after your potatoes, but before you leave, come in and warm yourselves a little. . . . He looked frozen that small boy there!"

Alas! It was not with cold that little Stenne trembled; it was from fear, from shame. . . . In the post-house they found some soldiers gathered round a small fire, a real widow's fire, by whose blaze they were thawing their biscuits on the end of their bayonets. They crowded close together so as to make room for the children. They gave them a drop of wine and a little coffee. While they were drinking, an officer came to the door, called the Sergeant, spoke to him in a low voice, and then quickly went away. "Boys?" said the Sergeant, as he came back radiant, "there will be tobacco to-night. . . . We have found out the Prussians' pass word. . . . I think this time we will take back from them that Blamed Bourget."

Then there followed an explosion of bravos and laughter. They danced
and sang and swung their sabres in the air. Profiting by the tumult, the child-spy disappeared. Having passed the breastwork nothing remained to be crossed but the plain, at the end of which was a long white wall filled with loop holes. They directed their steps toward this, stopping every now and then, and making believe to look for potatoes. "Let us return. Don't go any farther," little Stenne said all the while, but the large one only shrugged
his shoulders and went on. Suddenly they heard the click of a gun being
aimed at them. "Lie down," said the large boy, throwing himself on the ground. When he was down he whispered and another whistle answered him
over the snow, and they went on climbing on their hands and knees. In front of the wall, and even with the ground, two yellow moustaches under greasy caps appeared, and the large
boy leaped into the ditch behind them.
The Prussians, "That is my brother," said
he, pointing to his companion. He was so small, little Stenne, that on seeing him the Prussians began to laugh, and one of them was obliged to take him in his arms in order to lift him over the breastwork.

On the other side of the wall were large breastworks, fallen trees and
black holes in the snow, and in each one of these was the same yellow mustache and greasy cap, and there was great laughing as the soldiers saw the children pass by.

In a corner was a garden's house,
cascaded with the trunks of trees, the
lower part of which was full of soldiers
who were playing cards and making soup over a clear, bright fire. How good the cabbage and the bacon
smell, and what a difference to the sharpshooters' bivouac! Up stairs were the officers, and they heard them playing on the piano, and opening champagne bottles. When the Parisians
entered the room a hurrah of joy greeted them. They gave up their newspapers, and the officers gave them
something to drink and made them
talk. They all had a proud, hard look,
but the large boy amused them with his Parisian gaiety, and his gainst
sings. They laughed and repeated his words and greasy cap, and he went on with delight in the Parisian mud he brought them.

Little Stenne, too, would have liked
to have talked and to have proved that he was not stupid, but something confused him. Opposite to him, sitting apart, was a Prussian, older and more serious than the others, who he never took his eyes off little Stenne,
and there was in his glance both tenderness and reproach, as though this man might have had a child of little Stenne's age at home, and as if he were saying to himself: "I would rather die
than see my son doing such a thing."

As he looked at little Stenne the boy felt as if a hand were clenching at
his heart and keeping it from beating.
To escape the anguish he began to drink, and soon everything faded
around him. He heard, vaguely, amid loud laughs, his comrade making fun
of the National Guards, of their way of
going through their drill, he imitated
an assault of arms in the Marais, and a surprise at night on the ramparts. . . .
Then the large boy lowered his voice,
the officers approached nearer to him
and their faces grew more solemn.
The miserable fellow was telling them
about that night's promiscuous attack,
of which the sharpshooter's had spoken.
Then little Stenne rose, furious and
completely sobered:

"Don't tell that fellow, I won't have you."

But the other only laughed and continued; but before he had finished the officers were all on their feet, and one of them, showing the door to the children, told them to "Begone!" and they began to talk hurriedly together in German. The large boy left the room, as proud as a dog, clinking his money.
Little Stenne followed him, holding down his head, and as he was passing the Prussian whose look had so disturbed him said:

"Not nice that, not nice," and the tears came into his eyes.

Once more in the plain the children began to run and returned toward Paris quickly. Their sacks were filled with potatoes which the Prussians had given them, and with these they passed the sharpshooters' encampment without any trouble. They were preparing for the night attack. Troops were arriving silently, and were massed behind the wall. The old Sergeant was there, busily engaged arranging his men with such a happy look. When the children passed near he recognized them. Of how badly that smile made little Stenne feel.
For a moment he felt as if he should burst out crying and say to them:
"Don't go there. . . . But the other boy told him that if he spoke a word they would be shot, and so he kept his mouth shut.
At Comneville they entered an abandoned house to divide their money.
Truth compels me to say that the division was honestly made, and when he heard the fine crows sounding under his nose, he thought of the future games of galuche, little Stenne thought his crime was not so dreadful after all.
But when he was alone, the unhappy child—when at the gates of the city the large boy left him, and he was alone in his room and hid the crows that he was grasping his heart held it tighter still.
Paris seemed no longer the same to him, the passers by regarded him severely, as if they knew from whence he came, and he heard the word "spy" in all the sounds of the street and the beating of the drums along the canal where the troops were exercising. At last he reached his home, and glad to find that his father had not come in, he hurried into his room and hid the crows that he was weighing so heavily under his pillow. Never had Father Stenne been so good-natured and joyous as he was that night on coming home. Good news had been received from the province, the country's affairs were going better. Whilst he was eating the old soldier looked at his gun hung on the wall and he said to the boy, with a hearty laugh: "Hey! my son, how you are! I think this time we will take back from them that Blamed Bourget."

Then there followed an explosion of bravos and laughter. They danced
and sang and swung their sabres in the
air. Profiting by the tumult, the child-
spy disappeared. Having passed the breastwork nothing remained to be
crossed but the plain, at the end of which was a long white wall filled with
loop holes. They directed their steps
toward this, stopping every now and
then, and making believe to look for potatoes. "Let us return. Don't go
any farther," little Stenne said all the
while, but the large one only shrugged
his shoulders and went on. Suddenly
they heard the click of a gun being
aimed at them. "Lie down," said the
large boy, throwing himself on the ground. When he was down he whispered and another whistle answered him
over the snow, and they went on climbing on their hands and knees. In front of the wall, and even with the
ground, two yellow moustaches under
greasy caps appeared, and the large
boy leaped into the ditch behind them.
The Prussians, "That is my brother," said
he, pointing to his companion. He was so small, little Stenne, that on seeing
him the Prussians began to laugh, and
one of them was obliged to take him in his arms in order to lift him over the
breastwork.

On the other side of the wall were
large breastworks, fallen trees and
black holes in the snow, and in each
one of these was the same yellow mus-
tache and greasy cap, and there was great laughing as the soldiers saw the
children pass by.

In a corner was a garden's house,
cascaded with the trunks of trees, the
lower part of which was full of soldiers
who were playing cards and making
soup over a clear, bright fire. How good the cabbage and the bacon
smell, and what a difference to the sharpshooters' bivouac! Up stairs were
the officers, and they heard them playing on the piano, and opening champagne bottles. When the Parisians
entered the room a hurrah of joy
greeted them. They gave up their newspapers, and the officers gave them
something to drink and made them
talk. They all had a proud, hard look,
but the large boy amused them with
his Parisian gaiety, and his gainst
sings. They laughed and repeated his words and greasy cap, and he went on
with delight in the Parisian mud he brought them.

Little Stenne, too, would have liked
to have talked and to have proved that
he was not stupid, but something confused him. Opposite to him, sitting apart, was a Prussian, older and
more serious than the others, who he
never took his eyes off little Stenne,
and there was in his glance both ten-
derness and reproach, as though this
man might have had a child of little Stenne's age at home, and as if he were
saying to himself: "I would rather die
than see my son doing such a thing."

As he looked at little Stenne the
boy felt as if a hand were clenching at
his heart and keeping it from beating.
To escape the anguish he began to
drink, and soon everything faded
around him. He heard, vaguely, amid
loud laughs, his comrade making fun
of the National Guards, of their way of
going through their drill, he imitated
an assault of arms in the Marais, and a
surprise at night on the ramparts. . . .
Then the large boy lowered his voice,
the officers approached nearer to him
and their faces grew more solemn.
The miserable fellow was telling them
about that night's promiscuous attack,
of which the sharpshooter's had spoken.
Then little Stenne rose, furious and
completely sobered:

"Don't tell that fellow, I won't have
you."

noticed his discovery one of the most remarkable of the age. He has had several offers for the purchase of the patent in France, but wants to sell it in England, his own occupation being in England. Any English gentleman wishing to see his fires or stoves could do so by writing to him a day or two before hand. His address is M.
Bourbonnel, Dijon. . . . I have seen these fires and stoves. There is no mistake about the matter. It is as clear as possible that here we have a perpetual and economical source of fuel. Two hundred years ago the discoverer would surely have been burned
as a wizard. —London Athenaeum.

The Bewitching Bivalve.

The consumption of oysters in this country has grown enormously during the past few years. Here in the city alone there are now between ten and twelve million dollars' worth consumed during the season. This figure seems to be large; but, when the numerous oyster saloons that dot our streets are taken into consideration, and the restaurants, hotels, and other places, it will appear that this amount, if anything, is below the actual sum expended.

The natural history of the birth and growth of the oyster is a simple one.
Towards the beginning of May, when they are about two years old, they begin to spawn, the average number of eggs cast by an oyster being about a million. Scarcely one-half of the spawn, however, survives. The spawn floats in the water until it finds some resting-place, a rock, an old anchor, anything
at all in the shape of an obstruction.
When the oysters are about a year old they are taken from the first abiding place and planted in more desirable localities. After remaining two years they are called "cullions," and are transplanted again. On this spot they remain for another year, and then are fit for market. Though oysters younger than three years are sold, yet they are not in as good condition as later. They are at their prime at three years, and though they are sold for four and six years, the delicacy decreases from year to year.

A great deal depends upon the bottom on which the oyster is planted. If a soft "sod" is chosen, they are nearly as regular as those planted on the rock.
For this reason the oyster, after having grown for a year on soft bottom, is transplanted on hard ground, and thus both rapidity of growth and regularity of form are secured.

Many are the enemies of the infant and even the grown oyster. In addition to the storms which frequently sweep away entire beds, destroying them and inducing heavy pecuniary losses on the owners, there is the drum-fish, who likes oysters as well as the best educated gastronome. It is about three feet long, and two species of it are known, the black and the more rapacious. They come in schools, and woe betide the oyster bed they attack.
With their strong jaws they seize the helpless mollusk, crush the shells, and after sucking out the meat, chew them again. The jaws of the drumfish are so powerful that they can crush a clamshell. The rapidity with which they carry on their depredations is enormous.
Mr. James W. Boyle, of the trade, informs the writer that some years ago a school of them had cleaned out one of his beds, containing 100,000 bushels of oysters, within forty-eight hours.

Another dangerous enemy is a little snail-like animal that drills a hole into the oyster-shell, thus letting in the air and water; and the consequence is the death of the helpless inmate of the shell.

The best seed oysters are brought from Newark Bay, N. J. They are then generally planted about Keyport and Prince's Bay, and subsequently transplanted to Cove Neck, Gow Bay, City Island, Norwalk, Rockaway, oyster and shell places. The greater number of seed oysters are, however, brought from Virginia. The finest quality was formerly taken from the York River, near Cherrystone; but for a number of years the oyster came to ruin at Chincoteague Island, and thus the supply of this favorite variety has given out. There are, however, so many excellent beds at other points in the York River and other parts of Virginia that the loss is scarcely apparent.

The planting of oysters generally begins about the 1st of March, though the Virginia oyster cannot be removed before the 15th of May, the game laws of that State forbidding it.

Among the different kinds of oysters the Blue Point is a favorite. It is tender, delicate and the flavor is exquisite.
Next come the Rockaways and Shreveburys, the latter not so generally liked.
It is essentially a "cracker" oyster, and has a gummy taste, which makes it un-palatable to some, while others are willing to pay almost any price for it.
It has a rich golden color, and can easily be distinguished. After these come East Rivers, Prince's Bays, Key-ports and other varieties, which can only be distinguished by the expert planter and dealer. The Virginia ranks lowest, since the meat is coarse and does not possess the delicate flavor which makes an oyster desirable.
What are now termed Saddle Rocks are but large oysters of any variety, which used to be termed "extras." A few years ago the rage was all for Saddle Rocks. Dealers could scarcely get enough to supply the demand. Now people want nothing but small ones and this way he taken as showing an educated taste in oyster-eating, for with increasing size the flavor of the oyster diminishes.

The Providence River oyster is also a favorite—better known in the Eastern than in the New York market. These oysters are Norwalk or New Haven seed, with some Virginia, and after being cared for and grown at Nayatt's Point, about eight miles from Providence, they are esteemed a delicacy worth having. Heavy shipments of these oysters are made from Drown-ville, R. I., and the supply is not equal to the demand.

So far as the trade in oysters is concerned New York takes the lead, and its oysters will bring almost double the prices of those sent from Baltimore.

Baltimore still has the largest share of the Western trade, supplying the country towns and the out-of-the-way places with canned and bottled oysters. The principal kinds of oysters sent out from Baltimore are "cove," "bulk," and "steamed" oysters. The "cove" is the poorest quality, and is shipped early in the season. It is cooked slightly and packed in tin cans. "Bulk" oyster are packed in barrels containing about thirty gallons. Very frequently, however, the oyster liquor ferments, and this makes the oyster very unpalatable. The chief method of preserving them used in Baltimore is by the steaming process. A large iron can, holding about ten bushels, is run into a steam-house and kept there for twenty minutes. It is then run out, and a crowd of men and women set to work and open the hot shells. They receive five cents for seven pounds of opened oysters, and experts can earn about fifty cents a day by working very hard. The oysters are then put in cans, placed on a large tray, and the sugary liquor drained off. The top of the can is then soldered on, and the packages are given a calcium bath for about forty-five minutes. This at the same time cooks the oyster and he-molyzes the seals the can. After being placed in cold water for some minutes they are ready for the market. It is claimed for them that in this shape
they will keep for a year.

In a few years the export trade of oysters will have assumed immense proportions. Young as it is, it is already very large. Last year about 40-000 barrels were sent to England alone, a shipment of 2,500 barrels being made in one week.

Prices for oysters have gone down considerably during the past five or six years. A thousand of selected ones, which formerly brought fifteen dollars,
now bring but ten dollars. But this cheapness has the effect of producing a greater demand, since what was once a delicacy, enjoyable only by the wealthy, can now be purchased as a good, nutritious article of food by even the poorest. —N. Y. Express.

The Height Above the Sea Level at Which the Mammothites Vegetate.

Few people, even among those who have visited this wonderful region, realize the magnitude of our mountains and the altitude of our peaks.
With the exception, perhaps, of one or two isolated spots in Colorado, mining people believe, has never, in this country,
been carried on at such a height above the sea as in Lake District. Virginia City was for a long time the loftiest mining camp of prominence on the continent. When the prospectors began to winter at 6,800 feet they thought they were up in the world, sure enough.
Finally came Bodie with its 8,500 feet,
and that threw Virginia in the shade.
It was reserved for Lake to walk off with the lead in the form of altitude.
The office in which the Herald is printed is 10,200 feet above the level of the sea. The immense croppings of the Mammoth mine are 11,000 feet above the summit of Mineral Hill, near the Headlight and Monte Cristo shafts.
The latter is 11,700 feet above the sea level,
the latter is 1,300 feet above the surface of Lake Mary, by actual survey. When we think of these enormous heights, and compare them for instance with the famous Mount Washington, of New England, the latter seems little more than a mole-hill. And what a difference, too, in the temperature. Here, though we have plenty of snow in winter, yet at 10,000 feet elevation we live
all the year round in frail board houses,
lined with muslin only and papered,
while on Mount Washington, 6,000 feet high, no one ever lives in winter but the great eagle and the condors, and they are quartered in a stone hut with walls three feet thick, lined with felt and heated with massive stoves. In this den they stay without ever poking their noises out of doors until the coming spring breathes them. Though within the region of perpetual snow, we spend our winters comfortably, and, for instance, last winter work was hardly suspended for a day. —Mammoth City Herald.

Christies of the Redemption Bureau.

Very few people have an idea of the amount of business transacted by what is known as the Redemption Division of the United States Treasury. It is the division which has charge of the work of redeeming and re-issuing the mutilated or worn out notes of the National banks, and is under the very able superintendence of Mr.
E. C. Graves, of New York.
The division is supported by the National banks, each bank being assessed upon its circulation to pay the expense.
When a bank finds itself in possession of worn or mutilated currency, it packs the notes, and sends them to the Redemption Division, where it is counted, examined and sorted, and is redeemed by an equal amount of new or fit notes for circulation. During the fiscal year of 1878
there were sent in for redemption $214-000,000 of National bank notes out of the entire National bank circulation,
which in that year was $234,000,000.
But in October last Secretary Sherman issued an order that banks sending notes to the Treasury to be redeemed should pay the express charges in advance, and this had the effect of reducing very much the amount of money sent in for redemption, so that during the fiscal year of 1879 just closed the amount received was only $157,000,000,
which is the smallest for many years.
Formerly the express charges were paid by the Division and assessed upon the banks according to the amount of their circulation redeemed. This order of Secretary Sherman has caused National bank notes to remain in circulation about one-third longer than usual. In the fiscal year of 1878 the actual number of notes redeemed was about $23-000,000, while in the fiscal year of 1879 the number was $18,000,000. The reason why there is so much difference in the value and the number of notes redeemed, when comparing the two years, is that when banks did not have to pay the express charges they sent many bills of large denominations, but since Secretary Sherman's order they have stopped sending large bills, because the express charges are reckoned upon the weight of the packages, and not upon the weight, so that it costs just as much to send a $1,000 bill as it does to send $1,000 $1 bills. There are more $5 bills sent for redemption than any other denomination. This is because, of course, that in the general exchange of money more fives are used, and the largest issues are made of this denomination.

The fives redeemed present the large-est value, and there is about one fifty presented to nine fives.

Of the $157,000,000 received for redemption last year, only $40,000,000 was found to be totally unfit for circulation and was destroyed. The remainder was reissued.

Of the $157,000,000 sent in, $9,016
only was found to be counterfeit, which is an exceedingly small proportion, and shows that the Secret Service system is doing great good in suppressing counterfeits.

It is generally believed that banking people are very careful and accurate in handling money and doing business, but inquiry at the Dead Letter Office of the Post-Office Department will show that a great proportion of the mis-directed letters containing valuable papers received there are from banks, and in the $157,000,000 received at the Redemption Division last year, the girls who count the money found errors amounting to $22,054.77. The Treasury "countesses" are proverbial for their accuracy in counting and their aptness in detecting counterfeits. General Spinner used to say that women could handle money under all circumstances better than men. But it is due to the banks to say that nearly seventy per cent. of the errors they made last year were against them. Out of the $22,054.77 errors, $22,148.42 were "overs," and only $9,086.35 were
"shorts," to use the slang of the counting-room.

The circulation of National banks is not at all evenly distributed throughout the country, but four-fifths of it is in the Eastern States. The Boston banks alone have over twelve per cent. of the entire circulation of the country. The amount of the circulation of Boston National banks during the last fiscal year was $28,325,000, while the circulation of the New York banks was but $22,086,000, and of the Chicago banks but $865,000. And it is a peculiar circumstance that of the $28,000,000 of Boston circulation nearly $25,000,000
passed through the Redemption Division last year. This is a phenomenon difficult to explain, but it is a fact that Boston money wears out faster than that of any other locality. —Washington Cor. N. Y. Graphic.

Country Horse-Shoers.

Many (but not all) smithshops in the country are used as places where the practices of shoeing are taught. The iron to the bottom of horse's feet, mainly that by having sharp projections upon these the horse may be prevented from slipping when the roads are covered with ice. It is a fact that in the country horses go to the shop with feet grown well forward and downward, because upon the soft tilled ground, or, better still, the carpeted pasture, there is but little wear upon the firm horse's foot, and it grows apace. Now, to properly trim down a hoof greatly elongated by this process of growing forward and downward, the trimming should be done mainly on the bottom of the hoof. So careful is the shoeing done there as can be done without getting too near the sensitive portion of the foot. A horse upon pasture during much of the season, and upon plowed ground much of the remainder, will wear down upon the hoof, and the hoof is a thick layer. This requires a very sharp tool to shave off, and most smiths are careless about keeping their battress sharp enough for this work, and for this reason, and on account of the greater ease with which the shoeing of the toe, after having set the shoe back from the point of the hoof, the average smith will practice this mode.

Now, a little reflection will enable anyone to see that this kind of trimming will cause the hoof to grow too much flexed, the toe being unnaturally elevated through the failure to cut away
the undue thickening upon the bottom of the hoof in its front half. This setting of the shoe back from the point of the hoof, involves the cutting away, usually in a very rough manner, of the surplus which projects forward of the shoe. It also involves a large amount of rasping upon the face of the hoof, which should in no case be tolerated. This kind of destruction of the crust of the hoof is one of the very worst features of this kind of shoeing, because a hoof so mutilated upon its face dries out, becomes feverish and brittle, losing its elasticity.

During many years that we have kept horses for farm and other work, it has been our custom to stand by the smith in cases requiring this watchful-ness, exacting that the surplus growth be removed, so far as was consistent, from the bottom of the foot. This being done, we have required that the shoe be set close forward to the edge of the hoof, being shaped to suit the shape of the hoof, allowing no rasping of the face of the hoof, neither any cutting

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.50
Six months, .75
Three months, .40
INvariably in advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, 5¢ per square of 10 lines;
Second insertion, 4¢ per square;
Third and subsequent insertions, 3¢ per square.
Special contracts for advertising longer than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and address, not necessarily for publication, but as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 20, 1879.

Republican State Ticket.

For Governor,
JAMES A. GARY,
Of Howard County.

For Comptroller,
SAMUEL MALLALIEU,
Of Queen Anne's County.

For Attorney General,
F. M. DARBY,
Of Washington County.

For Clerk of Court of Appeals,
J. T. McCULLOH,
Of Cecil County.

REPUBLICAN PRIMARIES

—AND—

County Convention.

The Republican voters of Garrett county are hereby requested to assemble in primary meetings, in their several districts on Saturday, Sept. 27th, 1879,

AT 3 O'CLOCK P. M.,

at such place as the respective district committees shall determine, for the purpose of selecting FIVE DELEGATES from each district, to attend a County Convention to be held at Oakland, on

Friday, October 3d, 1879,

for the purpose of nominating two Members for House of Delegates, one Clerk of the Circuit Court, one State's Attorney, one Sheriff, one Register of Wills, three County Commissioners, Three Judges of the Orphans' Court and County Surveyor.

By order of the Republican State Central Committee for Garrett county.

A. G. STURGIS,
H. E. FRIEND,
W. O. MCGOWIN,
Committee.

The Democratic managers are making efforts to heal the differences in their party in this county. It is no use, gentlemen, your fate is sealed. The Republicans propose to elect every man on their ticket this fall.

Our State Ticket.

The convention which met in Baltimore on Friday last, by their harmonious action and wise selection of candidates for the State offices, has cemented the Republican party of the State and struck terror to the hearts of leaders of the corrupt dominant party who see and understand "the hand-writing upon the wall." The Republican party of the whole State will, like their representatives who assembled in the nominating convention, rally to the support of the ticket as one man. Our party today in Maryland is a unit; there are no more heads or dissenters, and the Democrats see the scythe of their power fading and vanishing before their vision. Honest Democrats, tired of corruption, misrule and unnecessary taxation, will rally to the support of this ticket and the rescue of the State affairs from the hands of the corrupt ring masters who have so long controlled our affairs for their own private ends and advancement—ignoring the protest of the citizens of the State. The ticket nominated on last Friday is one that commands itself to everybody, commanding the respect of the Democrats and Democratic journals as well as that of the Republicans. No man upon the ticket sought the nomination and yet every one received the unanimous vote of the convention, all the counties and legislative districts being represented, showing that these high honors sought the men, which is ever said to be commendable. In that convention private ambition and desire was buried and the good of the party and the welfare of the State sought. The utmost harmony and the greatest enthusiasm prevailed throughout the whole of its deliberations; and it only remains for the people of the State to act as that convention did, and the supremacy of the ringed Democracy of Maryland will be at an end.

Mr. James A. Gary, of Howard county, our nominee for Governor, is a gentleman of sterling integrity and worth; was the Republican nominee for Congress from the 5th district a few years ago and but for fraud in the elections would have represented that district instead of Mr. Merrick. Mr. Gary is a thorough business man and well qualified to fill the office of chief executive of the State. He is respected and admired by all who know him and loved by his friends and employees.

Mr. Mallalieu, of Queen Anne's county, our nominee for Comptroller, is a successful manufacturer and well calculated, by reason of his business experience and financial responsibility, to fill the office for which he has been nominated, and we predict that Mr. Mallalieu will give Mr. Keating, his opponent, a very tight race for their own county. Mr. Francis M. Darby, of Washington county, whom Garrett county through their delegates had the honor to name for the position of Attorney General, is well known throughout the State as a gentleman of high moral character and integrity. Mr. Darby is a gifted orator whose legal attainments fit him peculiarly for the position of Attorney General. Let the Republicans of Garrett county ratify the action of their delegates to the convention by giving Mr. Darby a full solid vote.

Mr. McCulloh, our candidate for Clerk of the Court of Appeals, is a lawyer of ability and thoroughly competent to fulfill the duties of the office to the satisfaction of all.

With such a ticket and the encouragement we have received by the harmony and enthusiasm of the convention, the verdict of California and greeting of Maine, let us battle for the right and rescue Our Maryland. Let us be active and earnest and success is not an impossibility.

The New York Fiasco.

After two days of successful wrangling, fighting and crimination the Democratic party in New York has succeeded in reaching a state of disruption which virtually turns the Empire State over to the Republicans and makes the election of a Democratic President in 1880 highly probable.

The Syracuse Convention proceeded to business yesterday morning with the Tammany delegation from New York party participating. After much disorder and conflict between the opposing factions an attempt was made to nominate a candidate for Governor. Through some mismanagement, in the midst of the speech-making incident to the naming of candidates, a motion was made and put to nominate Mr. John C. Jacobs by acclamation. It was carried and Mr. Jacobs, the Chairman of the Convention, suddenly found himself proclaimed the nominee for Governor. This being an evident mistake much time was wasted in trying to rectify it. Under cover of the excitement Mr. Dorsheimer, at the head of the entire New York city delegation, retired from the Convention. The "Rump" proceeded to business and renominated Hon. Lucius Robinson for Governor and Clarkson N. Potter for Lieutenant Governor. The bulldozing Tammanyites held a meeting, recited their griefs and nominated Sachem John Kelly for Governor. In accepting the honor Mr. Kelly remarked that he did not expect to be elected but that he hoped to beat Robinson. The Syracuse Convention has ended precisely where it was supposed it would, when it first became known that Mr. Tilden had set his heart upon the renomination of Mr. Robinson. The attitude of Tilden and Robinson toward Kelly and his nominee for Mayor in the last municipal contest in New York city afforded the powerful Tammany faction a reasonable excuse for a war of outrage upon Governor Robinson. The noisy, swearing, shoulder-hitting crowd—always a source of distraction and turmoil in State Conventions—went to Syracuse this week swearing vengeance and promising to support anybody but Robinson, the friend of Tilden. The sentiment of the Convention was against Mr. Dorsheimer and Mr. Kelly and they were forced to make good their threats by a bolt. The Tammany gentlemen in times past have rolled up some big majorities for the Democrats in New York and their assistance is at all times valuable but Tammany has always brought shame upon the Democratic organization and now it is in a way to bring disaster to the party of the entire country. Without the Democratic vote in the city Mr. Robinson cannot hope to carry the State. His defeat will break the power of Mr. Tilden and the loss of the State will place the Democratic party at large at a great disadvantage in 1880. The destruction of Mr. Tilden's influence might not be regarded as a calamity but that the great State of New York should be frittered away by reason of the quarrels of the fierce spiritmen of the things is a lasting shame and cause for humiliation. —Baltimore Gazette, Democrat.

Proceedings of the State Republican Convention.

The State Republican convention assembled in the Concordia opera house Baltimore at noon Friday. Representatives from every county in the State were present, most of the delegations being full.

The convention organized by selecting Hon. Milton G. Urner, of Frederick, as temporary chairman, and Messrs. Arthur Stabler, of Montgomery and David Avery of Calvert, temporary secretaries. This organization was afterward made unanimous.

Garrett's representative on the committee on credentials and permanent organization was H. Wheeler Combs, and on the resolutions J. Z. Browning.

The Committee on resolutions retired at 1 P. M. and did not report until 3:30. During the interval spirited speeches were made by Mr. R. Stockett Mathews and others.

The resolutions were similar to those adopted by the New York Republican convention and the taxpayers' convention in Baltimore last month.

Propositions for a "committee on nominations" were rejected, and Hon. J. A. J. Creswell was nominated for Governor. Mr. Creswell declined in a graceful speech and then in an impassioned manner amid thunders of applause nominated Hon. James A. Gary, of Howard. The nomination was made unanimous, and a committee was appointed to wait upon Mr. Gary and inform him of his nomination.

Mr. Gary was introduced by Mr. Creswell as "the Governor of Maryland," and was received with most enthusiastic applause from the immense audience which now filled the spacious hall.

Some difficulty was had in procuring candidates for the other offices. Mr. Samuel Mallalieu, of Queen Anne's county, was chosen candidate for comptroller; Mr. F. M. Darby, of Washington county, for attorney-general and James T. McCulloh, of Cecil county, for clerk of the court of appeals.

Mr. Darby was nominated by H. Wheeler Combs, Esq., of Garrett county, in the following stirring address:

MR. PRESIDENT.—Representing Garrett county, the extreme western limit of the State, I rise to say that we came here prepared to endorse any one whom this convention might nominate upon the State ticket, if we believed that such nomination would be conducive to the harmony of our party and the success of our ticket. We did have, it is true, a first choice for Governor, an honored gentleman of our sister county, Allegany, (Hon. Lloyd Lowndes,) and as a second choice an upright, earnest, conscientious gentleman of Frederick county, (Dr. Stidner,) but as that gentleman has been solved and wisely too, by the selection of the honored gentleman who heads our ticket, James A. Gary, of Howard, [applause] it now becomes our duty to act wisely in the selection of our candidate for Attorney General, and it would have been a pleasure for me to have gone back to Garrett and told the people there that candidate was the gentleman from Baltimore city, R. Stockett Mathews. [loud applause.] While it would have been a pleasure for me to have done this, it would have been a joy for me to have been able to tell them no more, and the news would have caused rejoicing on hill-top and in valley throughout our whole county, that their favorite, Louis E. McComas, "Little Mac," of Washington county, was our nominee. [Great applause.]

James A. Gary was escorted into the hall and Mr. Combs had to suspend until quiet was restored, after which Mr. C. took the floor and said: "Mr. President, I will now continue, and when I am done, sir, this problem will be entirely solved. As I have said it would have been a pleasure to me to tell our people that R. Stockett Mathews was the nominee and a joy to me to proclaim to death that it was the favorite, 'Little Mac,' but as there seems to be some difficulty in obtaining either of these to consent as well as to reach a nomination, I propose to offer the name of a gentleman from the loyal old Sixth District, that will add strength to our ticket, and for whom Garrett county will roll up a majority equal to that which she will give to the honored gentleman on the standard of the convention, to proclaim to the people of Garrett county, that we have selected a man of such strict integrity, high moral character and great legal attainments as is possessed by the gentleman whom I shall name. That gentleman, Mr. President, is Francis M. Darby, of Washington county, [impassioned applause] and with such a ticket headed by James A. Gary, of Howard, and supplemented with Mallalieu, of Queen Anne's, and Darby, of Washington, the voters of Garrett county will put the seal of condemnation upon the corrupt ring rule of Maryland Democracy. Not only will we give this ticket our full vote, but many Democrats, who are tired of corruption and misrule, will hand in their verdict with us in November. [Continued applause.]

Mr. Hurley, of Allegany, endorsed the nomination of Mr. Darby, and moved that it be made unanimous, which was done with much enthusiasm.

The convention adjourned at 4:30 P. M., when the State central committee met, and organized by selecting Dr. W. G. Tuck, of Anne Arundel, as temporary chairman and W. A. McKelip, of Carroll, temporary secretary. Hon. Henry Stockbridge, was unanimously elected chairman for the ensuing two years.

relating to clerks of courts, registers of wills and all other officials whose pay or compensation is derived from fees or moneys coming in their hands from the discharge of their official duties, or in any way growing out of or connected with their offices, and to require a rigid compliance with the provisions of the Constitution and laws of the State by the payment of all excess of their receipts into the treasury of the State.

11. The laws relating to the inspection of tobacco should be repealed, to relieve the producers and the State of what has become a burden to the producers and a reproach to the State.

12. The public school and jury laws of Maryland are capable of great improvement and should be amended. All political considerations and influence ought to be rigidly excluded.

13. Proper legislation should be instituted to reduce the expenses of the courts throughout the State, which have increased in the last few years to such large proportions as to add materially to a burdensome taxation. That we heartily approve the financial achievements of the present national administration.

14. That we demand that Democratic lawgiving with the registration of voters shall cease, and that the next legislature of this State shall in good faith pass such laws as will secure an honest registry, a free vote and a fair count.

STATE CENTRAL COMMITTEE.
After the adjournment of the convention the State central committee met in a room on the lower floor for the purpose of organizing. Mr. Henry Stockbridge was chosen chairman without opposition, and Messrs. J. Emory Weatherly, of Baltimore, and W. H. H. Hamilton, of Hagerstown, secretaries.

ANOTHER EXTRA SESSION.
WASHINGTON, D. C. Sept. 15.—Whatever may be the truth of the reports about the future action of Tilden and Tammany leaders in New York, it is a fact that admits of no doubt that the leaders of the Democratic party over the country at large are well-nigh panic-stricken at the future prospects of their party. Until now it was difficult to find a Democrat who was not willing to bet the shirt on his back that the next President would be a Democrat. But these men were also willing a month or so ago to make similar bets on the Democratic success in California, Maine and Ohio. Not so now. A change has come over their dreams, and they are gradually waking to the sad reality that the Democratic party is on the brink of eternal destruction. When hope fled in California it centred in Maine. Defeat there turned all Democratic eyes, with long and wistful glances, to the great Empire State, where a row which had been brewing for some time past threatened to disrupt the party in that State. The howlings of the interloper and the jay hawks of the interior met, and with the disgraceful and disastrous results that are known. The noise of John Kelly's bolt shook the national Democracy to its centre, and its leaders began to call on each other for consolation. It is a known fact that numerous letters from prominent Democrats all over the country have recently been received by the chairman of the Democratic National Executive Committee. That gentleman, utterly bewildered, decided to call his committee together. The call was officially promulgated yesterday, and the National Executive Committee of the Democratic party of the United States of America will meet in Washington on the 15th inst., to talk over the plight of the party. The object of this extraordinary session is to try to make peace in the Democratic camp in New York, and to induce, if possible, John Kelly and his sachem chiefs to put away the tomahawk and wash off the war paint. A member of the committee expressed the opinion to-night that the effort in that regard would fail.

1. The Republic of the United States is a nation and not a league. Allegiance of the citizen is due primarily to the nation, which within its constitutional sphere is supreme, and is clothed with full power to guard its own life, protect its own citizens, regulate its own elections, and execute its own laws. The opposite doctrine of state sovereignty is the hateful mother of nullification, secession and anarchy. Republicanism stands for national supremacy in national affairs, and states' rights in state concerns. Democracy stands for state sovereignty, with its own twin heresy that the Union is a mere confederacy of states.

2. To refuse necessary supplies for the government with the design of compelling the unwilling consent of a subordinate and independent branch to obnoxious measures, is a revolution; to refuse appropriations for the execution of existing and binding law is nullification. We arraign the Democratic representatives in Congress as guilty both of revolutionary attempts and nullifying schemes, and we repudiate their action as calculated to subvert the Constitution and to strike at the existence of the government itself.

3. The safety of the republic demands free and pure elections, but the Democratic party, through its representatives in Congress, engaged in a determined effort to break down these laws by unconstitutional and revolutionary means. And this attempt was only prevented by the opposition of the Republican representatives and senators in Congress, and the vetoes of President Hayes, for which they deserve and receive our hearty approval. We pledge ourselves to spare no effort to prevent the repeal of the national election laws, and to secure from our next legislature the best system of laws for popular elections that can be suggested or devised.

4. The people of this State never condoned the fraud that was perpetrated by the Democratic party in the election of 1876, and this being the first occasion which they have had to express their sentiments, it is now their duty and we call upon good citizens to rebuke and condemn that fraud at the coming elections.

5. The Republican party neither justifies nor tolerates military interference with elections. It seeks only to protect the ballot box from the interference of force and fraud. It repels the false charges and denounces the false pretences of conspirators, who, while professing to favor free elections everywhere, sustain mob law in the South; while flogging against troops at the polls to protect citizens, refuses to prohibit armed clubs from surrounding the ballot box to intimidate them; and while affecting that the soldiers' bayoneted weapons at free elections remain silent when the assassin's bullet seals the fate of political independence.

6. We call upon the people to remember that the Democratic party forced the extra session of Congress without warrant of excuse that it prosecuted its partisan purposes by revolutionary methods; that it persistently obstructed resumption, and still constantly presses disturbing measures.

7. The successful resumption of specie payments, the Democratic prediction and hostility, is the crowning achievement of the Republican financial policy. Followed by the returning national prosperity, improved credit, a refunded debt and reduced interest, it adds another to the triumphs which prove that the Republican party is equal to the highest demands. Our whole currency should be kept at par with the monetary standard of the commercial world, and any attempt to debase the standard, to depreciate the paper or deteriorate the coin, should be frantically resisted.

8. All unnecessary and superfluous salaries and fees of others be reduced and restricted by law. In view of the present high purchasing power of money, this may be effected without injustice or hardship to the State, and with great advantage to the State.

9. The next legislature of Maryland should, in deference to that spirit of economy which so thoroughly pervades the popular mind, and which the times so urgently demand, institute such legislation as will secure necessary reforms and reduce the expenditures of the public money to such a degree that the outlay shall be commensurate with the services rendered.

10. That the legislature has in its power to save a large sum of money every year by the passage of laws to enforce a more rigid compliance with the requirements of section 1, article 15, of the Constitution of Maryland, Republicans are harmonious.

relating to clerks of courts, registers of wills and all other officials whose pay or compensation is derived from fees or moneys coming in their hands from the discharge of their official duties, or in any way growing out of or connected with their offices, and to require a rigid compliance with the provisions of the Constitution and laws of the State by the payment of all excess of their receipts into the treasury of the State.

11. The laws relating to the inspection of tobacco should be repealed, to relieve the producers and the State of what has become a burden to the producers and a reproach to the State.

12. The public school and jury laws of Maryland are capable of great improvement and should be amended. All political considerations and influence ought to be rigidly excluded.

13. Proper legislation should be instituted to reduce the expenses of the courts throughout the State, which have increased in the last few years to such large proportions as to add materially to a burdensome taxation. That we heartily approve the financial achievements of the present national administration.

14. That we demand that Democratic lawgiving with the registration of voters shall cease, and that the next legislature of this State shall in good faith pass such laws as will secure an honest registry, a free vote and a fair count.

STATE CENTRAL COMMITTEE.
After the adjournment of the convention the State central committee met in a room on the lower floor for the purpose of organizing. Mr. Henry Stockbridge was chosen chairman without opposition, and Messrs. J. Emory Weatherly, of Baltimore, and W. H. H. Hamilton, of Hagerstown, secretaries.

ANOTHER EXTRA SESSION.
WASHINGTON, D. C. Sept. 15.—Whatever may be the truth of the reports about the future action of Tilden and Tammany leaders in New York, it is a fact that admits of no doubt that the leaders of the Democratic party over the country at large are well-nigh panic-stricken at the future prospects of their party. Until now it was difficult to find a Democrat who was not willing to bet the shirt on his back that the next President would be a Democrat. But these men were also willing a month or so ago to make similar bets on the Democratic success in California, Maine and Ohio. Not so now. A change has come over their dreams, and they are gradually waking to the sad reality that the Democratic party is on the brink of eternal destruction. When hope fled in California it centred in Maine. Defeat there turned all Democratic eyes, with long and wistful glances, to the great Empire State, where a row which had been brewing for some time past threatened to disrupt the party in that State. The howlings of the interloper and the jay hawks of the interior met, and with the disgraceful and disastrous results that are known. The noise of John Kelly's bolt shook the national Democracy to its centre, and its leaders began to call on each other for consolation. It is a known fact that numerous letters from prominent Democrats all over the country have recently been received by the chairman of the Democratic National Executive Committee. That gentleman, utterly bewildered, decided to call his committee together. The call was officially promulgated yesterday, and the National Executive Committee of the Democratic party of the United States of America will meet in Washington on the 15th inst., to talk over the plight of the party. The object of this extraordinary session is to try to make peace in the Democratic camp in New York, and to induce, if possible, John Kelly and his sachem chiefs to put away the tomahawk and wash off the war paint. A member of the committee expressed the opinion to-night that the effort in that regard would fail.

1. The Republic of the United States is a nation and not a league. Allegiance of the citizen is due primarily to the nation, which within its constitutional sphere is supreme, and is clothed with full power to guard its own life, protect its own citizens, regulate its own elections, and execute its own laws. The opposite doctrine of state sovereignty is the hateful mother of nullification, secession and anarchy. Republicanism stands for national supremacy in national affairs, and states' rights in state concerns. Democracy stands for state sovereignty, with its own twin heresy that the Union is a mere confederacy of states.

2. To refuse necessary supplies for the government with the design of compelling the unwilling consent of a subordinate and independent branch to obnoxious measures, is a revolution; to refuse appropriations for the execution of existing and binding law is nullification. We arraign the Democratic representatives in Congress as guilty both of revolutionary attempts and nullifying schemes, and we repudiate their action as calculated to subvert the Constitution and to strike at the existence of the government itself.

3. The safety of the republic demands free and pure elections, but the Democratic party, through its representatives in Congress, engaged in a determined effort to break down these laws by unconstitutional and revolutionary means. And this attempt was only prevented by the opposition of the Republican representatives and senators in Congress, and the vetoes of President Hayes, for which they deserve and receive our hearty approval. We pledge ourselves to spare no effort to prevent the repeal of the national election laws, and to secure from our next legislature the best system of laws for popular elections that can be suggested or devised.

4. The people of this State never condoned the fraud that was perpetrated by the Democratic party in the election of 1876, and this being the first occasion which they have had to express their sentiments, it is now their duty and we call upon good citizens to rebuke and condemn that fraud at the coming elections.

5. The Republican party neither justifies nor tolerates military interference with elections. It seeks only to protect the ballot box from the interference of force and fraud. It repels the false charges and denounces the false pretences of conspirators, who, while professing to favor free elections everywhere, sustain mob law in the South; while flogging against troops at the polls to protect citizens, refuses to prohibit armed clubs from surrounding the ballot box to intimidate them; and while affecting that the soldiers' bayoneted weapons at free elections remain silent when the assassin's bullet seals the fate of political independence.

6. We call upon the people to remember that the Democratic party forced the extra session of Congress without warrant of excuse that it prosecuted its partisan purposes by revolutionary methods; that it persistently obstructed resumption, and still constantly presses disturbing measures.

7. The successful resumption of specie payments, the Democratic prediction and hostility, is the crowning achievement of the Republican financial policy. Followed by the returning national prosperity, improved credit, a refunded debt and reduced interest, it adds another to the triumphs which prove that the Republican party is equal to the highest demands. Our whole currency should be kept at par with the monetary standard of the commercial world, and any attempt to debase the standard, to depreciate the paper or deteriorate the coin, should be frantically resisted.

8. All unnecessary and superfluous salaries and fees of others be reduced and restricted by law. In view of the present high purchasing power of money, this may be effected without injustice or hardship to the State, and with great advantage to the State.

9. The next legislature of Maryland should, in deference to that spirit of economy which so thoroughly pervades the popular mind, and which the times so urgently demand, institute such legislation as will secure necessary reforms and reduce the expenditures of the public money to such a degree that the outlay shall be commensurate with the services rendered.

10. That the legislature has in its power to save a large sum of money every year by the passage of laws to enforce a more rigid compliance with the requirements of section 1, article 15, of the Constitution of Maryland, Republicans are harmonious.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 16, 1879.

General Woodford, of New York, has returned from Mississippi where he went in company with Mrs. Chisholm to prosecute the murderers of her husband, son and daughter in notorious Keenan county Ku Klux riots. He gives a gloomy picture of affairs there, and says the trials are a farce, and no bulldozer can be convicted, even for the worst crimes. This appears true from other accounts also, for thirty-three Democratic newspapers of Mississippi approve the Yazoo plan in politics, and, in substance, endorse the murder of a man who dared to indulge independent aspirations to the office of Sheriff as late as August of this year. There will be few to say after they are informed of the feeling down there, and the Republicans here are determined that they shall be informed, if the furnishing of documentary evidence can impart that information. Among the most useful books on life and Democratic matters in the South is Capt. Well's story of this same Chisholm massacre and various narratives connected therewith (a well bound book, of 300 pages). This book Capt. Well's has consented to give campaign committees at less than cost, and a committee here has a large supply already which will beset out to my address, postage paid, by its Secretary, J. W. Bartlett, 624 F. St. on receipt of fifty cents. Other documents will also be supplied for the cost of postage. General Woodford is not hopeless of the future of the South. He thinks that a solid North will discourage the bulldozers. He says emphatically that Republican victory in 1880 will be followed by the defeat of the regular Democratic State tickets in at least four of the old slave States before 1881. We are nearer the end of this Solid South business than most Republicans expect or most Democrats admit. The one thing needed is one more Republican victory under a wise, brave leader in 1880, and the Solid South is forever broken.

The latest news from Maine is most encouraging to Republicans and discouraging to Democrats and Greenbackers. That we should have obtained a plurality of 21,000 over the Greenbackers and 16,000 over the Democratic ticket, is gratifying in view of the desperate work done by the opposition. The result will be the demise of the Greenback party, for it cannot live without Democratic money, and that will not be furnished hereafter. Next year the contest will be between the Republicans and Democrats and as the Democrats are greatly demoralized that prospect is pretty cheering. It is not to be wondered at that the Maine Republicans are encouraged to present Senator Blaine anew for President. He did noble work there, and is endeared to the Maine people by his faithfulness to Republican principles no less than by his brilliant political management. I observe that his name is echoed also from other quarters since his triumph, and that Senator Allison, is added to the ticket as prospective Vice President. While it is rather early to make Presidential tickets, it is but fair to say that this one would command much strength and excite great enthusiasm in all parts of the country.

The Republican campaign every-where goes on flourishingly, and the best result of the Maine election is the encouragement and hope it sends to our friends in Ohio and New York, where the Democrats have made great efforts to win. It looks as if Cornell, in New York, and Foster, in Ohio, would have a walk-over. The Democrats are quarreling in both States, and Tammany in the one and the other are getting the managers by the ears. Thurman is bound to trade off Ewing votes to secure his own ascendancy, and Ewing having got hold of this trick, is turning it to his own account with the party. It is the old story. When rogues fall out, honest men get their dues.

LOGAN.

A special from Atlanta, Georgia, says: "The reports of the fatal fever raging in the counties of Polk, Paulding, and Harrison, have not been overdone. Within a few days over 50 men have died in an exclusively rural population. The victims are mostly young men. Those attacked with it suffer horribly, the tongue turning black and swelling to double its size, and blood oozing from the mouth and ears. After death the bodies become spotted and discolored. One physician of fine standing reports that of 29 cases under his treatment not one recovered. The course of the disease is run in a few days. The greatest alarm and distress prevails, and is steadily spreading. Physicians here think it is the spotted typhus fever."

As a matter of course the jury in the Chisholm case returned a verdict of "not guilty" for Gally, the murderer, and it took them only a half hour to make up their minds.

MISCELLANEOUS.

DR. G. H. HOCKING,
offers his professional services to the citizens of Deer Park and vicinity. Office, Deer Park. 7-21

ACCORDANT CHORD

A Valuable Farm Near
Oakland, Md.

The undersigned offers for sale his valuable farm, about four miles from Oakland, on the West Haven road. This farm contains 35 acres, 32 of which is under fence and well improved. The improvements consist of a

New Frame House,

Good Young Orchard.

For terms, &c., address,
DAVID SLABAUGH,
Oakland, Md.,
aug2-6m.

Women do as well as men. More. Men make more than the male and female average. So men can fail to make money fast. Any one can do the work. You can make more, faster, to $2 an hour by devoting your evenings and spare time to the business, and not needing to try the business. Nothing like it for money making ever offered before. Business, personal and strictly honorable. Reader, if you want to know all about this particulars and private terms free; simply write to us also; you can then make up your mind for yourself. Address GEORGETOWN SONS & CO., Portland, Maine. je 11 Y such as anyone can go right at it. Those who are wise, whereas this notice will send us the addresses at once and see for themselves the costly outfit and terms free. Now is the time. Those already at work are looking for large sums of money. Address T.B.E. & Co., Augusta, Maine.

wanting to work. You should try nothing at all until you see for yourself what you can do in the business we offer. No room to exclude here. You can devote all your time or only your spare time to the business, and make great pay for every hour that you work. Women make as much as men. Send 10 special private forms and particulars, without cost, free. 8500 1/2 Ave. C. Don't send for hard times when you have such a chance.

B. & O. R. R. Time-Table

The following time table of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad was GOING WEST.

No. 2	5.11 A.
No. 6	9.51 A.
No. 8	3.20 A.
No. 10	4.13 P.
Why	10.11 A.
GOING EAST.

No. 6.....	10:41 P.
No. 5.....	12:21 P.
No. 7.....	5:20 P.
Way	8:20 A.

The fast trains, with the exception of those mentioned, make stops tions. Tickets should always be purchased before taking the cars, passengers saving thereby from 10 to 25 cents.

L. M. COLE,
General Ticket Agent

—OF—
Good Land
For Sale Cheap.

This Land lies on the Hoopp Road, about six miles north of from Oakland, B. & O. R. R., and generally covered with good timber.

Will be sold in bulk or in small lots. Title good.

For particulars and terms apply to this office or to the postoffice, Oakland, Garrett Co., Md.

OAKLAND WOOLEN FACTORY

The subscriber is prepared to do all kinds of

Roll Carding, Spinning and Weaving on short notice.

SAMUEL LAWTON
my 1000

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY

SEPTEMBER 27, 1879.

NUMBER 31.

VOLUME 3.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, etc.

D. E. OPPETT,

GENERAL MERCHANDISE,

General Merchandise, Groceries, Canned Goods, etc.

G. W. LEGG,

GENERAL MERCHANDISE,

General Merchandise, Groceries, Canned Goods, etc.

D. H. LOAR,

ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,

General Merchandise, Groceries, Canned Goods, etc.

I. W. STALKER,

Grocery and Provision Store,

General Merchandise, Groceries, Canned Goods, etc.

L. BUSH & SON,

GENERAL MERCHANDISE,

General Merchandise, Groceries, Canned Goods, etc.

J. A. GRANT,

General Merchandise,

General Merchandise, Groceries, Canned Goods, etc.

DAVIS & TOWNSHEND,

General Merchandise,

General Merchandise, Groceries, Canned Goods, etc.

C. C. MICHAEL,

GENERAL MERCHANDISE,

General Merchandise, Groceries, Canned Goods, etc.

RICHARDSON BROS.,

GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,

General Merchandise, Groceries, Canned Goods, etc.

HOTELS.

CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,

W. M. CARRINGTON, Proprietor,

Main St., opposite the old Baltimore Hotel.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN,

Duplicate Postoffice,

STOVES AND TIRE.

G. A. SHIRER,

Oak Street, near Second,

A general line of Stoves and Tires.

PHYSICIANS.

DR. J. LEE MCCOMAS,

Office on Main Street.

DR. E. H. PARSONS,

offers his professional services

to the people of Oakland and vicinity.

Office in the old Olcott building.

PLASTERER.

JAMES ARNOLD,

Residence on Fourth Street.

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.

W. M. WAGNER,

Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.

GEO. F. LOUGHRIDGE,

Leave orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.

J. B. BRANT,

Surveyor, Auctioneer and

Conveyancer.

Oakland, Garrett county, Md.

JOHN HARNED,

Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.

A. B. WOODBURN,

In Wm. Smith's Building,

Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY

GOODS.

MRS. M. E. DAVIS,

Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,

Millinery, Gents' Furnishing

Goods, and Family Groceries, and Shoes.

Main Street, opposite the McCome office.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

GEO. C. STURGEON,

Drugs, Medicines,

Confectionery, Toilet articles, Stationery,

Tobacco and Cigars.

G. W. MERRILL,

Near Depot.

Drugs, Medicines, Toilet Goods, Stationery,

Cigars, Fishing Tackle, etc. Physician's prescriptions accurately compounded.

PAINTING & PAPER HANG-

ING.

E. J. FRINGER,

House and Sign Painter.

And Paper Hanger.

Leave orders at Bush's Store.

S. V. B. WARD,

HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER

Shop near Davis House.

BLACKSMITHS.

CHAS. SINCELL,

Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS

JOHN M. JARBOE,

Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,

FALL & WINTER GOODS.

GOODS FRESH & NEW

and Cheap as the Cheapest.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

Has on hand a full stock of New clothes she was not well, would she

Ready Made Clothing,

which he will sell very cheap for cash.

Gents Furnishing Goods,

In great variety, and at prices to suit the

times.

Suits Made to Order

In the most fashionable manner. Orders by mail promptly attended to.

Also Agent for the Celebrated

"Pearl Shirt."

A Large Assortment of

BOYS' CLOTHING

Kept always on hand.

All work WARRANTED to give entire

satisfaction.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,

at-ly

Oakland, Md.

MEAT MARKET.

H. E. WOLFE,

Formerly of Cumberland, Md.

Takes this mode of announcing to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity that he has permanently located in Oakland for the purpose

of carrying on the

BUTCHERING BUSINESS

In a first-class manner.

FRESH BEEF, MUTTON, PORK,

BOLOGNA SAUSAGE, POKE SAU-

SAGE, etc., at all times.

Shop near the Post Office.

Customers can get what they want without

delay and at any hour of the day.

Your patronage is respectfully solicited.

H. E. WOLFE.

PATENTS.

To Inventors and Manufacturers.

ESTABLISHED 1865.

GILMORE SMITH & CO.

Solicitors of Patents & Attorneys at Law.

American & Foreign Patents.

No fees in advance, nor until a Patent is allowed. No fees for making preliminary examinations.

Special attention given to Interference Cases before the Patent Office.

Infringement Suits in the different

States, and all litigation appertain-

ing to Patents or Inventions.

Send Stamp for Pamphlet of Sixty

Pages.

GILMORE & CO.,

629 E. Street, N. W.,

Washington, D. C.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

THO. J. PENNINGTON, A. B. GOSNER,

PENNINGTON & GOSNER,

ATTORNEYS AT LAW

AND SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY,

OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and

Allegany Counties, the adjoining Counties of

West Virginia, and in the Court of Appeals

of Maryland.

Jan. 29-1879

S. A. COX, H. WHEELER COOKS,

COX & COOKS,

ATTORNEYS AT LAW

AND SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY,

OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett County

and the adjoining Counties of West Virginia,

and in the Court of Appeals of Maryland.

Jan. 29-1879

GILMORE S. HAMIL,

ATTORNEY AT LAW

AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY,

OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett County

and the adjoining Counties of West Virginia,

and in the Court of Appeals of Maryland.

Jan. 29-1879

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG

Late Resident Surgeon, New York

Eye and Ear Infirmary.

Has for several years, been the EX-

CLUSIVE treatment of all diseases of the eye and ear, including those of the New and

Throat.

Office, No. 30 South Centre Street.

Jan. 29-1879

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LESSONS.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 28, 1879.

THIRD QUARTERLY REVIEW.

HOME READINGS.

M. Peace with God. Rom. 5: 1-10.

N. Victory over death. 1 Cor. 15: 20-28.

O. Fruit of the spirit. Gal. 5: 22-25.

P. Practical religion. Col. 3: 16-25.

Q. The Christian in the world. 1 Tim. 2: 1-15.

R. The citizenship of the Christian. Tit. 2: 1-10.

S. The citizenship of the Christian. Tit. 2: 1-10.

LESSON HYMN, C. M. He they

Lord, as to thy dear cross we never

And pray to be forgiven,

So let thy life our pattern be,

And form our souls for heaven's

Kept precious in the midst of sin,

Forgiving and forgiving,

O may we lead the pilgrim life,

And follow thee to heavenly

Every effort to release him

Like fruitless, but strong

1. The lessons for July:—

1. Repeat the TITLES, TOPICS, GOLDEN

TEXTS, and OUTLINES.

2. State the DUTIES, SUGGESTIONS, and show how each is found in the lesson.

3. Find in the lessons the following

TEACHINGS:—

Lesson 1: That Christ died for sinners.

Lesson 2: That Christ intercedes for believers.

Lesson 3: That love shall never fail.

Lesson 4: That we shall live forever.

II. The lessons for August:—

1. State the TITLES, TOPICS, GOLDEN

TEXTS, and OUTLINES.

2. State and point out in the lessons the

DUTIES, SUGGESTIONS.

3. Find in the lessons the following

TEACHINGS:—

Lesson 1: The promise of eternal life with Christ.

Lesson 2: The promise of Christ's appearance.

Lesson 3: The promise of inheritance hereafter.

No one would have believed, two months ago, that the practical value of Resumption could be so completely proved this Fall as it has been already. Strong evidence of the usefulness of specie resumption had been previously given, and it was expected that the Fall movement would give still stronger, but no one imagined that a drain of currency from the New York banks would arise of such magnitude as to take from them

$6,000,000 in a single week, nor was it believed that $8,500,000 in gold could be received from Europe at

New York in the same week to fortify the market against a continuance of the strain. The general failure of crops in Europe not only causes the unprecedented test of the strength of the banks, but, through the simple methods which specie payments open to us, provides adequate relief. The situation will review careful study, not merely with a view to wise guidance of practical operations, but as a revelation of economic truth for the instruction of statesmen and voters. The banks of

New York lost $607,800 in legal tenders last week. Within six weeks

they have lost $18,174,000, and this has been only a part of the outflow of currency to the interior. For the sub-Treasury has also paid out, since

Saturday, August 2, $1,500,011.

21 in currency more than it has received. This date is selected because it coincides with that of the bank

statement, six weeks ago, and because the comparison thus shows that all the currency paid into the Treasury by the banks in answer to the large drafts from the 21 to the 11th,

and nearly the whole of the $5,000,-

000 drawn from them on the 1st of August, have been returned to them,

though in exchange for gold which the banks have obtained from abroad. For the banks have gained

$221,500 in specie during the six weeks, while the Treasury has gained

$13,100,000. Since the bank state-

The Chisholm Verdict.

sent the murderers of Chisholm go free. There was a just Judge, Demo could not find a verdict for a

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

THE CIDER MILL.

Under the blue New England skies,
Flooding with sunshine a valley lies.

The mountains close it, warm and sweet,
Like a sunny child to their rocky feet.

Three peaty lakes and a hundred streams
Lie on its quiet heart of dreams.

Its meadows are greenest ever seen;
Its harvest fields have the brightest sheen.

Through its trees the softest sunlight shakes,
And the whitest lilies gleam its lakes.

I love, oh! better than words can tell,
Its every nook and grove and dell.

But, most I love the gorge where the rill
Comes down by the old brown cider mill.

Above the clear springs gurgle and
And the upper meadows wind about;

Then join, and under willows grow,
Round knolls where blue-bell whisp'ring blow.

To rest in a shaded glade that keeps
The oak trees clasped in its crystal deeps.

Shower twenty feet the water falls
Down from the old dam's broken walls.

Spatters the luscious bowlders gray,
And, lunging down, the rill's sole way.

Under great rocks, through front pools still,
With many a tumbled stone, it will.

All the way down the rill troos grow,
And squirrels lead above and below.

Acorns, hickories, chestnuts there
Drop all the fall through the hazy air;

And hawks and buzzards with curled-up leaves,
In the midday light of harvest eves.

Forever there the still, old trees
Drink a wine of peace that has no lees.

By the roadside stands the cider-mill,
Where a lowland slumber waits the rill.

A great brown building, two stories high,
On the western hill-face warm and dry.

And odorous pipes of apples there
Fill with music the late-fall draw.

And hoops of punies, mixed with straw,
To their amber sweets the late-fall draw.

The carts look up to the upper door,
And spill their treasures in on the floor.

Down through the toothed wheels they go
To the wide, deep cider press below.

And the grapes are turned by slow degrees
Down on the stone and cider close;

And with each turn a faller strow
Gusts from beneath the growing beam.

An other stream the gods might sip,
And hear no murmur's panted lip.

But wherefore gods? Those idle toys
Were useless to red New England boys.

What child could ever find them worth,
Such thrilling toys as these would melt.

As fresh electric along a draw,
The whirled tips the cider draw?

The years are heavy with sweet sounds,
And their discords life's sweet sounds drown;

But yet I hear, oh! sweet, oh! sweet,
The rill that babbles in here, brown feet.

And yet I hear the rill and falls
On my inward eardrums still.

And I find at times in a sweet dream,
The babbling of that little stream.

And I sit in a visioned autumn still,
In the sunny door of that little mill.

John G. Whittier.

JACK'S GREAT PERIL.

A Shortening Story of a Railroad Accident.

I never saw such a change in a man in my life! When we last met, Jack—well, I must not give his real name, considering what I am going to relate, so I'll call him Jack Pallant—was, as he had ever been since I knew him, one of the lightest-hearted, cheeriest fellows in the world, full of fun, and up to every thing, and gentle and tender as a woman, with the courage of a lion. And now, what did I find him? Even though but three months had elapsed, he had become a grave, dejected, saddened man—in a word, hardly recognizable, either mentally or physically. I was shocked, and of course he was too. He came to see me, indeed, the moment he heard I was in town, that I might learn from his own mouth what had happened, instead of at second-hand.

Jack had always been more or less a spoiled boy—only sons are always more or less spoiled—and having lost his mother when quite a child, it was not wonderful that his poor old father made much of him. But he had taken the spoiling kindly, and beyond making him perhaps a little idle and thoughtless, it had done him no harm. There was no harm in the fellow; he spent more money than he should, but many young soldiers do that without coming to much grief in the long run, and his father, a soldier before him, regarded the failing leniently, paid his bills, and looked pleasant. Beyond adding that he was a rather short, dapper little fellow, I need not say much more about him; I have only to try and put into coherent shape the strange and tragical business which had so fearfully altered him.

He was coming to town one autumn evening for a few days' leave from Gunnersburg, where he was quartered. I can see him as plainly as if I had been there, springing into the first carriage that offered room, without regard to who was in it, for he was the least fastidious of men, without the slightest particle of "haw-haw" pride and nonsense, too usual with men in his position; ready to make himself happy wherever he was, or in whatever company.

But it so happened, it appears, on this occasion that he got into an empty carriage; at least he thought so, for it was twilight, and he did not observe for the first moment the figure of a woman, seated in a further corner, dressed in dark clothes, and thickly veiled.

The sudden discovery that he was not alone rather startled him for a moment, and it may be, as he said, that the evening before having been a guest night at moss, his nerves were not quite up to their usual tone. He was not the lad, however, to be long in such a situation without making some remark to his fellow-traveler, though in this case an unusual hesitation to do so came over him, owing to her mysterious appearance and extreme stillness. The between-lights of the carriage-lamp and the evening sky prevented him from discerning details, but there she sat, perfectly rigid, and with not a ves-trace of her face visible, through the thick black veil.

"What a queer sight!" he said at last, shifting his seat nearer to her and nearly opening the door. "I thought the carriage was empty. I may be disturbing you, I fear." He would say any thing in a random way, to break the ice, as he called it.

No answer. A long pause. "Very singular," he thought; and he moved to a seat exactly opposite the figure, making another commonplace observation. No response or any movement.

"Asleep, I suppose," he said to himself, and he sat quietly watching her, while the train rattled on for a mile or two. A station was reached and a stoppage made, with the usual accompaniments of screech, and whistling, and slamming of doors, but without producing any change in the posture of the occupant of the opposite corner. The train again moved on. "Can't be asleep," he muttered. "What's the matter with her?"

The window was shut close; he let it down with a tremendous clatter and bang, remarking that "he hoped, as the evening was so late, that the woman and the carriage close (for he declared to him there was a peculiar odor hanging about which struck him from the first.)" "she would not object to a little air."

Still no reply. Then he said "he feared she was not well; would she like him to pull the bell for the guard and have the train stopped again?" But nothing he could say or do elicited any sign of life from her.

Jack now became seriously uncomfortable and alarmed on her account. He thought she could not be asleep, but had fainted. Suddenly it crossed his mind that she was dead. Night had now closed in, but the last tinge of twilight faded from the sky the carriage lamp gained its full power and revealed every object more plainly than hitherto.

Jack leaned toward the motionless form. A long black veil, falling from a close-fitting hat-like bonnet, enveloped nearly the whole upper part of his figure; indeed, on close inspection, it hardly looked like an ordinary veil, but more like a large black silk handkerchief. Her dress was of common black stuff, much worn and frayed, from amid the folds of which appeared the ends of a piece of rope that must have been fastened round her waist; and one hand, thrust in an old ill-fitting black glove, lay placidly on her lap.

Full of uncomfortable sensations, Jack was about to lift the veil, when, for the first time, the figure moved; its other hand stole slowly from beneath the folds of the dress, and the veil was gradually lifted and thrown up over the head.

Involuntarily my friend shrank back into the corner of his seat, for a face was revealed to him which no one could have looked upon without a sense of awe. It was that of a woman somewhat past middle age, thin, haggard, and pale to a degree which only death could equal. The features, finely chiseled and proportioned, showed that at one time there must have been supreme beauty; while, though the iron-gray hair looked a little disheveled and unkempt, the glance of the eye was steady, calm, and determined.

In this glance lay, chiefly the awe-inspiring expression of the face, for, in addition to the penetrating look, there was a persistency in it, and at the same time a fascination, quite terrible. It fixed itself upon Jack from the first moment that eye met eye, and for several minutes not a word was spoken on either side. Presently, however, he tried to pull himself together, and, in a low, steady voice, he began to speak, in a manner which had had this for a minute been so strangely and unusually disturbed, and he said, briskly:

"I beg your pardon; I was afraid you were ill."

She slightly bent her head, but spoke not a word nor withdrew her glance.

He felt more and more that it was costing him an effort to be himself. Her slow, stealthy, albeit lady-like manner added greatly to the effect already produced, and a curious sensation was gradually creeping over him, that—impossible as it might seem—that face was not strange to him. Little as he knew of her, he felt that he had seen it somewhere, and he was puzzled, affected, quite put out. And still the deep, penetrating eyes were fixed on his, piercing as a were, into his very soul. And the hands—what were they doing? Taking off the gloves as with a set, deliberate purpose, and the long, white, thin, almost claw-like fingers worked strangely and nervously, slowly closing and opening upon the palm, as if preparing to grasp something.

Again he strove to throw off the unpleasant, unusual sensation which had crept over him.

"I can't stand this," he thought; "I was never so uncomfortable in my life! I must do something, or say something, to put a stop to this, to make her take her eyes off me!"

He moved abruptly to the further corner of the carriage, and to the same side on which the woman sat. He was puzzled, affected, quite put out. And still the deep, penetrating eyes were fixed on his, piercing as a were, into his very soul. And the hands—what were they doing? Taking off the gloves as with a set, deliberate purpose, and the long, white, thin, almost claw-like fingers worked strangely and nervously, slowly closing and opening upon the palm, as if preparing to grasp something.

But she, too, immediately shifted her place, and, rising to her full height, which was very great, went over to the seat exactly opposite to him, never for one single second dropping her eyes from him. He looked out of the window with a vague notion of getting out of the carriage; when suddenly, passing a little station which he recognized, but at which the train did not stop, an idea struck him—an idea after his own heart—a comic idea! He availed himself of it on the instant, and assuming an ease which doubtless sat ill upon him, and which he was far from feeling, he pointed with his thumb back toward the station they had just passed, as he said mysteriously in a hollow voice:

"Do you know that place?"

She seemed to answer in the affirmative by a slight inclination of the head as before.

"Ah! you do. Good! Longnoor!" he went on; "then I don't mind telling you a secret." He paused (it'll frighten her, he thought). "Criminal lunatics," he said aloud; "I am one of them. I have just escaped from there!"

He leaned forward as if to impress her with his words; she also leaned forward until her face touched his ear, as she hissed into it:

"So have I!"

With what had already gone before, this put the finishing touch to Jack's uneasiness of mind. It was not, as he said, that the presence of the woman, or the revelation which his joke had elicited, which scared him, though the circumstance in itself might be unpleasant enough.

Every effort to face it right away from his first, as any man would have done, had it not been for the remarkable influence her face and look had upon him; that unaccountable feeling that he was not a stranger to her, and that he had known her face and look had upon him; that unaccountable feeling that he was not a stranger to her, and that he had known her face and look had upon him.

No sooner had she uttered the words, "So have I!" than Jack sprang to the cord communicating with the guard's van, for he felt their truth, and, then, a key to the whole mystery. But, ere his hand had reached the cord, she had seized him round the waist with one arm as with the grip of a vise, and at the same instant he felt one of those terrible hands at his throat.

Every effort to release himself was fruitless; her strength seemed superhuman, and was far beyond his as was her stature. Her face glowered close down upon his now, still with the same full expression.

"The only thing I could have done," went on Jack, in describing the scene to me—and just here he shall speak for himself; "the only means by which I could have raised my hand against it, and, as my arm swung up with the first impulse to deal her a blow, it fell helpless by my side. Vain were my efforts to get her hand away from my throat; there was a terrible swaying to and fro, and, as my hand came up, I felt the grip of the long fingers tightening, and myself choking. Suddenly we fell, the whole carriage seemed to be falling—there was a fearful jerk or two, a strange upheaving of the floor, a tremendous rattle and crash, and I appeared to be thrown headlong to some great distance, and—all was darkness!"

The termination of that deadly struggle was brought about in a manner as mysterious and unaccountable as it had been imagined.

Some fifty souls, say, were traveling in that train, all save one in perfect security. Jack's life alone was in danger, when, lo! by one of those marvellous chances which occur in the supreme moments of existence, the rescue came, but at the cost of many a life, which just before would have seemed worth treble the purchase of Jack's.

At the very instant that his life depended upon another tightening grip or two from the hand of a maniac a frightful catastrophe occurred to the train.

Seven passenger cars were killed outright, and half a dozen carriages were hurled down a steep embankment. The scene that succeeded is, unhappily, too common an occurrence to need more than a word of reference here. Seven passengers were killed outright; the remainder escaping, as by a miracle, with nothing else than a severe shaking.

My friend was among the shaken. He had been thrown clear of the debris on to a soft grassy spot, half back, half hedge; emphatically, his life was saved!

But what followed it was that which caused the suffering, that wrought the terrible death in Jack.

In the darkness of that soft autumn night he strove, foremost among those who had been spared, to render such help as was possible to the less fortunate. When the official assistance given to speculation or introspection, he found himself striving to look back for some event or circumstance in his life which might give him a clue. Had he ever dreamed of such a face, or had he seen it in childhood? He was puzzled, affected, quite put out. And still the deep, penetrating eyes were fixed on his, piercing as a were, into his very soul. And the hands—what were they doing? Taking off the gloves as with a set, deliberate purpose, and the long, white, thin, almost claw-like fingers worked strangely and nervously, slowly closing and opening upon the palm, as if preparing to grasp something.

Again he strove to throw off the unpleasant, unusual sensation which had crept over him.

"I can't stand this," he thought; "I was never so uncomfortable in my life! I must do something, or say something, to put a stop to this, to make her take her eyes off me!"

He moved abruptly to the further corner of the carriage, and to the same side on which the woman sat. He was puzzled, affected, quite put out. And still the deep, penetrating eyes were fixed on his, piercing as a were, into his very soul. And the hands—what were they doing? Taking off the gloves as with a set, deliberate purpose, and the long, white, thin, almost claw-like fingers worked strangely and nervously, slowly closing and opening upon the palm, as if preparing to grasp something.

But she, too, immediately shifted her place, and, rising to her full height, which was very great, went over to the seat exactly opposite to him, never for one single second dropping her eyes from him. He looked out of the window with a vague notion of getting out of the carriage; when suddenly, passing a little station which he recognized, but at which the train did not stop, an idea struck him—an idea after his own heart—a comic idea! He availed himself of it on the instant, and assuming an ease which doubtless sat ill upon him, and which he was far from feeling, he pointed with his thumb back toward the station they had just passed, as he said mysteriously in a hollow voice:

"Do you know that place?"

She seemed to answer in the affirmative by a slight inclination of the head as before.

forever! Except for a slight wound on one temple, where a little blood had trickled, and the distorted, but now rigidly closed hand, which had been so lately at his throat, she looked as calm and uninjured as if she were merely sleeping, and the blood had restored for a brief period much of that beauty, the traces of which had struck him when her veil was first lifted.

One of the surgeons here came hurrying in answer to a summons.

"Here she is, then, at last! Why, she must have been in the train? How on earth did she manage it?"

"Who is she?" inquired Jack, earnestly, with a strange return of the old, inexplicable sensation. "Who is she? You appear to know her. Pray tell me."

"O, one of our inmates; she got away yesterday morning, no one knows how."

You saw her, Longnoor, then. How long has she been there? What is her name?"

"O, she has been there upward of twenty years, I believe; long before my time."

And her name?"

"Upon my word, at this moment, I can hardly say, for she is so much altered, mechanically passing his fingers over the pulseless wrists before him, and with a calm hesitation, which contrasted strongly with Jack's earnest, generous manner, "I can hardly remember. I think she was committed for the murder of her own little girl."

Jack said, "I know. Ah! her name; I have it," went on the doctor suddenly; "her name was Pallant—Rachel Pallant."

Jack sprang from the kneeling posture in which he was, as if he had been shot. Why, that was his own dead mother's name! But, what of that? Well, it was rather a startling coincidence; that was all! Ay, but was it? Indeed, no.

The inquest led to a revelation. That inquiry fully explained what had been the nature of the influence which the weird pale face and strange presence had had upon my friend.

The strong but subtle link which no time or absence can quite sever, but existing between mother and son had made itself felt the instant those two sat face to face, for the unhappy woman was indeed none other than Jack's own mother!

He had never been told, in fact, it had been carefully kept from him. Why run the risk of clouding for life that bright and happy temperament? He was only four years old when the dreadful business happened; hence, he had scarcely known a mother's care—she was lost to him, to the world, as completely as if she had died. Nay, death would have been a mercy by comparison, and it was generally assumed that she was dead only a few very intimate friends knew the truth.

The poor lady's mind had given way suddenly after the birth of a child, which did not live. Within a week the homicidal mania possessed her; by the maddest chance she had been prevented from committing some frightful outrage upon her little boy, my poor friend Jack; and restraint not having been put upon her in time—for her malady had already been spotted so unobscuredly in its appearance—she consumed her deadly propensity upon her eldest child, a girl fifteen years of age—killed her, in a word, as she lay asleep.

And here, after a lapse of twenty years, was the climax and end of the tragedy, as dreadful as any thing that had gone before. The order for release, when it came, brought with it as much suffering (to all but one) as had the order for captivity. On Saturday I had seen a smile on his face since—though I trust that time, with its healing influence, may at least soften the blow.—English Paper.

The Capture of Washington.

A correspondent of the Hartford Times writes from Washington, Aug. 27: The battle of Bladensburg, the capture of Washington, as some writers have spoken of it, took place on Aug. 24, 1814. Sunday was, therefore, the sixty-fifth anniversary of the day. There was no public celebration of the event, though a large number of the city—the heroes of Bladensburg (for there are some of them still living) met and fought the battle over again; but this time it was over a dinner-table, the pleasantest kind of battle, by a long and extremely pleasant chat with Mr. Nicholas Callan, one of the originators and leading members of the Oldest Inhabitants' Association, as well as one of our most prominent kind of citizens. He has had official business with every President since Jackson, and remembers James Madison very well. Mr. Callan has held the office of Notary Public in this city for many years, and, in his long career, has brought into contact with thousands of officials, Congressmen, Foreign Ministers, who have long since been numbered among the dead. He was not old enough to take a hand in the battle of Bladensburg, but remembers the day very well, as also the entry of the British into this city on the evening following the battle. I will attempt to reproduce the story of that day as it was told to me by Mr. Callan. Starting out he said: "The authorities here had received information from various sources that the British were coming, and that they intended to burn the public buildings in this city. No one knew by which road they would come. There were no telephones, telegraph or fast mails in those days, and news was sent by carriers or by the pony express only. It was learned a day or so before the British came here that they had arrived somewhere along the coast of the Chesapeake Bay; that they would come up the Patuxent to Washington. It was expected that they would cross the bridge over the eastern branch of the Potomac, known then and at the present day as Benning's bridge. Preparations were made so that the bridge could be set on fire as the British were crossing it, or destroyed so that they could not get back. Commodore Barney had charge of a detail of soldiers, and Major Miller a company of marines. They were stationed at the bridge and remained there until they found out that the British intended to enter the city by the Bladensburg pike. They then went to Bladensburg and played a most important part in that battle, which resulted in the defeat of our side. Our forces at that battle consisted of several thousand volunteers, cavalry and infantry. The majority of the cavalry had never been on the back of a horse before that day; and as for the infantry, the great majority of them had never fired a gun, or pistol even, in their lives. Fierceness were not as plentiful in those days as now, and such a thing as a percussion-cap or breech-loader was never thought of. The British attacking force was a great deal smaller than ours, but was disciplined. President Madison and his Cabinet witnessed the battle, having gone out there on horseback that morning. One of our regiments had no guns. The effect did not get to the battle-field until it was too late for them to be of service."

"How was that?" I ventured to ask.

"Well," continued Mr. Callan, "the man who was on duty in the arsenal did not know much about counting, and he had some difficulty in getting out the guns for the volunteers, many of whom did not know how to fire them after they had received them; and, then, again, on the road out they met the others coming in on a lively retreat."

"When did the British arrive in this city?" I inquired.

"They got here pretty soon after our army did," said Mr. Callan, "reaching the city about four or five o'clock in the afternoon. The battle was fought about noon, or a little before that hour. I remember very well their march into the city. As they were coming along a couple of squares from the capital some one fired at General Ross, who was in command of the red coats, missing him, but killing his horse. The gun was fired from the house of a gentleman named Sewall. General Ross ordered a messenger from the British to take a message from the President's house, and after that marched to a place on Maryland avenue, where they camped for the night."

"The burning having been anticipated, was any preparation made for it?" I asked.

"Yes, all of the important records of the departments had been boxed up and removed to hiding-places in Virginia. They were hid so well that the British never found them. I lived then where my office is now, on F street, near Fifteenth (about one hundred yards from the Treasury Department), and remember very well the appearance of President Madison's messenger as he passed along New York avenue bearing a message from the President, who was at Bladensburg, to Mrs. Madison, telling her to 'leave the city as soon as possible; the British have arrived.' It was understood in advance where she should go; she received such a message, and she immediately left for a place in Virginia, where she remained, as did the President and several members of his Cabinet, until the British left for Baltimore, eight or ten days after. They have read no doubt, of the death of General Ross near Old Point, at Baltimore, on September 12, following. As he was riding along two boys fired at him and killed him from a large tree in the woods. The boys were killed by bullets, a whole regiment returning their fire. Mrs. Madison left the White House in the charge of a messenger named John Souissa, who died less than ten years ago.

Who was a Frenchman, who cut Gilbert Stuart's portrait of Washington out of its frame and hid it somewhere in the woods, so that the British could not destroy it. I know this from Mr. Souissa and several others who were employed at the White House at the time."

"This matter was the subject of an inquiry recently, was it not?"

"Yes, Mr. Hayes sent for me a couple of months ago. I went to the White House to see him. He asked me to tell him the entire story of the saving of the Stuart portrait of Washington, which is still there, and is the best portrait in existence. I did so. Mr. Hayes said he had been told that the portrait had been out of its frame by a colored man, but I satisfied him it was saved by Mr. Souissa. The Oldest Inhabitants' Association recently investigated the matter thoroughly, and found beyond doubt that it was Souissa who saved the picture. Edward McMann, who was door-keeper at the White House for nearly thirty years, told me several days ago that when the picture was reframed, just before Mr. Madison left the White House, he saw the jagged edges made by the knife, just as Mr. Souissa had described them to him. I satisfied Mr. Hayes on this subject. There was a colored man employed at the White House, named Jerry Smith. Just before Mrs. Madison left the Mansion, after piling all of her clothing and such like things as she could take into trunks, she impressed upon Jerry the importance of saving a fine portrait of her husband. While Mrs. Souissa was cutting the portrait out of its frame, Jerry took the portrait down the street, looking for some one who would promise him they would take care of it to oblige Mrs. Madison. He finally put it in McGraw's restaurant, corner of Fifteenth and F streets, where it was kept until Mrs. Madison returned. Mr. W. W. Corcoran told me some time ago that Souissa relied on Jerry to save the picture. He did not say this of his own knowledge, however, and I am sure he is mistaken. It was his duty to do so, but I don't exactly remember where. Mr. Souissa told me often, but at this moment I forget the place."

"How were the red-coats treated while here?"

"At that time," said Mr. Callan, "the population of Washington did not exceed 4,000 or 5,000. To-day it is 160,000. Everybody was of course frightened. The soldiers committed no depredations except going into grog-shops and ordering what they wanted to drink, which they forgot to pay for. But that was expected. On the day following the entrance of the British—Father Mathew (who was then pastor of St. Patrick's church) heard the confession of a number of British soldiers. He did not appear to be the least bit afraid of them, and continued his regular services the same as if everything was quiet and usual. Father Mathew was the first native American who was ordained priest in this country. He was ordained in Baltimore by Archbishop Carroll. Many of the British soldiers attended the services at his church, marching up from their camp, about the spot where the Botanical garden now is, in squads."

"When was the War Department building burned?"

"On the morning after the 26th General Ross led a detachment of his soldiers up to the War Department. They passed right along Pennsylvania avenue with a lot of other soldiers. I followed the other youngsters up and saw them burn the building. As General Jackson at New Orleans, they issued a bank note, on which was printed 'depository of the United States.' These notes were paid out to the soldiers of Jackson's army; and one of them had got into General Ross' hands. He gave notice that he would burn the bank, ordering the watchman to leave the building, and if there was anyone else inside to tell them to leave instantly. The watchman answered there was no one inside. Just at this time Capt. James Hoban, an architect, came along and explained to General Ross that the bank was not a 'depository of the government' in any sense, and that it had used those words in its notes because of its having issued them; 'and, besides,' said Mr. Hoban, 'if you burn this building, General, you will destroy the property of an old Irish widow who adjoins it.'"

"She is a devoted poor widow who owns all of that property," said Ross, as he rode off without carrying his original intention into effect. The bank building was thus saved. There was no attempt to save any of the furniture or other things in the public buildings burned. Mr. Armstrong, who was Secretary of War, had told every one a week before the British came exactly what they would do, and no one was surprised; indeed, they expected that they would burn more than the War Department."

"Was any one shot by the British in this city?"

"Yes, one man; and only one, if I remember correctly, and he was a crazy man. He had gone insane in consequence of fright at their coming, and on the day they arrived he had rigged himself out in a full suit of officer's clothing, a General's uniform, I believe, with all the regalia, straps, epaulets and other trappings, and, on the next morning in full uniform, and, taking a good position, he cursed them clear out of sight, and oh! how he did swear at them. They stood it some time, but, the fellow getting worse and worse, some of them shot him. Ross said he was very sorry about it when he learned that the man was insane. They should have arrested him, but certainly did not have any right to shoot him. I saw his body as it was being taken away with his spurs on. No red-coat ever went to Georgetown, though they plundered Alexandria unmercifully after they sailed from this city on their way to Baltimore, and they were shipped at North Point on Sept. 14. They agreed they would not fire on Alexandria if everything they asked for was given them, and then proceeded to steal all the tobacco, skinkies and negroes they could carry in their ships."

Attorneys at Law.

It was at "Hoswell's" house in Edinburg, just before starting on the "tour to the Herlides." The company was Sir Walter Scott (afterward Lord Stowell), Sir William Forbes, Mr. Boswell and Dr. Johnson. The conversation turned to the "practice of law."

Sir William Forbes said an honest lawyer should never undertake a cause that he was satisfied was not just one. "Sir," said Dr. Johnson, "a lawyer has no business with the justice, or in his client's case his opinion, and then he is bound to give it honestly. The justice or injustice, of a cause is to be decided by a judge. Consider, sir, what is the purpose of Courts of justice? It is that every man may have his cause fairly tried by men appointed to try causes. A lawyer is not to tell what he knows to be a lie, he is not to produce what he knows to be a false deed. But he is not to assume the province of the judge or the jury, and determine what shall be the effect of evidence or the result of legal argument. As it rarely happens that a man is fit to plead his own cause, lawyers are a class of the community who by study and experience have acquired the art and power of arranging the evidence, and of applying to the points at issue what the law, the justice, or the justice of the cause has undertaken, unless his client asks his opinion, and then he is bound to give it honestly. The justice or injustice, of a cause is to be decided by a judge. Consider, sir, what is the purpose of Courts of justice? It is that every man may have his cause fairly tried by men appointed to try causes. A lawyer is not to tell what he knows to be a lie, he is not to produce what he knows to be a false deed. But he is not to assume the province of the judge or the jury, and determine what shall be the effect of evidence or the result of legal argument. As it rarely happens that a man is fit to plead his own cause, lawyers are a class of the community who by study and experience have acquired the art and power of arranging the evidence, and of applying to the points at issue what the law, the justice, or the justice of the cause has undertaken, unless his client asks his opinion, and then he is bound to give it honestly. The justice or injustice, of a cause is to be decided by a judge. Consider, sir, what is the purpose of Courts of justice? It is that every man may have his cause fairly tried by men appointed to try causes. A lawyer is not to tell what he knows to be a lie, he is not to produce what he knows to be a false deed. But he is not to assume the province of the judge or the jury, and determine what shall be the effect of evidence or the result of legal argument. As it rarely happens that a man is fit to plead his own cause, lawyers are a class of the community who by study and experience have acquired the art and power of arranging the evidence, and of applying to the points at issue what the law, the justice, or the justice of the cause has undertaken, unless his client asks his opinion, and then he is bound to give it honestly. The justice or injustice, of a cause is to be decided by a judge. Consider, sir, what is the purpose of Courts of justice? It is that every man may have his cause fairly tried by men appointed to try causes. A lawyer is not to tell what he knows to be a lie, he is not to produce what he knows to be a false deed. But he is not to assume the province of the judge or the jury, and determine what shall be the effect of evidence or the result of legal argument. As it rarely happens that a man is fit to plead his own cause, lawyers are a class of the community who by study and experience have acquired the art and power of arranging the evidence, and of applying to the points at issue what the law, the justice, or the justice of the cause has undertaken, unless his client asks his opinion, and then he is bound to give it honestly. The justice or injustice, of a cause is to be decided by a judge. Consider, sir, what is the purpose of Courts of justice? It is that every man may have his cause fairly tried by men appointed to try causes. A lawyer is not to tell what he knows to be a lie, he is not to produce what he knows to be a false deed. But he is not to assume the province of the judge or the jury, and determine what shall be the effect of evidence or the result of legal argument. As it rarely happens that a man is fit to plead his own cause, lawyers are a class of the community who by study and experience have acquired the art and power of arranging the evidence, and of applying to the points at issue what the law, the justice, or the justice of the cause has undertaken, unless his

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.00
Six months, .60
Three months, .35
IN ADVANCE.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, 50 cents per square of 10 lines;
50 cents per square for each additional insertion.
Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 27, 1879.

Republican State Ticket.

For Governor,
JAMES A. GARY,
Of Howard County.

For Comptroller,
SAMUEL MALLALIEU,
Of Queen Anne's County.

For Attorney General,
F. M. DARBY,
Of Washington County.

For Clerk of Court of Appeals,
J. T. McCULLOH,
Of Cecil County.

REPUBLICAN PRIMARIES

County Convention.

The Republican voters of Garrett county are hereby requested to assemble in primary meetings, in their several districts on Saturday, Sept. 27th, 1879,

AT 3 O'CLOCK P. M.,

at such place as the respective district committees shall determine, for the purpose of selecting FIVE DELEGATES from each district, to attend a County Convention to be held at Oakland, on

Friday, October 3d, 1879,

for the purpose of nominating two Members for House of Delegates, one Clerk of the Circuit Court, one State's Attorney, one Sheriff, one Register of Wills, three County Commissioners, Three Judges of the Orphans' Court, and County Surveyors.

By order of the Republican State Central Committee for Garrett county.

A. G. STURGIS,
H. E. FLEMING,
W. O. MCGOWIN,
Committee.

Primary Meetings.

To-day (Saturday 27th), the primary meetings throughout the county will assemble pursuant to the call of the State central committee for Garrett county, for the purpose of selecting five delegates from each district to the county convention to be held Friday, Oct. 3d, for the purpose of nominating candidates for the various county offices. We cannot too strongly urge upon the Republican voters of this county the necessity of each district being represented by full delegations and the importance of due care and wisdom in the selection of good representatives to that convention. Men who will ignore all private interests for the welfare of the county and the success of the ticket. In order that this may be attained it is the duty of every Republican voter to go to the primary meetings. The men whom this convention will nominate will have the control of our county affairs for the ensuing two years, and your own personal interest demands your presence at the primaries. Our State convention has given us the strongest ticket we have had in the field for years and one which will win in the coming election. Let us follow their good example and nominate our best men for the various offices—men of integrity, honesty and ability—men whom neither fear nor favor can swerve from the strict performance of their duty. With due care and wisdom in the selection of the men to compose our ticket we will roll up a majority in good round numbers. And as we have said, the only way to insure this success is for the Republicans of the various districts to go to the primary meetings and send good men here as delegates to the convention.

The Democratic brethren call the result in Maine the Dutch taking Holland, but the cold, blue fact remains that they did not expect the Dutch to take Holland.

The St. Louis Globe Democrat thinks the application of the Yazoo plan to John Kelly would make the New York Democracy solid.

The Republican Campaign.

The Republican State executive committee met Wednesday in Baltimore to kindle the fires for "making it hot for the Democrats." In accordance with the pledge of Mr. Gary when nominated. The attendance comprised representation from the three legislative districts of Baltimore and from all the counties except three or four. Henry Stockbridge, chairman, presided. The organization of the committee was completed, (Caroline county only being vacant,) and the programme for the campaign was discussed at length. James A. Gary, F. M. Darby and Samuel Mallalieu, respectively candidates for Governor, attorney general and comptroller of the treasury, were present, and participated in the deliberations. The committee authorized Mr. Stockbridge to select a campaign and a finance committee, which will have direct charge of the canvass. It was stated that the campaign will be opened in earnest not later than the week after next. Speakers from abroad are to assist the home stumpers. Among the list are to be James G. Blaine, of Maine; Gen. Garfield, of Ohio; Secretary Sherman, Wm. M. Everts and Carl Schurz and Frederick Douglass. Mr. Blaine, it is said, has accepted an invitation to come to Maryland. The executive committee was in session five hours, and took steps for a pretty thorough organization of the party all over the State.

General Grant's Return.

It is a most fortunate thing that the impressiveness of the popular demonstration of welcome to Gen. Grant was not marred and belittled by the monster excursion which some vulgar spectators endeavored to get up, or by any of the manufactured enthusiasms which are always within the compass of impudence and energy. Everybody understood that the display of the railway station, the display of bunting and the erection of triumphal archways that signified Lord Beaconsfield's return to London from Berlin were mere stage effects gotten up by his party managers for the proper delivery of his "peace-with-honor" speech, and so far as its display as a popular demonstration is concerned, the whole affair did not rise above the level of a Lord Mayor's show. But of the spontaneity and genuineness of the reception given to General Grant at San Francisco there can be no doubt. It was an immense outpouring of the popular regret and admiration for the greatest soldier of modern times, who more than any other American citizen represents to the world the splendor of our national achievements. We believe that it is owing to this representative character that Gen. Grant chiefly owes the extraordinary honors that he has received during his tour around the world. It is true that he is famous as a great and successful captain—one who had to work upon the sternest stuff that ever a soldier encountered. The battles of our civil war were not fought between masses of dull and stolid animals, compacted by discipline into a fighting machine, and scattering when discipline was broken, but between men who, in addition to their military discipline, were impelled and sustained by the strong conviction and the ardent patriotism which bring all the noble qualities of manhood into activity. In a war in which armies might be defeated but not routed, it was not possible to decide the issue by a few decisive engagements, as in European warfare, and to have been successful in such a contest was proof of a great general. But mere military fame alone would not account for the marked distinction with which Gen. Grant has been treated by foreign nations, and certainly the fact that he is an ex-President of the Republic affords no explanation. The truth is honor was done to the greatness of the American nation in the person of her most illustrious citizen. Our material progress, our fecundity in useful inventions, our rapid increase in population and the amplitude of our revenues impress foreign nations with wonder. The breaking out of the civil war seemed to justify the predictions of the inherent weakness of democratic institutions that had been so constantly used to the discredit of our government, but the suppression of the rebellion after four years of gigantic conflict, and the promptitude with which the disbanded hundreds of thousands of soldiers betook themselves to the accomplishment of magnificent victories of peace baffled the expectations of those who contemned the government of the people, and filled them with an amazement that the later events of our history has steadily increased. The ease with which our enormous burden of debt was carried and the public credit upheld; the strength and sobriety of political conduct, as evidenced by the manner in which was borne the severe trial of financial panic and commercial distress; the stupendous productive capacity of our people which is enabling us to seize upon markets of Europe, confound the opponents of free institutions, and invest our republic with a splendor that is a light unto all nations. This is the light that has rested upon General Grant, and given him a distinction beyond what even a greater military renown than his could have conferred. All of his fellow-citizens feel proud of the honors that have been paid to the nation's representative, and will join in welcoming him home again. His fame is now at its most exalted point; he will undoubtedly go down to posterity as the greatest figure of our era, and we could not but regard it as a sacrifice of his reputation if it should again be dragged by party necessities into the arena of politics. —Baltimore American.

Facts to Consider.

The Democratic party have control of the legislative branch of this government, with all its enormous powers and privileges.

What is the Democratic party, and what are its aims?

In the first place, it is controlled by, and largely composed of persons lately in arms against the government. These persons are not "reconstructed" and honorable men who accept the results of the war, but scheming, plotting, dangerous persons, who proclaim their continued adherence to State sovereignty, defy the amendments to the Constitution, and boldly trample upon the laws.

The proportion which the so-called, Union Democratic sentiment of the North bears to this Mexican element will be seen by the relative strength of the two classes in Congress.

The Senate has 40 Democratic members, 12 of whom are from the North and 28 from the South.

The House has 155 Democratic members, 55 from the North and 100 from the South. In both houses the ex-Confederates control every important committee, and the whole legislative machinery of the country is therefore in the hands of those not only disloyal to the Union, but full of hatred of the North and her institutions.

We call particular attention to a few interesting facts regarding this dangerous predominance of the unrefined, unprogressive, and semi-barbaric element of the South in our politics.

In the States having a majority of Democratic members in Congress there are 3,722,388 persons who cannot read; in the States having a Republican majority there are, of this class, but 697,238.

In the Democratic States above named the wealth, according to the last census, was $9,114,681,561; in the Republican States, $21,189,329,861; and this counts Ohio as Democratic, which, of course, is unjust, as at the last election she cast 10,000 more Republican than Democratic votes.

These Democratic States paid to the government in customs revenue last year $7,487,094; the Republican States paid $116,212,319.

From 1866 to 1878 the government was compelled to collect from the people over two thousand millions of dollars as internal revenue. Of this amount the late rebel States paid a trifle over two hundred millions, while the rest of the country paid over eighteen hundred millions.

The single State of Illinois $10,000,000 more than the whole Confederacy combined, while New York paid nearly twice as much.

We call attention to these facts now to show the supreme folly of intrusting to the South the vast interest of the North, rich in wealth, intelligence, arts, manufactures, and all that goes to make a people grand, prosperous, and powerful.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

(Special Correspondence to The Republican.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 23, 1879.

The elections so far held and the news from pending campaigns having pretty well established the returning supremacy of the Republican party, people are discussing probable measures to promote the material welfare of the people. The returning tide of prosperity is notoriously due to Republican legislation. Despite Democratic efforts to break down protection to home industries, and later to ruin the credit of the country and carry down private business with it, the Republican policy has succeeded, and our industries have thriven and grown up with the credit of the Government and the confidence of all classes. To-day we are on the flood of prosperity in all the branches of industry.

But our productive resources are rapidly growing, and we must prepare the way to new markets in order to keep up our prosperity. We must extend our foreign trade, and especially we must resist the encroachments of the English monopolists, who are trying to crowd us from all the best markets in the world. South America is a rich field for the disposal of our productions of all kinds and the United States can sell cheaper than any other country. Yet we do not get one-twentieth the trade there that England gets simply because England provides, by liberal subsidies for steam ship lines, a sure and steady outlet for all her citizens can produce. And so one-sided is this system that English merchants have a monopoly of trade even in American goods, and besides getting a profit on them, get all the compensation for carrying these goods abroad. The people of this country use a large amount of the products of South America, particularly coffee, and there is no reason why they should not more than pay for all in their own products and receive a handsome profit. This is one of the subjects which should early engage the attention of Congress and the Government. It received a partial discussion last winter, on the bill to establish postal steamship lines from New York and New Orleans to Brazil, but the measure was defeated by such prejudice against its supposed author and beneficiary, Mr. John Roush. But Mr. Roush has no more to do with it than any other ship builder, manufacturer or merchant, and will take no hand in urging any special measure. He believes with Senator Blaine and other leading Republicans that the government should come to the aid of the people in the endeavor to head off the British monopolists and give our industrial people a fair chance. Congress should take a broad view of this subject, and help to open up markets wherever we can spread our trade and commerce.

Gen. Grant's enthusiastic reception in California has again raised the question whether he will enter politics again. Many of his best friends say he will not, but those who are known as "Grant men" are using his reception as a means of promoting his or their political fortunes.

Secretary Sherman announces that gold-leaders will be redeemed in gold, if desired at the Treasury Department or at the sub-treasury in New York. Gold will also be paid out in large amounts for dues from the Government. In fact, the confidence of the people in the Republican party is so great that greenbacks are really more valuable for ordinary purposes than gold, and the latter is consequently accumulating faster than it is wanted. Any body can have gold who wants to exchange other money, and the poor man's dollar is literally as good as the rich man's, as a result of Republican management. This is what makes the Democratic-Greenback fanatics so mad.

LOGAN.

TELEGRAPHIC.

A BIG CELEBRATION AT CUMBERLAND.

CUMBERLAND, MD., Sept. 22.—The emancipation celebration here to-day was a success and two thousand strangers were present. Hon. Frederick Douglass spoke for two hours, and alluded to the time, not long ago, when a demonstration such as this would have been impossible in Cumberland; when it would not have been thought safe for one to venture up here among these Maryland mountains; but to-day I was met at the station by the sound of music, introduced to some prominent citizens and had the pleasure of riding alongside of your mayor, and have not received a single brick. All classes of American people can see that an event like this may be very properly celebrated. It is an occurrence without a parallel in history. The great world knows the negro's past by heart; his history may be traced like a wounded man through a crowd by his blood. Slavery is ended. It is gone, gone, gone forever. The old masters do not want it, and it belongs to the past. The chains are broken, and we are citizens naturally equal to the white race, but practically we are far below and behind them. They can do what we cannot do. Is it desirable for us to remain behind? If it is, let us stay behind. It is not our fault. The gateway of knowledge has been flung open, and we are not to linger in the past. We have got to take hold of opportunities that are offered to us and to make the best of it. I ran away not because I disliked my master, but because I loved liberty. Some people say go away, but my advice is to get something where you are. We have got to cultivate and respect the rights of the white race. To them I would say, your safety is to be found in the intelligence of the negro. Don't Ku-Klux him, don't shoot him down, but try him.

NOMINATED BY THE ROLTERS.

ALBANY, Sept. 20.—Edward Newcomb, of this city, was to-day nominated by the anti-Robinson section of the Democratic party for Senator. An entire county ticket was also nominated. Resolutions were adopted unanimously endorsing John Kelly for Governor. The convention was very largely attended.

DARK HE BY IT?

WASHINGTON, September 22.—It is stated that Senator Lamar was at last made up his mind out the assassination of Dixon by the Yazooites ought to be denounced. It is said that a few days ago Mr. Lamar told a friend that in a political speech which he expected to make soon at Yazoo City he intended to condemn the so-called Yazoo plan in strong terms. His alleged reason for not having spoken on the subject before is that he was desirous to keep silent until he could face the perpetrators of the deed. Others, who claim to know something about the secret motives of the chivalrous senator, however, suggest that his delay in the matter was due more to the fact that he wanted to wait to note the effect of the Yazoo affair upon the public mind, and that now, after a careful observation, he is convinced, that it will be good policy for him to denounce the outrage. Still, there is no certainty that the senator will carry out his intention in this regard. A Mississippian, who has been handed in glove with the Yazoo Democracy since 1875, says that Mr. Lamar will never dare to say what he has expressed his intention of saying publicly in Yazoo county.

The fact is, Senator Lamar will gain very little in his state by taking any part in the Yazoo affair. Right or wrong, the people will not tolerate a censure of the act, if for no other reason than that it has been made somewhat a political issue in the North. But right here comes the secret of Mr. Lamar's sudden outburst of apparent indignation. It is not of his own accord that he proposes to go to Yazoo on his fault finding mission. The Democratic leaders in the North are afraid of the effect which the Yazoo tales will have, especially in Ohio, and they want somebody to rise up, even at this late day, and denounce it. That somebody must be a Mississippian, and Mr. Lamar has been made to believe that he ought to be the man. What ever haste there may be about the matter will be due probably to the fact that Gen. Green B. Raum, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who is just about to take the stump for Foster in Ohio, has been posting up, especially on such Southern questions as those arising out of the Chisholm and Dixon disturbances in De Kalb and Yazoo counties. Frank Dixon, the brother of the murdered Yazooite, has seen fit to tell all he knows about the inside workings of the red shirts in Mississippi, and a few days ago called at the office of the Commissioner, and made a full and fearless statement of the shot-gun methods of the Yazoo brigades. Dixon was a constant companion of his dead brother, and frequently took part in the "bigger hunts" and star chamber conclaves of the Democratic leaders, and is capable of telling some interesting facts about the way in which the Republicans were defeated and disbanded in Yazoo county.

Gen. Raum has a full supply of such matter, and will soon begin to unload it in Ohio. It is not unnatural, therefore, that some sort of a plan should be devised to offset the truth about these high handed, bloody crimes, against which no Mississippi Democrat has yet raised his voice.

THE GREAT CHIEFTAIN'S WELCOME.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 20.—The steamer City of Tokio was telegraphed as thirty miles outside the heads at half-past three o'clock this afternoon. Immediately on receipt of the intelligence that the City of Tokio was nearing port the reception committee, consisting of Frank M. Pixley, ex-Senator Cole, General Miller and P. B. Cornwell repaired to the tug Mellin Griffith, lying with steam up at the Pacific mill dock and at once started to meet the incoming steamer. The Griffith stood well out to sea, and several miles outside the heads met the Tokio coming in. The tug drew alongside, and the executive committee, quarantine officer and custom house officials, and a number of representatives of the press boarded her. No ceremony was observed, except the general shaking of hands, and after the committee had announced the object of their visit and informed Gen. Grant of the reception prepared for him the conversation became general as the City of Tokio continued her course. Soon after the government steamer McPherson came alongside, and Major General McDowell, commanding the division of the Pacific, accompanied by his staff, boarded the Tokio and rejoined his old comrades in arms. While this was occurring the general committee of arrangements, with several thousand invited guests, assembled on board the largest side wheel Pacific mail steamer China and a number of smaller steamers, while tugs took the squadrons of the San Francisco and Pacific yacht clubs in tow and started down the channel.

In the meantime it seemed as though the entire population of the city—men, women and children—had sought positions from which a view of the naval pageant could be obtained. Every eminence commanding a view of the channel was black with assembled thousands. From every flag-staff in the city flags were flying, and the shipping along the city front was brilliantly decked with ensigns, festooned flags and steamers. The impatient crowds that covered the hilltops straining their eyes to catch the first glimpse of the Tokio. A hundred times the cry was raised. "There she is," as chance arrivals came in view between the heads. It was half past 5 o'clock when a puff of white smoke from off the earthworks back of and above Fort Point and the booming of a heavy gun announced that the steamer was near at hand. Another and another followed in rapid succession. Fort Point next joined in the cannonade, firing both casemate and barbette guns, and the battery at Lime Point added its thunders to the voice of welcome. In a few moments the entrance to the harbor was veiled in wreaths of smoke, and as the batteries of Angle Island, Block Point and Alcatraz opened fire in succession, the whole channel was soon shrouded in clouds from their rapid discharges.

On the arrival of the steamship Gen. Grant and party and the committee were transferred to a ferry-boat. They landed at 7:30 P. M. when Mayor Bryant delivered a brief but eloquent address of welcome. General Grant responded in a few brief sentences, returning thanks for the welcome extended to him. He was then conducted to his carriage. Mayor Bryant accompanying him, while various committees and other gentlemen in attendance repaired to their own carriages. The gates of the dock were then opened, and the vehicles moved forward and took their places in line. As the carriage containing General Grant appeared cheer after cheer went up, and the crowd pressed forward, and swayed from side to side in its efforts to obtain a passing glance of the familiar lineaments of the great captain.

An immense procession was then formed and the parade was had. Amid tremendous cheers of the crowd, discharges of cannon, ringing of bells and screaming of whistles, the procession started up Market street. Bonfires blazed at the street corners, illuminations lit up every window, and the glare of Roman candles and electric lights made the broad thoroughfare as bright as day. Under a continuous archway of flags, banners and festooned draperies, the procession moved up Market street to Montgomery, and turned down the latter street. Crowds blocked the sidewalks, cheer after cheer rolled along the whole line of march, and almost drowned the martial strains of the numerous bands. Broad ensigns tossed in the night's wind, glowing with the light of the fires and glare of rockets and fire balls, the light mist hovering over the city reflected light of fire works and illuminations until the heavens seemed ablaze. Not only the streets on the march, but the cross streets between Market street and Montgomery avenue were brilliant with decorations. Even the Chinese quarter seemed to have caught the infection, and from hundreds of stalls the great dragon flag flamed its fantastic blazonry beside the stars and stripes. Continuing its march the procession moved through Montgomery avenue to Kearney street. Here, if possible, the crowds were still more dense and enthusiastic, and the display of fireworks, electric lights and every conceivable means of illumination of increased brilliancy. On arriving at Market street the procession, moving up a few blocks, counter-marched to the Palace Hotel. Here a magnificent arch forty feet in height spanned New Montgomery street blazoned with national colors and bearing the inscription "Welcome to Grant."

At this point the carriage containing the General was drawn up, while the procession marched in review; cheer after cheer rending the air as division after division passed by. On the conclusion of the review the various organizations were dismissed, and General Grant was conducted to his quarters at the Palace Hotel, which had been specially prepared and furnished for his reception. All streets leading to the Palace Hotel were packed with a dense throng, through which the procession forced its way with great difficulty. Thousands were clamoring for admittance, but crowds of police at the entrances denied ingress to all but those holding tickets.

As soon as notice was received of the approach of the City of Tokio the news was flashed all over the Pacific coast, and this evening dispatches are pouring into the office of the California Associated Press from interior cities and towns of California and Nevada announcing that the news was received with demonstration only second to the reception in this city. Flags are flying, streets decorated, guns and muskets booming. Parades, bonfires, fireworks, and every token of joy and enthusiasm abound.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.00
Six months, .60
Three months, .35
ISSUABLE IN ADVANCE.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, 3 per square of 8 lines;
second insertion, 2 per square of 8 lines;
third insertion, 1 per square of 8 lines;
Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, NOV. 4, 1879.

Republican State Ticket.

For Governor,
JAMES A. GARY,
Of Howard County.

For Comptroller,
SAMUEL MALLALIEU,
Of Queen Anne's County.

For Attorney General,
F. M. DABBY,
Of Washington County.

For Clerk of Court of Appeals,
J. T. McCULLOUGH,
Of Cecil County.

The net Republican gains in the States which have voted this fall is 72,000.

The workmen of New York city have endorsed the nomination of John Kelly for Governor.

The Republican primaries last Saturday were more largely attended than any that have been held in this county since its formation. Republicans in every district seem alive and sanguine of the success of our entire ticket this fall by a handsome majority.

Two years ago Pacheco, Republican candidate for Congress in the Fourth California district, was elected by a majority of one. The Democratic House gave the seat to his Democratic opponent. This year Pacheco has a plurality of 2,650 over the Democratic candidate, and 5,128 over the Workingman's candidate.

James A. Gary, the Republican candidate for Governor, is a gentleman of the highest qualifications, and of the most successful in the industrial progress of our State; he has always shown himself mindful of the rights of labor; and has acted towards his employees with an assiduous kindness and thoughtfulness that show him to be a true friend to the workmen. His election to the office of Governor would be a guarantee of just and economical government.

A number of Democrats in our county appear to lay great stress upon the fact that Mr. Hamilton, their candidate for Governor, has been recognized as an opponent of the Ring for several years, and that his nomination puts an end to the domination of the ring. Never was there a more false assumption even in politics than this claim. While it is a fact that Mr. Hamilton, four years ago, was slaughtered by the Ring, it is also a further fact that he was, this year, nominated by the same men who accomplished his defeat on the former occasion.

Let it be kept before the people that the Republican party is the only national party in the country; the only party that opposes repudiation in every form, the party that has brought about resumption of specie payments, the party that ever has and ever will oppose the pernicious assumptions of State's rights doctrines, that acknowledges the Constitution to be the supreme law of the land; whilst the Democratic party, together with the solid South has favored repudiation, and is filled with greenbackers, communists and every other element that's at war with the best interests of our country.

The Democratic legislative candidates in Worcester county publish a card, declaring that they "will persistently advocate the repeal of the law exempting mortgages from taxation," so as to make all persons contribute to the support of the government, "according to his actual worth in real or personal property," as the constitution requires. This is rather rough on Mr. Hamilton, who, they reputed to be a millionaire, is assessed for about $75,000 in Washington county, and who has now invested in mortgages in that county about $60,000, yielding him an annual income of nearly $3,500, on which, of course, he pays no taxes.

Plain Talk.

Cal. E. T. Joyce, who the Ring defeated for re-nomination for the Senate, published in the Baltimore Herald of Tuesday last, the reason why Gorman & Co. opposed him.
He says:

"My opinion is that my defeat was in consequence of my opposition to certain corrupt measures foisted upon the Legislature while I was a member of that body. One of them was a bill making an appropriation of $221,000 to fit up the House of Correction, of which $85,000 were to be for gas and water arrangements, $6,000 for a kitchen, $30,000 for furniture, $50,000 to build a work shop and $50,000 to feed the inmates for 1876 and 1877, whereas the building was not to be completed until 1878."

"Afterwards a deficiency bill was offered by Mr. A. P. Gorman to appropriate $25,000 to feed the inmates of that institution for 1877, at which time there were no inmates nor any accommodations for them."

"My official examination of the State cattle scales during the legislative session of 1876 was in conjunction with Mr. Gorman, who appealed to me to make a general report, and cover up the deliberate swindling of public funds. But I, knowing myself to be a sworn servant of the people, and knowing that the weight of five stock had been published by the Comptroller as a defaulter, determined to make a thorough investigation and to give that official a chance to vindicate himself. In that investigation I found that all the money collected at the scales for several years had been spent in the form of 'improvement and salary.' The salaries, in a number of instances, having been paid to persons who had never rendered any service whatever.
I also found the office $8,000 in debt.
Since the cleansing of the department it has yielded to the State over $14,000 per annum. Mr. Gorman, one of the committee, refused to sign the report which the committee made to the Senate, as the official records of that body will show."

"I also refused to introduce a bill to appropriate $4,000 to run a telegraph line from Police Headquarters in Baltimore to the House of Correction; said bill also asking an appropriation of $1,500 per annum as salary for a superintendent of the same
—the position now held by Mr. J.
Frank Morrison. Such bill was introduced by Gorman and engineered by Mr. Morrison, the latter stating that all he wanted was the salary. I have spoken to four Senators who are recorded as having voted for said bill, and they say they had never seen or heard of it."

"I also condemned and utterly disapproved of the system of placing the names of ex-members of the Legislature on the pay rolls of the State tobacco warehouses, where they draw a salary without doing any service."

"I also refused to pledge myself to support Hon. William T. Hamilton for the United States Senate and have A. P. Gorman take the gubernatorial office, because I believed in the plan that Gorman was at that time President of the Maryland Senate, and therefore, in the line of succession to the Governor's chair."

Must Have a Change.

The Old Democrat of Cumberland
says:

"That there are matters to be considered by the next Legislature of more importance to the people than the election of Mr. Gorman to the U.
S. Senate. Taxless offices are to be abolished, unauthorized expenditure of public money is to be stopped, taxes are to be reduced and a system of economical government inaugurated. Unless this is guaranteed to the people our chances of success are lessened."

But the people have no guarantee that such things will be done. On the contrary they have every assurance in the world that unless a Republican Legislature is elected these things will not be done. The only way under Heaven they can be accomplished is by turning the State over into new hands. The State has been thoroughly debauched under Democratic rule and the people are beginning to see it. Discontent is everywhere prevalent. Many honest Democrats think these reforms, which they themselves loudly call for, can be brought about within their party lines. Sooner or later they will find out their mistake. They acknowledge the evils. Why don't they take the only feasible means of remedying them, and that is by a transfer of power.—Annapolis Gazette.

Foreign gold is now pouring into the United States at an average rate of $750,000 per day. No such parallel to the accumulation of gold has ever been furnished in his history of this country. The largest amount of coin and bullion ever imported by us in any single year was in 1877, when the sum reached $10,771,000, but that year we exported $13,000,000, leaving a balance of only $27,000,000 in our favor. More than that amount has been imported during the past six weeks.

The Cumberland News says: "The ticket made by our convention last Thursday is growing in strength.
Following the nominations there was certain natural dissatisfaction, due to individual disappointment, but not nearly as much in this case as we have seen in others. But this is rapidly dying out, and we hear an united expression of determination to go to work to elect the ticket."

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 30, 1879.

Among the amusing features of the cavass this year, none has created so much merriment as the little scheme to which Ewing has resorted in Ohio to get out crowds from his meeting. On several occasions lately prizes were given to the largest delegation from the townships, and a great effort was made to make the meeting a grand success. Notwithstanding this and that Voorhees and other heroes are advertised, the masses fail to appear in numbers at all creditable to the Democratic usage. The Democratic committee of one hundred, under direction of Thompson, is manually active at work to secure the Legislature, so it is reported here, and that worthy and Thurman are not paying great attention to Ewing's meetings, preferring the still hunt as more effective in promoting Thurman's struggle for re-election to the Senatorship.

A local paper has a long interview with a friend of Tilden, who tells him of school. He says that the New York candidate does not expose the Southern Brigadiers, and is really alarmed at the effect of their action on the North. This agrees with what another interviewer reports of Tilden. Sammy is a man of sagacity, and he knows that the style of carrying elections now prevalent in the South will not improve the prospects of the Democrats of the North, but will reduce the value and desirableness of the Democratic Presidential nomination.

Secretary McFary has left here for Iowa to be gone about a week. His family, who accompanied him West, will not return, it is thought, to Washington, as the Secretary's nomination to succeed Judge Dillon will be among the first sent to the Senate
upon the reassembling of Congress in December next.

The Democrats are in despair over the apparent failure of their schemes to create differences, or even the appearance of differences in the Republican ranks. They have tried to have it that Senator Blaine and Senator Sherman had quarreled, and the former would do nothing to help Foster in Ohio. The answer comes in the report that Mr. Blaine is addressing immense and enthusiastic audiences in Ohio, and nobody is doing more than to aid in Foster's election. The fact is, the Republicans everywhere are united, harmonious and confident. Everything looks cheerful before them, and why shouldn't it?

The boastful Lamar has not yet as he promised, denounced the Yazoo murderers. He dares not do it. He has two faces, one for the North and one for the South, but his Northern face he never exhibits in Mississippi. He has wit enough to know that the Yazoo plan is fatal to Democratic hopes in the North, and without some aid from the North the plan of the usurpationists will come to naught.

The Greenbackers are making great threats of what they will do this winter, but it is probable their threats will result in mere empty boasting. The Warner bill will sleep comfortably in the Senate Finance Committee, and whatever other mischief they propose will receive his quietus by the grand verdict to be recorded in the Republican victories this fall.

LOGAN.

The people want a Reform Legislature which shall lay the ax at the root of the many abuses and corrup-
tions under which the State suffers, and which can only be reached and cured by State legislation. The only men that can be depended upon for measures of reform are those who are imbued with the spirit of reform, and who are pledged to the work of reform. The people have been looking for such men in the Democratic ranks since 1867, and failing to find them, are now seeking them elsewhere; and the result will be that a majority of the Delegates to the next House from the counties will not be unaffiliated Democrats, but independents and Republicans. What Baltimore city will do, depends of course upon whether the Ring Masters will give the people a fair vote. With a half chance, the Unaffiliated will be driven to the wall there, too.

Centerville Maryland Citizen, (rep.)
"Reports from Kent county are to the effect that the independent movement there can prevent the frauds usually perpetrated in the First district by voting parties from Debaware on names that should be stricken from the registration lists. Similar cheering reports reach us from Dorchester. Throughout all the counties of the State there appears a growing feeling of distrust with Democratic rule, and the officials of that party are becoming thoroughly alarmed. And well they may be."

A general improvement in business is apparent to all who will take the trouble to make even a partial investigation. The improvement is strikingly illustrated by the experience of an agent of the Albany and Rensselaer Iron and Steel Company who has been on a prolonged tour searching for rolling mill hands. He found no idle workers in the State of Pennsylvania, found but a very small number in Massachusetts and secured only four in Maine. In many cases the volume of business for the past six months shows a very decided increase over that of any corresponding period since 1873, and in every instance the volume of business thus far in the present year is considerable in advance of the past season. From every quarter we receive the good news that business is increasing. Secretary Swank, of the American Iron and Steel Association is reported to have said: "There will be more iron and steel turned out in the United States this year than in any one year in the annals of the country. When I speak of iron and steel I embrace categorically more than sheet iron, more plate and sheet iron, more pig iron, more Bessemer steel, and more crucible steel. What is better, this large production is in answer to the demand, and manufactures are not, as in many past years, piling up stock in order to keep the farmers in blast. Prices have not advanced to any considerable extent, yet they are from 10 to 15 per cent higher than last fall when figures were lower than ever before in the country. Our present condition is decidedly encouraging." As to the future, he prophesies that the present activity in all branches of the iron and steel trade will continue for at least a year to come, and draws attention to the fact that nearly all the favorably situated rolling mills throughout the country are in operation, and many of them have orders ahead for several months.

Next month, just as soon as the last vestige of the yellow fever disappears, a sub-committee of the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections will proceed to New Orleans to resume the investigation of the Louisiana contested case of Spoil-ord against Kellogg. Damaging as the testimony already adduced is to the contestant, Spoilord, it is not by any means certain that the Democrats will permit Senator Kellogg to retain his seat. Their action in the premises will be governed entirely by the result of the fall elections and their prospects of retaining control of the Senate after March 4, 1881, without the assistance of some Western Celtic senator from Louisiana. That Spoilord will be admitted in Kellogg's place is something that is hardly looked for, even from an unscrupulous and partisan majority;
but it is not doubted if one more Democratic vote should be needed, that Kellogg and Spoilord will both be declared not entitled to seats as senators. This will answer every purpose, because Louisiana, being in Democratic hands, will, of course, return a Democratic senator. By this means do the Democrats expect, if it else fails, to retain their majority in the Senate.

The Centerville Maryland Citizen (Rep.) points out that it is "the same old ring" that is running Mr. Hamilton. It says: "Mr. Hamilton is but a mask thrown over the face of the ring, and, should he be elected,
will be no improvement on the present fraudulently elected incumbent. It will be remembered that in 1875
Mr. Teackle Wallis, in a published letter, whilst complimentary to Mr.
Carroll's personal virtues, took the position that he could not divest himself of the influences of those who would elect him. Mr. Carroll indignantly replied and declared himself preferring above such influences. How predictable has Mr. Carroll's administration proven Mr. Wallis' words to have been? Mr. Hamilton will be in the same position. Mr. Gorman, who represents the ring in all its odiousness, will be the power behind the throne, and the same ring domination will continue to exist as it has existed in the past. Are the people of Maryland willing that the ring power shall be perpetuated? If so, vote for Hamilton and his colleagues."

Continuing its bold and sensible advice to Southerners, the Vicksburg (Miss.) Herald (Dem.) speaks of the state-rights agitation: "So long as the United States does not infringe more upon the rights of States than it is doing at present, we need not feel called upon to assert that there is an antagonism between the central government and the different states.
It cannot be disputed that all the small States in the Union are apparently free. They have the ballot, they have representation, they have trial by jury, the writ of freedom, and we cannot call to mind any thing necessary to freedom they have not. It is our opinion, indeed, that many in the South are a little too free with their shot-guns."

"I'm a State's Rights man," said
a profound political thinker, as he removed his corn cob pipe from his mouth. "I'm for home rule and local self-government. I'm for the State as agn the General Government; for the county as agn the State; for the city as agn the county; for the ward as agn the city;
for my family as agn the ward, and
for me as agn all the rest of the family. I consider that this is what our forefathers fit for."

Rain and dry rain we mean everything that intoxicates is the enemy of our physical, moral, mental, social and financial condition. It destroys strength and makes of man a poor creature being—a disgrace to himself and his race. It destroys all of his early training and transforms the bright and happy youth into a poor criminal, and makes him seek the jail as his home and abiding place.
It debases reason and reduces the strong minded intellectual man to an idiot and imbecile, and finally brings him to an insane asylum—the home of those who are more unfortunate than the brute creation who enjoy instinct. It destroys all his finer sensibilities and makes of the refined and courteous gentleman a barbarian.
It destroys the kind father and loving husband, and replaces him with a brute—yes, a being worse than a brute, for the brute mother never foresakes or illuses her offspring. It destroys the love and affection existing between husband and wife, and father and children. It effectually destroys the love that the tender child has for its father. It robs man of his hard earnings, makes him poor indeed, robbing him of his purse and his good name. It clothes him in rags and makes him a pauper upon the land and a dependent upon his fellow man. It brings him woe and sorrow, and causes him to be the unwilling inheritor of the degradations of life. Let the man who drinks stop and ask him if he wants the above to be the history of his life. If you go on in your drinking you will get all and more of this fearful picture. If not, stop at once and a happy and blessed life will be your portion.

In the honest endeavor to improve their condition many colored people began last spring to migrate from the Southern to the Western States, taking Tennessee as a starting point and Kansas as a receiving depot.
They regarded the free soil State as a favorable one to locate in, and one where they might receive due protection and encouragement. They considered that circumstances over which they had no control forced them to adopt the expedient of migration to escape persecution. Despite the distressing accounts published of the sufferings of that class after arriving at their destination the experiment has not been a total failure. All who are able to work obtain employment, and are, so to speak, self-supporting. They are considered valuable adjuncts to agricultural labor, and as such are distinguished over the State. Of course, there has been some sickness among them, and some many have inquired others from toil, but the invalid and the infirm received at least comfort and assistance from private benevolence, and in no instance have they been an incumbrance to the State or a target for shotguns.

The Republican party for the last decade has complained of the very abuse which the tax-payers' convention in some of the counties are now denouncing. Its speakers on the stump its conventions through their platforms, and its journals have mitigated the same complaints. The Ring, that has so long controlled the State, was charged with being responsible for these abuses, extrava-
gances and gross oppression of the people. But the Ring, regardless of
all such complaints, so long as its
power was not jeopardized, continued
its career, and not only did not attempt any legislation offering redress and relief, but opposed and prevented anything of the kind. Now feeling that his days are numbered,
that the verdict, "murderer of public confidence," is about being pronounced upon it,—it narrates with delicious candor the evils under which we are laboring in Maryland, and offers to undertake the task of abolishing them. Anybody believe that such an offer will be honestly carried out?
The disguise is altogether too thin!

There are eighty-eight counties in Ohio, of which forty are Democratic,
and in twenty-four of these there have been of late years gross frauds and defalcations. The Cincinnati Gazette prints the list of defalcations reported, making up the imposing total of $1,391,251. Butler county, which gives the largest Democratic vote of any county in the State, heads the list with $596,500. Fairfield, another Democratic stronghold, shows up for $142,215. This is rather a suggestive showing for local self-government under Democratic an-spices in Ohio.

"I'm a State's Rights man," said
a profound political thinker, as he
removed his corn cob pipe from his
mouth. "I'm for home rule and local self-government. I'm for the State as agn the General Government; for the county as agn the State; for the city as agn the county; for the ward as agn the city;
for my family as agn the ward, and
for me as agn all the rest of the family. I consider that this is what our forefathers fit for."

Gold is coming into this country with a rush. The New York Tribune says that "September will undoubtedly surpass any previous month in the history of this country in respect to imports of specie. The amount received during the last week was $8,500,000, which is more than double the largest weeks receipts of specie ever before recorded." In less than half the month $12,687,910 in specie
have been received in New York.
"Within six weeks $21,515,513 in specie has actually arrived" in that port. This large inflow of gold will be increased during the coming months by the heavy demand from England for American food supplies.
The London Economist, in a recent issue, estimates that "Great Britain will require from abroad 116,000,000 bushels of wheat, at a probable cost of $228,000,000" and adds, "at a moderate estimate we may expect to have to pay fifteen or sixteen millions of pounds more for our bread this year than last."

TELEGRAPHIC.

MR. TILDEN'S INCOME TAX.

New York, Sept. 27.—In the suit brought by the United States against Samuel J. Tilden to recover certain sums alleged to be due and owing from him for income taxes during the years 1863 and 1872, inclusive, over and above amounts paid by Tilden for income taxes, defendant's counsel a few days ago made a motion for a bill of particulars. Judge Choate, United States District Court, this morning rendered an elaborate decision, denying the motion for bill of particulars upon the well-settled rule of practice relating to the matter of bills of particulars. His honor says: "The government is not to be presumed to know what any man's income is, still less the several parts of which it is made up. Every man is to be presumed to know these things with entire certainty. While the officers of the government may have such credible information as to a tax payer's income as makes it proper, and bring suit to recover an excess of income tax due because that paid, that information may not be so specific or detailed as to enable the district attorney in advance of trial, to set forth items with certainty." On the proof that the plaintiff is in fact unable to furnish a bill of particulars,
his honor says it is not to be inferred from this fact, admitted by the district attorney, that this suit is a mere fishing suit, brought for a general inquisition into the private affairs of the defendant.

MR. TILDEN'S POLITICAL FUTURE.

WASHINGTON, September 28.—
Mr. Tilden has been heard from again. One of his friends, a gentleman who has been identified somewhat prominently with his political interest, arrived here this morning, having spent two days with him at his country seat on the Hudson.
Mr. Tilden is represented as taking a very deep personal interest in the re-election of Governor Robinson, not so much on account of the influence such an event will have upon his prospects for the Democratic nomination, as his desire to crush Jo n Kelly and Tammany Hall.

"Mr. Tilden is straining every nerve to elect Governor Robinson," said his friend to the writer. "He is doing more for him and working harder than if he himself was the candidate. All of Mr. Tilden's political sagacity and large experience are being brought into play, and he is contributing literally from his personal means the better to carry out his plan of campaign and win the fight. Mr. Tilden has made up his mind to destroy John Kelly and his gang politically, in retaliation of their persistent attacks upon him."

Concerning the presidency, Mr.
Tilden's friend stated that the Gramercy Park statesman did not give himself half as much concern about the matter as people generally supposed. The fact was that Mr. Tilden did not value a Democratic nomination for president so highly now as formerly. The Southern Democracy had handicapped the Northern branch of the party to an alarming extent by their course during the past two years. The attitude of the Southern Democrats upon the financial question, their many blunders in Congress, the repudiation of their state debts, their intolerance and outrageous treatment of those who differed with them in politics, their denial of the rights of the colored citizens, who, in several parts of the South, had been reduced to a condition a hundred fold worse than slavery, and, lastly, the many unparalleled and condemned political assas-inations—all these things Mr. Tilden thought were not calculated to make the Democratic nomination for president very desirable to a candidate who did not want to run simply for the honor of being defeated. Mr.
Tilden, judging from the tenor of his friend's expressions, is satisfied that he can get the nomination if he should want it, but he is not sure that it will be worth his while to take it.

LOCAL NEWS.

The weather of late has been delightful.

—Mr. M. R. Hamill has moved into the house vacated by Mr. Cupp.

—Highest cash prices paid for pheasants and sheep pelts at Offutt's.

—Mr. John Bailey has broken ground for the addition to his hotel.

—Mr. Jno. Taylor and family have removed to Connellsville, Pa.

—Now on exhibition and for sale at Offutt's, a large variety of ladies' cloaks.

—Attend the Republican Mass-Meeting at Deer Park Saturday afternoon, 11th, at 2 o'clock.

—The largest and cheapest line of gun boots, coats, etc., is to be found at Offutt's.

—J. B. Randall, Esq., of Ohio, who has been spending several weeks in town, left for his home last week.

—Miss Laura M. Lang, of this place, is visiting at Patterson's Depot, West Va.

—Regardless of recent advances, Offutt still sells Arbuckle's coffee at 20 cents.

—Capt. C. H. Morgan left for Kentucky Saturday last, to enter upon the duties of his office.

—Mrs. W. M. Wagner returned to Oakland on Saturday, from a visit to Grafton.

—Ladies, now is the time to purchase your cloaks; a full line of beautiful styles at Offutt's.

—Oakland Lodge, I. O. G. T., will meet next Tuesday evening at 7 o'clock.

—Mr. E. Z. Tower left Oakland on Monday, for the purpose of attending school at Cumberland.

—200 sacks G. A. Salt for sale at Wm. P. Totten's Cheap Cash Store, Oakland, Md.

—Dress goods of every style and variety bought low for cash, and will be sold regardless of the advance, at Offutt's.

—Dr. Funderberg will be at the "Davis House" every Tuesday for a short while longer.

—Schramm & Co. are erecting a distillery at Conneville, this county, which will shortly be put in operation.

—As we go to press Thursday evening we will be unable to give the proceedings of the county convention in this issue.

—Cloaks! Cloaks! Ladies cloaks! The largest and finest assortment ever brought to Oakland now for sale at Offutt's.

—We are indebted to Mrs. Taylor, of Centre street, Oakland, for a lot of the finest tomatoes we have seen this season.

—If you want your picture taken at the Oakland Photograph Gallery, at ten cents, now is the time, as the gallery closes on October 15th.

—Breech loading and muzzle loading guns, single and double rifle and shot gun. Gun material, pistols, shell and sporting goods generally at Offutt's.

—Messrs. Thos. Coddington and E. H. Wardwell, one day last week, killed about fifty gray squirrels, in the Shaffer settlement, near the Garrett and Preston county line.

—There is now on exhibition at Gnagey's store in Accident, a stalk of corn raised on the farm of Mr. Henry Feigh, near that town, which measures thirteen feet five inches in height. Bring on your tall corn.

—Rev. B. Ison, Mr. S. L. Townsend and Mr. A. C. Brooke and family, left for Morgantown on Monday, to attend the West Virginia Conference, which began its session at that place on Wednesday, Bishop M. Simpson presiding.

—Dr. Bartlett, County School Examiner, informs us that 86 applicants presented themselves for examination as school teachers at the examination held at Accident, September 26th and 27th, and 27 at Oakland, on the 29th and 30th. This will more than supply the demand in the county.

—Oakland will be represented in the mechanical department of the Cumberland Fair by two useful inventions, the handwork of Mr. John Richardson. One is a combination sausage grinder, stuffer and wine press, and the other an improved seedling machine. These machines reflect credit upon the inventive genius and mechanical skill of our fellow townsman.

—Church Services.—Sunday.

St. Matthew's P. E. Church.—Morning Prayer and Sermon every Sunday, at 11 A. M. Evening Prayer at 6 P. M. Holy Communion 1st Sunday in each month, at 11 A. M. Evening Prayer every day in the week at 6 P. M.

Memorial Church.—Preaching in the morning at 11 and in the evening at 7 o'clock, by Rev. Samuel Graham.

Business Change.

The undersigned has purchased the stock of goods of Oshorn Bros., and is now filling up the room lately occupied by them, under THE REPUBLICAN office with new goods, and respectfully solicits the patronage of his friends and the public in general. I will sell for cash or will exchange goods for merchantable produce, at prices to suit the times. Please give me a call.

JAS. A. ENLOW.

The Cumberland Fair.

The fair of the Agricultural and Mechanical Society of Western Md. will be held at Cumberland Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, October 7th, 8th, 9th and 10th. There will be a fine display of stock and machinery, as well as agricultural products. The trials of speed will be exciting, as good horses are expected. An encampment of Indians will be on the ground. Hon. W. T. Hamilton and Hon. J. A. Gary are specially invited for the third day and will not doubt be present. The managers also expect Senator Blaine on the second day of the fair. Garrett county should send a large representation.

A Fishing and Hunting Party.

A fishing and hunting party, consisting of Messrs. Walter S. Wolf, Richard Thayer, John S. Conis and Truman W. West, with George Jordan as cook, left Oakland Thursday of last week for the waters of the "Raging Young." They camped out on the banks of the stream opposite Judge Friend's, in Sang Run district, until Tuesday last. They captured a large amount of game, such as pheasant, woodcock and quail, and bass and other fish without number. They kept open house, and say they never sat down to a meal without visitors from the neighborhood. They speak highly of courtesies extended by Judge Friend and family.

September Registration.

Last week we published a list of newly registered voters and those stricken from the registration books, for seven of the nine districts of the county. We publish herewith the list from District No. 8. We have been unable to procure a list from 6, but understand that there were an equal number registered and stricken from the books, making a net gain of 114 votes in the county, 96 of which gain is in Districts Nos. 1, 7 and 8.

DISTRICT NO. 8.

NEWLY REGISTERED.

Arnold, John A.	Mitch, Edwin
Arnold, John W.	Moan, Zachariah
Brown, Wm. P.	Smith, Wm. P.
Cox, Joseph M.	Stine, Joseph P.
Cox, Joseph	Todd, Wm.
Cox, Frederick	Walker, Nicholas
Cox, Charles A.	Robertson, Wm. E.
DeWitt, Geo.	Sanderson, Cyrus T.
Fowler, J. W.	Schaller, Lewis
Fowler, Albert	Schaller, John H.
Fowler, Simon P.	Steyer, Samuel G.
Gordon, Peter P.	Thompson, Ernst
Kennedy, Joseph	Walt, Christian
Kelly, Jonathan	Wood, Tony W.
Lusk, Thompson	White, Lafayette
	Wolf, Marcellus

The list for district No. 8 was not printed until Wednesday last, twenty-six days after the expiration of the days in which the Registrar sat for such correction of the registry list. This gives but little time for the examination of the list, and is in direct violation of the Registration Act, which provides that "Immediately after the expiration of the days in which said officers of registration shall have sat for such corrections of the registry lists, commencing on the first Monday of September, they shall proceed without delay" to make lists and cause the same to be published by hand bills to be posted in the several election districts in the counties.

The penalties prescribed for the non-performance of any of the requirements of the registration act are "a fine of not less than five hundred, nor more than one thousand dollars for every such offence, or be imprisoned, in the discretion of the court, for a period not exceeding three years, or both."

DEER PARK, MD., Sept. 23, 1879.

Messrs. C. AULTMAN & Co., Grafton:—This is to certify, that E. B. Browning and S. W. Friend threshed my crop this season on 3 farms, amounting to 6,088 bushels oats, also some wheat, rye and buckwheat, which was accomplished in 5 days, with one of your 30 inch cylinder and 8 horse power Monitor engines, at a cost not exceeding 4 cents per bushel, including everything. The machine has given entire satisfaction in threshing, cleaning out the straw, also cleaning the grain and saving it. I cheerfully recommend the machine and men as doing good work with more economy than can be done with horse power. The average bushels of oats per day upon my Deer Park farm was 1,100, and the last day they threshed and cleaned 1,751 bushels. I expect to get this machine to thresh our next year's crop.

H. G. DAVIS.

Marriage Licenses.

Marriage Licenses were granted to the following parties during the month of September:

C. H. Nordick and Mary C. Moore. Joseph Lee and Ida M. Engle. Columbus Paugh and M. F. Kitzmiller.

James Faussey and Jane Warnick. Albert Montgomery and Florence Savage.

David A. Lee and Eliza C. Harvey.

Albany Republicans.

The Republican Convention of Albany county met in Cumberland Thursday last, Robert Matheny, of Lonsconing, president; F. O. Baugh, of Cumberland, and O. Tibbets, of Westernport, secretaries, and nominated a ticket, as follows:

Clerk of the Court—Colonel Theodore Luman.

State's Attorney—David Sloan.

Sheriff—Walter Baill.

House of Delegates—Dr. J. J. Bruce, R. S. Turner, Reuben Anthony, David D. Shearer.

County Commissioners—Henry Hergate, M. S. Frost, David Dick, Wm. H. Ash, Henry Hitchins.

Judges of the Orphans' Court—Rota Bruce, J. D. Armstrong, S. M. Haller.

County Surveyor—John Schmidt.

The proceedings were very harmonious, and the ticket is a strong one.

ED. REPUBLICAN.—The Sunny Side Sabbath School held its second annual picnic at the Sunny Side school house, on Thursday, September 25th. The morning was very cold and cloudy, and the prospects were poor for a pleasant day, but as the day advanced the weather became warm and pleasant and the people poured in from all directions. A large stand had been erected for the speakers and choir, with a large arch in front, which was beautifully decorated with flowers and evergreens. Nice refreshments were sold on the grounds, in the shape of ice cream, cakes, candies, nuts and cider. The ice cream was made by Prof. Richardson, the cream being furnished by our worthy superintendent, D. S. Arnold. Miss M. H. Hauser, Assistant superintendent, Mrs. Yutz, Mrs. J. T. Moore and Mrs. J. Saunders. The cakes were furnished by Miss M. H. Hauser, Mrs. Knauer, Miss Lizzie Martin and Miss Belle Chisholm. Mrs. Yutz also furnished the cider, all given gratis, to be sold for the benefit of the school.

The exercises consisted of singing and declamations by the scholars, which were very creditable to them and was highly appreciated by the audience, after which the school was very eloquently addressed by Rev. W. V. Cline.

The committee on arrangements consisted of the following persons: Miss M. H. Hauser, Mrs. John G. Knauer, Miss Lizzie Martin, Miss Belle Arnold, Miss Mollie Knauer, Miss Rachel Haun, Messrs. Jonas Yutz, J. H. Saunders, S. D. Fowler, P. G. Stahl and Henry Beckman. Too much cannot be said in praise of the committee for the faithful and energetic manner in which they performed their duty. And last, but not least, was the perfect order and quiet which was observed by all, nothing occurring to mar the enjoyment of the day.

A SPECTATOR.

Important to Odd Fellows.

The Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows of the United States, at their late session in Baltimore, made some very important changes to the laws of the Order. The name of the Grand Lodge has been changed to the Sovereign Grand Lodge. The most important changes were made in the laws relating to the non-payment of dues. A vast number of members have heretofore been suspended from all connection with the Order for non-payment of dues, and could be reinstated after applying in writing and by paying one year's dues if he apply within less than one year after suspension, and by paying the initiation fee if he be suspended more than one year, provided the majority of the lodge approve of his reinstatement.

Under the new law a member will not be cut off from all connection with the order for non-payment of dues, but will be suspended from "active" to "dormant" membership. A member will become a "dormant Odd Fellow" if at the last meeting of the term his dues aggregate the dues of one year, and as such will be debared from benefits, both pecuniary and attentive, but his name will be retained on a list for such class, and he may visit his lodge or encampment. A dormant Odd Fellow may be restored to active membership upon application made in open lodge or encampment by a member thereof, which shall be held over until the second meeting thereafter, the secretary or scribe reading the same at each meeting, and be determined affirmatively on a ballot vote by a majority of the members present for such amount as the by-laws of the lodge or encampment may prescribe.

All members heretofore dropped or suspended for the non-payment of dues are reinstated to a dormant membership in the order, subject to the conditions given above. A dormant Odd Fellow shall be subject to trial, suspension or expulsion from the order for cause under the same as an active Odd Fellow. These new rules take effect immediately.

The next annual session of the Sovereign Grand Lodge will be held at Toronto, Canada, in September next.

Registration.

On Monday and Tuesday, the 6th and 7th of October, the officers of registration, in the respective districts will sit for the correction and completion of the Registry list. This is a very important matter and should be attended to. The Registrars are all Democrats, therefore it is not likely that they will put themselves to any trouble to have a correct list, except so far as it may be the interest of their party to do so. But the officers are held in public and the books are open during the sittings of the registrars, to inspection, and we trust our Republican friend from about the county will avail of the opportunity thus offered to have the list as correct and complete as possible by the addition thereto of every Republican who will be entitled to a vote at the coming election. The names of those who were registered this month have been published in handbill form. Examine these bills; scan them carefully and see if there is any name omitted that should be registered, and if there is any registered who should be omitted. This is of much importance and should not be neglected. Make a memorandum of all the names that have been left off in order that you will be enabled to give the officers of registration the necessary information. Also make a list of all who have come of age since last year, and those who have removed from one district into another since the registration last fall, and see to it that the former are all registered and the latter furnished with transfers. We should have every voter registered and then make it a point to see that every one votes.

The Salisbury (Wicomico county) Advertiser, while supporting the ticket like a good Democratic paper, cannot, in view of the record of the Democratic party in the past, support confidence reforms from its party in the next legislature, but it says: "If our next legislature is not able to correct the abuse of office and to establish a lower grade of salaries and fees by statute, then we say and we think the Democratic party will demand a redress of grievances by remedying the organic law of the State." This idea of having to resort to the expense of a constitutional convention in order to get rid of some necessary officeholders and reduce expenditures must be very comforting to taxpayers.

The Independent Democratic movement in Calvert county has placed the Calvert Journal in a funny fix. One of its proprietors is a regular, another an independent, and each has taken occasion to express his views in his journal, a circumstance which has tended to make the Journal appear rather variable in its opinions.

The editors now announce that, since they are not in accord, they will use their "best endeavors to abstain during the balance of the campaign from editorials of a local political character." Perhaps, if they were to divide their editorial space, and pitch into one another's party from adjoining columns, they would make a very lively and interesting paper.

There are three methods for the Democrats to get John Kelly out of the way. The first is to bully him. This has been tried, but with most discouraging results. It is still in operation, and is likely to continue for a short time longer. When its hopelessness is discovered, there will be a reaction, and the whole party will unite in an offering of tally.

Mr. Kelly is too hard-headed to be fooled by this cheap device, and can be depended upon to understand and reject it. When these plans have failed, there will remain only one other, and that will be the Yazo. If Mr. Kelly lived in Mississippi he could be shot in the back, and the solidity of the party would be restored in a twinkling.

The jury at Elkton City sitting in the libel suit of E. T. H. Walter against the Baltimore American failed to agree and were discharged. It is understood that the highest amount of damages which any of the jury was willing to award the plaintiff was $500, while others thought that one cent was a sufficient amount, and the differences of opinion were found irreconcilable.

The presidential party have concluded their visit to Kansas and set their faces eastward again. Every where they have had an enthusiastic reception, and at Leavenworth were almost trampled to death by the excited throng. Mrs. Hayes appears to have fairly divided the honors and won the hearts of the people, while her husband did the speech making.

"Federal interference at the polls," is a subject of much concern to the Cecil Democrat, and it announces that the speakers at the mass meeting at Elkton next Wednesday will denounce it. But it is the interference of the repeater and ballot-box stuffer that troubles this State.

Headache arises from different causes. Congestive Headache is produced by an undue quantity of blood in the brain, to which high fivers, robust people and young women are liable. Dr. Bull's Baltimore Pills regulate the bowels and thus divert the current of blood from the brain. Price 25 cents.

The Chicago Tribune sarcastically remarks that the Mississippi Game laws permit the killing of Republicans any time previous to the Fall elections.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

SHERIFF'S NOTICE OF ELECTION.

Notice is hereby given to the qualified voters of Garrett county, that an election will be held at the usual places of holding elections in the several districts of said county.

On Tuesday after the 1st Monday, being the 4th day of November, 1879,

Between the hours of 9 o'clock A. M. and 6 P. M.,

For the purpose of balloting for one (1) person to serve as Governor of the State;

One (1) person to serve as Comptroller;

One (1) person to serve as Attorney General;

One (1) person to serve as Clerk to the Court of Appeals;

And for the purpose of electing One (1) person to serve as Clerk of the Court of Appeals;

One (1) person to serve as States' Attorney;

Two (2) persons to represent Garrett county in the Legislature of the State—House of Delegates;

Three (3) persons to serve as County Commissioners;

Three (3) persons to serve as Judges of the Orphans' Court;

One (1) person to serve as Register of Wills;

One (1) person to serve as County Surveyor.

Now I, Thomas Coddington, Sheriff of Garrett county, Md., in pursuance of the Act of Assembly, chapter 374, passed March 13, 1867 of the Public General Laws, relating to the attendance of Judges of Election, and in Section 9 of said article prescribing notice of elections to be given by the Sheriff's of the several counties, hereby GIVE NOTICE that

"At any general election, State, Federal or Municipal, to be hereafter held in the State, if none of the Judges of election appointed according to law, shall attend at the place of election for the space of one hour after the time prescribed by law for opening the election, it shall be lawful for the Justice of the Peace for said county, or city, then present at the place of election, or a majority of them, or for one Justice of the Peace in the event of one being present, to act as Judge or Judges of the Election, or if no Justice of the Peace be present, it shall be lawful for the voters then present or a majority of them, to choose by ballot three persons, being voters, to be Judges of Election, and the said Justice or Justices of Peace, or persons chosen by ballot as aforesaid, to be Judges of Election, and who shall act in that capacity for that election, shall be vested with the same power and authority as if they had been appointed by the Commissioners or other lawfully authorized power."

The Ninth section of said law prescribes that "Every Judge of Election, at every election to be hereafter held in pursuance of law, before he proceeds to take or receive any vote, shall take the following oath or affirmation:

I, A. B. do swear (or affirm) that I will permit all persons to vote who shall offer to vote at the election now to be held for ——— County, or ——— City, whose names shall appear on the registry or list of voters furnished to me according to law, as qualified voters under the Constitution and laws of this State; and that I will not permit any person to vote at the same election whose name shall not be found on the said registry or list of qualified voters; and I will in all things execute the office of Judge of the said election, according to the best of my knowledge, without favor or partiality, so help me God."

The Twelfth section of said law, in speaking of the notice to be given by the Sheriff's of the several counties of the State, of the time and places of holding said elections, says: "But if for any cause said notice shall fail to be given, said failure shall not affect the validity of any election; but it shall be the duty of the Judges of Election to hold the election in their several election districts at the time prescribed by law, and at the usual places of holding elections in the several election districts or at the places in the several election districts where the last preceding election was held; under the penalty of five hundred dollars for each Judge refusing or neglecting to hold such an election."

It shall not be lawful for the keeper of any hotel, tavern, store, drinking establishment or any other place where liquors are sold, or for any person, directly or indirectly, to sell, barter or give, or in any way dispose of spirituous or fermented liquors, ale, beer, or intoxicating drinks of any kind, on the day of any election hereafter to be held in the several counties of the State.

Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be liable to indictment by the Grand Jury of the county where the offence is committed, and shall upon conviction before any Judge of any of the Circuit Courts of this State, be fined a sum of not less than fifty dollars, nor more than one hundred dollars for each and every offence; one-half the fine shall be paid to the informer, the other half to the County Commissioners for the use of the public roads.

THOS. CODDINGTON, Sheriff.

Estates of William Combs, deceased.

THIS IS TO GIVE NOTICE.—That the subscribers have obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, Maryland, Letters Testamentary on the estate of WILLIAM COMBS, late of said county, deceased. All persons having claims against the said decedent are hereby warned to exhibit the same to the subscriber, with the vouchers therefor, legally authenticated, on or before the 1st day of April, 1880. They may otherwise be paid by law, excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment. Given under our hands this 22d day of September, 1879.

J. S. COMBS, H. WHEELER COMBS, Executors.

COMMISSIONERS' MEETING.

OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, OAKLAND, MD., Sept. 16, 1879.

Notice is hereby given that the regular meeting of the present Board of County Commissioners will be held

On Monday, Oct. 6th, 1879, for the transaction of such business as may come before the Board.

By order, W. H. HAGANS, Clerk.

JOHN RICHARDSON, Manufacturer of and Dealer in WAGONS AND FARMING IMPLEMENTS, GRAIN CRADLES, A SPECIALTY. Also on Improved Hand Seed Sower. July 7. Near the Depot, Oakland, Md.

REGISTER OF WILLS.

ED. REPUBLICAN.—Please announce my name as a candidate for the office of Register of Wills of Garrett county, subject to the decision of the Republican County Nominating Convention.

W. H. HAGANS.

Public Sale

OF VALUABLE LAND

The undersigned as Attorney for John Swan, Esq., will offer for sale at public auction, to the highest bidder, to-wit:

Saturday, Oct. 4th, 1879, in front of CODDINGTON'S HOTEL, in the town of Oakland, at the hour of 10 o'clock A. M., of said day, all the right, title and estate of the said John Swan, in and to the following lands in Garrett county, to-wit:

Military Lots Nos. 401, 480, 187, 497, 1221, 1235, 1321, 1331, 1336, 1338, 1401, 1558, 1596, 1595, 1800, 1813, 1811, 1913.

And also as Attorney for Alexander C. Good, and Mary E. P. Good, his wife, all the right, title and estate of said Good and wife, in and to the following lands, to-wit:

Military Lots Nos. 31, 32, 33, 34, 62, 85, 258, 373, 477, 908, 1285, 1500, 1519, 1529, 1521, 1600, 1613, 1802, 1818, 1909, 1910, 1912, 2517, 2518, 2529, 3355, 3565, 3567, 4090, 216, 250, 1473, 1492, 1404, 1489, 1288, 2336.

Many of the above Lots are valuable and will be sold preemptively.

TERMS CASH on day of sale. The deeds will be signed by the parties themselves and all cost of conveying, &c., must be paid by the purchaser.

A. W. VEITCH, Attorney for John Swan and for A. C. Good and wife, Sept. 30, 1879.

FOR SALE.

A Furnished Cottage and Fifty Acres of land on time, near Oakland, Garrett county, Md. Apply on the premises to

E. A. KILBOURN, or JOHN R. LARNER, 1226 F. Street, Washington, D. C.

(32-Ser)

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1 50
Six months, 75
INvariably in advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, $1 per square of 8 lines;
50 cents per square for each additional insertion. Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, OCT. 11, 1879.

Republican State Ticket.

For Governor,
JAMES A. GARY,
Of Howard County.

For Comptroller,
SAMUEL MALLALIEU,
Of Queen Anne's County.

For Attorney General,
F. M. DABBY,
Of Washington County.

For Clerk of Court of Appeals,
J. T. McCULLOCH,
Of Cecil County.

Republican County Ticket.

For Clerk of the Circuit Court,
W. H. TOWER.

For House of Delegates,
GEORGE W. WILSON,
AUSTIN SPEICHER.

For Sheriff,
GEORGE D. WHITE.

For Register of Wills,
W. H. HAGANS.

For County Commissioners,
D. HARRISON FRIEND,
JOHN WILHELM,
WM. W. BROADWATER.

For Judges of the Orphans' Court,
JOSEPH DEWITT,
WM. L. HARVEY,
ISAAC H. KOOKEN.

For Surveyor,
JOHN HARNED.

Grand Mass Meetings, at which our candidates for Governor and Attorney General and other eminent speakers will deliver addresses, will
be held at

Oakland, Wednesday 29th.

Grantsville, Thursday 30th.

The above meetings will be held
at 2 o'clock P. M.

Meetings will also be held at the following dates and places, to be addressed by H. Wheeler Combs and N. B. Fuller, Esqs., and others,
the meetings to be held at 7 P. M.

McHenry, Wednesday 15th.

Sang Run, 16th,

Friendsville, 17th,

Selbysport, 18th,

Forks School House, 20th,

Grantsville, 21st,

New Germany, 22d,

Broadwater's, 23d,

Firm Rock S. H., 24th.

Democrats are generally disgusted with their ticket, and all concede its defeat.

News from Colorado is to the effect that the Republicans carry everything in the late election.

The Democratic rule all over the state is confession of past misdoing and promise to do better in the future.

Democrats acknowledge that they cannot elect a single man on their county ticket in Garrett next November.

Our Ticket.

We take pleasure in placing at the head of this column the ticket nominated by the Republican County Convention last week. The ticket is a strong one, and will undoubtedly be elected in November without the loss of one. We will more fully speak of it next week.

The best and cheapest in the world.
Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup costs you only 25 cents, and if it does not cure your Cough you can get your money back.

The Garrett county Republican convention at Oakland Friday, the proceedings of which are published in detail elsewhere, gives every promise of a strong and enthusiastic cavass by the wisdom and harmony of its proceedings and the superior ticket it has placed in the field. It is a ticket that we believe will be triumphantly elected.—Comb. Citizen.

The Baltimore county Herald (Dem.) evidently does not like any discussion of the Democratic management of state affairs, and holds that the real issue is whether the Republican doctrine that our country is a nation, or whether the Democratic doctrine that it is "a confederation of free and independent states" shall prevail. It has always been supposed that this issue was finally settled at Appomattox Court House.

The Hagerstown Herald gives a vigorous whack at the old fraud, the State tobacco warehouse system. It
says:

"We don't have any warehouses
in Western Maryland, but we help very materially to pay the taxes imposed for them. The rule of the tobacco warehouse is to spend all their receipts, and the State pays the salaries of the inspectors, amounting to $15,000 a year. In addition, the warehouses sometimes issue scrip in payment of employees, and the legislature appropriates money for its redemption. But, after all, the direct loss to the State inflicted by the tobacco warehouses is a trifle compared with the indirect loss inflicted by its injurious effects upon the tobacco trade."

The Cecil Whisperer moralizes in this comparative manner: "Two tickets for the respective county offices are at present before the people of this county. One of these tickets—that of the Republican party—was selected solely with reference to competency, capacity and fitness. The other—that of the Democratic party
—was chosen without regard to qualification, in part against the wishes of a majority of that party and was the result of a barefaced combination, as open a bargain and sale as ever disgraced a political convention.
It would naturally be inferred that the former of these two tickets is the better and, therefore, more worthy of support."

The above paragraph describes the political situation in Garrett county, as expressed on every hand by both Republicans and Democrats.

The True Marylander complains that the Republicans of Somerset do not fight fair. It says: "New issues are made that, with consummate adroitness, they drive into our column and split off enough to endanger our hopes of winning. In our county this has been peculiarly their triumphant policy. Two years ago the fence law was the fire brand that they hurled in our midst, but it was only a measurable success. Just now the temperance question is their 'one idea.' It has done us well nigh irreparable injury already, in drawing some of our true men from the side of their former comrades in faith.
And with their well known belief in leagues and oaths, they bound these recruits to the cause with pledges to vote for nominee unless he was avowed-ly in favor of local option. In other counties the danger comes in another form, as, for instance, the 'taxpayers' reform movement. Their devices are innumerable, and crafty
as the subtleties of the Indian."

The Salisbury Times (Rep.) takes hold of the solid facts of the situation in the following: "The selfish and unblushing disregard of the interests of the people that has marked the careers of the men who control the dominant party in this State is bearing its proper fruit. All over the State voters and taxpayers are asking themselves what benefit has accrued from their adherence to such characters. They look back on the years since the ring has dictated in all public questions, and see that they have been years of misrule and increasing taxation. Somewhat astonished at the trouble they have brought upon themselves, the people are deciding to take the matter into their own hands at last, and make a fight for reform and reduction of taxation. The newspapers that are in the service of the ring are sounding the old cry, so often found effective, of allegiance to party, unable,
as they are, to defend the actions of their masters without the most daring falsification. That is the only ground the ring can fight on."

The massacre that was feared of Captain Payne's command on the northern border of the Ute reservation has fortunately been averted;
and the announcement that reinforcements reached him on the 3d instant are fully confirmed by later despatches last night. This is gratifying, not only in that the lives of so many soldiers have not been sacrificed, but in that it shows that the Indians are neither so numerous nor so determined in their stand as was feared.
Calmers councils appear to have prevailed, and a protracted Indian war may yet be averted.

The Kent Independent, the campaign paper published in the interest of the people's Reform ticket in Kent county, is making it lively for its regulars. In its last issue it says:
"Why, your own candidates admit that the Republican and Reform ticket is going to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this is your only hope, Mr. Ring politician and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of
Kent give you your tickets of leave.
You have had your day. You have
tricked and cheated until the virtue
of the people has become insulted,
and every day to carry the county by
a majority of hundreds, unless you
can divide the colored vote. If this
is your only hope, Mr. Ring politi-
cian and office-holder, you may as
well be packing up your duds at
once, for as sure as the 4th day of
November comes, will the people of

LOCAL NEWS.

—Cloaks at M. L. Scott's.
—A number of our citizens attended the fair at Cumberland this week.
—Large quantities of chestnuts have been shipped from Oakland this week.
—200 sacks G. A. Salt for sale at Wm. P. Totten's Cheap Cash Store, Oakland, Md.
—Dr. Funderberg will be at the "Davis House" every Tuesday for a short while longer.
—Offutt still continues to pay the highest cash prices for chestnuts, peacocks, mutton saddles and sheep pelts.

—Mr. A. Jones and daughter Miss Annie, of Shilborton, W. Va., were visiting this week at Mr. S. L. Townsend's.
—Our citizens cannot be too careful about their fires, during this season of the year. A little watchfulness may save many dollars to the town.

—Mr. John H. Summers brought to town last week a curiosity in the shape of a twin pumpkin, weighing 37 pounds. It is on exhibition at the store of Bishop & Haskell.

—By reference to our advertising columns, it will be seen that E. R. Browning, Esq., announces his name as an independent candidate for Sheriff.

—The Garrett county convention initiated ours and re-nominated their most excellent clerk, and propose to follow our example by electing him. Cumh. News.

—Offutt's is the place to buy cheap goods; no side issues, no diabolical attempts to cripple trade; all plain sailing and square dealing at Offutt's Great Emporium.

—The County Commissioners were in session this week, but no business of general interest was transacted. The time was taken up principally in making settlements with collectors and others.

—An old camp car, which has been standing on the switch near Catonsville for some time past, was burned at an early hour Monday morning. It is supposed to have been the work of thieves.

—The distribution by the State of the public funds for school purposes for the quarter ending October 1879, gives to Allegany and Garrett counties $5,065.70 for white schools and $151.01 for colored schools.

—There were newly registered in district No. 7, Monday and Tuesday, 25 and 6 stricken from the list, making a net gain of 29. This added to the net gain of 41 in the September registration makes 74 of a net gain in this district this year.

—A significant fact in connection with the Republican convention at Oakland Friday was the speech of Mr. Peddicord, a well-known Garrett county lawyer, who has hitherto acted with the Democrats, but who will hereafter cast in his lot with the Republicans. Cumh. Citizen.

—Died—Oct. 5, 1876, at her residence near Hutton's Switch, Md., Mrs. Harriet Nordeck, wife of J. F. Nordeck, Jr., in her 40th year. She leaves a husband and four children to mourn their loss. The deceased was a faithful member of the U. B. church and died in full hope of blessed immortality.

Church Services—Sunday.

St. Matthew's P. E. Church—Morning Prayer and Sermon every Sunday, at 11 A. M. Evening Prayer at 6 P. M. Holy Communion 1st Sunday in each month, at 11 A. M. Evening Prayer every day in the week at 6 P. M.

M. E. Church—Preaching in the evening at 7 o'clock, by Rev. B. Ison.

To the Ladies.

M. L. Scott will open to-day (Saturday) a full line of Milliner goods, hats, ribbons, feathers, flowers, birds, ornaments, gloves, ties, rousings and belts. Also a large assortment of ladies' cloaks.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending October 9th:

John Swan and wife to William White, of Joseph, Military Lots Nos. 2588, 2539 and 2541; $162.
Thos. H. Bidinger and wife to John Brownman, Military Lots Nos. 2267, 2268; $52.
John Swan and wife to H. G. and T. B. Davis, part of a tract of land called "Strawberry Plains Resurveyed;" $395.

Ann M. Beyans to Rebecca Ridgely and Ann J. Ridgely, one undivided 1 part of a tract called "The Resurvey on Shawnee War;" also the one undivided 1 1/2 part of "Addition to Shawnee War;" $189.
Louis Nydegger to Mary Nydegger, Military Lot No 1537; $100.

Destructive Fire.

A barn belonging to Henry Myer, a resident of Garrett county, was burned Friday night of last week, with all its contents. This is the second time Mr. Myer has met with like loss, the last occurring less than three years ago. He had stored in his barn at the time 200 bushels oats, 89 bushels wheat, 35 bushels buckwheat, 75 dozen rye, a fan mill, cutting-box, harness, etc. Owing to the rapid progress of the flames, he was unable to save anything but the harness. The fire was certainly the work of an incendiary, as there were evidences that the place had been visited during the night. The door was open and tracks found in the lane dissimilar to those of Mr. Myer's family. It is also stated that he has some enemies and a portion of the neighborhood is infested with bad people. The family is reduced to distress, being without the necessities which will be required during the winter. Frostburg Journal.

Republican County Convention.

The Republican county convention met in the court house Friday of last week at 2:30 o'clock, and was called to order by A. G. Sturgiss, chairman of the State central committee of Garrett county.

On motion H. Wheeler Combs was chosen as temporary chairman, and J. L. Livingston as temporary secretary.

Before proceeding with the business of the convention the chairman introduced the Hon. Milton G. Finner, member of Congress from the 6th Congressional District, who declined to enter into a discussion of the issues of the day at this time, but promised the convention to so at a future day during the campaign. He spoke for about thirty minutes and handled the issues of the day in a spirited style. In fact, even if the speech was short it will take the Democracy the remainder of the year 1879 to shape up any sort of answer thereto. Calls were then made for Mr. Peddicord, but growing late in the day the convention resumed the business for which it assembled, viz: that of nominating county officers.

On motion each delegation was requested to name one of its number as a committee on credentials and permanent organization; whereupon the following were named:

District No. 1.—S. W. Friend, No. 2.—Ira E. Friend, No. 3.—Peter Steolens, No. 4.—Thomas Bartlett, No. 5.—John E. Gagey, No. 6.—Elijah Hoge, No. 7.—James W. White, No. 8.—H. G. Sanders, No. 9.—G. W. Blocher.

The committee retired and returned in a short time, recommending H. W. Combs as permanent chairman, and J. L. Livingston as permanent secretary, and reported all districts properly represented, with delegates as follows:

District No. 1.—S. W. Friend, E. Kitzmiller, Daniel Wilson, Robert Wilson and John A. Jenkins.
No. 2.—Ira E. Friend, Isaac Meyers, Ezra B. Hook, Wm. Steele and J. A. Dunham.
No. 3.—Peter J. Stephens, Michael Nathan, Thos. H. Bidinger, Charles H. Durst and Thos. R. Wiley.
No. 4.—J. L. Livingston, Thomas Bartlett, Wm. W. Broadwater, Eli Merrill and David Evans.
No. 5.—Edward Margroff, John E. Gagey, Henry Kamp, Emanuel Custer and J. Becker.
No. 6.—Samuel A. Teats, Jonas Glotfelty, Elijah Hoge, Wm. Wilburn and Samuel Ferguson.
No. 7.—H. W. Combs, James W. White, John C. Dunham, Fred A. Thayer and Thomas Coddington.
No. 8.—Garrett V. Moon, John W. Lee, Louis Nydegger, John G. Knauer and Henry G. Sanders.
No. 9.—Geo. W. Blocher, Michael Durst, John Wilhelm, Richard Graham and Aaron Wilhelm.

The committee recommended the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved by the Republicans of Garrett county, in convention assembled, That we heartily endorse the action and platform of the State Republican convention and the principles therein enunciated.

Resolved, That we favor economy in public expenditures and point with pride to the record of the Republican party, wherever in power, for its wise, judicious and economical management of public affairs.

Resolved, That owing to the general dissatisfaction with the present system of appointing public school commissioners, we favor their election by the people; and we pledge the Republican party of Garrett county to use their influence and do all in their power to secure the proper legislation to carry out this object.

Resolved, That we heartily condemn the present laws requiring such enormous expenditure for public printing, and that we favor a repeal or modification of those laws.

For the guidance of the convention the committee recommended the adoption of the rules governing the General Assembly. The report was on motion adopted, after which the chairman thanked the convention for the honor conferred, and the convention then proceeded to the nomination of officers.

FOR CLERK.

W. H. Tower, of No. 7, was nominated by acclamation.

FOR HOUSE OF DELEGATES.

Austin Spiker, of No. 5, and Geo. W. Wilson, of No. 8, were nominated by acclamation.

FOR REGISTER OF WILLS.

W. H. Hagans by acclamation.

FOR COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

D. Harrison Friend, of No. 6, John Wilhelm, of No. 9, and Wm. W. Broadwater, of No. 4, were nominated by acclamation.

FOR JUDGES OF ORPHANS' COURT.

Joseph DeWitt, District No. 5, Wm. Harvey, of District No. 1, and Isaac Konken of District No. 4, were nominated by acclamation.

FOR SURVEYOR.

John Harned, of No. 7, was nominated by acclamation.

FOR SHERIFF.

Geo. D. White, of No. 7, was nominated by acclamation.

FOR STATE'S ATTORNEY.

A. G. Sturgiss was nominated, and thereupon his name was withdrawn, and, on motion, the office was left vacant to be filled by the executive committee.

The business of the convention being concluded, Mr. Peddicord was called upon for an address and responded in a stirring speech in behalf of the Republican party in general, and full of sound advice. The work of the convention was harmonious throughout, despite the predictions of the opposite party.

Democratic County Convention.

The Democratic county convention met in the court house at 3 o'clock P. M. Tuesday, and was called to order by W. R. Getty, chairman of the State central committee for Garrett county.

On motion Dr. E. H. Bartlett was made temporary chairman and Mr. Joshua Johnson temporary secretary.

On motion each delegation selected one of its number as a committee on credentials, permanent organization, &c., as follows:

District No. 1.—R. J. West; No. 2, Jere Guard; No. 3, Eli Stanton; No. 4, W. H. Barnard; No. 5, Adam Garringer; No. 6, R. T. Browning; No. 7, Thomas J. Browning; No. 8, W. D. Hoge; No. 9, Arthur Murphy.

The committee, after being absent a short time, returned and recommended Dr. E. H. Bartlett as permanent chairman and Joshua Johnson as permanent secretary, and reported the districts represented as follows:

District No. 1.—R. J. West, Jus. Lashorn, Henry Sisk, John Beckman, Allen Garlitz.
No. 2.—Jeremiah Guard, Jasper Guard, Beid. H. Green, Jonas Wass, T. B. N. Welsh.
No. 3.—W. R. Getty, Eli Stanton, Francis McKenzie, John F. Robinson, Charles Warnick.
No. 4.—W. H. Barnard, John L. Michaels, James Casey, Patsy Carey, John M. Titchener.
No. 5.—Adam Garringer, Christian Snyder, George Titcher, W. M. Miller, John Wass.
No. 6.—R. T. Browning, Nathan Browning, Joseph B. Meese, Wm. DeWitt, Francis Sebold.
No. 7.—E. H. Bartlett, Edmund Jamison, King Delawder, A. L. Osborn, Thomas J. Brownin.
No. 8.—B. F. Shaffer, William D. Hoge, Henry Riddler, Geo. L. Mosser, Geo. H. Gauer.
No. 9.—Samuel Johnson, Joshua Johnson, Arthur Murphy, Simon Caton, Henry Fuzenbaker.

The committee recommended that the convention be governed by the rules of the last General Assembly, that each district be allowed one vote, and that a majority of the votes be necessary to elect. The committee also offered some amendments to resolutions, which we shall notice hereafter.

Dr. Bartlett declined to act as permanent chairman, and Mr. Getty was elected to fill that position.

Mr. Joshua Johnson declined to act as permanent secretary, and A. L. Osborn, Esq., was elected.

The report of the committee was adopted.

When, on motion of Dr. Bartlett, the convention went into Committee of the Whole, (more properly secret session,) and fixed up the following ticket:

For Clerk of the Circuit Court.—R. T. Browning, of No. 7.
For House of Delegates.—Wm. R. Getty, of No. 3, and G. S. Hamill, of No. 7.
For Register of Wills.—Wm. L. Rawlings, of No. 7.
For Sheriff.—James Mason, of No. 8.
For States, Attorney.—John W. Veitch, of No. 7.
For County Commissioners.—Rudolph Beckman, of No. 1, Melchior

Miller, of No. 5 and John F. Robinson, of No. 3.

For Judges of the Orphans' Court.—E. P. Brant, of No. 7, Amos Broadwater, of No. 3 and Andrew J. Michaels, of No. 4.

For Surveyor.—Wm. McCroble, of No. 1.

Before the ticket was completed, the majority of the spectators and a great many of the delegates had left the court house, a great majority expressing their disapprobation, and predicting the defeat of the entire ticket in November. Democrats and Republicans took upon it as the weakest ticket ever nominated in the county, more especially the Commissioner's ticket.

Democratic Nominations in Allegany.

The Democrats of Allegany county nominated the following ticket Tuesday last:

For Clerk.—Jacob B. Humbird.
For Sheriff.—Henry Hanckamp.
For House of Delegates.—Frederick Mertens, Patrick Carroll, T. P. Robinson, Peter Coridol.
For States' Attorney.—Thomas E. Gonder.
For County Commissioners.—A. J. Clarke, Francis Darkey, Jr., A. H. Hale, Sr., James Willison, Martin Rouzer.

For Judges of the Orphans' Court.—John Conlehan, Wm. Platt, Wm. O. Sprigg.
For Surveyor.—Chas. E. Widener.

West Virginia Conference.

The West Va. Conference of the M. E. Church met at Morgantown Wednesday of last week. Bishop Simpson presiding. A new district was formed as follows:

OAKLAND DISTRICT.—B. Ison, P. E. Oakland, H. C. Sandford, Deer Park, J. R. Laughlin, Grantsville, To be supplied, Selbysport and Johnstown, N. L. Baumgardner, Brandonville, J. G. Weaver, one to be supplied, Pleasant Hill, F. G. W. Ford, St. George, C. J. Trippett, Pleasant Grove, J. C. Rexroad, Evansville, J. E. Wasson, Newburg, D. Cool, Aurora Mission, To be supplied, Dr. Fullerton goes to Moundsville, W. Va.
Rev. I. C. Paugh goes to Peterman, W. Va.
Rev. Joseph Lee goes to Clarksburg, W. Va.

Large Vegetables.

We have in our office a radish, raised this season by Mr. J. P. Kampfer, in the suburbs of Oakland, which measures 26 inches in circumference.

We were also shown a few days since a beet, grown by Mr. John Lower, residing near Oakland, which measures 26 inches in circumference, 22 inches in length, and weighs 17 pounds.

The Canal on Top.

We yesterday outlined, pretty fully, what the canal wing proposed to do with the Democratic convention. Barring a few slips, their program was carried out yesterday. Mr. Humbird was rushed through for clerk; Mr. Hanckamp was put up for sheriff, a canal district coming to the rescue just when needed; for House of Delegates the nominees are essentially canals. And so on to the end of the chapter.

There was so much dissatisfaction with the cut-and-dried programme of the canal leaders—though they tried to conceal their little game by seeming to support to a certain distance those who have not hitherto worked with them—that there will doubtless be an independent Democratic ticket in the field. In fact, we are authorized to state that Mr. J. G. Lynn will run for sheriff on such a ticket. A mass meeting will be held by the independent Democrats next week. Cumh. News, Wednesday.

Our Cumberland Letter.

CUMBERLAND, MD., Oct. 8, 1879.
ED. REPUBLICAN:—The Democratic convention here yesterday nominated a full canal ring ticket and the Democracy are demoralized, and the full Republican ticket will be elected. The anti-canal wing of the party are open and loud in their denunciation of the action of the convention, and to-day there is a movement on foot among them for another convention and an independent ticket.

An episode has just occurred on the street that adds fuel to the flames. Mr. Wm. M. Price, the leader of the canal party, who is charged with fixing the slate, was met upon the street this morning by two of Mr. Galloway Lynn's sons who assaulted him and knocked him over in the gutter. Mr. Price drew his revolver, which brought out the pistols of the Lynns, and but for the interference of Mr. Henry J. Johnson and others, no doubt would have to chronicle a homicide instead of this assault. Mr. Price was arrested and fined thirty dollars and I understand a warrant is out for the Lynns.
I cannot give you a full statement of the situation of the Democracy in this hurried note, but it is hot, and our boys feel all serene.

NEMO.

CRANESVILLE, W. VA., Oct. 7.

ED. REPUBLICAN:—Farmers are busy gathering their crops, and are rejoicing over the foreign demand for grain.

The Sabbath School here, conducted by our worthy friends J. W. Feather and J. E. Otto, closed last Sunday.

The picnic mentioned in my last letter, though passed and gone, was a grand success.

The Normal school of Cranestown will close on Friday, 17th inst.

Shook works have again started up here.

P. H. Hermans is doing a good merchandise business and fully merits the patronage of all his customers. Mr. H. talks of leaving this vicinity; if so his presence will be missed, and his departure regretted by many.

Rev. G. White has been holding a series of meetings here which closed Sunday evening last.

The people here seem well satisfied with the results of the Republican convention; we hope that Republicans will all attend the coming important election and vote as one man.

LOCKE.

Fire in Oakland.

Monday night, about 8 o'clock, the store of A. Loewenstein was discovered to be on fire. A large crowd assembled in a few minutes and the fire was extinguished before much damage was done. The fire was evidently started in the cellar among some shavings and kindling wood, and was evidently the work of an incendiary. Mr. L. informs us that, so far as he can ascertain at present, nine rolls of valuable goods were taken from the store, on entrance having been effected through a trap-door from the cellar, and it is his opinion that the thieves, after obtaining all the goods they could carry away, fired the building in order to hide the theft. Every effort should be made by the corporation and county authorities to apprehend the guilty parties, that they may receive the punishment they so richly deserve. The loss is about $300, and is fully insured.

DEER PARK, MD., Sept. 23, 1879.

MESSES. C. AULTMAN & Co., Gentlemen:—This is to certify, that E. B. Browning and S. W. Friend threshed my crop this season on 3 turns, amounting to 6,088 bushels oats, also some wheat, rye and buckwheat, which was accomplished in 6 days, with one of your 30 inch cylinder and 8 horse power Monitor engines, at a cost not exceeding a cent per bushel, including everything. The machine has given entire satisfaction in threshing, cleaning out the straw, also cleaning the grain and saving it. I cheerfully recommend the machine and men as doing good work with more economy than can be done with horse power. The average bushels of oats per day upon my Deer Park farm was 1,400, and the last day they threshed and cleaned 1,751 bushels. I expect to get this machine to thresh our next year's crop.

H. G. DAVIS.

—If you want your picture taken at the Oakland Photograph Gallery, at ten cents, now is the time, as the Gallery closes on October 18th.

—Ladies' Cloaks at Offutt's. Ladies' Cloaks at Offutt's. The finest variety at the cheapest rates ever known.

Republicanism in the South.

The revival of Republicanism in the South is not such an improbability as some of our Democratic friends would have us believe. It is true that it has been pretty effectually silenced in Mississippi, by the aid of the shot-gun and has languished elsewhere—owing, in some degree, perhaps, to the apparent indifference of the present administration, though in much greater measure to the lack of intrepid and trustworthy leaders; but it is far from extinct. It is hard for the people of the North to understand the falling away of the Republican party in the Southern States, because they do not realize the immense difference which exists between political methods there and here, and they are too much inclined to mistake its present merely passive attitude for an absolutely moribund condition. To explain this state of things it is not necessary to "wave the bloody shirt." There are other and equally efficient means of terrorism besides the pistol and the knife, and the Southern Democrats have known how to use them. It is easy for Republicans at the North, where free speech pays no penalty, and a man may safely cast his ballot for whom he pleases—although he may not be always sure of having it counted—to censure their friends in the South for submitting tamely to Democratic supremacy; but it is not so easy to endure the risks and make the sacrifices which any other course would entail upon them. To be shot at occasionally for holding political views at variance with your neighbors is scarcely agreeable to a peaceable man; and, if spared the bullet, to be ostracized socially and to be made the object of business discriminations, is to live a life rather more intolerable than the most zealous Republicans ought to be expected to lead for the sake of their principles. Under treatment such as this, they have either pulled up stakes or, as has been the case with the majority, given up politics. Republicanism still survives, but is silent.

What must be the condition precedent to its revival? It is idle to expect that voters will ever again receive the protection of the army; even were that advisable; and the belief that the South is hopelessly solid for Democratic interests disposes the Northern wing of the party to make any exertion to dispute its supremacy. The means and occasions for a reassertion of Republican principles must be looked for, therefore, in the South itself; and, although the cloud is as yet no bigger than a man's hand, there appears to be a storm even now gathering on the political horizon that may yet so rend the dominant party that out of that division Republicans may come by their own. Recent trustworthy advices received at Washington from South Carolina and Texas report serious discussions among the Democrats of both states that may prove a powerful force for party disintegration. In Texas there is every prospect that two Independents, pledged not to act with the Democrats, will be elected to the next Congress; and in South Carolina there seems to be no doubt that the Republicans will effect a perfect reorganization during the coming year, and stand ready to profit by any divisions of the opposition. A similar movement may be expected in other states, unless the renewal of the assassination policy shall have its usual effect. Republicans leaders should study the situation well; the South is not solid for the Democrats where fair play can be had, and the publicans only waits the opportunity to reassert itself successfully. Baltimore American.

OVER-PRODUCTION AND WASTE OF OIL.

A dispatch from Bradford, Pa., says: "At a moderate estimate there are 150,000 gallons of petroleum running to waste in the McKean county oil regions. The tanks, with capacity for several million barrels, are filled to overflowing. The markets are overstocked, and still production goes on at the rate of at least 25,000 barrels a day, 5,000 more than the pipe lines can handle. New wells are being dug down in all parts of the region. The streams are literally rivers of oil. Large quantities of petroleum are absorbed by the earth. In marshy places the ground is a mass of greasy mud, several inches deep. In some parts of the region the streams are dammed and the oil collected in large ponds, at places as far distant as possible from derricks and buildings. These ponds are set on fire daily. Thus large quantities of the waste oil is disposed of. It is not uncommon for fire to be communicated to these combustible rivers by sparks from locomotives. Sometimes they are fired by malicious persons and flames.

Absolutely free from morphia and other dangerous agents, Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup is valued most highly as a remedy for the disorders of babyhood. Price only 25 cents a bottle.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

To the Democratic and Republican Voters of Garrett County:

I respectfully announce myself as an Independent candidate for the office of Sheriff.

E. R. BROWNING.

Public Sale

OF

VALUABLE LAND

The undersigned as Attorney for John Swan, Esq., will offer for sale at public auction, to the highest bidder, on Saturday, Oct. 18th, 1879,

in front of CODDINGTON'S HOTEL, in the town of Oakland, at the hour of 10 o'clock A. M., of said day, all the right, title and estate of the said John Swan, in and to the following lands in Garrett county, to-wit:

Military Lots Nos. 401, 480, 487, 497, 1221, 1235, 1321, 1334, 1336, 1338, 1401, 1558, 1596, 1595, 1800, 1819, 1841, 1913.

And also as Attorney for Alexander C. Good, and Mary E. F. Good, his wife, all the right, title and estate of said Good and wife, in and to the following lands, to-wit:

Military Lots Nos. 31, 32, 33, 54, 62, 85, 258, 373, 477, 998, 1286, 1509, 1519, 1529, 1521, 1609, 1615, 1802, 1848, 1909, 1940, 1942, 2317, 2518, 2522, 3335, 3395, 3547, 4090, 210, 230, 1475, 1492, 2169, 1183, 1268, 2536.

Many of the above lands are valuable and will be sold preemptively.

TERMS CASH on day of sale.

The deeds will be conveyed by the parties themselves and all cost of conveying, etc., must be paid by the purchaser.

J. W. VEITCH, Attorney for John Swan and for A. C. Good, and wife.

Sept. 25th.

Musquash Mosquitoes.

Last Sunday night we all went to church down at Musquash, and heard Mr. Hopper preach—a pleasure that all Burlington will testify to. Mr. H. was down there helping the rest of us enjoy ourselves, and the Baptists of Musquash just pressed him into their service for one day. Well, I had been trout-fishing all the day before, and had waded down the river a few miles; and Saturday night I poured a bushel and a half of oats into each of my boots, and all the bright, sunny Sabbath-day they set out in the sun and baked, while I lounged around loosely shod in slippers, and extremely happy. I went to church in the evening, and you can't imagine how easy and comfortable were my slippers. I thrust them out before me and admired them. In a moment or two a mosquito came sailing along, humming the refrain of a hymn the congregation had just ceased singing. This startled me a little, but not very much, because I always believed that the St. John mosquitoes could sing if they would. Well, this fellow sailed on, passed me, then he turned and came back, and I observed that he had a rather wicked look in his eyes, although, I reasoned, that was no more than one might expect of a mosquito that flew around on the Sabbath. Presently, still humming "Broad is the road that leads to death," the bird made a few circles and lighted on my slippers, making his landing about an inch above the slipper.

"Now, son," I said, "this is a little too much. I admire cheek, but you fairly gorge my admiration. I am sorry for you, because I know your hardihood and your stupidity. But your impudence is more detestable than your imbecility is touching, and I am compelled to mash you."

I lifted my other foot to crush him, and I hope I may live a thousand years if that mosquito didn't get the drop on me.

I haven't felt anything like it since seven years ago, when I tried to mend the family washbowl and poured a tablespoonful of sizzling, bubbling solder down inside my shoe.

As I am a truthful man, when I felt the shot, I looked down, and that mosquito had his hind legs bent under him, his front legs stretched out and braced against my foot, while the venomous, bubbling solder was inside my shoe. As I am a truthful man, when I felt the shot, I looked down, and that mosquito had his hind legs bent under him, his front legs stretched out and braced against my foot, while the venomous, bubbling solder was inside my shoe.

Brethren, while we sojourn here, fight me must, but need not fear. I sat in silent, enduring agony, wondering what manner of bird the Musquash mosquito was, when suddenly another one came behind me, caught me by the heel, and I thought in my soul it would pull the leg off me before I could shake it. I kicked it, and it landed on my nose. I sneezed, and it dodged about my ears, snapping at them as it went by, and humming with great affection of feeling:

I would not live away.

I was glad that it felt that way about it. It lived long enough to satisfy me, all the same. All through the service this inhuman banquet went on. The mosquitoes that came late didn't stand on ceremony, but drew right up and helped themselves. "Cut a little closer to the bone," they all would say to the new-comers; "you'll find the meat sweeter." And close to the bone it was. I kept up a regular tattoo with my feet, until the senior deacon came over and whispered to me that the Dominican churches had not adopted the New York custom of applauding the good points in a sermon. Then I held my feet off the floor and kicked them straight out every time a new mosquito got the drop on me. I made a dull's eye, until a man sitting in front of me turned around and sternly assured me that, if I didn't quit kicking his wife and children, he'd throw me out of the window. I had wondered several times, in an unobstructed sort of way, what the children were crying for. Once, in my suffering, I got my feet up on the pew and tried to sit on them, but the maneuver seemed to afford the young ladies in that city so much amusement that I had to give it up. I got hold of a window-sill, and tried spearing the mosquitoes with it, like cels; but it attracted too much attention, and, owing to my nervousness, was a failure any how. At last, either because they had enough, or because it was all gone, or because the service was concluded, the mosquitoes quit, and the last I heard of them, as they started over toward the other side of the room to swarm on a bald-headed man, was that he could get his hat on, that they were singing with the congregation:

Happy day—happy day—
—R. J. Burdette, in Huck-Eye.

Tobacco.

A PEZIZIE.
Our about for instance, is alike,
I do not cry "I ache,"
But with a pleasure infinite,
I'll join in "old lacey."

The good bath bowls of gems and gold,
(Some plated though—a clear sham.)
And so have I—but then they're made
Of china, clay and meerschaum.

So sang the immortal Hood, and so will every lover of tobacco sing, especially when he enjoys the pure Virginia, burnt in the king of pipes, a pure meerschaum. This name, as most readers know, literally signifies sea foam, a plain translation of the term, kiefekel, by which it is known among the Tartars. The article itself being found in various parts of Asia Minor, while Constantinople is the great mart for its sale. Its component parts are chiefly silica, magnesia, carbonic acid and water, and it occurs chiefly in veins or lumps among serpentine rocks. When first found it is capable of forming a lather like soap, and is used by the Tartars for washing linen. Its name—which the French also adopt, Ecoume de Mer—is obtained from its delicate softness, lightness and purity; but in manufacturing it into good pipes a very large proportion of the material is worthless, as it is liable to crack when heated, owing to the air it contains. It therefore undergoes a manipulation very similar to the clay used by potters, and after being shaped is roasted or boiled in tallow or wax, a part of the process of manufacture requiring a peculiar knowledge, to be obtained only by long experience, and upon which largely depends the value of the pipe for smoking purposes, and therein lies the secret of its absorbing properties.

To color a pipe properly is an "amiable weakness," few attain only after many trials. There is a legend of one who determined to have a perfect meerschaum (and it must be understood that perfection cannot be attained if the pipe once lighted is allowed to cool), so an arrangement was made for it to pass from mouth to mouth of a regiment of soldiers, the owner of the pipe to pay the bill. After seven months a most perfect pipe was handed to the fortunate proprietor, with a bill for more than one hundred pounds sterling, which had been the cost of the tobacco sacrificed in the feat.

The values placed on perfect pipes would startle not a few of our readers. Their weight in gold, many times told, hardly sufficing to meet the ideas of their owners.

Vienna, to which large quantities of the raw material is transported, has for ages been famous for the beauty and perfection of meerschaum productions. Dr. Dibdin, in his "Bibliographical Tour in France and Germany," says: "A good Austrian thinks he can never pay too much for a good pipe," and he instances a gentleman whom he met, "who drew from his pocket a short pipe which screwed together in three divisions, and of which the upper part of the bowl—made in the fashion of a Blackamoor's head—near the aperture, was composed of diamonds of great lustre and value. Upon inquiring I found that this pipe was worth about £1,000 of our money."

The designs of these Vienna manufacturers are published in elaborate illustrated books, and embrace every variety of landscape, animal and vegetable life.

The tobacco plant is found in not less than forty varieties. Of these I shall remark on three or four, as being those now most in use among manufacturers. The Virginia tobacco is the first, as being the common name under which all American tobacco was formerly known, and from which the varieties now in use were derived. But the effect of the climate and soil has so essentially changed the character of the plant that almost every tobacco-growing locality has its distinctive grade, though in point of climate, I remark generally it demands a climate very nearly the same as the Indian corn, therefore we may designate the climatological limit of tobacco cultivation as extending from the United States. Wherever the growth of corn is completely successful, as in a temperature for July above sixty-eight degrees, tobacco is and may be freely grown. Connecticut, Central New York, Ohio and parts of Iowa, are scarcely less adapted to tobacco culture than Kentucky and Virginia. The chief difference is a slight limitation of its period in time, and experience has fully shown that, to this extent, this American tobacco is well adapted to the selection of varieties. Southward its range is also like that of maize, with perhaps the exception of producing more desirable varieties in tropical climates.

Soil, however, combined with climate everywhere marks the quality of the leaf raised, even in Virginia and North Carolina, where the choicest varieties for smoking tobacco are grown, different sections produce such a variety of grades, that it is only by inspection of an expert, that the classes are divided, those from certain localities being vastly superior to others. The same remark will apply to all. The leaf for plug and Ohio and parts of Iowa, are scarcely less adapted to tobacco culture than Kentucky and Virginia. The chief difference is a slight limitation of its period in time, and experience has fully shown that, to this extent, this American tobacco is well adapted to the selection of varieties. Southward its range is also like that of maize, with perhaps the exception of producing more desirable varieties in tropical climates.

The Syrian tobacco, as it is known, is another variety of American tobacco, but in its transplanted state, produces a smaller plant, milder in flavor and is used for the celebrated Latakia, or Turkish smoking tobacco and until within a few years (as I shall show in another part of this article) used almost wholly for cigarettes. I should have remarked before of the peculiar flavor of the Virginian tobacco, which is a delicate shade of pink, while those of the Syrian are green, and in Shiraz or Persian tobacco, pure white. This tobacco (the Persian) is not fitted at all for cigars, but ranks as a most delicate class of smoking tobacco, and differs in but a slight degree from the varieties of Oregon, Columbia and California, and some parts of Colorado and New Mexico.

Cuban tobacco, however, ever has, and doubtless will retain its pre-eminence for the production of a tobacco fitted for cigars, while it falls far behind other localities for other purposes. The reason for this seems to be mainly in the climate. No danger from tropical excesses, either of heat or humidity during the period of growth alone, but in the extraordinary care given to perfecting the peculiar qualities of the leaf, and the uniformity of climate at the close of the season is the greater of the advantages that the island enjoys over any part of the United States in accomplishing this end. With the exception of that grown in Vuelta de Abajo and other favored localities, the tobacco grown in Cuba is of no better quality than that grown in Florida and other parts of the South. But the ripening season is so often variable and extreme in the United States, that much is lost, that possibly by care and adequate precaution, could be preserved.

Of the culture and manufacture it is hardly our province to here enter, but a few statistics will not be out of place to show the vast importance of the product of the country.

The old woman who lately said, that there was more money spent for tobacco than bread, it will be seen I think,

"has the facts tobaccoer," to an extent we hardly realize.

History assigns to John Rolfe, the husband of Pocahontas, the distinction of being the first American tobacco planter, as he was the first white man to engage in its culture. From the Indians he received his first lessons in culture and preparation. The superior intelligence and energy of the white race, coupled with their knowledge of civilized husbandry, were soon enlisted in the rapid improvement and development of this new-found narcotic plant. The laws passed were intended for a like purpose, but proving in many ways a hindrance (except the inspection law,) they were but a short time in force. Production increased rapidly, induced by the constantly increasing consumption abroad, and the resulting constantly growing demand, so that tobacco early became the chief export from the Old Dominion, and has held that position ever since.

The enterprising colonists were continually extending their efforts to newer lands, and carrying with them the "darling tobacco" to fresher fields, soon developed this new industry throughout what is known as the Southern tobacco belt.

To enumerate the different kinds and their adaptation to the various grades and types as they were developed and improved; the several modes of curing, with the peculiar management suited to each class, as practiced by the best planters of the past and present, would fill a book, but strangely enough has never been written. But space admonishes us that we must not dwell.

In 1700, after eighty-four years from its first planting by a new race, we find that the tobacco export from the colonies was about 22,000,000 pounds. The export in 1775 had risen to 101,828,617 pounds; in 1800 to 118,099,000 pounds.

We shall endeavor to show here, in a general way, the progress of tobacco. The report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for January, 1879, says: "We have no accurate data of the yield per acre of the product (tobacco) for 1877. The total amount exported and consumed was 10,000,000 pounds, or 100,000,000 pounds. Allowing six per cent. for that used at home, and that which evaded the tax, we have a crop for 1877 of about 490,000,000 pounds." But six per cent. is too small an estimate for the use at home, and that which evades the tax; so that the lowest estimate for the crop of 1877 must exceed 500,000,000 pounds.

The world's annual production of tobacco is about as follows: North America, 320,000,000 pounds, of which 500,000,000 pounds are produced in the United States; South America, 95,000,000; West India, 130,000,000; Europe and Asia, 495,000,000; Java and Australia, 130,000,000; Africa, 10,000,000; and the rest of the world, 10,000,000 pounds. Possibly the true amount is nearer 1,500,000,000 pounds.

While the United States is the largest producer, she is relatively by no means the greatest consumer of it. The best informed estimate of the consumption at not above four and one-half pounds per head per annum of the whole population, while in Germany it reaches about six pounds per head. In England the annual average for each person is nearly a pound and a half. In France nearly everybody smokes, and in Holland more money is said to be spent on tobacco than on bread. In America, however, the use of tobacco is more generally used than any other single article of commerce consumed by man.

As a source of revenue to our Government at present the amount collected is about $10,000,000.

The tables below give the amount of revenue derived from all sources of the tobacco industry for the year ending June 30, 1879 and 1878, and the quantities produced in the same period. It will be seen by a comparison that the total revenue and production for 1879 makes a better showing than 1878, and in fact the showing is a better one than has been made since the establishment of the Revenue Department.

—The California Horticulturalist recommends the following mode of keeping grapes: Spread the carefully-cut fruit thinly on shelves or tables for a few days, to dry up the stems a little. Then cut clean cut rye straw in a straw-cutter about an inch long, and cover liberally the bottom of a suitable tightly jointed box, on which place a moderate layer of fruit; then cover with the cut straw liberally and lay fruit again, and thus proceed. Put them in a cool, dry place, and the grapes will keep sound for several months.

There is now, says a Dublin correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette, a direct importation of American cattle into Belfast, the first of the kind for a long time. The cattle must, under the order in Council, be slaughtered on the quay, which somewhat checks the trade, but when this order is removed it is said that Belfast will become the general depot for the North of Ireland for an extensive American trade.

The proper form for a will nowadays will read: "To the respective attorneys of my children I give my entire estate and worldly goods of all description. Personally to the children and to my beloved wife I give all that remains."

Our Young Folks.

BY AND BY.

There's a little mischief maker,
Who's stealing half our cake,
Sketching pictures in a dreamland
That are never seen in this
Of the present while we sigh:
You may know this mischievous maker
By the name of By and By.

He is sitting by our heartbeats,
With his bowie-knife in place,
Sketching the coming morning
As the social hours advance;
Languishing and our calm reflections,
Hiding forms of beauty night;
He's a smooth, deceitful fellow,
This enchanter, By and By.

You may know him by his winning,
By his careless, sprightly air;
By his shy, attractive presence
That is straying everywhere;
By the trophies that he gathers,
Where his somnre victories lie—
For a bold, determined fellow
Is this conqueror, By and By.

When the calls of duty haunt us,
And the present seems to be
All the time that ever mortals
Spend from death's eternity;
Then a fairy hand seems pointing
To a distant, dreamy land,
O, a cunning little creature—
Trust him not, this By and By.

JIMMY'S CRUISE IN THE PINAFORE.

A boy sat on a door-step in a despondent attitude, with his eyes fixed on a pair of very shabby shoes, and his elbows resting on his knees, as if to hide the big pates there. But it was not the fact that his toes were nearly out and his clothes dilapidated which brought the wrinkles to his forehead and the tears to his eyes, for he was used to that state of things and bore it without complaint. The prospect was a dull one for a lively lad full of the spring loungings which sunny April weather always brings. But it was not the narrow back street where noisy children played and two or three dusty trees tried to bud without sunshine, that made him look so dismal. Nor was it the knowledge that a pile of vests was nearly ready for him to trudge away with before he could really rest after doing many errands to save mother's weary feet.

No, it was a burden that lay very heavily on his heart and made it impossible to even whistle as he waited. Above the sounds that filled the street he heard a patient, mournful cry, "Within, and no matter what object his eyes rested on, he saw with sorrowful distinctness a small, white face turned wistfully toward the window as if weary of the pillow where it had lain long. Merry little Kitty, who used to sing and dance from morning till night, was now so feeble and wasted that he could carry her about like a baby. All day she lay moaning softly, and her one comfort was when her mother would come and sing to her. That night he could not sing; his heart was so full, because the doctor had said that the poor child must have country air as soon as possible, else she never would recover from the fever which left her so weak. A sad little ghost of her former self. But, alas! there was no money for the trip, and mother was sewing day and night to earn enough for a week at least of blessed country air and quiet. Jimmy did his best to help, but he could do very little to do, and the pennies came in so slowly he was almost in despair.

There was no father to lend a strong hand, and Mrs. Nelson was one of the "silent poor" who cannot ask for charity, no matter how much they may need it. The twelve-years-old boy considered himself the man of the family, and manfully carried as many burdens as his young shoulders would bear; but this was a very heavy one, so it is no wonder that he looked sober. Holding his curly head in his hands as if to keep it from flying aside with the various plans working inside, he sat staring at the dusty bricks in a desperate frame of mind.

Warm days were coming and every hour was precious, for poor Kitty pined in the close room, and all he could do was to bring her flowers and bits of green grass from the common when she begged to go in the fields and pick "pretties" for herself. He loved the little sister dearly, and as he remembered her longings, his eyes filled and he doubled up his fists with an air of determination, muttering to himself:

"She shall go! I don't see any other way and I'll do it!"

The plan which had been uppermost lately was this. His father had been a sailor, and Jimmy proposed to run away to sea as cabin boy. His wages were to be paid before he went, so mother and Kitty could be in the country while he was gone, and in a few months he would come sailing gayly home to help her and mother. It was a very boyish and impossible plan, but he meant it, and was in just the mood to carry it out—for every other attempt to make money had failed.

"I'll do it," he said, as his name is Jim Nelson. "I'll take a look at the ships this very night, and go in the first one that will have me," he said, with a resolute nod of the head, though his heart wavered when he thought, "I sank within him at the thought. 'I saw that old man, the captain, says boys best? I guess I'll try a steamer; they make short trips. I heard the cannon to-day, so one is in, and I'll try for a place before I go to bed.'"

Little did desperate Jimmy guess what a prosperous voyage he was about to make, for help was coming that very minute, as it generally does, sooner or later, to generous people who are very much in earnest.

First a shrill whistle was heard, at the sound of which he looked up quickly; then a rosy-faced girl of about his own age came skipping down the street, swinging her hat by one string; and, as Jimmy watched her approach, he smiled and began to soften the grim look he wore, for Willy Bryant was his best friend and neighbor, being full of courage, fun and kindness. He nodded and made room for her on the step, the place he usually occupied at spare moments when they got lessons and recounted their scrapes to one another.

But to-night Willy seemed possessed of some unusually good piece of news which she chose to tell in her own lively fashion, for, instead of sitting down, she began to dance a sailor's hornpipe, singing gaily: "I'm little Buttercup, sweet little Buttercup," till her breath gave out.

"What makes you so jolly, Will?" asked Jimmy as she dropped down beside him, and fanned herself with the ill-used hat.

"Such fun—you'll never guess—just what we wanted—if your mother only will! You'll dance, too, when you know," panted the girl, smiling like a substantial sort of fairy come to bring good luck.

"Fire away, then. It will have to be extra nice to set me off. I don't feel a bit like jigs now," answered Jimmy, as the gloom obscured his face again, like a cloud over the sun.

"You know 'Pinafore'?" began Will, and, getting a quick nod for an answer, she poured forth the following tale with great rapidity: "Well, some folks are going to get it up with children to do it, and they want any boys and girls that can sing to go and be looked at to-morrow, and the good ones will be picked out, and dressed up, and taught how to act, and have the nicest time ever was. Some of our girls are going, and so am I, and you sing and must come, too, and have some fun. Won't it be jolly?"

"I guess it would; but I can't. Mother needs me," Jimmy murmured out of the head, having made up his mind some time ago that he must learn to do without fun.

"But we shall be paid for it," cried Will, clapping her hands with the double delight of telling the best part of her story, and seeing Jimmy's sober face clear suddenly, as if the sun had burst forth with great brilliancy.

"Really? How much?" Jimmy asked, and he clutched her arm excitedly for this unexpected ray of hope dazzled him.

He was so excited he could not sleep, and beguiled the long hours by humming under his breath all the airs he had learned from the already popular opera. Next morning he flew about his work as if for a wager, and when Will came for him there was not a happier heart in all the city than the hopeful one that thumped under Jimmy's thread-bare best jacket.

Such a crowd of girls and boys as they found at the hall where they were to apply for inspection! Such a chirping and piping went on there, it seemed like a big cage full of larks and linnetts. And by and by, when the trial was over, such a smiling troop of children as was left to be drilled by the energetic gentlemen who had the matter in hand! Among this happy band stood our Jimmy, who, for his good voice, and Will, because of her bright face and lively self-possessed manner.

When the grand day came at last, and the crew of jolly young tars stood ready to burst forth with the opening chorus:

"We sail the ocean blue,
Our saucy ship's a beauty,
We're gallant men and true,
And bound to do our duty."

Jimmy hardly knew whether he stood on his head or on his heels at first, for, in spite of many rehearsals, everything seemed changed. Instead of daylight, gas shone everywhere, the empty seats were full, the orchestra played splendidly, and when the curtain rose, a sea of friendly faces welcomed them, and the pleasant sound of applause made the hearts under the blue jackets dance gaily.

How those boys did sing! how their eyes shone, and their feet kept time to the familiar strains! With what a relish they hunched up their trousers and lunched about, and saluted and cheered as the play demanded! With what interest they watched the microscopic midshipmate, listened to Ralph as his sweet voice melodiously told the story of his hapless love, and smiled at the pretty Josephine who was a regular bluebird without the scream.

That was the beginning of many busy, happy weeks for both the children; weeks which they long remembered with great pleasure, as did older and wiser people, for that merry, innocent little opera proved that theaters can be made the scenes of harmless amusement, and opened to a certain class of young people a new and profitable field for their talents. So popular did this small company become that the piece went on to the summer vacation, and was played in the morning as well as afternoon, to satisfy the crowds who wished to see and hear it.

But long before that time, Able Seaman James Nelson had sent his father a letter to the country; mother begging Will to take good care of her dear boy till he could join them, and his sister Kitty throwing back kisses as she smiled good-bye with cheeks already so rosy from the small company. Jimmy had earned for her, Jimmy would not desert his ship while she floated, but managed to spend his Sundays out of town, often taking Will with him as first mate, and, thanks to her, very popular. Friends were soon made for the new comers.

When the last day came he was in such spirits that he was found doing double shuttles in corners, hugging the midshipmate, who was a little chap of about Kitty's age, and treating his messmates to peanuts, with a lavish hand. Will had her hornpipe, also, when the curtain was down, kissed every one of the other "sisters, cousins and aunts," and joined lustily in the rousing farewell cheers given by the crew.

A few hours later, a cheerful-looking boy might have been seen trudging toward one of the railway stations. A new hat, brave in blue streamers, was on his head, a red balloon struggled to escape from one hand, a shabby carpet-bag, stuffed full, was in the other, and a pair of shiny shoes cracked briskly as if the feet inside were going on a very pleasant errand.

About this young traveler, who walked with a sailor's kick and a sailor's smile, a little girl chattering like a magpie, and occasionally breaking into song as if she couldn't help it.

"Be sure you come next Saturday; it won't be anything like such fun if you don't go halves," said the boy, beaming at his lively companion as he hauled down the impatient balloon which seemed inclined to break from its moorings.

"Yes, I know that is so," hummed the girl, with a skip to starboard, that she might bear a hand with the bag. "Keep some cherries for me, and don't forget to give Kit the doll I dressed for her."

"I shouldn't have been going myself if it hadn't been for you, Will. I never shall forget that," said Jimmy, without intense satisfaction rendered rather more sedate than his friend.

"Running away to sea is great fun. With a tar that plows the water!"

"And a gallant Captain's daughter," echoed Jimmy, sailing across the carpet-bag. Then both joined in an irrepressible chorus of "Dash it! Dash it!" as a big man nearly upset them and a dog barked madly at the balloon.

Being safely landed in the train, Jimmy hung out of the window till the last minute discussing his new prospects with Will, who stood on tiptoe outside bubbling over with fun.

"I'll teach you to make butter and cheese and you shall be my dairy woman, for I mean to be a farmer," he said, just as the bell rang.

"All right, I'd like that ever so much," and then the irrepressible madcap burst out to the great amusement of the passengers:

"For you might have been a Koolan, a Frenchman, Turk or Prossian, or an Arab!"

At this, Jimmy could not resist shouting back as the train began to move.

"But in spite of all temptations
To belong to other nations,
I'm an American!"

Then he subsided, to think over the happy holiday before him and the rich cargo of comfort, independence and pleasure he had brought home from his successful cruise in the "Pinafore."—London M. Atcott, in St. Nicholas for October.

Weddings.

There is a great diversity of taste about the manner in which a wedding should be conducted, many holding the opinion that it should take place at home, and be of the most private character, allowing only the presence of the most valued and intimate friends; while perhaps the majority of womankind at least vote for a dress parade in church, with floor and galleries packed. They would advertise the fact that two people have agreed to devote themselves to each other, with all the pomp and circumstance and satin and tulle, muslin, flowers, fashion and a crowd can give. And, perhaps, since the marriage knot has ceased to resemble the Gordian, and has come to be regarded in the eyes of many as an experience to be easily incurred if it fails to please, it is as well to surround the occurrence with ceremony and publicity, that it may seem to be a serious and solemn act, not to be lightly set aside.

It is a curious fact that in the crowd who frequent weddings, the feminine element predominates; it is the women who hasten in shoals to the scene—young girls who rehearse their own possible wedding in that of a friend; matrons who go to countenance a proselyte, and to criticize the finery; old maids who, having no experience of their own, would fain acquire it by proxy and observation.

Marriage being but an episode in a man's career, he is not nearly so interested in the event as the woman, to whom it signifies life-long happiness or misery; with whom it constitutes the supreme crisis in a somewhat monotonous existence; moreover, there is always the possibility at a wedding that some one may forbid the banns, or the bridegroom fail to put in an appearance. Formerly, no doubt, most marriages were public and surrounded with ceremonies—we except such as that of the Duke of Hamilton, who wedded the youngest beautiful Gunning with a ring from a bedchamber at half past twelve at night, or of Lady Sarah Cadogan, who was brought from her nursery to marry Lord March—since we read that in the reign of Queen Bess, even in humble life, the bride was taken to church between two gaily attired boys, preceded by others carrying a silver cup of wine decorated with gilded rosemary and bright ribbons, and followed by musicians and bridesmaids bearing great cakes and garlands of gilded wheat.

In contrast to this pageantry one pictures Dr. Johnson and his bride setting out on horseback for their wedding at Danbury as he sketches it himself.

At first she told me I rode too fast, then when I rode slower she passed and complained that I lagged behind; therefore I pushed briskly on till I was out of sight. When she came up with me I observed that there were tears in her eyes."—Harper's Bazar.

The Champion Melon-Eater.

On last Saturday evening Mr. A. L. Reid, of this county, stepped into the drug-store of Jackson & Son, of this place, in which there were six water-melons, all (combined) weighing about seventy-five pounds, and said if anybody would pay for them he would sit down and not get up until he had eaten the last mouthful of them. Our Sheriff, Mr. Henry Magee, incredulous as to Mr. Reid's remarks, said if he (Reid) would sit down and eat them all before he got up he (Magee) would pay for them, when Mr. William Jackson, who was present, said if Reid did not eat them according to Magee's request he (Jackson) would pay for them. Reid then took his seat, and the show began in earnest. The first one he ate weighed eighteen pounds, the next one fifteen; and, after he had eaten these two, his appetite seemed to be as sharp and as active as it was before he had eaten one bite. He then consumed two more, and before an hour had passed he had eaten four and one-half, the weight of which was not less than fifty-five or sixty pounds, and would have eaten the balance, when Magee became satisfied, paid for the melons, told Reid that he could quit, and told the crowd standing by to help eat what remained, when it was consumed in less time than it takes to tell it.—Laurel County (Ky.) Echo.

A RUSSIAN battery commander having sent home by post upward of $25,000 during the struggle with Turkey, it was suspected that this wealth had been come by in some dishonest way. It subsequently transpired that the officer had cruelly starved to death the horses under his charge and pocketed the money appropriated for the purchase of their forage, compelling the men under him to do the work of the poor brutes.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, OCTOBER 18, 1879.

NUMBER 34.

VOLUME 3.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, etc.

D. E. OFFUTT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Implements, Musical Instruments,
Guns, Fish, etc.

G. W. LEGG,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Second & Oak sts.

D. H. LOAR,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jew-
elry, etc.

I. W. STALNAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third and Oak streets.

L. BUSH & SON,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third & Oak sts.

J. A. GRANT,
Dry Goods, Notions & Groceries,
SPECIAL LINE OF TOBACCO.

DAVIS & TOWNSEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agents Agricultural Implements,
Opposite Valley's Park.

C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Saddles, Trunks, Confectionery, etc.,
Next to Coddington's Hotel.

RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods, Fruit, etc.

HOTELS.

CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,
W. M. CODDINGTON, Proprietor,
Main St., Opposite Janison's Billiard Saloon.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

G. A. SHERR,
Oak street, near Second.
A general line of Stoves and Tinware.

PHYSICIANS.

DR. J. LEE MCCOMAS,
Office on Main Street.

DR. E. H. PARSONS,
offers his professional services
to the people of Oakland and vicinity.
Office in the old Offutt building.
38 3m

PLASTERER.

JAMES AINOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street.

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.

W. M. WAGNER,
Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.

GEO. F. LOUGHRIDGE,
Leave orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.

J. B. BRANT,
Surveyor, Auctioneer and
Conveyancer.
Oakland, Garrett county, Md.

JOHN HARNED,
Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.

A. B. WOODCOCK,
In Wm. Simouse's Building,
Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY
GOODS.

MRS. M. E. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Gents' Furnishing
and Fancy Goods, and Show.
Main Street, Opposite Dr. McComas' office.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

GEO. C. STURGIS,
Drugs, Medicines,
Toiletries, Toilet articles, Stationery,
Tobacco and Cigars. Alder St.

G. W. MERRILL,
Near Depot.
Pure Drugs, Medicines, Toilet Goods, Station-
ery, Fish, and Tobacco, French Candy, Fruits, Fishing Tackle, &c. Physician's prescriptions accurately compounded.

PAINTING & PAPER HANG-
ING.

E. J. FRINGER,
House and Sign Painter.
And Paper Hanger.
Leave orders at Bush's Store.

S. V. B. WARD,
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER
Shop near Davis House.

BLACKSMITHS.

CHAS. SINCELL,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

JOHN M. JARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,
Residence on Liberty St. nearly opp. Depot.

P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
And Builder.
Residence on Centre street.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Residence opp. School house.

JOSEPH M. CRIM,
Residence on Alder Street.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.

CABINETMAKERS AND UN-DERTAKERS.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SHATZER,
Shop on Second Street.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FALL & WINTER GOODS.

GOODS FRESH & NEW
and Cheap as the Cheapest.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,
MERCHANT TAILOR,

Has on hand a full stock of New

Ready Made Clothing,

which he will sell very cheap for cash.

Gents Furnishing Goods,

in great variety, and at prices to suit the
times.

Suits Made to Order

In the most fashionable manner. Orders by mail promptly attended to.

Also Agent for the Celebrated

"Pearl Shirt."

A Large Assortment of

BOYS' CLOTHING

Kept always on hand.

27-28 All work WARRANTED to give entire
satisfaction.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,
a6-ly Oakland, Md.

MEAT MARKET.

H. E. WOLFE

Formerly of Cumberland, Md., Takes this mode of announcing to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity that he has permanently located in Oakland for the purpose
of carrying on the

BUTCHERING BUSINESS
in a first-class manner.
FRESH BEEF, (salted), MUTTON, PORK,
Bologna Sausage, Pork Sau-
sage, &c., at all times.

27-28 Shop near the Post Office.
Customers can get what they want without
delay and at any hour of the day.
Your patronage is respectfully solicited.
n2 H. E. WOLFE.

PATENTS.

To Inventors and Manufacturers.
ESTABLISHED 1864.

GILMORE SMITH & CO.
Solicitors of Patents & Attorneys at Law.

American & Foreign Patents.

No fees in advance, nor until a Patent is allowed. No fees for making preliminary examinations.

Special attention given to Inter-
ference Cases before the Patent Office,
Infringement Suits in the different
States, and all litigation appertain-
ing to Patents or Inventions.

Send Stamp for Pamphlet of Sixty
Pages.

GILMORE & CO.,
629 F. Street, N. W.,
Washington, D. C.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

THO. J. PENNINGTON, A. B. GONDER.
PENNINGTON & GONDER,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW
AND
SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY,
OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany Counties, the adjoining Counties of West Virginia, and in the Court of Appeals
of Maryland. Jan. 30-1f

S. A. COX, H. WHEELER COBBS.
COX & COBBS,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW
AND
SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY,
Office, Alder street, Oakland, Garrett county,
Maryland.

Will practice in all the Courts of Maryland
and adjoining counties of West Virginia, and in the United States Circuit Courts. 13-18-ly

GILMORE S. HAMILL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY,
OFFICE IN OFFUTT'S BUILDING,
(Lower Floor).

Particular attention given to Conveyancing,
investigation of land titles and collection of debts. Loans negotiated. 14-15-ly

J. W. VEITCH,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND
SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY,
OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett County
and the adjoining Counties of West Virginia,
and in the Court of Appeals of Maryland.
John. 30-1f

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG

Late Resident Surgeon, New York
Eye and Ear Infirmary,
in the City of Philadelphia, Md., or the EX-CLUSIVE treatment of all diseases of the Eye and Ear, including those of the Sensitive
Tumors. 12-18-ly

Has located permanently in the City of Philadelphia, Md., or the EX-CLUSIVE treatment of all diseases of the Eye and Ear, including those of the Sensitive
Tumors. 12-18-ly

Office, No. 20 South Centre Street.
ap12151

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LESSONS.

SUNDAY, OCT. 19, 1879.

THE TRIUMPH OF FAITH.

GENERAL STATEMENT.

The eleventh chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrews has been justly termed "the masterpiece of the Bible." It presents to our view a noble array of great names, men of whom the world was not worthy, whose acts of faith have glorified God and encouraged God's people. Abel stands by his altar, rejoicing with blood which bears testimony to his faith in a coming Redeemer. Enoch walks among men with the unseen God by his side, and, while wearing the robes of mortality, he harks, anything to heaven.
Amid the tears of the world Noah calmly builds his ark, believing in God's warning of coming doom. At the call of the Lord Abraham departs from his home, and, in the land of promise, he builds an altar to the God of his fathers. Isaac, in the land of promise, is promised a son, and he believes in the promise of God. Jacob, in the land of promise, is promised a son, and he believes in the promise of God. Joseph, in the land of promise, is promised a son, and he believes in the promise of God. Moses, in the land
of promise, is promised a son, and he believes in the promise of God. David, in the land
of promise, is promised a son, and he believes in the promise of God. Jesus, in the land
of promise, is promised a son, and he believes in the promise of God. The world is full of such men, and the world is full of such faith. The world is full of such men, and the world is full of such faith. The world is full of such men, and the world is full of such faith. The world is full of such men, and the world is full of such faith.

Heb. 11, 1-10.

Memory Verse, 1-6.

1. Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen.

2. For by it the elders obtained a good report.

3. Through faith we understand that the world was framed by the word of God; so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear.

4. By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gift; and by it, being dead, yet speaketh.

5. By faith Enoch was translated, that he should not see death; and was not found, because God had translated him: for before his translation he had this testimony, that he pleased God.

6. But without faith it is impossible to please him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder
of them that diligently seek him.

7. By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world, and saved his own soul which he righteousness when he was faithful.

8. By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should afterwards have received, obeyed, and went out,
not knowing whither he went.

9. By faith Isaac, when he was warned of God, obeyed, and went out, not knowing
whither he went.

10. By faith Jacob, when he was warned of God, obeyed, and went out, not knowing
whither he went.

11. By faith Joseph, when he was warned of
God, obeyed, and went out, not knowing
whither he went.

12. By faith Moses, when he was warned of God, obeyed, and went out, not knowing
whither he went.

13. By faith Aaron, when he was warned of God, obeyed, and went out, not knowing
whither he went.

14. By faith Nadab, when he was warned of God, obeyed, and went out, not knowing
whither he went.

15. By faith Abihu, when he was warned of God, obeyed, and went out, not knowing
whither he went.

16. By faith Phinehas, when he was warned of God, obeyed, and went out, not knowing
whither he went.

17. By faith Hur, when he was warned of God, obeyed, and went out, not knowing
whither he went.

18. By faith Uzziah, when he was warned of God, obeyed, and went out, not knowing
whither he went.

19. By faith Zacharias, when he was warned of God, obeyed, and went out, not knowing
whither he went.

20. By faith Elizabeth, when she was warned of God, obeyed, and went out, not knowing
whither she went.

21. By faith Mary, when she was warned of God, obeyed, and went out, not knowing
whither she went.

22. By faith Joseph, when he was warned of
God, obeyed, and went out, not knowing
whither he went.

23. By faith Jesus, when he was warned of God, obeyed, and went out, not knowing
whither he went.

24. By faith the apostles, when they were warned of God, obeyed, and went out, not knowing whither they went.

25. By faith the saints, when they were warned of God, obeyed, and went out, not knowing whither they went.

26. By faith the church, when she was warned of God, obeyed, and went out, not knowing whither she went.

27. By faith the world, when it was warned of God, obeyed, and went out, not knowing whither it went.

28. By faith the universe, when it was warned of God, obeyed, and went out, not
knowing whither it went.

29. By faith the whole creation, when it was warned of God, obeyed, and went out,
not knowing whither it went.

30. By faith the whole world, when it was warned of God, obeyed, and went out, not
knowing whither it went.

31. By faith the whole universe, when it
was warned of God, obeyed, and went out,
not knowing whither it went.

32. By faith the whole creation, when it
was warned of God, obeyed, and went out,
not knowing whither it went.

33. By faith the whole world, when it was warned of God, obeyed, and went out, not
knowing whither it went.

34. By faith the whole universe, when it
was warned of God, obeyed, and went out,
not knowing whither it went.

35. By faith the whole creation, when it
was warned of God, obeyed, and went out,
not knowing whither it went.

36. By faith the whole world, when it was warned of God, obeyed, and went out, not
knowing whither it went.

37. By faith the whole universe, when it
was warned of God, obeyed, and went out,
not knowing whither it went.

38. By faith the whole creation, when it
was warned of God, obeyed, and went out,
not knowing whither it went.

39. By faith the whole world, when it was warned of God, obeyed, and went out, not
knowing whither it went.

40. By faith the whole universe, when it
was warned of God, obeyed, and went out,
not knowing whither it went.

41. By faith the whole creation, when it
was warned of God, obeyed, and went out,
not knowing whither it went.

42. By faith the whole world, when it was warned of God, obeyed, and went out, not
knowing whither it went.

43. By faith the whole universe, when it
was warned of God, obeyed, and went out,
not knowing whither it went.

44. By faith the whole creation, when it
was warned of God, obeyed, and went out,
not knowing whither it went.

45. By faith the whole world, when it was warned of God, obeyed, and went out, not
knowing whither it went.

46. By faith the whole universe, when it
was warned of God, obeyed, and went out,
not knowing whither it went.

National vs. "Wild-Cat" Banks.

We have in use two kinds of notes.

The United States notes are fixed in amount. But the National bank notes may increase or decrease in volume as business in any part of the country requires. This, then, is the only elastic part of our paper money, and yet men want to abolish it. No other part of our currency has this elasticity of adapting itself to merely local needs. Gold comes or goes when the trade of the whole country requires more or less. Legal-tenders, gold, if more are wanted for the business of any town, county or State, can be drawn only from other places by borrowing or by competition in selling products. But national banks can be started wherever men need them, and can increase or reduce their circulation at pleasure. If the farmers have a large crop, the bank can take out more circulation if more is needed, lend its notes on the obligations of men who buy and move the grain, and look with confidence for a return of its notes when the grain has been sold to consumers. In like manner local business of almost every kind may supply itself, through the bank system, with such currency as it really needs, and may thus be free from too great dependence upon the lenders of distant cities. The only thing required is capital, invested according to law in bonds for the security of the public. In order to invite capital to engage in banking at every place where there is need of it,
the National system gives some profit on the circulation thus employed for local wants. Yet this system, strange to say, the very men who complain of a lack of currency wish to break down. Strange to say, the very men who think there is not currency enough are those who object most loudly to the profits which invite men of means to put out more currency.

It is pretended that "the banks," having a common interest, will not together to contract the currency, and thus "increase their profits by every fall in prices." If this is so, why do they put out any notes at all? Small crops of wheat cause high prices, and high prices of wheat help the farmer. Therefore, will not the "agricultural monopoly," the farming interest, burn all the wheat or feed it to the hogs, in order to put up the price? Small crops and high prices do not help any unless he has a crop to sell. We may be sure that he will not destroy his own grain in order to make grain more scarce and help others to get high prices. So with banks; it helps them only to have money scarce when they have plenty to lend. Each bank might wish that some other bank would make money scarce, but not one will deprive itself of money to lend in order that others may make larger profits. Any contraction, too, which causes disaster, hurts the banks by breaking their customers. Some fail, owing the banks, and cannot pay what they owe. The National banks have lost $6,119,415 in bad debts charged off within the last three years. Other customers lose money, so that they would have less to deposit, and consequently the banks get less to lend.
Bad times for the country have led to the banks. In 1870 the National banks gained 14 per cent. on their whole capital invested; in 1878, less than half as much, 5 1/4 per cent.
To say that the banks will bring disaster upon others in order to help themselves is sheer nonsense. What workman, in order to better his condition, will set on fire the factory which pays him wages?

It is said that the National banks form "a powerful and dangerous monopoly." Nothing can be more absurd. These banks are not one in interest, as has been shown. Find fifty bankers, and you find fifty different opinions. National bankers are of all parties, and of all shades of opinion as to finance, and it never has been found possible to get a tenth of them to act together. There are 210,000 stockholders in National banks, but more than half of them own $1,000 or less of the stock each,
and war upon them as a class is largely a war upon women and children.
Banking is only a monopoly as far as financing is. A man who cannot get can't be a farmer, and a man who cannot get money has no right to be a banker. But the real objection to the system is that it prevents men who have no money from issuing swindling notes as bankers. Have the people forgotten how they were robbed in old times by "wild-cat" banks? The National system is so guarded that it is safe for the people.

For that reason it is hated by the men who want to swindle the country once more by starting banks without money, and putting out worthless notes without restraint.

Any set of men can start a National bank who will do it honestly, and have the means to do it safely.
But the restraints of the law are meant to protect the people and the system we have is the safest in the world. The bankers are obliged to pay in and hold three times as much capital in proportion to liabilities, as the 1,216 banks of England and Wales put up to protect their creditors. Sworn returns and strict inspections are required here; the lack of them in other countries, it is confessed exposes the people to greater danger. During sixteen years all the losses to all the creditors of National banks amount to only $6,119,415. But a single bank in Great Britain recently failed with a loss to creditors of $20,000,000. The old State banks, as all know, used to fail by the score, involving rich and poor in heavy losses. In one year, 1811, banks having a capital of $17,036,275—more than one-fifth of the entire banking capital in the country at that time—failed with a circulation of $23,577, 752, and in nearly every instance the entire capital was lost. In almost every year of disaster, it is safe to say, the loss to creditors of the old State banks was greater than the loss to the creditors of all National banks in sixteen years. It costs something to make the system so safe. Policemen and fire-engines, for the protection of life and property, cost something also. But it would be much more sensible to abolish them than to permit knaves to start banks and issue notes without restraint.

None deny that the banking system has saved the people many millions by its safety. None deny that a perfectly safe and uniform currency, of the same value in every part of the land, is of very great benefit. But those who assail this system, in order to revive the State banks, have no idea what that change would cost.
It has been shown in Article 4, that the tax paid, in the rate of exchange between the West and the South and the East, in the years before the war, was not less than 1 or 1 1/2 per cent. on the whole value of goods transferred and payments made. If that value is only $1,000,000,000, the cost of returning to the old system would now be from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000 yearly. But it is generally believed that the amount of exchange drawn each year is already over $5, 000,000,000, and it is rapidly increasing. At the past rate of growth, the domestic commerce will double in ten years. On a yearly movement of $10,000,000,000, the cost of substituting thirty-eight kinds of paper,
some bad, some good, for our uniform and safe currency, will be from $100,000,000 to $150,000,000 yearly. It for the long future that men of sense will build. The State bank system would inflict an enormous tax, even now, upon the producers of the West and South, with no real benefit to anybody, but in years to come that burden would become much greater than the interest on the whole National debt. Growing every year with the domestic commerce, it would soon become so vast and intolerable that no man would dare to oppose a return to a National currency.

Compared with the great saving in the cost of exchange, which is more than $50,000,000 yearly already, or with the saving in smaller losses to the people through failure of banks in single years of disaster, the cost of the National system is insignificant.
No one claims that as much as the entire interest on bonds deposited for circulation, now less than $16, 500,000. But that sum is less than one-third of the saving in cost of exchange alone.

Blaine's Canvass in Ohio.

Many pleasant stories are told of the wonderful memory of Senator Blaine, as exhibited in his canvass in Ohio.

At Bellville he recognized at once old classmates he had not seen for thirty-five or forty years, called them by name, referred to trivial incidents in the past, oftentimes passed from the memory of him addressed for many years. For instance, as he was entering the dining room, Dr.
Welch, of Martin's Ferry, stepped up and said: "Mr. Blaine," Blaine turned immediately and replied:
"Why, Israel Welch, sure as I'm alive, I'm glad to see you, old friend." He had not seen Welch since 1

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

"TIS MORNING AND THE DAYS ARE LONG."

I had a dream of other days;
In golden luxury shone the wheat,
In tangled greenness took the night;
The squirrel ran with nimble feet,
And in and out among the trees
The blue bird darted like a flame,
The cat-bird piped her melodies,
Furling every warbler's fan;
And then I heard the triumphal song—
"Tis morning, and the days are long."
They scattered roses, strewed the palms,
And shouted down the pleasant vales;
I heard a thousand happy psalms,
And laughing, wrote a thousand tales
Of mimic revelry and joy;
The mocking bird the world's great—
Each fan-feel girl and lark-foot boy,
Dear shapers of my early fate,
And then again the solemn song,
"Tis morning, and the days are long."
Far winding past the storied town,
The river ran through willow groves,
Its banks were lined with verdant vines,
Full freighted with a myriad loaves;
Our souls went floating to the gulls,
With meek leaves and shreds of bark,
We named them cutters, schooners, sails,
And watched them float in shadowy dark;
Then down the water flowed the song,
"Tis morning, and the days are long."
O' morning, when the days are long,
And youth and innocence are well,
And every grove is full of song,
Who rightly sings its rightful praise,
Or rightly dreams it or again,
When cold and narrow are the days,
And shrunken are the souls of men,
He shall awaken with his song,
"Tis morning, and the days are long."
There palpitates will and sweet,
And thrills of many an old delight,
And dimpled hands that lightly meet,
And hearts that tremble to unite;
Arise upon the rosy morn,
Pass down the lovely vales and stand,
A picture of a memory hour,
The mirror of a life's dawn,
A land where once we trod the song,
"Tis morning, and the days are long."
—H. S. Ford, "The Indian Post."

TWO LATE.

Now, what do you want?
"I wished to see my husband,
I beg pardon, for I perceive he is not here."
The question was curt, rude, rough,
even; the reply impetuous, cuttingly sarcastic, and with a dash of anger in its tones. You would never have thought that Maxwell Maillard, gentleman, as he called himself and the world called him, could have spoken so to his sweet young wife, as any coarse, liery man might in an imperious mood to an intrusive servant or an annoying beggar.
Nor would you have thought, either,
that lovely Alice Maillard, who had become so flushed and disturbed, or have made such a reply to the husband she loved better than life itself,
and then have turned and walked away with such a queenly step from his presence.

It certainly was an unpleasant and unfortunate mood the merchant was in that evening. The close of the year was near at hand, and all day long he had been perplexed by a business transaction incident to his large business; besides,
he had discovered a gross error in his books, the result of an incompetent bookkeeper's blunder, and had taken them home with him that evening to endeavor to trace its source and rectify it.

It was while in this mood, his brows knitted with perplexity, that his girl-wife came to him in the quiet little library whither he had retired after dinner, and stealing softly up behind him, had playfully blinded his eyes with one of her white hands, at the same time pushing away the thick ledger over the green baize-covered table. In an instant the quick, rough question that he tokened annoyance burst from his lips,
and in an instant more the white hand was snatched away, the little graceful head tilted high, a red spot appeared on both cheeks, and the cutting, sarcastic answer was given. And in a few moments more the merchant was left alone, his handsomely-shaped head, covered with thick iron-gray locks, was bent again over his books, but with a compression of his lips and a glitter in his eye one seldom saw there, while the girl-wife was sitting in the parlor quiet as a statue, but with that same high color and excited mien with which she had left the library.

For some minutes Alice Maillard sat there, perfectly motionless, looking straight before her; then her countenance softened—a grief-stricken, wounded
oak came into her eyes; her lips relaxed and quivered with feeling, and she burst into tears and sobbed as though her very heart would break.

The sobs increased, and the tears rolled down the cheeks now pale with emotion; but after a time she grew calmer.

"I am sorry I spoke so," she said, confessing her fault to herself with as much earnestness as though her husband were a listener. "I am sorry.
If Max were rough" (here the lips trembled again) "I would have been more patient. I suppose those tiresome books troubled him; I will go and apologize."

And, rising, she left the room, and walked along the hall to the rear of the house where the little library was situated. But, laying her hand on the knob of the door, she was surprised to find it fastened. The lock was turned.
"Unkind," she said now, the red spot deepening again on her cheek; and as noisily as she had come she returned to the parlor.

Two, three hours passed away; lonesome enough felt the solitary Alice,
striving to pass the time with her sewing,
upon which, now and then, a tear dropped silently.

All that time, however, her thoughts were busy, and she clung to her first resolve not to sleep until she had made peace with her husband. For it was a new thing to this lovely young creature
—the pet of her girlhood home, and the bride of less than a year—to hear a harsh word or utter an unkind one; and all that long evening, while she sat
there in tears, seemed an age to her.
Ah, little Alice, can such exquisitely keen suffering ever come again?

Nine, ten, eleven o'clock struck, and then she heard the library door open and her husband's footsteps along the hall. But they did not pause at the parlor, though the door was partially ajar, they passed on, and he ascended the staircase to his chamber.

This was too much. Tears again swelled in the large, sensitive eyes, and womanly indignation prompted her to remain below until she was calm; and when she went to her room her husband was, or pretended to be, fast locked in sleep.

Next morning, at breakfast, the young wife was prepared to expect the way might be easier for the establishment of peace between them, but there was a reserve and iciness in Mr. Maillard's manner which quite frustrated this intention. He hurried through the meal, went to the library for his books, looked into the breakfast-room again for a courteous "good-morning," but did not unbend to bestow the customary parting kiss.

Alice felt more than ever grieved, thus thrown back upon herself. All day long she was most unhappy, and could not settle herself about her usual employments.

The feelings she suffered were so new to her; it was something she had never thought could happen—to speak a quick, angry word to one who was all the world to her; and, though she had been betrayed into the utterance, she never could be happy again till it had been explained and forgiven.

She would speak to her husband before sleep again sealed her eyelids, although very soon, indeed, had not been the slumber that visited her last night.

When evening arrived, and Mr. Mail-lard came to dinner, Alice met him as usual with an affectionate greeting, and put up her lips for the customary kiss;
but very icy was the salutation, and such a tone of restraint pervaded his manner that she found herself deterred from uttering a word.

At table Mr. Maillard was politely attentive, and led the conversation to subjects of general interest, keeping it up so skillfully that not an opening appeared for the introduction of any reference to the particular subject that engrossed his wife's mind; and when he arose he said:

"I have an engagement at the club to-night, Mrs. Maillard, and it will probably be late when I return," and went out.

"Why did I not speak? I won't let it pass so! He is as cold as an iceberg.
I will have an explanation before I sleep to-night," said Alice, passionatly. "He shall treat me like a child
no longer."

It was late when Mr. Maillard returned, and he did not expect to find
the watcher who sat in the parlor, and a little surprise was in his glance when he entered, but he made no comment
on it. "It is past twelve, I know, Maxwell,
but I sat up for you. The truth is, I wanted to speak to you about—about—"
But here she paused.

"Well," he was but little encouragement
in the cool monosyllable that Mr. Mail-lard uttered, and the eyes upon which
his wife's were turned appealingly
evinced no glance of tenderness to lure
her on in the path that was now growing more and more uncomfortable. He well knew what was going on in her mind. Was this man a hardened booby?

Society, as I said, called him a gentleman. He had many excellent traits,
and he was not really felt comfortable
himself since that affair in the library;
but he had a strong, passionate nature,
and an iron will that had never been
subdued, and like many of his proud
and imperious type, he would neither
bend to acknowledge himself nor
seem to encourage by any tenderness manner his wife's. So he sat, stately and frigid, in the seat he had taken by the register.

Meantime, Alice, affectionate and
sensitive, with her whole heart in her eyes, and those eyes eagerly beseeching
his, stood near him where she had advanced as she spoke. At first it had been easier for her to utter those words,
but that she had not really felt comfortable checked further utterance and froze
her lips; but at length she burst out,
passionately:

"I will speak! Maxwell, you know what I want to say! I am very unhappy," and the hot tears thickened her voice.

"What makes you unhappy, Mrs.
Maillard?"

Yes, the man actually asked that question—he who knew that his wife was suffering. Not an embrace, no opening of his arms to draw her to his breast, no
kiss on her quivering mouth, no tremor
in his own tones, but instead that impassioned question.

"What makes you unhappy, Mrs.
Maillard?"

For an instant the ice thus driven
into the gulf-stream of feeling checked
its current; then it came on again, but not so warm as before.

"I am unhappy because I have suffered—an still suffering, and I want a reconciliation. You know, Maxwell,
those words spoken in the library the other night, I was sorry the very minute afterward."

"And I was sorry also, Mrs. Maillard.
Any exhibition of impetuosity—temper, I might say—disgusts me. I think any wife ought to know that and avoid such things. But I forgive you now."

Mr. Maillard said this as sternly as though he had been a judge pronouncing sentence—and as if he himself were not the cause of it all. A chill ran through poor Alice's veins. She had read of lovers' quarrels and feuding estrangement between the married, but here was a new phase. She had expected to be taken to her husband's
heart and restored to happiness again.

She never dreamed of this being thrown off to suffer by the power of that cruel will—she who was all heart and affection. If he was only downright angry with her—would even scold
her—then the tempest would pass; but
no, there was no soft, fluffy aspiration
of superiority. She was cast back on herself and could say nothing.

Chilled, amazed, humiliated, and
half-stunned by the turn the matter
had taken, the poor girl-wife went to her chamber.

Maxwell Maillard sat for perhaps
half an hour ere he left the parlor,
buried in a reverie. But his thoughts were not of a gentle character. One could have seen that by the lips that
were still closely shut, and the expression of triumph that shone in his bright blue eyes. Had this man a heart, and did it hold one throb of love for his wife?

Yes, he thought so. He had been a most ardent wooer; he unbent to en-slave, subdue and win; and no lover of younger years ever could have so completely overpowered the sensitive, impulsive, high-souled, beautiful Alice Annab, as this stately, handsome, middle-aged gentleman.

Yes, he loved her with a strong, imperious love, such as men of his type feel—a selfish love, in that she misterred to his pride of possession; but he loved himself more. And, as he sat there after she had left him, the expression of his eyes fully showed this thought:

"I intended to let her suffer. And I intend that she shall suffer more. It is not a man's place to yield. A wife's spirit should be broken to her husband's. When I think she is sufficiently punished I shall take her back to my heart again."

And the poor girl above was taking her first lesson in that bitterest knowledge that ever comes to woman's heart—
the feeling that she is treated unfairly and unkindly. She half doubted if she had heard her husband speak at all.
Had he even answered her? she asked herself.

How very far apart they seemed still! Was this the reconciliation to which she had been looking forward? She shut her eyelids hard to press back the hot tears, and murmured, with a little sob: "And yet when one loves it is so easy to forgive."

"Poor Alice!" The mills of the gods grind slowly, but they grind exceedingly small. "One day that proud, impulsive man will weep bitter tears that he is now causing you."

Days, and weeks, and months followed, that first rupture between Mail-
lard and his wife; and though to all outward appearances they were
attentive to each other, and, in society,
as happy as ever, yet Alice felt that the gulf between them had never been bridged. She had, indeed, often essayed to fling across it the rosy bands
of affection; but in that chill, icy air
they had withered speedily ere they reached him standing on the other side.
And yet, had any one come to that man
and said to him: "You are to blame,
and are daily adding to your sin," he would have indignantly denied it.

The truth was, his imperious will,
pampered by that first entire submission on the part of his wife, had grown
with what it fed upon until it overshadowed his whole nature. Had Alice
been a different woman—less submissive, less impulsive, more persistent of
her rights—even had she, like Maxwell,
been a man, he would have been a different man.

It was late when Mr. Maillard returned, and he did not expect to find
the watcher who sat in the parlor, and
a little surprise was in his glance when
he entered, but he made no comment
on it. "It is past twelve, I know, Maxwell,
but I sat up for you. The truth is, I wanted to speak to you about—about—"
But here she paused.

"Well," he was but little encouragement
in the cool monosyllable that Mr. Mail-
lard uttered, and the eyes upon which
his wife's were turned appealingly
evinced no glance of tenderness to lure
her on in the path that was now growing more and more uncomfortable. He
well knew what was going on in her
mind. Was this man a hardened booby?

Society, as I said, called him a gentleman. He had many excellent traits,
and he was not really felt comfortable
himself since that affair in the library;
but he had a strong, passionate nature,
and an iron will that had never been
subdued, and like many of his proud
and imperious type, he would neither
bend to acknowledge himself nor
seem to encourage by any tenderness
manner his wife's. So he sat, stately
and frigid, in the seat he had taken by
the register.

Meantime, Alice, affectionate and
sensitive, with her whole heart in her
eyes, and those eyes eagerly beseeching
his, stood near him where she had advanced as she spoke. At first it had been easier for her to utter those words,
but that she had not really felt comfortable checked further utterance and froze
her lips; but at length she burst out,
passionately:

"I will speak! Maxwell, you know what I want to say! I am very unhappy," and the hot tears thickened her
voice.

"What makes you unhappy, Mrs.
Maillard?"

Yes, the man actually asked that
question—he who knew that his wife was suffering. Not an embrace, no opening of his arms to draw her to his breast, no
kiss on her quivering mouth, no tremor
in his own tones, but instead that im-
passioned question.

"What makes you unhappy, Mrs.
Maillard?"

For an instant the ice thus driven
into the gulf-stream of feeling checked
its current; then it came on again, but
not so warm as before.

"I am unhappy because I have suffered—an still suffering, and I want a reconciliation. You know, Maxwell,
those words spoken in the library the
other night, I was sorry the very minute afterward."

"And I was sorry also, Mrs. Maillard.
Any exhibition of impetuosity—temper, I might say—disgusts me. I think
any wife ought to know that and avoid
such things. But I forgive you now."

Mr. Maillard said this as sternly as though he had been a judge pronounc-
ing sentence—and as if he himself were
not the cause of it all. A chill ran through poor Alice's veins. She had
read of lovers' quarrels and feuding estrangement between the married, but
here was a new phase. She had expected to be taken to her husband's
heart and restored to happiness again.

She never dreamed of this being
thrown off to suffer by the power of that
cruel will—she who was all heart and
affection. If he was only downright
angry with her—would even scold
her—then the tempest would pass; but
no, there was no soft, fluffy aspiration
of superiority. She was cast back on herself and could say nothing.

Chilled, amazed, humiliated, and
half-stunned by the turn the matter
had taken, the poor girl-wife went to
her chamber.

Maxwell Maillard sat for perhaps
half an hour ere he left the parlor,
buried in a reverie. But his thoughts
were not of a gentle character. One
could have seen that by the lips that
were still closely shut, and the expression of triumph that shone in his bright
blue eyes. Had this man a heart, and did it hold one throb of love for his
wife?

Yes, he thought so. He had been a question. No one could fail to see how attentive he is; and I wonder such a thought could enter your mind."

Good Hester's answer was quickly given; but a line that corrugated her brows betrayed what she would not allow her lips to utter, even to her brother.

"They say that twins have a magnetic sympathy for their mates. I seem to feel that Alice is not so light-hearted as she was when she left us. Nineteen to-morrow, and she looks full five years older than when she left us, a year and a half ago. If Maillard don't make her happy I shall hate him!" and a stern, bitter expression settled on the youth's handsome face.

"Why, Horace, how strangely you talk!" persisted Hester. "Of course Ally wouldn't seem as usual. Mother's death, you know," and here the usually calm, self-possessed woman's lip quiv-ered.

Horace's own deep hazel eyes filled.
The boy had a tender, womanly heart.
"It may be my fancy only. I hope so, Hester," but he stood long in thought.

After their return home Mr. Maillard's mien softened toward his wife.

He could not see her going about in her mourning robes, with her pale, sad face, and quiet ways, without relaxing from his late manner. But still his pride, so long dominant, mastered him sufficiently to withhold him from the manifestation of his returning tenderness except by constant watchfulness
and by surrounding her with such luxuries as wealth could procure.

Days, and weeks, and months followed, that first rupture between Mail-
lard and his wife; and though to all
outward appearances they were
attentive to each other, and, in society,
as happy as ever, yet Alice felt that the
gulf between them had never been bridged. She had, indeed, often es-
sayed to fling across it the rosy bands
of affection; but in that chill, icy air
they had withered speedily ere they
reached him standing on the other side.
And yet, had any one come to that man
and said to him: "You are to blame,
and are daily adding to your sin," he
would have indignantly denied it.

The truth was, his imperious will,
pampered by that first entire submission on the part of his wife, had grown
with what it fed upon until it overshadowed his whole nature. Had Alice
been a different woman—less submis-
sive, less impulsive, more persistent of
her rights—even had she, like Maxwell,
been a man, he would have been a different man.

It was late when Mr. Maillard returned, and he did not expect to find
the watcher who sat in the parlor, and
a little surprise was in his glance when
he entered, but he made no comment
on it. "It is past twelve, I know, Maxwell,
but I sat up for you. The truth is, I wanted to speak to you about—about—"
But here she paused.

"Well," he was but little encouragement
in the cool monosyllable that Mr. Mail-
lard uttered, and the eyes upon which
his wife's were turned appealingly
evinced no glance of tenderness to lure
her on in the path that was now growing more and more uncomfortable. He
well knew what was going on in her
mind. Was this man a hardened booby?

Society, as I said, called him a gentleman. He had many excellent traits,
and he was not really felt comfortable
himself since that affair in the library;
but he had a strong, passionate nature,
and an iron will that had never been
subdued, and like many of his proud
and imperious type, he would neither
bend to acknowledge himself nor
seem to encourage by any tenderness
manner his wife's. So he sat, stately
and frigid, in the seat he had taken by
the register.

Meantime, Alice, affectionate and
sensitive, with her whole heart in her
eyes, and those eyes eagerly beseeching
his, stood near him where she had advanced as she spoke. At first it had been easier for her to utter those words,
but that she had not really felt comfortable checked further utterance and froze
her lips; but at length she burst out,
passionately:

"I will speak! Maxwell, you know what I want to say! I am very unhappy," and the hot tears thickened her
voice.

"What makes you unhappy, Mrs.
Maillard?"

Yes, the man actually asked that
question—he who knew that his wife was suffering. Not an embrace, no opening of his arms to draw her to his breast, no
kiss on her quivering mouth, no tremor
in his own tones, but instead that im-
passioned question.

"What makes you unhappy, Mrs.
Maillard?"

For an instant the ice thus driven
into the gulf-stream of feeling checked
its current; then it came on again, but
not so warm as before.

"I am unhappy because I have suffered—an still suffering, and I want a reconciliation. You know, Maxwell,
those words spoken in the library the
other night, I was sorry the very minute afterward."

"And I was sorry also, Mrs. Maillard.
Any exhibition of impetuosity—temper, I might say—disgusts me. I think
any wife ought to know that and avoid
such things. But I forgive you now."

Mr. Maillard said this as sternly as though he had been a judge pronounc-
ing sentence—and as if he himself were
not the cause of it all. A chill ran through poor Alice's veins. She had
read of lovers' quarrels and feuding estrangement between the married, but
here was a new phase. She had expected to be taken to her husband's
heart and restored to happiness again.

She never dreamed of this being
thrown off to suffer by the power of that
cruel will—she who was all heart and
affection. If he was only downright
angry with her—would even scold
her—then the tempest would pass; but
no, there was no soft, fluffy aspiration
of superiority. She was cast back on herself and could say nothing.

Chilled, amazed, humiliated, and
half-stunned by the turn the matter
had taken, the poor girl-wife went to
her chamber.

Maxwell Maillard sat for perhaps
half an hour ere he left the parlor,
buried in a reverie. But his thoughts
were not of a gentle character. One
could have seen that by the lips that
were still closely shut, and the expression of triumph that shone in his bright
blue eyes. Had this man a heart, and did it hold one throb of love for his
wife?

Yes, he thought so. He had been a

A Penguin Rookery.

In penguin rookeries the grass covers white tracts with a dense growth,
like that of a field of standing corn, but denser and higher, the grass reaching high over one's head.

Most of the droves of penguins make for one landing place, where the beach surface was covered with a coating of dirt from their feet, forming a broad track leading to a lane in the tall grass about a yard wide at the bottom, and quite bare with a smoothly-beaten roadway; this was the entrance to the main street of this art of the "rookery."

Various lateral streets lead off on each side from the main road, and are often at their mouths as big as it; moreover, the road sometimes divides for a little and joins again; hence it is the easiest thing in the world to lose one's way.

It is impossible to conceive the discomfort of making one's way through a big rookery, haphazard,
or "across country," as one may say.
You plunge into one of the lanes in the tall grass, which at once shuts out the surroundings from your view. You tread on a slimy, black, damp soil composed of the birds' dung. The stench is overpowering, the yelling of the birds perfectly terrifying; I can call it nothing else. You lose the path, or perhaps are bent from the first in making direct for some spot on the other side of the rookery.

Now you are, the instant you leave the road, on the actual breeding-grounds. The nests are placed so thickly that you can not help treading on eggs and young birds at almost every step. A parent bird sits on each nest, with its sharp beak erect and open ready to bite, yelling, savagely, "Can, can, urr, urr," its red eye gleaming and its plumes at half-cock and quivering with rage. No sooner are your legs within reach than they are furiously bitten, often by two or three at once—that is if you have not got on strong leather gaiters, as on the first occasion of visiting a rookery you probably have not. At first you try to avoid the nests, but soon find that impossible; then, maddened almost by the pain, stench and noise, you have recourse to brutality. Thump, thump goes your stick, and at each blow down goes a bird. Thud, thud, you hear from the men behind, as they kick the birds off the nests, and so you go on for a bit, thump and smash, whack, thud,

"can, can, urr, urr," and the path behind you is strewn with the dead, dying and bleeding.

But you make miserable slow progress, and worried to death, at last resort to the expedient of stampeding as far as your breath will carry you. You put down your head and make a rush through the grass treading on old and young haphazard, and rushing on before they have time to bite.

An Unfortunate Colony.

MR. DEMEY A. COBB writes from Cunningham, Mass., to the New York Herald: Soon after the close of the war, a number of Southern planters emigrated to Brazil, where, slave-labor being permitted they hoped to continue in the way which was ended by the abolition of slavery in the Southern States.
The emigrants were largely roughs from Southern cities, who were induced to go by the generous offers of the Brazilian Government and a desire for adventure; with the rest was a goodly sprinkling of those who had reason to believe that the new world would be after the aid extended by the Brazilian Government had ceased, far the greater part returned to the United States, many at the expense and by the aid of the Government. A few who had taken some time, with their families, with them took up land and began farming. Few found it for their interest to buy slaves, as Indian labor is quite as cheap, and the laws of Brazil place many restrictions upon the slave-trade. In regard to their treatment and sale. It is of the latter class of colonists that I purpose to speak. An unusual interest has been felt in Brazil since the new steamship line has been started, and the emigrants are endeavoring to start in some business there. I spent one year in the vicinity of the colony of Santarem a few facts in regard to it may be of interest at this time.

Santarem is situated on the Amazon,
between five hundred and six hundred miles from the sea. Some of the finest land in the empire lies within a few miles of that little city. It was here that a large portion of the emigrants settled, the others going to one of the Southern provinces. The Brazilian Government furnished them houses until they could select plantations and build, and also paid them $10
a month advance for the first six months by the way of inducement for emigrants to that country.
This premium was ample, and as the terms of taking land were easy, at the end of six months such as intended to remain in the colony were willing to work hard taken from five hundred to five thousand acres of the best land and cleared enough for crops, and built comfortable but rude houses. About the same time several English families settled in the infant colony, and as their reception and projects were similar to the Americans I have included them in the following statistics, which are the result of careful inquiry, and a personal acquaintance with the remaining colonists. Before giving these figures it may be well to say a few words about these colonists, their habits and pursuits. They are very hospitable, and though rather sensitive on the subject of race, and are disposed to criticize "Yankee rule," any American traveler will be sure of a warm welcome and generous hospitality. Perhaps this fact may have something to do with the reason why the emigrants were willing to take up land in the infant colony.

The twin-brother, brilliant with youth
and promise, but stunted and nearly erased by the terrible blow, felt that half his own bright young life was buried under the earth-rod.

And Maxwell Maillard—the strong,
proud man, whose imperious will had never yielded before—was smitten by the fiat of the Almighty. He was left alone with remorse and regret. No need now to open his eyes; he had seen the end of his life. He must sit down in the ashes of his desolation. No need now to relax his iron rule.

It was TWO LATE.

They buried her in the cemetery of her village home, beside her mother;
buried her with her dead baby on her breast. Hester's sad face again looked up at the sky, and she said settled in deeper lines—lines that would grow deeper still with the lapse of years that could never restore the loved ones to the faithful heart of the mourner.

The twin-brother, brilliant with youth
and promise, but stunted and nearly
erased by the terrible blow, felt that
half his own bright young life was buried
under the earth-rod.

And Maxwell Maillard—the strong,
proud man, whose imperious will

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1 50
SIX MONTHS, 75
INvariably in Advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, $1 per square of 8 lines;
50 cents per square for each additional insertion. Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, OCT. 18, 1879.

Republican State Ticket.

For Governor,
JAMES A. GARY,
Of Howard County.

For Comptroller,
SAMUEL MALLALIEU,
Of Queen Anne's County.

For Attorney General,
F. M. DABBY,
Of Washington County.

For Clerk of Court of Appeals,
J. T. McCULLOUGH,
Of Cecil County.

Republican County Ticket.

For Clerk of the Circuit Court,
W. H. TOWEL.

For House of Delegates,
GEORGE W. WILSON,
AUSTIN SPEICHER.

For Sheriff,
GEORGE D. WHITE.

For Register of Wills,
W. H. HAGANS.

For County Commissioners,
D. HARRISON FRIEND,
JOHN WILHELM,
WM. W. BROADWATER.

For Judges of the Orphans' Court,
JOSEPH DEWITE,
WM. HARVEY,
ISAAC H. KOOKEN.

For Surveyor,
JOHN HARNED.

GRAND MASS MEETINGS.

Grand Mass Meetings, at which
our candidates for Governor and Attorney General and other eminent speakers will deliver addresses, will
be held at

Bloomington, 25th,

Johnstown, 28th,

Oakland, Wednesday 29th.

Grantsville, Thursday 30th.

Accident, Nov. 1st.

The above meetings will be held
at 2 o'clock P. M.

Meetings will also be held at the following dates and places, to be addressed by B. A. Richmond, T. J.
Pettigrew, H. Wheeler Combs and N. E. Fuller, Esqs., and others,
the meetings to be held at 7 P. M.

Selbyport, 18th,

Forks School House, 20th,

Paugh's School House, 20th,

Altamont, 21st,

Grantsville, 21st,

Deer Park, 22d,

New Germany, 22d,

Broadwater's, 23d,

Firm Rock S. H., 24th.

Malne, California, Oregon, Ohio,
Iowa—now for Maryland.

Hons. John Cessna, of Pennsylvania, and H. W. Hoffman, of Camberland, will probably address the meeting at Accident, Nov. 1st.

A few Democratic politicians in Oakland have been making efforts to force R. T. Browning off the Democratic ticket and substitute Dr. E. H.
Bartlett, but Mr. Browning refuses to retire. We also understand that it is the wish of a few to retire Mr.
Robinson and place Mr. Joshua
Johnson on the commissioners ticket.
Shrewd Democratic politicians think Mr. Getty was at the bottom of the whole business, and that it was intended to conciliate the Johnson element.

Senator Lamar in a recent speech at Oxford, Mississippi, said President Hayes had come nearer to being a president of the whole people than any one the country had had for a long time. This is kind.

Our Ticket.

The Republican party of Garrett county, in convention assembled, with a unanimity unprecedented in the history of our county, nominated the ticket which you are called upon to support. The men on that ticket were chosen solely upon the ground of qualification and fitness for the various offices to be filled.

For Clerk of the Circuit Court, our ticket is headed by Mr. Wm. H.
Tower, and he is too well known throughout the county to need any recommendation at our hands. His performance of the duties of the office for the past seven years has been alike satisfactory to Democrats and Republicans, and it is frequently said of him that he is one of the best and most efficient clerks in the state.

Our nominee for Register of Wills, Mr. W. H. Hagans, has shown his efficiency as Clerk to the County Commissioners, and in the whole county we know of no one that is better qualified to fill that position satisfactorily than Mr. Hagans.

Our Commissioners ticket, which is the most important to the tax payers of the county, is composed of the very best men in the party, and it is the duty of every Republican to work untiringly for its election.

For the House of Delegates we have Hon. George W. Wilson and Mr. Austin Speicher. Mr. Wilson is a man of considerable ability and public spirit. He was a member of the last House of Delegates, which was the first political office he ever held. He is by occupation a farmer and lumber manufacturer, and is about forty years of age. In 1862 he enlisted in the third regiment of West Virginia cavalry, and in a charge at Salem, Va., June 21, 1864,
was severely wounded. In February of the following year he was conmissioned a first lieutenant, and a short time afterwards was made a captain. He is a brave and honest man, and is highly respected by all who know him. Mr. Speicher is a farmer, has never before held office, and is conceded by all to be a man of more than ordinary intelligence, and it is elected, and he certainly will be,
will make a good representative.

For the offices of Sheriff, Surveyor and Judges of the Orphans' Court, we offer a ticket that you cannot help supporting.

With such a ticket we shall win such a victory next month as will for years settle the question of political supremacy in this county.

Mr. Getty and the "Ring."

We do not propose to deal in personalities during this campaign, and if our ticket cannot be elected without our abusing the private character of any gentleman on the opposition ticket, then it will never be elected;
but the public record of any gentleman is public property, and that we have a right to use. We desire the voters of Garrett county to examine the record of Mr. Getty, while representing Garrett county in the Maryland Senate. You will find his vote recorded in the Journal of the Senate every time with the "Ring."

When the Assessment Act of 1876
was passed the Republicans advocated the appointment of one assessor
for each county, and that the County Commissioners should act as a board of control and review. The assessment under this system would have cost the people of Garrett county from $1,000 to $1,200. The Democrats and Mr. Getty with them, passed the bill creating six assessors and an extra board of "control and review," and the result was a cost of almost $5,000, a waste of near $4,000 for the people of Garrett county, which the Democratic party of Maryland, aided by Mr. Getty, took from the burdened tax payers for the purpose of paying some party adherents, and yet Mr. Getty solicits the patronage of the people whom he and his party robbed of this amount of their hard earnings. Voters of Garrett county, remember these facts and cast your ballots for Wilson and Speicher, two honest farmers.

Pleads Guilty.

Gov. Carroll, in his speech on the 29th ult., in Monument Square,
says:

"We need economy and retrenchment in our expenditures, the lopping off of many useless offices, and a new registration law by which perfect fairness can be secured at our elections. The people will also demand an absolute change in the present system of the inspection of tobacco, and such a modification of our school system as will guard more securely the interests of the public."

The reform party in 1875 made the share of extravagance and corruption in the Democratic party. The leading Democrats at the time, Governor Carroll with them, admitted the charge and promised that these irregularities—to put it nicely—
would be corrected in the party.

The ticket was put through by fraudulent voting in Baltimore, and Mr.
Carroll was inducted into office. He being an honest man personally, which no one pretends to doubt, attempted to make good the promise.

recommended to the Legislature the correction of the abuses that then existed. Gov. Carroll's recommendations were unheeded. The boys who put him in the gubernatorial chair did not want any reform. Change was unnecessary. The tobacco warehouse was too good a political asylum to be abolished; they did not want any changes in the registration,—it was too useful as a vehicle in the hands of political tricksters, to perpetuate their power, to be changed.

The Governor being honest, pleads guilty for his party and reiterates his honest convictions in his Monument Square speech, as stated above. If Governor Carroll cannot correct these abuses while in office how can he expect them to be corrected out of it.
His intention being honest, we would recommend him to come out of the four party and vote the Republican ticket with James A. Gary at its head.

The Republican meeting in Baltimore city Wednesday evening of last week to endorse the majority nomination of Mr. Hooper, was a grand rally. Among the speakers was Hon. H. W. Hoffman of Camberland. From the American we take the following synopsis of his address:

He claimed that, although the sheriffs of Baltimore and of all the other counties of the State had regularly issued proclamations during the last twelve years that elections would take place, no elections had really taken place according to the spirit of the proclamations and of the law.
There was something called by this name, he said, four years ago, but the name is not yet come in the English language to describe what actually did occur. The only assurance that we have of an election—this year is, that part of the Democratic platform which advocates an amendment to the existing laws. We don't want any amendment to the law,
the honest enforcement of the registration and election laws, and honest men to administer them. They might litigate until the next century, and write a law as long as De-calogue, but if administered as the present law is the repeaters of Baltimore would find room enough to drive a four-horse team through it.

There can be no denial of fraud having been committed. This is a humiliation and disgrace to the whole people. Why, then, men say they are going to stop the frauds.
The best way for them to do so would be for Mr. Hamilton to come out boldly and say he will not acquiesce with any taint of fraud upon it.

The first year the Democrats came into power in Allegany county after the war they increased the tax levy to $1.19, when the Republicans had left it at 75 cents. What was the result? Why, the good men in their party left them, and the Republicans again obtained control, which was only lost two years ago, by the Greenback craze. If we want to go into local affairs, let us look at Camberland, the second city of the State.

The Democrats were in office for six years, during which time the tax levy ranged from 31 cents to 50 cents.
Two years ago, under a reform movement, a Republican majority controlled, and the first year of their management of city affairs the tax levy was reduced to 23 cents, and this year was gotten down to 13 cents. This is practical reform and is a sample of Republican administration. Now how was this done?
Simply in the manner promised by Mr. Hoffman in his speech. By lopping off useless office-holders, reducing salaries and expenses, and by a careful and honest administration of the affairs of the municipality. Mr. Hoffman continued with an able discussion on national affairs which was constantly interrupted by applause. He alluded to the tariff question which had been opposed by standards to-day a monument to the legislation of the Whig and Republican parties, and which the Democrats tried to tinker with last year, but gave up in disgust. He accused them of murders in relation to the money question which is agitating the country, and said that, although they were laying plans for 1880, they would add so many murders to their past record during the coming session of Congress as to drive thousands of voters from their party, and to make honest and upright men turn away with contempt.

The Annapolis Gazette asks, "Why was the investigation of Mr. Carroll as Governor so speedily squelched
by the General Assembly of 1876?" Why don't you know? Well we will tell you: It was for the simple reason that if the investigation had been allowed to go on, it would have been proved, beyond the possibility of a doubt, that J. Morrison Harris, and not John Lee Carroll, was the real Governor. We thought the fact was familiar to every politician in the State.—Cambridge Eve.

Those Republicans who think a Democratic victory in 1880 would insure Republican success in 1881, are altogether too far-sighted. That depends upon the candidates and various things. Mean while a victory in 1880 is what the Republicans are going to get.

O-HI-O!

MAJORITY, 25,000.

Republicans Have the Legislature!

Special to the Cumberland Daily News.
COLUMBUS, O., Oct. 15, 1:30 a. m.—
Telegrams received up to 1 a. m., show that Hamilton county has gone Republican, insuring the election of Foster by a large majority. Republican gains are reported from all parts of the State, indicating Foster's majority will be 25,000. The legislature is still in doubt, but it is believed, judging from incomplete returns, that the Republicans have a small majority.

COLUMBUS, Oct. 16, 1:20 a. m.—
The Republicans have both houses of the State Legislature, with 17 majority conjoint ballot. Majority in Hamilton county nearly 4,000.

By Associated Press.
CINCINNATI, Oct. 15 2 a. m.— Foster's majority is climbing through the twenty thousands. Hamilton county is Republican by about 3,000.
The Legislature is decisively Republican.

PITTSBURGH, Oct. 15th, 3:30 a. m.—
The Republicans here have been very jubilant all night, for as the returns from Ohio come in, swelling the Republican majority to an unexpectedly large figure, they show that the victory of Foster and his colleagues is complete. At this writing the latest returns received here are up to 20,000 this morning, when the Democratic managers at Columbus had lowered their flag and acknowledged the success of the Republican ticket, but like drowning men catching at straws they feebly claimed the legislature as in doubt. The attenuated character of this claim, however, is shown by the returns from Hamilton county, (Cincinnati), which sends to the Legislature a solid Republican delegation, whilst the Democrats counted upon it strongly. The most trustworthy advices from Cincinnati emphasize the Republican triumph, and state clearly that the Republicans have swept the field.
The vote all over the State was unprecedentedly heavy.

Our returns from the Ohio election at this hour (1 A. M.) indicate that the Democrats have sustained a serious defeat. Foster, the Republican candidate for Governor, has carried the State by from 15,000 to 20,- 000. The entire Republican State ticket is, of course, elected. At this writing the Democrats are claiming a majority in the Legislature, but we do not see how this can be possible for Hamilton county, which elects 13 members and holds the balance of power, has been carried by the Republicans. We fear that the Democrats have failed to obtain the legislature and that they have, therefore, lost the United States Senatorship. It is very much to be regretted that the fight in Ohio has resulted in such a complete victory for Radicalism. It is deplorable.

Two years ago the Democrats elected Bishop Governor by a majority of 22,520. Last year the Republicans carried the State by 3,154. Ohio is a pivotal State and the result cannot fall to have a depressing effect on New York in November.—Baltimore Gazette, Democratic.

Mr. Hamilton, in his speech at Belair on the 30th of September, used these words as reported by a special telegram to the Baltimore American:
"He would do all in his power for an economical administration of the State government, and for its restoration to the frugal days of Jackson and Jefferson. He thought that, after drunkenness, office-hunting was the greatest evil in the land, and said the more office-hunters would receive but little encouragement at his hands."

For at least twelve years Mr.
Hamilton has been hunting the office of Governor of this State, and now has the nomination for it only by the grace of the Canal Ring that holds all the offices in the State, and deals them out as a faro dealer deals out cards—just where he wants them.
If it is such a bad business, Mr.
Hamilton must be a very bad man indeed.

The condition of Allegany county politics is fearful and wonderful. No man knows what a political day there may bring forth. The Frostburg Journal, whose editor was uncer-eunously turned down and snubbed by the Democratic Convention for a place on the Legislative ticket, speaks of the lightning striking all the scoundrelism in process of development, if the people shall ratify the incipient steps to accomplish it.

It sneers at a "man with a brass cheek and a limestone chin," who is "able to overawe an entire convention, including the wire-pullers and state-makers, and change the whole current of popular desire to precisely what the people did not want."

At the Howard county barbecue, the Hon. Robert M. McLane said the pledges of reform made in the campaign of 1875 by the Democratic party had been fulfilled. This is news, indeed. But we do not remember that in the campaign of 1875
the Democratic party admitted there was anything to reform. The confession comes rather late in the day.

Everything conducive to the better condition of the body is sure to attract attention; and hence it is that Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup is becoming more and more appreciated, as its wonderful influence in subduing the diseases of babyhood becomes recognized. Price 25 cents.

TELEGRAPHIC.

STOPPED BY A BARBER.
FREDERICK, October 13.—The case of the state vs. Felix Munschower, for the murder of his cousin, James L. Wetzel, in August last, was brought to an abrupt and unexpected termination in the Circuit Court here to-day. Immediately after court convoked, Mr. William P. Mansby announced that the jury had been permitted to visit a barber shop on Friday evening, and had there engaged in conversation with one of the barbers, incidental reference having been made to the trial. This statement produced quite a sensation. An investigation was had, and the court decided that these facts constituted an irregularity that would invalidate any verdict the jury might render.
State's counsel refused, therefore, to proceed, and the jury was discharged.
A new trial will be had in December.
The expense to the county already has been very considerable, and will be greatly increased by the necessity of a second trial.

"WILL FOR GRANT."
WASHINGTON, Oct. 10.—Ex-Senator Mitchell, of Oregon, who is just from home, says the whole Pacific slope is wild for Grant. He says nothing will prevent the unanimous nomination of Grant except his positive and unqualified declaration in advance that under no circumstances will he accept a nomination. Blaine after Grant, he says is the favorite,
and in the almost impossible event
of neither one of these being nominated, then Sherman will stand a chance. It is asserted that at one of the recent meetings of Southern Republicans held in this city, to which allusion has been made, ex-Senator Pool, of North Carolina, said the Southern Republicans were not treated even with decency by the officers of the government; that they were insulted daily by underlings, from the petty clerk up to the head of a department, and if Grant or Blaine were to become President without the aid of the South he supposed they would be treated even more indifferent than now. Singularly enough Mr. Pool is represented to have expressed his abhorrence of a solid North, and to have said in effect that it was the duty of every Southern Republican to abandon the Republican party and go North, if they have nerve enough, and work for the Democratic nominee, so as to defeat the election of a sectional candidate—a Republican sectional candidate—one who would be under obligations only to his fellow-section-alists of the North.

IOWA.

Special to the Cumberland Daily News.
KEOKUK, IOWA, Oct. 15, 1 a. m.—
The election in this State to-day resulted in a great Republican victory, and Iowa is again in the line of States true to good government and sound money.

Everybody knows, whatever partisans may pretend, that the Republican administration of State affairs was more economical than Democratic administration has been. From the very beginning of its rule the Democratic party increased the expenditure of every department of government. The defeat of the Republican party was not due to misadministration of the public affairs, but to the violent opposition of the majority of the people of the State to the Southern policy of the Republican majority in Congress and to the action of the Republican party of the in making loyalty a condition of the right to vote. The Democratic organs, even at this late date have no other recruiting ground for their party than in appeals to the passions of a by-gone period of our politics. The Johnson movement split the Republican party; the Conservative party was formed, and through its agency

the Democratic party got into power.
These issues are, however, dead.
Men like Governor Swan, whose last message defended the Republican registry law, and Gen. Latrobe, who was a leading member of the convention which ran a candidate against Judge T. Parkin Scott, a Democratic nominee, and many others, who were Union men and Republicans in those days, are now leading Democrats.
Mr. Montgomery Blair, who was a leader in the Conservative movement, is a special object of aversion to Democratic organs; and Mr. J.
Morrison Harris, one of the prominent Conservatives, is now a Republican. If the Democratic party should exclude from its communion all those who shared in the legislation of the Union party during the war, its ranks would be thinned out greatly;
and, on the other hand, the Republican party include in its ranks many who were warmly opposed to it during the war and reconstruction period. It is impossible to warm up the issues of 1867, and the journalistic cooks now pouring fresh gravy over them, to the endeavor to make them palatable, might as well serve themselves the trouble. The issues of to-day are the corruption, extravagance and incompetency of the Democratic administration; and while the desire of Democratic organs to change the subject is very natural, they will not succeed.

Mr. Gary at Crisfield.
Hon. James A. Gary, Republican candidate for Governor of Maryland, spoke at a very large meeting at Crisfield, Somerset county, on Friday of last week.

He said the Democrats were renewing the pledges to amend, both as to inter-party management and State and municipal reform, which they so profusely made in 1875, when they signaled their repentance by gross frauds on the ballot-box in Baltimore city; but that no reliance was to be placed upon the pledges of the party which invariably professed good intentions when it got into a tight place and forgot its promises when the election was over. He said he had no personal antagonism to the Democratic nominee for Governor, who was a gentleman of good character; but that Mr. Hamilton was a professional politician and the nominee of the "ring" which he had charged with cheating him out of the nomination in 1875. The same
"ring" had now condoned the offence of Carroll's nomination with Hamilton and his friends by giving him the nomination four years later; but however good a man Mr. Hamilton might be, the speaker maintained that he would be influenced largely by the men to whom he owed his elevation. Mr. Gary read Senator Joyce's statement that one of the reasons why he was not renominated was because he would not co-operate in the bargain to elevate Mr. Hamilton to Senator Whyte's place and help make A. P. Gorman Governor when Hamilton should vacate the Executive seat. Mr. Gary said that Col. Joyce was good Democratic authority, and, accepting his statement as true, it would appear that his real competitor for the Governorship was Mr. Gorman, and that Mr. Hamilton was simply electioneering for the United States Senate, intending to use the Governorship as a steppingstone to the Senatorship. If this were true, it was certainly not a creditable proceeding. Nor was it fair to the people who honestly voted for Mr. Hamilton, with a desire he should be Governor, but who might not care to have him for Senator, and who much less might care to have
Mr. Gorman for Governor.

Mr. Gary illustrated his charges of State extravagance by reference to the enormous expenditure of $129,- 000 on the State House, $250,000 on the House of Correction, additions to the State debt and other matters of like character. He said it could be demonstrated that ever since the Democratic party came into power, in 1867, taxes and cost of government had steadily increased, both in the city of Baltimore and State of Maryland, and that all the pledges they had made to retrench had been broken, as those they are now making to the payers would be. He demanded a reduction of the excessive official salaries, a cropping off of sin-cures, a revision of fee bills in courts, the stoppage of jobbing in printing and other things at Annapolis, and said that if he was elected he would carry his business principles into the administration of State affairs and devote himself to the public good.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

SHERIFF'S NOTICE OF ELECTION.

Notice is hereby given to the qualified voters of Garrett county, that an Election will be held at the usual places of holding elections in the several districts of said county,

On Tuesday after the 1st Monday, being the 4th day of November, 1879,

Between the hours of 9 o'clock A. M. and 6 P. M.,

For the purpose of balloting for one (1) person to serve as Governor of the State;

One (1) person to serve as Comptroller;

One (1) person to serve as Attorney General;

One (1) person to serve as Clerk of the Court of Appeals;

And for the purpose of electing

One (1) person to serve as Clerk of the Court;

One (1) person to serve as Sheriff;

One (1) person to serve as States' Attorney;

Two (2) persons to represent Garrett county in the Legislature of the State—House of Delegates;

Three (3) persons to serve as County Commissioners;

Three (3) persons to serve as Judges of the Orphans' Court;

One (1) person to serve as Register of Wills;

One (1) person to serve as County Surveyor.

Now I, Thomas Coddington, Sheriff of Garrett county, Md., in pursuance of the Act of Assembly, chapter 371, passed March 13, 1867 of the Public General Laws, relating to the attendance of Judges of Election, and in Section 9 of said article prescribing notice of elections to be given by the Sheriff of the several counties, hereby GIVE NOTICE that

"At any general election, State, Federal or Municipal, to be hereafter held in the State, if none of the Judges of election appointed according to law, shall attend at the place of election for the space of one hour after the time prescribed by law for opening the election, it shall be lawful for the Justice of the Peace for said county, or city, then present at the place of election, or a majority of them, or for one Justice of the Peace in the event of one being present, to act as Judge or Judges of the Election, or if no Justice of the Peace be present, it shall be lawful for the voters then present or a majority of them, to choose by ballot three persons, being voters, to be Judges of Election, and the said Justice or Justices of Peace, or persons chosen by ballot as aforesaid, to be Judges of Election, and who shall act in that capacity for that election, shall be vested with the same power and authority as it they had been appointed by the Commissioners or other lawfully authorized power."

The Ninth section of said law prescribes that "Every Judge of Election, at every election to be hereafter held in pursuance of law, before he proceeds to take or receive any vote, shall take the following oath or affirmation:

I, A. B. do swear (or affirm) that I will permit all persons to vote who shall offer to vote at the election now to be held for _____ County, or _____ City, whose names shall appear on the registry or list of voters furnished to me according to law, as qualified voters under the Constitution and laws of this State, and that I will not permit any person to vote at the same election whose name shall not be found on the said registry or list of qualified voters, and I will in all things execute the office of Judge of the said election, according to the best of my knowledge, without favor or partiality, so help me God."

The Twelfth section of said law, in speaking of the notice to be given by the Sheriffs of the several counties of the State, of the time and places of holding said elections, says: "But if for any cause said notice shall fail to be given, said failure shall not affect the validity of any election; but it shall be the duty of the Judges of Election to hold the election in their several election districts at the time prescribed by law, and at the usual places of holding elections in the several election districts or at the places in the several election districts where the last preceding election was held, under the penalty of five hundred dollars for each Judge refusing or neglecting to hold such an election."

It shall not be lawful for the keeper of any hotel, tavern, store, drinking establishment or any other place where liquors are sold, or for any person, directly or indirectly, to sell, barter or give, or in any way dispose of spirituous or fermented liquors, ale, beer, or intoxicating drinks of any kind, on the day of any election hereafter to be held in the several counties of the State.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

uors, ale, beer, or intoxicating drinks of any kind, on the day of any election hereafter to be held in the several counties of the State.

Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be liable to indictment by the Grand Jury of the county where the offence is committed, and shall upon conviction before any Judge of any of the Circuit Courts of this State, be fined a sum of not less than fifty dollars, nor more than one hundred dollars for each and every offence; one-half the fine shall be paid the informer, the other half to the County Commissioners for the use of the public roads.

TILLOS. CODDINGTON, Sheriff.

oc4-td

Estate of William Combs, deceased.

THIS IS TO GIVE NOTICE—That the subscribers have obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, Maryland, Letters Testamentary on the estate of WILLIAM COMBS, late of said county, deceased. All persons having claims against the said deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same to the subscriber, with the vouchers therefor, legally authenticated, on or before the 1st day of April, 1880. They may otherwise be lawfully excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing the whereabouts of the said estate are requested to make immediate payment. Given under our hands this 23rd day of September, 1879.

J. S. TOMBS, H. WHEELER COMBS, Executors.

9 27 3

BRIDGE NOTICE.

OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, OAKLAND, MD., SEP. 11, 1879.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That the undersigned will make application to the County Commissioners of Garrett county, after 30 days from the first publication of this notice, for the building of a bridge over the Youghiogheny River, in District No. 6, known as the Pike bridge, between Selby's point and Guard's.

OTTO SPELMAN, GEO. D. FRANTZ, JAS. D. RUSIL.

9 15 5

HEADACHE NEURALGIA PILLS

CELERY "Dr. J. W. Benson, a PILLS celebrated physician at 106 PILLS
CELERY S. Entwist St., Baltimore, PILLS
CELERY Md., who has paid much PILLS attention to nervous dis- PILLS
eases, has discovered that PILLS
CELERY Extract of Celery and PILLS
Chamomile combined in PILLS
CELERY a certain proportion inva- PILLS
riously cures either bilious PILLS
CELERY dyspepsia, nervous attack PILLS
CELERY headache, neuralgia and PILLS
CELERY nervousness. This atri- PILLS
CELERY moph in medical chemis- PILLS
try, and suffers all over PILLS
CELERY the country are ordering PILLS
CELERY Ye mail, and prepare PILLS
CELERY in pills, at 50cts. per box. PILLS
CELERY The doctor is largely PILLS
CELERY ry, and suffers all over PILLS
CELERY ted in Baltimore."—Eggs. PILLS
CELERY BALTIMORE, July 27, 1874. PILLS
CELERY Dr. C. W. Benson's Celery PILLS
CELERY ry and Chamomile Pills PILLS
CELERY have cured my wife of PILLS
CELERY sick and nervous head- PILLS
CELERY ache of ten years' stand- PILLS
CELERY ing; she had it every PILLS
CELERY week or ten days, and suf- PILLS
CELERY fered almost everything PILLS
CELERY but death with it. We PILLS
CELERY think these pills worth PILLS
CELERY their weight in gold. PILLS
CELERY Rev. H. Schuler, PILLS
CELERY Pastor Salem Mission, PILLS
CELERY For sale by all Druggists PILLS
CELERY in this town. PILLS
CELERY Price 50cts. each, mail- PILLS
CELERY ed to any address. Office PILLS
CELERY 106 S. Entwist St., Balti- PILLS
CELERY more, Md. 1874 PILLS

COUNTY DIRECTORY.

—or—

CIRCUIT COURT.

Jury Terms—Second Monday of September and the First Monday of May.

Non-Jury Terms—First Monday of July and Third Monday of December.

Chief Judge—Hon. R. H. Alvey.
Associates—Hons. Wm. Motter and Geo. A. Pearce.
Clerk—W. H. Tower.
Sheriff—Thomas Coddington.
State's Attorney—Jno. W. Veitch.
Court Auditor—W. P. Townshend.
Standing Commissioners—Gillmor S. Hamill and A. B. Gonder.
Crier—Wm. Smouse.
Messenger—Jas. M. Bell.
Bailliffs—Wm. Waltz and T. Bosley.

Return days of Equity process—Third Monday in January, third Monday in March, third Monday in May, third Monday in July, second Monday in September, second Monday in November.

ORPHANS' COURT.

Meets every second and fourth Tuesday of each month.

Chief Judge—Joseph DeWitt.
Associates—A. J. Michaels and Wm. Harvey.
Register of Wills—W. L. Rawlings.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

The regular sessions of the County Commissioners commence on the first Monday in January; the first Monday in April, being the appeal and transfer term; the first Monday in June, being the levy term; the first Monday in July, the term for appointing Judges of election, and the first Monday in October.

President, E. C. Tillson; Commissioners, John Riley and Jeremiah Guard.
Clerk—Wm. H. Hagans, who will be in the office on Tuesdays and Saturdays of each week.
County Surveyor—John Harned.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

MEDICAL.

H. T.

HELMBOLD'S

COMPOUND

Fluid Extract

BUCHU.

PHARMACEUTICAL

A SPECIFIC REMEDY FOR ALL DISEASES

OF THE

BLADDER & KIDNEYS.

For Debility, Loss of Memory, Indisposition to Exercise or Business, Shortness of Breath, Troubled with Thoughts of Disease, Dimness of Vision, Pain in the Back, Chest, and Head, Rush of Blood to the Head, Pale Countenance and Dry Skin.

If these symptoms are allowed to go on, very frequently Eminent Pills and Compound follow. When the Constitution becomes affected it requires the aid of an invigorating medicine to strengthen and tone up the system—

"Helmhold's Buchu"

DOES IN EVERY CASE.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

IS UNEQUALED

By any remedy known. It is prescribed by the most eminent physicians all over the world, in Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases, Sciatica, Deafness, Decline, Lung, Catarrh, Nervous Complaints, Female Complaints, &c.

Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Cough, Dizziness, Sour Stomach, Eruptions, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Palpitation of the Heart, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a thousand other painful symptoms, are the outpourings of Dyspepsia.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

Invigorates the Stomach.

And stimulates the torpid Liver, Bowels, and Kidneys to healthy action, in cleansing the blood of all impurities, and imparting new life and vigor to the whole system.

A single trial will be quite sufficient to convince the most hesitating of its valuable remedial qualities.

Price $1 Per Bottle,

Or Six Bottles for $5.

Delivered to any address free from observation.

"Patients" may consult by letter, receiving the same attention as by calling.

Competent Physicians attend to correspondents. All letters should be addressed to

H. T. HELMBOLD,

DRUGGIST AND CHEMIST,

Philadelphia, Pa.

CAUTION!

See that the private Proprietary Stamp is on each bottle.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

my 10-1yr.

FOR SALE.

A Furnished Cottage and Fifty Acres of land

on time, near Oakland, Garrett county, Md

Apply on the premises to

E. A. KILBOURN,

or JOHN R. LARKER,

140 F. Street, Washington, D. C.

15 26-3m

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

DR. J. DAILY.

RESIDENT DENTIST

WESTERNPORT, MARYLAND.

From one to a full set of teeth inserted in the most beautiful and substantial manner. Particular attention paid to cleaning and filling the natural teeth. All work warranted. Logive satisfaction, or money refunded.

SUBSCRIBE FOR

"THE REPUBLICAN,"

AND AID IN THE

CIRCULATION

— OF —

The (cheapest Newspaper

IN WESTERN MARYLAND.

ONLY

$1.50

PER YEAR

IN ADVANCE.

EVERY VARIETY

OF

JOB WORK

PROMPTLY EXECUTED.

We desire to call the attention of Merchants, Mechanics, and Business Men generally, to our extensive facilities for the prompt, speedy and accurate execution of

FIRST-CLASS

JOB PRINTING.

We keep on hand, for printing purposes, an assortment of the best Paper, Envelopes, Cards, &c., and have one of best

JOB PRESSES

now in use, and the ONLY ONE IN OAKLAND.

We are determined to be up to the times in everything connected with the printing business.

Address

"THE REPUBLICAN,"

Oakland, Garrett Co., Md.

We have also a complete stock of

New Plain and Fancy Type, &c.,

of the latest styles, for all the different kinds of Job Work and can now fill all orders for

Show Cards, Business Cards, Circulars, Letter-Heads, Bill-Heads, Legal Blanks, Certificates, Envelopes, Tags, Statements, &c.,

Posters, Handbills, Programmes, Pamphlets, Catalogues, Dodgers, &c., &c.

and every description of

Plain and Fancy Printing

At the Lowest Rates.

Drop in and take a look at a

—COMPLETE—

Printing Office,

YOU WILL BE

WELCOME AT ALL TIMES.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

ONLY $96

Warranted 3 Years

BEATTY ORGAN

Grand Organ, Single 1066. Height, 72 in.; Depth, 24 in.; Length, 36 in. Three 8 Note Reeds, Tailpiece (18 Reeds), Five 6 Octaves, French Vented Fan, Cast Case highly finished, and beautiful, most durable. Beatty's Improved Reeds and Beatty's New Exact size Grand Organ Reeds &c. The mechanism, delicate and made in this organ renders it the most desirable ever before manufactured for the parlor or drawing room. Retail price asked for such an instrument by Agents, three years ago about $200. My offer, only $96.25.

For the instrument only after you have fully tested it at your own home. It is not as represented, return at any expense, I will freight both ways. Remember, this offer is at the very lowest figure, and that I positively will not deviate from this price. A few warranted local reeds, every organ add, sells others. The more you know of Beatty's organs, the more you will value them. I have examined my new organ through the continent of Europe. I am more determined than ever that nothing but the best materials and the most celebrated workmen, having recently been of my country, and improved with the best materials, should be sufficient proof of my reliability. For NEW Pianos for $125, $145, $165 and upwards. Beware of imitations! Illustrated Newspaper gives information about Beatty's Pianos and Organs, free of charge. Address DANIEL F. BEATTY, Washington, New Jersey.

H. WHEELER COMBS,

REAL ESTATE AGENT,

OAKLAND, MD.

No charge for advertising property placed in my hands.

The following properties have been placed in my hands

FOR SALE.

NO. 3.

One of the best little farms in Garrett county, 2 1/2 miles west of Oakland, the county seat. This farm contains 36 ACRES, 7 acres in cultivation, and all susceptible of easy and profitable cultivation. Improved by a

New 2 Story House,

containing 3 rooms and good cellar. GOOD BARN and stable. There is a good young orchard of 20 trees. The whole farm is under good fence. This farm will be offered for sale at a very low price and on easy terms. Title perfect. Limestone and coal within two miles.

NO. 4.

Fichtner's Mill Property.

This property, containing 20 acres, situated on Muddy Creek, in Sang Run district, Garrett county, Md., will be sold at a very low price and upon the easiest of terms. It lies 5 miles north-west of Oakland, 8 miles from Hutton's Switch and 7 miles from Chanters Summit. It is one of the best mill-seats in the county, and is surrounded by the best timbered land of the section. It is improved by an excellent containing 6 rooms; good stable attached. The wheels and frame for a Saw Mill are upon the property, and will be sold with the property at a low price for the whole that the land is assessed for.

FRAME HOUSE,

This is an opportunity for a bargain seldom offered.

NO. 5.

A Desirable Property in Oakland

FOR SALE.

Lot 100x100, improved by an Excellent Frame Dwelling House,

containing 7 rooms; with good cellar. This is one of the most pleasant homes in Oakland, is almost immediately opposite the Oakland Hotel, and in front of Feltz's new hotel and commands one of the finest views of the town. The buildings are all new and well-constructed. There is an excellent well of water on the lot. For any one desiring a pleasant home, opportunity is here offered to secure it at a price 1/2 less than the cost of the buildings. Terms—The third down, balance in three equal annual payments. Apply to

H. WHEELER COMBS,

at Estate Agent, Oakland, Md.

JOHN SHATZER

has recently removed to his new

Furniture and Undertaking Rooms,

MAIN STREET, OAKLAND,

Where he keeps constantly on hand and manufactures to order anything in the line of

HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE

All of which is offered at the LOWEST LIVING PRICES.

Give me a call, examine my Furniture and prices, whether you wish to purchase or not. I take pleasure in showing my work.

All kinds of COFFINS and CASKETS on hand or furnished to order on short notice.

4 26 6m JOHN SHATZER.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Dr. G. H. HOCKING,

offers his professional services to the citizens of Deer Park and vicinity. Office, Deer Park. 7 21

CHEAP CHEAP.

A Valuable Farm Near

Oakland, Md.

The undersigned offers for sale his valuable farm, about four miles from Oakland, on the West Union road. This farm contains 30 acres, 20 of which is under fence and 10 improved. The improvements consist of a

New Frame House,

Barn and other out buildings. There is also on the farm a

Good Young Orchard.

The crops usually taken from this farm are wheat, rye, oats, corn, buckwheat, potatoes, etc. This property is especially adapted to stock raising, there being a good outlet to a free range.

For terms, &c., address,

DAVID SHAFER, OIL,

Oakland, Md., aug-6m,

To $900 A YEAR, or $5 to $20 a day in your own locality. No risk. Women do as well as men. Many make more than the amount stated above. No one can fail to make money here. Any one can do the work. You can make from 50cts. to $2 an hour by devoting your evenings and spare time to the business. Nothing to do for money making ever offered before. Business pleasant and strictly honorable. If you want to know all about the best paying business before the public, send us your address and we will send you full particulars and private terms free; samples worth $2 also. You can then make up your mind for yourself. Address GEORGE STEINER & CO., Portland, Maine. je 11 y

To $900 A YEAR, or $5 to $20 a day in your own locality. No risk. Women do as well as men. Many make more than the amount stated above. No one can fail to make money here. Any one can do the work. You can make from 50cts. to $2 an hour by devoting your evenings and spare time to the business. Nothing to do for money making ever offered before. Business pleasant and strictly honorable. If you want to know all about the best paying business before the public, send us your address and we will send you full particulars and private terms free; samples worth $2 also. You can then make up your mind for yourself. Address GEORGE STEINER & CO., Portland, Maine. je 11 y

To $900 A YEAR, or $5 to $20 a day in your own locality. No risk. Women do as well as men. Many make more than the amount stated above. No one can fail to make money here. Any one can do the work. You can make from 50cts. to $2 an hour by devoting your evenings and spare time to the business. Nothing to do for money making ever offered before. Business pleasant and strictly honorable. If you want to know all about the best paying business before the public, send us your address and we will send you full particulars and private terms free; samples worth $2 also. You can then make up your mind for yourself. Address GEORGE STEINER & CO., Portland, Maine. je 11 y

To $900 A YEAR, or $5 to $20 a day in your own locality. No risk. Women do as well as men. Many make more than the amount stated above. No one can fail to make money here. Any one can do the work. You can make from 50cts. to $2 an hour by devoting your evenings and spare time to the business. Nothing to do for money making ever offered before. Business pleasant and

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1879.

NUMBER 35.

VOLUME 3.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, etc.

D. E. OFFUTT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Machines, Musical Instruments,
Guns, Pistols, etc.

G. W. LEGGIE,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Second & Oak sts.

D. H. LOAR,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jew-
elry, etc.

I. W. STALNAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third and Oak Street.

L. BUSH & SON,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third & Oak sts.

J. A. GRANT,
Dry Goods, Notions & Groceries,
SPECIAL LINE OF TOBACCO.

DAVIS & TOWNSEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agents Agricultural Machines,
Opposite Bailey's Park.

C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Notions, Clocks, Confectionery, etc., Next to Golding's Hotel.

RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods, Fruit, etc.

HOTELS.

CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,
W. M. CODDINGTON, Prop'r,
Main St., Opposite Jamison's Billiard Saloon.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

G. A. SHIRER,
Oak Street, near Second.
A general line of Stoves and Tinware.

PHYSICIANS.

DR. J. LEE McCOMBS,
Office on Main Street.

DR. E. H. PARSONS,
offers his professional services
to the people of Oakland and vicinity.
Office in the old Odell building.
3 S 3m

PLASTERER.

JAMES ARNOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street.

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.

W. M. WAGNER,
Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.

GEO. F. LOUGHRIDGE,
Leave orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.

J. B. BRANT,
Surveyor, Auctioneer and
Conveyancer.
Oakland, Garrett county, Md.

JOHN BARNED,
Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.

A. B. WOODCOCK,
In Wm. Simons's Building,
Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY GOODS.

MRS. M. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Gents' Furnishing,
And Fancy Goods, and Shoes.
Main Street, Opposite Dr. McCombs's office.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

GEO. C. STURGES,
Drugs, Medicines, Stationery,
Toiletries and Fancy Goods,
Tobacco and Cigars.

G. W. MERRILL,
Near Depot.
Pure Drugs, Medicines, Toilet Goods, Station-
ery, Cigars and Tobacco, French Candy, Paints, Fishing Tackle, etc. Physician's prescriptions accurately compounded.

PAINTING & PAPER HANG- ING.

E. J. FRINGER,
House and Sign Painter,
And Paper Hanger.
Leave orders at Rush's Store.

S. V. B. WARD,
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER
Shop near Davis House.

BLACKSMITHS.

CHAS. SINCELL,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

JOHN M. JARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,
Residence on Liberty St., nearly opp. Depot.

P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
And Builder.
Residence on Centre Street.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Residence opp. School house.

JOSEPH M. CRIM,
Residence on Alder Street.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.

CABINETMAKERS AND UN- DERTAKERS.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SHATZER,
Shop on Second Street.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FALL & WINTER GOODS.

GOODS FRESH & NEW
and Cheap as the Cheapest.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,
MERCHANT TAILOR,
Has on hand a full stock of New
Ready Made Clothing,

which he will sell very cheap for cash.

Gents Furnishing Goods,
In great variety, and at prices to suit the
times.

Suits Made to Order
In the most fashionable manner. Orders by mail promptly attended to.

Also Agent for the Celebrated
"Pearl Shirt."

A Large Assortment of
BOYS' CLOTHING
Kept always on hand.

#9- All work WARRANTED to give entire
satisfaction.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,
Oakland, Md.

MEAT MARKET.

H. E. WOLFE,
Formerly of Cumberland, Md.

Takes this mode of announcing to the editors of Oakland and vicinity that he has imported from the West for the purpose of supplying the public with fresh meat.

BUTCHERING BUSINESS
In a first-class manner.
FRESH BEEF, STEAK, MUTTON, PORK,
Bologna Sausage, Pork Sau-
sage, etc., at all times.

#9- Shop near the Post Office.
Customers can get what they want without
delay and at any hour of the day.
Your patronage is respectfully solicited.
a2 H. E. WOLFE.

PATENTS.
To Inventors and Manufacturers.
ESTABLISHED 1855.
GILMORE SMITH & CO.
Solicitors of Patents & Attorneys at Law.

American & Foreign Patents.
No fees in advance, nor until a Pat-
ent is allowed. No fees for making preliminary examinations.

Special attention given to Infringement Cases before the Patent Office.
Infringement Suits in the different
States, and all litigation appertain-
ing to Patents or Inventions.

Send Stamp for Pamphlet of Sixty
Pages.

GILMORE & CO.,
629 F. Street, N. W.,
Washington, D. C.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

THO. J. PEDDIFORD, A. B. GONDER, PEDDIFORD & GONDER,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW.
SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY.

OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany Counties, the adjoining Counties of West Virginia, and in the Court of Appeals
of Maryland. Jan. 29-31

S. A. COX, H. WHEELER COBBS,
COX & COBBS,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW
AND
SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY.

Office, Alder Street, Oakland, Garrett county,
Maryland.

Will practice in all the Courts of Maryland
and adjoining counties of West Virginia, and the United States Circuit Courts. 13-19-3.

GILMORE S. HAMILL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
OFFICE IN OFFICE BUILDING,
Lower Floor.

Particular attention given to conveying vestigation of land titles and collection of debts. Loans negotiated.

J. W. VEITCH,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND
SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.

OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett County
and the adjoining Counties of West Virginia
and in the Court of Appeals of Maryland.
Jan. 29-31

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG
Late Resident Surgeon, New York
Eye and Ear Infirmary.

HAS LOCATED PERMANENTLY in the City of Cumberland, Md., for the P.
O. S. E. treatment of all diseases of the Eye and Ear, including those of the National Throat.

Office, No. 29 South Centre Street.
ap21v1

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LESSONS.

SUNDAY, OCT. 26, 1879.

FAITH AND WORKS.

GENERAL STATEMENT.

James, called the brother of the Lord, was not one of the original twelve disciples, and did not become a believer in Christ until after the resurrection. His earnest piety and sincere rectitude of life, no less than the fact that he was a son of Mary and younger brother of Jesus, soon gave him prominence among the disciples. He became the exposi-tore of Jewish law, as Paul was of Gentile Christianity, and until his death, by many estimable about A. D. 69, was in charge of the church at Jerusalem. The epistle was addressed to the twelve tribes scattered abroad. The theme is "the perfect man." In Christian character, and it dwells upon the practical side of life, rather than on doctrinal truths or feelings. Here the writer insists on works, not mere professions, declaring that there is no true faith without good works, and that there is no true faith without corresponding works. Abraham stands before the altar, where lay his son, Isaac, and he is in Jericho, both showed their faith by works, when they were both true believers in God, as attested by his life of service.

James 2: 14-26.

Memory Verse, 14-18.

14 What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works?
can faith save him?

15 If a brother or sister be naked, and want daily food,

16 And one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?

17 Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone.

18 Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works: show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works.

19 Thou believest that there is one God; but thou dost well; the devils also believe, and tremble.

20 But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead?

21 Was not Abraham our father justified by works, when he had offered Isaac his son up on the altar?

22 Seest thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect?

23 And the scripture was fulfilled which saith, Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness: and he was called the Friend of God.

24 Ye see then how that by works a man is justified, and how that his faith is perfected.

25 Likewise also, was not Rahab the harlot justified by works, when she received the messengers, and had sent them out another way?

26 For as the body without the spirit is dead,
so faith is dead also.

HOME READINGS.

M. Faith and works, James 2: 14-26.
Th. Faith essential. Matt. 17: 11-21.
W. Faith commended. Luke 7: 1-10.
Th. Faith honored. John 1: 13-51.
F. Works essential. Luke 6: 27-36.
S. Works commended. Luke 6: 11-14-9.
S. Works profitable. Titus 3: 1-5.

GOLDEN TEXT.

For as the body without the spirit is dead,
so faith without works is dead also. James 2: 26.

LESSON HYMN, L. M.

Save us by grace, though faith alone,
A faith that must thyself import,
A faith that would by works be shown,
A faith that purifies the heart.

A faith that doth the mountains move,
A faith that shows our sin's perfection,
A faith that surely works by love,
And ascertains our claim to heaven.

QUESTIONS ON THE LESSON.

1. FAITH DEAD, v. 14-20; Matt. 7: 16-18.
What questions are asked in verse 14?
What is the meaning of "works"? (Ans.:
Deeds or actions tending to a Christian life.)

What is said of faith, works in verse 2, 8-10?

What illustration is given in verse 12?
When is faith dead?

Can there be true faith without works?
What does Christ say in verse 22?
To what degree may even devils believe?

Did evil spirits ever bear witness to Christ?
Matt. 8: 29, 30.

Was there a true faith?
To what will living faith lead us?

2. FAITH LIVING, v. 22-26; 1 John 2: 5.
How did Abraham show his faith?
What did Abraham do to offer up his son?
1 John 11: 17.

How was his faith made perfect?
How was his faith shown to others?
What name was given to Abraham?
And what name was given to Isaac?

What name was given to Jacob?
How did she show it? Josh. 2: 21.

What is said of her in Hebrews 11?
Which is faith without works likened?
How may we have true life?

TEACHINGS OF THE LESSON.

Where in this lesson do we learn—
1. That works are not of merit, but of love?
2. That both faith and works are needed?
3. That one may believe and yet be lost?

WORDS WITH LITTLE FOLKS.

1. Have faith in Christ.
2. Show your faith by your actions.
3. Remember the friends of God.
4. By their fruits ye shall know them. Matt.
7: 20.

DOCTRINAL SUGGESTIONS. The value of good works.

1. A true faith will always influence the outward life. v. 14.
2. A true faith will inspire more than intellectually believed. v. 19.
3. A true faith will include acts of self-denial and obedience to God. v. 21.
4. A true faith will obtain the satisfactory assurance of God's favor. v. 23.
5. A true faith will impart courage of the highest order. v. 25.

It is the same thing everywhere.
The Democratic party got hold of Annapolis in 1865, and found a debt of $16,944.79. They held on until 1871, when they were ousted, leaving a debt of $27,739.13. The Republicans had control until April, 1875, by which time the debt had been reduced to $27,075.96. The Democrats then took hold again, and on Aug. 5 of this year, the debt was $16,751.14.
The people of Annapolis now intend to put Republicans into office again.

The Practical Question.

There are some men who are dissatisfied with the Republican party.

In fact, that party enjoys the advantage that a considerable number of its adherents are at all times dissatisfied with it, and keen to criticize it, and swift to oppose it if it does not suit them. Nor is this a new thing.

Though every man who is suddenly seized with the idea that he must represent the wisdom and the purity of the universe by "scratching" is apt to suppose that no one else ever had the same idea before. The truth is that the Republican party has been in a state of perpetual insurrection for twenty years; as a party, it has been an insurrection against Slavery, Southern domination, Secession, and other ancient heresies, and at the same time it has continually had to deal with insurrections against itself.

Among those of its own members who want to hasten the march of events, and to bring the millennium sooner than it is possible to bring it by the action of the majority of a free people. So the party has become well used to loud and earnest protests from men who think themselves far in advance of it. Their cries are expected, and disconcert no one. At this time, perhaps, there are fewer Republican insurgents than at any previous time since the war; the party is singularly united and resolved. Yet there are some. Now and then a Republican rises up to declare that he is not content with the progress which the party as a whole is making, and proposes to go off by himself on a moral scouting expedition. A few of these Republicans can be found even now, and for them a single question may be of service.

What better thing can now be accomplished, by the free votes of a majority of the people, than that which the Republican party aims to accomplish? Let us not waste time in saying that there are better things which might be accomplished, if the people were willing. This is not a Government of theorists. The plain, practical, every-day citizen does the ruling here. Men who do not like that sort of Government, and who want to be ruled by an aristocracy of intellect, or virtue, or temperance, or patriotic disinterestedness, or literary culture and classic grace, must go somewhere else. This country is ruled by the plain and practical people who constitute the majority, and so it will be ruled to the end. The question for men of sense is not what action to be done, or, in some other stage of existence, might be done,
but what now can be done.

It is possible, of course, to vote for Democratic candidates. That is the only logical expression of a desire to defeat the Republican party because it does not do well enough. For the Republican or the Democratic candidate will succeed, and all the political side shows, which threatened to amount to something a year ago, have been thrust out of sight in the overwhelming interest of the main question, whether the ruling force in this Republic for four years to come shall be that force which is mainly embodied in the Republican party, or that which is mainly embodied in the Democratic party. The man who does not consider that the Republican force is, on the whole, the better, the more trustworthy, and the more entitled to rule, ought to vote for Democratic candidates directly, and to work for them with might and main.

The Republican Adulterants do not wish Democratic success. They only want to punish the Republicans because it has not conformed to their wishes. In trying to punish it they consent to the success of a party which they consider infinitely worse.
They forget all the grand things that the Republican party has done for justice, for human rights, for the Union, for the National honor, and for honest money, and consent to its defeat, as far as their individual votes go, because it has not done more and better. Since it has not done everything, they virtually say. We will reverse all that it has done. The party which has opposed every forward step, and which now represents every reactionary, disloyal and dishonest element in public affairs, shall be pushed forward to success and to power, rather than a party which does something, but not enough!

The Republican party embodies more of the best, purest, most honest and most patriotic forces in the country than any other, and yet the very men who frankly acknowledge this conceive that they have a right to vote against it because it does not wholly satisfy them.—N. Y. Tribune.

Fair Warning.

While nothing specific is stated
yet, there is the manifestation of a vague dread in some quarters in regard to the results of Republican success in this campaign. One organ says that "the bare possibility" is "enough to make anyone shrink back in horror." It may be that there are some persons who, from personal grievances against Democratic leaders or cautious desire for change, intend to vote for the Republican nominee, when, if they knew the real purpose of the Republican party,
they would, as our esteemed contenporary says, "shrink back with horror." It may be that there are a great many voters who think that the wages paid in the various municipal offices and the number of employees are none too great for the amount of work done; that the administration of state and city affairs has, on the whole, been economical and satisfactory, and that a policy of retrenchment would impede the workings of government and injure the public service. We do not think that it would benefit the Republican party to obtain the support of persons who may have been alienated from the Democratic leaders by dis-contents in which Republicans have no share, and who would inevitably be disappointed by Republican action in the event of success. It is, therefore, only fair to admit that so far as we are able to interpret the feelings which animate the Republican organization, there will be a marked change in the conduct of affairs. The Republican administration will take it for granted that the compensation that was high enough for war times will be high enough now, and will not down salaries by a percentage representing the appreciation in the value of the currency since they were fixed. The Republican administration will abolish the State inspection of tobacco, and repeal all other laws which hamper the business interests of the State in order to provide livelihoods for politicians. The oyster navy will go, too, and the politicians will have to hire a tug when they go on their fishing excursions. Private oyster beds can be protected by glyster owners legal remedies for invasion of their rights, such as prove sufficient to protect all other property interests. A new registry law will be passed, and stringent regulations for securing the purity of elections will be adopted based upon the principle of allowing the representatives of party organizations to scrutinize every detail of the registration and the vote. The law in relation to the state weighing of live stock will be improved, so as to prevent officials from making away with the state money with impunity; and perhaps it will be found advisable to repeal the law altogether. The criminal code will be revised, the expenses of the courts cut down, and the administration of justice will be improved.
These are some of the things a Republican administration will do, and we think that in addition, it will settle the question of liquor traffic and of Sunday excursions on the principle of local option—that is, let both the temperance people and the adventures of a modification of the Sunday law be allowed to submit their measures to the people, as was done in the case of the cars running on Sunday. Those who don't want any of these things done had better vote the Democratic ticket, even should many of the names on it be personally objectionable; but if it is to vote the Republican ticket.— Baltimore American.

The Tribune says: This great victory must not be belittled by assigning it to too narrow causes. It is not the result of Mr. Foster's energetic cavass, or of the labors of any one man, however able and sincere. It is not the result of the Sherman boom, nor of the Grant boom, nor of the Blaine boom, nor of the Hayes boom. All these currents in the campaign have had their effect, no doubt, but the one mighty cause has been the profound conviction of the people that the interests of the country would not be safe for the next four years in Democratic hands.

The Kent Independent appreciates the worth of that costly brand, the oyster navy. It says: "So far as protecting the tongue is concerned,
we might just as well be without it,
and save the state a matter of $50,000 per annum; but that would be taking the bread and butter from the dominant party, which it requires to feed
its surplus political bush-beaters."

There is no denying that the extra session cooked the Democratic goose in Ohio.

The Baltimore Sun, independent,
with Democratic sympathies, says:
"The result of the election in Iowa was a foregone conclusion, and that in Ohio was not unanticipated, though perhaps sanguine partisans did not look for results so complete. It is seldom that the 'managers' of presidential parties either expect or dread to win or be beaten both 'horse, foot and artillery,' but that is what the result in Ohio is interpreted to mean.
Regarded as the trial of issues deliberately made before the people of the most important Western State as to the sort of currency to be adopted by the United States in the future—regarded, in fact, as the test struggle between politicians and the people on the matter of what is called 'the Ohio idea'—the Ohio election is of great importance. Its results may shape the politics of the future, and specify the terms of the impending contest for the Presidency in 1880, in a most salutary way. The election, which seems to have been participated in by nearly every voter of the State, shows conclusively, and it is to be hoped finally, that the inflation theory, no matter how strongly indorsed by those who would not themselves up as the champions of a great political party, no matter how forcibly but tressed by subsidiary issues of the utmost importance and urgency from constitutional points of view, cannot succeed in securing a majority of votes to support it, even in the state where the advocates of 'rag money' were thought to be strongest. It ought to be admitted now, at least, that a majority of the people of the West, as well as of the East, are in favor of honest money, of the honest payment of all public debts, and of a return to the substantial coin-based currency with which our fathers were contented. Parties which ignore dar-able principles such as these, have no right to expect to last or triumph, so long at least as the body of the people are honest and capable of preserving their common sense. The Ohio election does not seem to have much significance nor bearing beyond what has been indicated above. Of course it will wreck disaster upon the hopes and 'prospects' of many partisans, but the 'lesson' of it is that the body of the people are honest, and mean to have honest currency and responsible government.

The causes that have converted Governor Bishop's majority of over 22,000 into a Republican majority of 20,000 are not hard to discover. After the last presidential election the tide ran strong against the Republican party, and if the Democracy could have restrained itself its success would have been inevitable. But it judged that it was a good time to try over again issues that had been settled long ago, and which the nation
had determined should stay settled.
It alarmed the conservative sentiment of the country by its attempt to break down the independence of the Executive, and it contrived to take out of the political sewer the dirty business in which Tilden's close associates had been engaged on his account, while nothing new was discovered about the Republican party.
So complete was the bankruptcy of the party in political ideas that it had nothing on which to fight the Ohio campaign, save the old issues which Governor Allen had worked for all their years worth, and which had failed with him. It was beaten, of course; and this defeat is only a forerunner of the one that awaits it in the next presidential election.

Twenty-two officers of the U. S.
Government have been killed in the Southern States while in discharge of their duty in collecting the revenue from July 1, 1876, to September 1, 1879; the latest date to which complete reports have been received at the Internal Revenue Bureau. Thirty-seven officers have been wounded while in the performance of their duty; 5,4

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.50
Six months, .85
Three months, .45

INvariably in Advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, 5 cents per square of 8 lines;
50 cents per square for each additional insertion. Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, OCT. 25, 1879.

Republican State Ticket.

For Governor,
JAMES A. GARY.

For Comptroller,
SAMUEL MALLALIEU.

For Attorney General,
F. M. DABBY.

For Clerk of Court of Appeals,
J. T. McCULLOUGH.

Republican County Ticket.

For Clerk of the Circuit Court,
W. H. TOWER.

For House of Delegates,
GEORGE W. WILSON,
AUSTIN SPEICHER.

For Sheriff,
GEORGE D. WHITE.

For Register of Wills,
W. H. HAGANS.

For County Commissioners,
D. HARRISON FRIEND,
JOHN WILHELM,
WM. W. BROADWATER.

For Judges of the Orphans' Court,
JOSEPH DEWITT,
WM. HARVEY,
ISAAC H. KOOKEN.

For Surveyor,
JOHN HARNED.

GRAND MASS-MEETINGS

Grand Mass Meetings, at which
our candidates for Governor and Attorney General and other eminent speakers will deliver addresses, will
be held at

Bloomington, 25th,

Johnstown, 28th,

Oakland, Wednesday 29th.

Grantsville, Thursday 30th.

Accident, Nov. 1st.

The above meetings will be held
at 2 o'clock p. m.

Mr. Gary and party will arrive at Accident Thursday next, at 10 a. m., and remain a short time, where they would be pleased to meet their friends of Accident and vicinity.

The Union Soldiers are represented on the Republican ticket by Hon.
George W. Wilson and Mr. W. H.
Hagans, and every soldier in the county should vote for them.

The impression has gone forth that Judge Wm. Harvey is disqualified from sitting on the bench of the Orphans' Court by reason of age.
Such is not the case. There is no law in this State disqualifying any man from serving in that station on account of age. Mr. Harvey has served in that position since the formation of the county, and has been a faithful officer, and by reason of intelligence and experience is much better "qualified" for the position than most of his opponents.

Since the organization of Garrett county there have been three sessions of the Legislature. In the two first the county was represented by Democrats; in the last by Republicans. The Democrats, in their two sessions are credited with local laws
as follows:

Bird law, dog law, fish law, game law, fence law, herding law and one set of $5,000 Assessors. Laws to reduce the expenses of the county; NONE.

The Republican members, during the one session in which they represented the county are credited with State and county laws as follows:

To settle the boundary between Garrett county and West Virginia, transferring the National road to the County Commissioners, to compel suit before a justice to be brought in the district wherein the defendant resides, reducing salary and mileage of County Commissioners, reducing pay of Orphans' Court Judges, reducing Sheriff's fees, and reducing witness and jurors' fees.

The people can strike the balance.

Democratic "Reform."

Our Democratic friends have periodic spasms of virtue. The attack always comes on before an election.
They have it had just now. They are exceedingly anxious to show the people how they can economize.
They have had grand opportunities to exhibit their talents in that direction the last twelve years but have not been around with the show. The people have been surfeited with exhibitions of wastefulness, of extravagant profligacy of every guise and form, but they wait in vain the inauguration of the long promised reform. The Democracy pledge themselves anew to make things lovely if the people will only give them a new lease of power.

It has been wittily said of the so-called oyster plant that it is always just going to taste like an oyster, but never does; so of our Democratic reformers, they are always just going to be honest and saving and make things smooth and even after the election, but the taxes have been going higher and higher and things have been going from bad to worse all the time.

Our late Democratic county convention, among a great many other pledges, pledged their candidates for House of Delegates to secure such legislation as will reduce the county expenses by reducing the salaries of county officers, &c.

Until 1875, with but a solitary exception, Garrett county has been represented in the legislature exclusively by Democrats. Mr. Getty was at Annapolis in the Senate two sessions, Messrs. West, Browning and Bernard were there with him, and what did he or they do to reduce the expenses of the county? Did he ever make an effort to do so? On the contrary he seems to have favored Ring rule and its consequent extravagance and corruption. When the duty of appointing Assessors in Garrett county devolved on him could he not have found Democrats to do the work as inexpensively as did the Republicans ten years before? In the flush times and high prices, just at the close of the war, the property in the territory of Garrett was assessed for less than $1,500. Could not Mr. Getty have found Democrats to do the same work in 1876, when wages and everything else ruled 50 per cent. lower, for less than $1,500?
Does it cost three times as much to get a certain specified amount of work done by Democrats as by Republicans, or did he secure the appointment of such men as would make it cost at that ratio? He can take either horn of the dilemma he chooses.

Again, there was the National road which was run, as all other things have been by the Ring Democracy of Maryland, with a view to getting the most money out of the people for the least service. Three or four Democrats along that road were billed on the people, who had to pay them a living for the poor privilege of traveling over the worn out road-bed, and yet Mr. Getty did nothing for the relief of his people.
So of the unsettled boundary line between Garrett county and Preston county, W. Va. It was a source of loss, of vexation and trouble which Mr. Getty failed to remedy. We had no law fixing the salaries of our county officers, but were governed by rates fixed in Allegany during the flush times succeeding the war, and yet neither Mr. Getty nor any of his Democratic associates did anything to lessen the burden of taxation.

In 1878 Garrett county had, for the first time, a full Republican representation at Annapolis. They made no pledges, but went quietly at it, and did the very work two years ago which our Democratic friends pledge themselves to accomplish next winter. They secured the passage of a law turning over the National Road to the County Commissioners, and the people now not only have no toll to pay, but have a road to travel.
They secured the passage of a law authorizing the appointment of a commission to settle our vexed boundary question. They cut down the pay of County Commissioners, Orphans' Court Judges, witnesses, Sheriff's fees, &c., and, in short, every expense they could reach in the county was curtailed by them. While our Republican members were doing this Mr. Getty was twice at Annapolis, we are informed, and while he had no measures of economy to recommend he was disposed to throw cold water on the work by saying we had local laws enough already. He did have one measure very much at heart, however, which was in fact a circular belt of territory lying round the end of district No. 9, and make out of it a new election district. Mr. Getty's bill for a new district had two merits: First, it would incur an additional annual expense on the county of about $100; and second, he could more easily control the county conventions.

The town elections held in Connescent last week showed large Republican gains all over the State.

Democratic Proof of Democratic Practices.

The position of Mr. A. P. Gorman, and the influence which he will exert upon the management of State affairs if the Democrats succeed this fall, is known to everybody.

George M. Gill, and the honest
Democrats acting with him, says:
"The [Democratic] primary elections recently held here have been manipulated and controlled by the hands, and the interest of, selfish and corrupt political combinations, and it is the right, as well as duty of the people, to object to the nominations thus imposed upon them. Our elections have become a mockery, and have been made to register the edicts of political managers rather than to reflect the voice and will of the people.
The taxpayers of this city and State are grievously burdened to support
many superfluous persons in office, and to pay extravagant salaries to many others."

Yet the Democrats have had full power, at any moment for twelve years past to correct these abuses, and have not taken one step towards it.
Ought the people to wait any longer,
and trust the Democracy for relief?

Again they say: "When the constitution of 1867 was adopted, the strongest pledges were given to insure an entire change in the management of State and city matters, especially as to the reduction of public debts, expenditures and taxation.
These pledges have not been redeemed,
and, in relation to our city government, there has been a great increase of debt, expenditures and taxation."

Shall a too credulous people wait any longer for "the redemption of these Democratic pledges?"

John Lee Carroll said in Monument Square: "We need economy and retrenchment in our expenditures, the lifting off of many useless offices, and a new registration law by which fairness can be secured at our
elections."

The Democracy fixed the scale of expenditures which Mr. Carroll said should be retrenched. He and his party—the Democratic party—have had power for twelve years to retrench them and have not done it;
he and the Democratic party have created and maintained the offices which he now says are "useless" and the Democratic party have shaped the law under which the people have ceased to have "fairness at our elections." This is the Democracy's sorry exhibit of the fruits of their twelve years' rule of power. Will not every candidate voter say it is time that such mistakes give place to better?

Joseph S. Meisler, all his life a Democrat, says: "During its long lease of power the Democratic party has become tainted with corruption and abuses that have crept into the body politic and that must be eradicated."

Can the "Conservative Democracy" be trusted to eradicate the abuses which have been introduced?

Hon. John Ritchie says: "There have been outrages at the ballot boxes which certainly are incompatible with true Democracy. There have been expenditures which cannot be justified; and, if I was the Governor of Maryland, I would abolish the tobacco warehouses and blow up the oyster yard in an hour."

Such is the picture of Democratic rule painted by Democrats. Voter, do you like it well enough to trust or perpetuate it?

The Democratic party has proven itself to be a party of no principle whatever. It has forsaken all its old doctrines and come chasing after anything and anybody in the hope of advancing itself. It has not paid any attention to the right in its hunt for power. It was the party of hard money, but it abandoned its soundness in that direction and embraced all the theories and isms of inflation and wild-cat finances for the sake of catching the adherents of those financial heresies. Look at the way in which the party is represented by its papers and its talk! They urge after Ohio that the battle was fought on mistaken issues and which must be changed; that the wrong man was put up and that this must not be repeated. They do not talk of what is right and what must be adhered to,
but what new ideas shall be advanced to catch popularity. They would grab at anything in hopes of being saved. It is too late for them to retrieve the disasters that have come upon them. Prosperity is abroad in the country. The people recognize the fact that financial and kindred agitation which are parts of the Democracy of the day unsettle business.
They will have no such trifling now.
The masses will stand by the Republicans.

The Baltimore Gazette says: The informative thing about the Ohio election is that it lays Senator Thurman on the political shelf, high and dry. The hatching out of Ewing could be easily lived over but the political destruction of Thurman is a calamity.

Chronicle.

For the DEMOCRATS.

Now when it began to draw near unto the end of the reign of Rutherford, the Democrats had control of the two Houses, and they said, We will show these Republicans what we will do. And they sent a bill to Rutherford for him to sign. But he said, Not so; for it is not right that this should be done. Then were they vexed and told him what they would do; but he refused to sign it.

And they sent again a bill unto him, but he withheld his signature from it, and sent unto them a message explaining why he did so. Then were they mad and tried to make it a law anyway, but could not. They also sent unto him other bills, but he refused to sign them; and they were exceeding wroth, and threatened to starve the Government, reduce the army, and various other things they threatened to do because they thought they had the power.

And as the summer wore away and the fall elections approached, they said, We will show these Republicans what we will do. And when the day arrived for the Maine election the Democrats were jubilant and sanguine of the result. But when the returns came in and they found they were badly beaten they were much disturbed. Nevertheless they did not give up, but said, Wait for California. And they did wait for California, and when the day came they predicted victory for themselves. The Republicans waited likewise, and it was a glorious victory for them. The Democrats were swept up even as leaves are swept up in the fall of the year, by a north wind.

But the Democrats said, Let here be Kentucky. And they carried that State, as they have always done; for is not that State ruled by rille-clubs and Ku-Klux and White Liners?

And do they not rule to suit their own side?

And as the Colorado election was nigh all eyes were turned thither, for the Democrats had before turned a Republican out of Congress and given his seat to a Democrat. And when the returns were in it appeared that the Republicans had carried the State by a large majority; and the Democrats were discouraged.

Then the Democrats said, Let Iowa and Ohio vote soon. Iowa is joined to her idols. We have no chance there, albeit we did gain one. But Ohio surely will be on our side, and if so, we are content. For, he it known, all looked upon Ohio as being the turning point. Therefore they said, Wait for Ohio. And they did wait for Ohio. Liked the Republicans waited, and it was so when the returns came in, that the Democrats were beaten so badly that there was nothing found of them. And the Republicans' really rejoiced. Iowa also voted, but the Democrats took no account of it, for they knew there was no comfort there for them.

Then they tried to console themselves and said one unto another,
New York yet remains. If that fails us then are we indeed undone. (That is, if we can be worse off than we are now.)

And they waited for New York to cast her vote.

The New York Times says that the lesson of the Ohio election is a distinct warning that the Democratic party, when given over to the rule of the South cannot be trusted. The hollow pretense that the liberties of the people were in danger from the bagmen of the soldiers, and the iron cages of the Federal Supervisors has only been met with contempt. The people saw that the only real danger to suffrage came from the party which tolerated the murderers of Dixon and Chisom, suppressed a Republican vote in the cotton States, and tried through its candidate to buy the Presidency.

Mr. Wm. T. Hamilton, Gorman's candidate for Governor, made an important concession in his Westminster speech. He said: "I, as governor, can do but little primarily." True, with Gorman, Hammon, and the balance of the Ring in opposition, he will be nothing more than a figurehead. The Ring rules the State.
The only way to restore State management to its normal condition, is to turn down and vote against all Ring candidates. Clean out the augan stable, from the highest to the lowest department.

Mr. Watterson exclaims in anguish: "We may lose Ohio, and we may lose New York; and if we do, Heaven help us!" No, Heaven won't help you, for, as your own statesmen have demonstrated, Providence is working with the Republican party to maintain resumption,
and that means disaster to the Democratic party.

Results of the Republican policy
of protection and honest money:
"Twenty thousand laborers are at work in Philadelphia who one year ago were out of employment.—President Hayes.

Republicans vs. Democrats.—State Management.

During the five years of Republican control ending in 1865, there was collected from taxes and other sources
but $11,439,972.29.

While in the five years of Democratic control ending in 1871, the amount collected from taxes and other sources was $14,695,850.92, or nearly $3,000,000 more.

Under such circumstances it might be supposed that the Democratic party would have diminished the State debt. Yet what do we find?
When the Republicans turned over the State treasury in 1866 the State debt was $10,797,802, and in 1870 the Democrats had run it up to $13,317,- 479.

With an additional revenue of nearly $3,000,000 coming into them at this time, they increased the debt nearly $3,000,000.

Thus we find that nearly $3,000,000
of additional taxation has been wrung from the people, and the debt of the State instead of being lessened, has been increased nearly $3,000,000—leaving the people nearly $6,000,000 worse off in the brief period of five years of Democratic control.

Which party has been extravagant and which economical, we leave to voters to decide.

The Baltimore Bulletin (Democrat) pays the Republican party the following handsome compliment:

The Ohio election shows that the Republican party has closed up its fines. The hickories and dissensions which have heretofore weakened their party have been healed and buried, and never in the history of the Republican party have its forces been so close in line. Every man in the State of Ohio who has had the least proclivity for the Republican party, strapped on his knapsack, shouldered his musket, and stepped into the ranks. In every State the same party discipline prevails. It exists here in Maryland.
There are no stragglers from the Republican camp.

Garrett county is no exception to the above. The party is well organized, the membership being somewhat recruited by Democrats who have become disgusted with their party and are leaving it and casting in their lot with the Republicans.

From all parts of the state come most pleasing accounts of the Republican canvass. Wherever Mr.
Gary has spoken he has gained supporters and silenced opposition. The people are tired of the rule of the Democracy, which has been so fruitful of jobs and so barren of benefit to the people of the state. They are beginning to see that there is no necessity why they should any longer condone its offences and vote the Democratic ticket as a protest against the Southern policy of the national administration, for that policy is now commendable in every respect.
Maryland, one of the last strongholds of Federalism, and a true adherent to the Whig party, has no natural affiliation with the Democracy, and the present is a good time for it to take its place in the Republican column.

Mr. J. Morrison Harris, in his speech at Elkton on Saturday, showed very clearly the principal interest that Maryland had in the mooted question of State Rights. It is not federal layabouts at the polls that voters of this state have to fear so much as it is the stuffing of the ballot boxes, false registry lists, dishonest counts of the ballots. Mr.
Harris announced himself as a strong believer in State Rights if those rights mean an honest state election, a pure ballot, no interference with the right of suffrage and a fair count. Democratic stump orators who are fond of exciting their audiences with highly colored pictures of federal layabouts at the polls should think over these things.

General Crook, in a vigorous letter on Indian affairs, says: "Under the poor compulsus act the military arm of the government is paralyzed. The Sioux can't understand anything about legislation in military affairs.
They don't want to understand it.
All they know is that bands of white thieves boldly seize their ponies and drive them off, finding a ready sale for them among ranchers and cattleherders. For all this there is no redress whatever. As I understand the law, we cannot even seize Indian property when found in the hands of well known thieves. The Indian owner has the privilege of suing for recovery in the state courts, but this would prove to be in most cases a very shadowy consolation."

The election in Colorado on Tuesday week, was for Supreme Judge and county officers. The majority for Beck, Republican, for Supreme Judge, is estimated at 6,000, a gain of 5,000 over last year's vote.

The Cumberland Daily News says:
"One of the cardinal reasons why the Democrats want to carry the State this fall is to keep the Republicans from a glance at the books, which would surely bear a close scrutiny, we fancy."

Not a single Southern Democrat was permitted by the party to speak during the canvass in Ohio. Appointments were made for Senator Vance, of North Carolina and Senator Morgan, of Alabama, but were cancelled. While the Democrats dare not permit their Southern leaders to speak in Northern States because they will repel votes, the Democrats in Congressional caucus must obey the dictation of these dangerous allies.
The fact embodies a sturdy argument.

Mr. Hamilton said that "the Democratic party was the great historic party of the land, and he appealed to the past history of that party for a single wrong committed by it." Mr.
Hamilton's memory is very treacherous, or does he think it was perfectly right for the party to dissolve the Federal Union? The history of the party of modern years is in bad repute. It is best just at this time not to refer to Democratic history.

TELEGRAPHIC.

THE BALTIMORE ELECTION.

Correspondence Camb. News.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 25.—The city election to-day passed off quietly.
There was a large vote polled. For Mayor it stood as follows, as returned by the judges:

Latrobe.....35,739
Hooper.....19,829

Latrobe's majority.....5,890

Mr. Hooper carried the 18th and 20th wards. The Republicans elected three councilmen, and besides making an impression on the "Solid"
Democracy, gave them a big scare, and are in splendid organization for November.

CHOKED TO DEATH.

CUMBERLAND, Oct. 18.—At dinner time to-day Clark Smith, aged fifty-five, inmate of the jail here, while trying to show the other inmates his ability to swallow a large piece of meat, had the same fastened in his throat and he was choked to death.

SURRENDER OF CONUNWALLS.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 18.—The Assembly of Governors to arrange the details of the Centennial anniversary of the surrender of the English army at Yorktown, met in Carpenter's Hall this morning. Governor Holliday, of Virginia, was chosen president.

The meeting then adjourned to Independence Hall, where Mayor Stokely and Governor Post welcomed the Governors to the city and State. Governor Hoyt, from the committee on resolutions, reported the following, and they were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we, the Governors and Representatives of the original Colonies, convened at Independence Hall, Philadelphia, this 18th day of October, 1879, knowing that the purposes for which we have assembled meet the hearty appreciation of our constituents, do hereby by command to the people of the United States such celebration of the centennial anniversary of the surrender of Conunwalls at Yorktown, as shall do full historical significance of that event, and present the greatness of the nation.

Resolved, That a committee of one from each State, nominated by the Governors thereof, of which committee Governor Holliday shall be chairman, be appointed to make proper arrangements for such celebration.

THE LAST HOPE OF THE NEW YORK DEMOCRACY.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 21.—It has been ascertained that Senator Ben.
Hill's return to New York from this city was for the purpose of making a second attempt to bring about a settlement between the Robinson and Kelly factions. The Senator, upon arriving here a fortnight since, at the close of the first effort, in which he participated, with a number of prominent Democrats from the North, to head this split in the party, declared his belief that a full understanding would be reached in ample time to consolidate the Democratic vote in New York State. In this matter
Senator Hill represents the feeling which is general among such Southern men as are here, since the Ohio election, that unless the Democracy can carry New York this fall, there can be nothing to hope for in the presidential campaign. He is, therefore, urging a settlement between Robinson and Kelly in the name of all the Democrats of the South.

NEGROES MIGRATION TO INDIANA.

WASHINGTON, October 21.—Two colored men arrived from Indiana to-day who left their homes in North Carolina a short time ago en route for Kansas, whither they were sent by a community of two hundred of their race to examine the country, and, if possible, secure a settlement in some locality where they could obtain employment. The two men said that when they reached Indiana they received such tempting offers from several parties to furnish work to the entire number that they concluded to accept. They are now returning to North Carolina to bring their people to their future domiciles.
The men, who are unusually intelligent, think that Indiana offers many advantages to colored emigrants, and if those who are about to settle there thrive and prosper, as they probably will, several thousand of colored people from both North and South Carolina will surely follow.

LOCAL NEWS.

—We call attention to the card of Daniel Chisholm, in this issue.

—Rev. B. Ison has moved into the Perry property, on Alder street.

—$20,000 to loan on first-class commercial paper. Apply to D. E. Offutt.

—12 kegs of butter were shipped from this station this week, to Baltimore.

—The pay car passed West Tuesday morning, dispensing the monthly stipend to its employees.

—200 sacks G. A. Salt for sale at Wm. P. Tolten's Cheap Cash Store, Oakland, Md.

—Chas. Sincell, Esq., has placed a handsome sign over his blacksmith shop. Blake Ward was the artist.

—Rev. H. C. Sanford, the new preacher for the Oakland circuit, will preach with his family, arrived in Oakland Tuesday.

—A. C. Hamill, Democrat, of District No. 1, announces himself as an independent candidate for County Commissioner.

—Our Flat woods correspondent informs us that Mr. Ketter's settlement, wading the "mud of destruction" over the heads of the "boys."

—John O'Brien, a miner employed in the Potomac mine at Barton, was killed Tuesday morning by a fall of breast coal. He was about 45 years old and leaves a wife and several children.

—Joshua Lipscomb raised this season on his farm in the Ryan's Glade settlement, this county, pumpkins weighing as follows: 18, 51, 23, 55 and 90 pounds. They are of the mammoth Chili variety. The largest was three feet long, oval shaped.

—On the 15th instant Edward Saxton, of Barton, Allegany county, a flagman on a Pittsburg and Connellsville freight train, was killed near West Newton, Pa. He was in the rear of one of several cars which had broken loose from the 1st section of a freight train and were standing on the track. The second section of the train came up and ran into them, killing Saxton, who is thought to have been asleep, and damaging locomotive and cars. The deceased was about 25 years of age.

—Three lucky fishermen returned to Cumberland on Tuesday of last week from a short excursion on the South Branch, near Romney, bringing with them a string of 195 fine loaves. A curious incident happened on the trip. A string of fish were fastened in the water at the edge of the river. When the fishermen came to take the fish they found that a line had been added to the string. On examination they found that the big bass had swallowed one of the smaller ones on the string and then could not get away, falling a victim to his greediness.

—Dr. Fumienberg will be at the "Davis House" every Tuesday for a short while longer.

Church Services—Sunday.

M. T. Church.—Praching in the morning at 10 o'clock, by Rev. H. C. Sanford.

Roll of Honor.

The following persons have paid us on account of subscription, advertising, &c., since our last report:

John F. Browning, Austin Spelker, Wm. Incledon, David Eilow, Edw. Merrill, John E. Waring, W. W. Broadwater, A. C. Waring, John Bennett, Miss Nellie Chisholm, Samuel A. Taylor, B. H. Friend, Edward Marzoff, Lloyd Chambers.

The Greenback-Labor Ticket.

The ticket of the Greenback-labor party is now constituted. The list includes eight new men, who have been placed on the ticket to fill vacancies:

Clerk.—Dr. J. J. Wilson.
Sheriff.—J. C. Lynn.
House of Delegates.—Albin Coles, William Broderick, Jacob Sowers, E. M. Davis.

County Commissioners.—John Himmler, James Logsdon, James Wilson, Lycurgus F. Gurley and H. M. Hite.

Orphans' Court.—Henry Coleman, W. T. Frazier and Isaac Long.
Surveyor.—Hugh McMullen.
The new men are Messrs. Sowers, Davis, Himmler, Gurley, Hite, Coleman, Long and Frazier.—Concl. News.

List of Letters.

List of letters remaining undelivered in the Post Office at Oakland, Oct. 25th, 1879.

Persons calling for them will please say they are advertised.

Miss Adams, J. J. Burnett, S. Jas. Birdwell, Bond & Bros., Matilda Brown, J. E. Banks, Robt. Chaggett, C. Carmichael, R. E. Dillen, J. C. Dick, J. Z. Elough, E. H. Ewan, Christ. Ferry, Ellen Hart, Clement Hoopes, Matilda A. Jones, M. W. Lammert, H. McComas, Betty Morris, Mrs. W. Martin, Louisa M. Robinson, Sara Right, George W. Slick, J. W. Slick, Thos. Scott, J. Ambler Smith, R. H. E. Seibert, Benton Savage, Mrs. M. E. Smith, Wm. L. Washington, John H. Wolf, Molly Warn, Lucy Washington, E. Bennett Young, Geo. Peer, J. M. Pace.

R. THAYER, P. M.

Republican Mass Meeting.

A Republican mass meeting will be held at Yutzy's, six miles south of Oakland, on the West Union road, on Friday, October 31st, 1879, at 3 o'clock p. m. The meeting will be addressed by Messrs. Thomas J. Peddicord, H. Wheeler Combs, and others.

There will also be a meeting at the Calvert Shook Shop, in district No. 8, Monday evening, Nov. 3, at 7 o'clock to be addressed by Thos. J. Peddicord, Esq., and others.

The Campaign.

Large and enthusiastic meetings are being held by the Republicans all over the county. Republicans are alive and working night and day. Thos. J. Peddicord H. Wheeler Combs, N. E. Fuller, Esqs., and others are doing noble work for the cause of true reform. If the voters do their duty on the 4th of November the entire Republican ticket will be elected by a good working majority. Every Republican should work for the good cause. Down with the Ring and Ring candidates.

Another Store Bargarized.

Burglars entered the store of D. H. Loar, in Oakland, Friday night of last week, effecting an entrance by prying open a window shutter, and took money and goods to the value of about $50, so far as Mr. Loar can ascertain at present. Among the articles taken, besides a few dollars in nickels and pennies, were a silver watch, a lot of pocket knives, one or two suits of clothes, one or two pairs of boots and some small articles. This is the fifth store that has been robbed in Oakland within less than two years.

An Important Decision.

Judge Motter recently rendered a decision in an appeal from the decision of Register Brown, of the Hagerstown District, No. 17, which is important. The case, briefly, is this: Philip Cartz, an inmate of the almshouse, applied to Brown to be registered as a legal voter. Brown refused to enter his name on the ground that he believed Cartz was incompetent. Judge Motter decided that the registrar had not the power to determine the sanity or insanity of a person applying for registration, and that no man could be refused a vote who was not declared "non compos" upon the finding of a jury of inquiry in lunacy. The registrar was directed to enter his name on the list of voters.

The Last Chances.

Prof. Nimmo will remain in Oakland for a week or ten days longer, in order to afford those a chance who have not had pictures taken. The Professor extends his thanks to his many patrons in this town and vicinity for the liberal patronage accorded him during the summer.

RED HOUSE, MD., Oct. 18, 1879.

MR. EDITOR:—The Democrats held a meeting here yesterday afternoon, at which Messrs. W. R. Getty, G. S. Hamill, R. T. Browning, A. L. Osborn, J. J. Smith and G. W. Merrill and others from Oakland, were in attendance, and brought with them for gratuitous distribution among the faithful, that most potent of Democratic arguments, (or at least they believe such to be the case,) plenty of whiskey and beer. After partaking of the "refreshments" speeches were made by Messrs. Getty, Hamill and others. There are Democrats in this neighborhood who think that more sound arguments and less bad whiskey would be more conducive to Democratic success this fall. I understand that one of the Democratic candidates has made the boast that he could buy his election for two barrels of whiskey, and that he had the whiskey with which to make the purchase. County affairs would not be conducted on reform principles by such a man. I have also heard it asserted that another candidate on the same ticket has said that there were enough votes for sale in Garrett county to elect him, and that he had the money to buy them.

Hoping and believing that our entire ticket will be elected on the 4th of November,

I am, very respectfully,

RYAN'S GLADE.

Mr. Hamilton and the Ring.

Every man of sense knows that the Ring controls the Democratic party in this State and rules with an iron rod. No merit can secure a nomination. The Ring endorses or nominates only those who they manage. Every member of the Ring is an official benefactor. The chiefs of the Ring have become rich from the public treasury. The Ring leaders look only to their own interest. They will use a man, then vilify him; they will strike hands with their most violent denouncer and bitter opponent to accomplish their purpose. Mr. Hamilton and the Ring are friends. He got his notoriety by denunciation of the Ring. He became popular with the people in consequence of it. The Ring concluded it best to form alliance with Mr. Hamilton. Mr. Hamilton concluded he would save a hard contest and secure a nomination by an alliance with the Ring, so they both are satisfied and harmony prevails among them. Mr. Hamilton, candidate for Governor looks out for himself—the Ring looks out for itself by looking out for the Legislature and the Board of Public Works. Where will reform come in when these are controlled by the Ring?

The Democratic platform and Mr. Hamilton declare reform necessary and men are being deluded with the cry that Hamilton can give reform. How can he do it? With the Board of Public Works against him, and the Legislature controlled by the Ring, Mr. Hamilton acknowledges that the Executive can give no relief, but that the people must look for reform from the Legislature; and in nearly every county pronounced advocates of the Ring or men who dare not express their sentiments are the Democratic nominees for the Legislature.

There is not a man of any political acumen in the State who does not believe that an alliance has been formed between Mr. Hamilton and the Ring Masters, and the President of the Republican Convention at Hagerstown in terse language shows how it was done. "No man was wanted for Governor who will cast off the mantle of reform and lay it at the feet of the chief of his oppressors as a tribute of acquiescence; nor he who will truckle or bargain with a controlling power to secure a nomination; no man as will in a private parlor of a hotel make a bargain and sale of his adherents to secure a position for himself."

The position of the South is almost as dangerous to the peace and integrity of the Union now as it was in 1859. In States, districts and counties where the negroes are in the majority, they are overawed by an armed and organized minority. Several States have put upon their statute books an ingenious series of laws which make it difficult for the negro race to advance a single step toward civilization. In some of the States they have devised an ingenious system of poll-taxes, by which ten days' labor from poor negroes is required on the roads, while the property of the planter pays nothing whatever, and in enforcing this law the whites are practically not required to labor, but only the blacks. The school system which was started by the Republican party after reconstruction is practically abandoned, and in some of the Southern States the whole population is growing up in the most dangerous ignorance.

Ohio Democrats are now shouting at the top of their voices that they lost the State through the illegal use of money and other fraudulent means. They go further and threaten an investigation and all that sort of thing. The Democrats of Ohio should remember why S. Jones Tilson did not more actively prosecute his claims to the presidency in 1876, and the sad fate of the Potter investigation, before they institute any proceedings. That the Ohio Democratic State Central Committee was well supplied with funds from the East, and that Democratic policemen and officials were outrageously assessed to prosecute the campaign, and the nature and hat its of the animal, are all to well known to invite inspection. The old saw about arresting the man that cries "stop thief" loudest was never more applicable.

It is conceded that the financial issue played a very small part in the Republican canvass in Ohio; but that appeals to the loyalty and patriotic devotion of the people to the national government brought out the fervent response just registered at the polls. It is very clear that the arrogance of the Democratic party in Congress furnished the grounds on which to make this appeal; had it not been for that, the stalwarts could have adopted no line of attack that would not have involved the President in its condemnation, and to have done this would have divided and hopelessly weakened the Republican party. The ingenuity with which the Democratic party headed up the breach in the Republican party, and revived issues upon which public opinion had often declared itself in favor of the Republican side of the case, cannot be too greatly admired.

The Cincinnati Commercial of Thursday contained a cartoon of a large Republican eagle shaking the daylight out of a sickly sample of a States Rights Democratic rooster.

The Commercial says that hereafter when spelling the word Nation use a capital N. The Democratic readers are accustomed to write the N very small. The people demand that a large sized capital shall be used. Thurman has been sent to the foot of the class for his persistent refusal to recognize that the word should be spelled with a large letter.

A Talk on Politics.

Mr. E. V. Smalley, a correspondent of the New York Tribune, visited President Hayes at his home at Fremont, Ohio, Thursday last, and had a talk with him on political matters. The President is represented as saying that if it were not the year before the presidential election he would say that the Democrats would not renew the fight over the appropriation bills and election laws next winter, but that it is always possible to predict what is going to happen in a session preceding a presidential contest. He thinks the old issue between State rights and national supremacy will always survive; not so much, however, as an issue between the Republicans and the Democrats as between the opposition and whatever party has possession of the government—the outs and the ins. The President declared that if the Democrats expect to fight him from his position by renewing the struggle of last session they will make a bad mistake. He does not think the defeat of Ewing will take the currency question out of politics, for "there will always be an element that will want a kind of money which is cheap to make and easy to get." The President also expressed an earnest desire for the election of Mr. Cornell as Governor of New York. In reply to an inquiry whether there was not reason to fear that the Democrats will count out the Republican presidential nominee, no matter what his majority may be, President Hayes said he thought public opinion would prevent them from doing so—"the independent voters and independent press," said the President, siding with the party to be defrauded, would form too strong an opposition to be defied. A few moderate Democrats in Congress would have the power to prevent the carrying out of such a scheme. No; if we have say twenty majority of the electoral votes." The President, however, said there might be trouble if the result should depend on a small State like Colorado or Oregon; but his belief was that public sentiment would find a remedy and settle the difficulty in the right way.

The telegraph announces that there is frost at Memphis. This will be good news to the exiles as well as the garrison of the fever-battered city; but it increases the danger that there will be a premature rush of citizens to their deserted homes. This was to some extent the case last year, and the consequence was the loss of some precious life that might have been saved. It is a gloomy future, at the best, that now opens for the city. The municipality is bankrupt, her credit gone, property unproductive and unable to pay taxes, capital crippled and enterprise shackled by forebodings of another sickly season. There is no longer any encouragement for business men to settle in the city, and little for those that are now there to remain. Last year the close of the epidemic found the people hopeful, and it is a fact that by crowding the business of weeks into days they were able to nearly catch up with their usual volume of business; but this year despondency seems to have taken the place of pluck, and the element of uncertainty in the calculation of future prospects will seriously retard, if it does not paralyze, trade of every description. In itself, Memphis proposes no sources of recuperation. It produces nothing, and is, therefore, dependent upon the traffic of the valley for business. Such prosperity as it has enjoyed has been derived almost wholly from its cotton trade; and, although it is at present the great receiving and distributing point of the Mississippi valley, the embargo which has now for its successive seasons been laid upon its commerce has seriously endangered its supremacy. Should this be wrested from it, Memphis would indeed become a deserted city.

Republican Victories.

Elections have been held so far this year in the following places, and carried by the Republicans:

OHIO 20,000 majority for Foster, Republican, 33 majority in the legislature, thus securing the election of a Republican U. S. Senator.

CALIFORNIA 7000 majority for Governor, a Republican legislature, four Congressmen, a gain of one for the Republicans.

MAINE elects a Republican Governor and legislature.

IOWA 80,000 majority for Governor and Republican legislature.

CONNECTICUT 1000 Republican majority and a Republican legislature.

COLORADO 6,000 majority for Judge of the Supreme Court.

The Richmond (Va.) State (Dem.) has been overwhelmed by the news from Ohio. In agony of soul it exclaims: "We confess we see no future for the Democracy there, and the struggle for the control of the National Government might as well be given up."

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Standard.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 21, 1879.

I notice as a significant sign of the times that the Democrats and Greenbackers are tired of "this eternal talk about Ohio and Iowa." Well they may be. And let me say right here that after the November elections they will be still more tired of that talk. It is all one way this year, and they begin to realize it. The monotony of course is not encouraging to them, after three years of looking forward to complete domination in the National Government.

There seems to be some danger that Iowa will be too unanimously Republican, rolling up as it does 80,000 majority over the Democrats. The more gratifying fact is that the Republicans seemed to take special delight in going for the Greenback stronghold. Thus the two districts that chose Greenback members of Congress last year, have reported large Democratic majorities and this is the point of rejoicing among the Republicans at the Capital. Senator Allison is to be credited largely with this result, and he will receive the congratulations of his many friends when he returns to W.

Ohio was certainly a Waterloo for the Democrats and Greenbackers. Before election, we would have been satisfied with a small plurality over the Democrats and Greenbackers, but to obtain a clean majority over all is a fact almost unprecedented. The poor Greenbackers are nearly squeezed out. Their truck and dicker in Maine, and their "independent action" in Ohio will evaporate in the same result—obliteration.

Ewing and Thurman are terribly set back by their defeat. Of course the latter is politically done for, and cannot hope to go into the Democratic National Convention with his State to back him. Pendleton seems to be coming forward as Ohio's favorite son, on that side, for the reason that he was not cordially inside the Democratic management in the late campaign.

The chief significance of the result in Ohio is its pointing towards Republican restoration in Congress. Thurman's defeat will be followed by Kernan's, in New York; Eaton's, in Connecticut; Wallace's, in Pennsylvania; Randolph's, in New Jersey; and McDonald's in Indiana, giving us six new Republican Senators in March 1881, when the new House will come in. We shall of course lose one Senator in Mississippi, where Jeff Davis expects to succeed Bruce. This would make the Senate a tie, if we count David Davis a Democrat, but there are many who say he reads the signs of the times, and will be closer to the Republican party hereafter. As to the House, the late elections seem to show that we shall secure that beyond doubt. Maine will oust the two Greenbackers and Iowa will follow suit with her two. The new Ohio Legislature will correct the infamous Democratic gerrymander in that State and give us five or six more members, and Indiana and Pennsylvania will make several gains. Besides these Oregon is coming into line with one Republican, and the Republicans of Tennessee, Louisiana and Florida are to make an extraordinary effort to maintain their rights, and if they do they will send together 7 or 8 members. The outlook is sufficiently bright to send joy to all good Republicans.

LOGAN.

The South has acted very badly. By its aggressiveness towards the North it has alienated the conservative element in the North, and will, doubtless, tramp it out altogether. It has given such encouragement and strength to the stalwart element of the Republican party that it will continue in power. The South will go on no doubt until it is flat on its back. It has ever since the war failed to recognize the fact that the North was the conqueror and could have dictated any terms to the conquered that might have been desired. Their people were forgiven because the conservative element in the North predominated. It was hoped that the country would be united both in feeling and in fact. But the South would not accept the forgiveness. While the North forgave the South, the South has not forgiven the North for being the victory.

Libertygloten Banner: "The Democratic party is a terrible blusterer about retrenchment and reform, and yet, whenever it has the power, it acts differently. The Republican Constitution of this state fixed the salaries of our Clerk and Register at $2,500 per annum; the Democratic Constitution of 1867 raised it to $3,000. The Republican school examiner received $1,200 per annum; the Democratic, $1,500. Now, reader, these are facts; ponder over them, and make your decision. Don't be deceived by Democratic promises."

Vote the whole ticket.

You cannot take the baby to the country, use Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup for the usual diseases of early childhood. Price 25 cents a bottle.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

DANIEL CHISHOLM, SURVEYOR.

Office in Wm. Merrill's drug store.

A. M. Jarrett, D.D.S.

will be at Oakland every six months.

Nitrous oxide gas used for the painless extraction of teeth.

Artificial teeth warranted to be neat and substantial.

Fine artistic gold filling specialty. Address, Clifton, W. Va.

REPUBLICAN

MASS MEETINGS

—AT—

Johnstown, Tuesday Oct. 28.

Oakland, Wednesday 29th.

Grantsville, Thursday 30th.

Accident, Saturday Nov. 1st.

Eminent speakers will address these meetings, and the Oakland Cornet Band will be in attendance at one or more of them.

COMMISSIONERS' MEETING.

OFFICE OF THE CLERK OF THE BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS, OAKLAND, MD., Oct. 21, 1879.

Notice is hereby given that the County Commissioners of Garrett county will meet at their office in Oakland.

On Monday, Oct. 30th, 1879, for the transaction of such business as may come before the Board.

By order, W. H. HAGANS, Clerk.

10 25 3

Wolf, Thayer & Co.

Are now paying the highest CASH prices for

Furs, Sheep Skins, Game of all kinds and Produce Generally.

Ware-room in O'Leary's Old Building, Main Street, Oakland, Md.

Constable's Sale.

By virtue of three writs of fieri facias, two issued by Alexander C. Good, Esq., Justice of the Peace of the State of Maryland, in and for Garrett county, at the suit of Geo. W. Logan, against the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of Alexander C. Good, and Mary E. Good, his wife, I have seized and taken in execution all the right, title, interest and estate, legal and in equity, of the said Alex. C. Good and Mary E. Good, his wife, and in the following real estate, to-wit:

Military Lots Nos. 85, 255, 588, 1509, 1519, 1520, 1521, 1522, 1523, 1524, 1525, 1526, 1527, 1528, 1529, 1530, 1531, 1532, 1533, 1534, 1535, 1536, 1537, 1538, 1539, 1540, 1541, 1542, 1543, 1544, 1545, 1546, 1547, 1548, 1549, 1550, 1551, 1552, 1553, 1554, 1555, 1556, 1557, 1558, 1559, 1560, 1561, 1562, 1563, 1564, 1565, 1566, 1567, 1568, 1569, 1570, 1571, 1572, 1573, 1574, 1575, 1576, 1577, 1578, 1579, 1580, 1581, 1582, 1583, 1584, 1585, 1586, 1587, 1588, 1589, 1590, 1591, 1592, 1593, 1594, 1595, 1596, 1597, 1598, 1599, 1600, 1601, 1602, 1603, 1604, 1605, 1606, 1607, 1608, 1609, 1610, 1611, 1612, 1613, 1614, 1615, 1616, 1617, 1618, 1619, 1620, 1621, 1622, 1623, 1624, 1625, 1626, 1627, 1628, 1629, 1630, 1631, 1632, 1633, 1634, 1635, 1636, 1637, 1638, 1639, 1640, 1641, 1642, 1643, 1644, 1645, 1646, 1647, 1648, 1649, 1650, 1651, 1652, 1653, 1654, 1655, 1656, 1657, 1658, 1659, 1660, 1661, 1662, 1663, 1664, 1665, 1666, 1667, 1668, 1669, 1670, 1671, 1672, 1673, 1674, 1675, 1676, 1677, 1678, 1679, 1680, 1681, 1682, 1683, 1684, 1685, 1686, 1687, 1688, 1689, 1690, 1691, 1692, 1693, 1694, 1695, 1696, 1697, 1698, 1699, 1700, 1701, 1702, 1703, 1704, 1705, 1706, 1707, 1708, 1709, 1710, 1711, 1712, 1713, 1714, 1715, 1716, 1717, 1718, 1719, 1720, 1721, 1722, 1723, 1724, 1725, 1726, 1727, 1728, 1729, 1730, 1731, 1732, 1733, 1734, 1735, 1736, 1737, 1738, 1739, 1740, 1741, 1742, 1743, 1744, 1745, 1746, 1747, 1748, 1749, 1750, 1751, 1752, 1753, 1754, 1755, 1756, 1757, 1758, 1759, 1760, 1761, 1762, 1763, 1764, 1765, 1766, 1767, 1768, 1769, 1770, 1771, 1772, 1773, 1774, 1775, 1776, 1777, 1778, 1779, 1780, 1781, 1782, 1783, 1784, 1785, 1786, 1787, 1788, 1789, 1790, 1791, 1792, 1793, 1794, 1795, 1796, 1797, 1798, 1799, 1800, 1801, 1802, 1803, 1804, 1805, 1806, 1807, 1808, 1809, 1810, 1811, 1812, 1813, 1814, 1815, 1816, 1817, 1818, 1819, 1820, 1821, 1822, 1823, 1824, 1825, 1826, 1827, 1828, 1829, 1830, 1831, 1832, 1833, 1834, 1835, 1836, 1837, 1838, 1839, 1840, 1841, 1842, 1843, 1844, 1845, 1846, 1847, 1848, 1849, 1850, 1851, 1852, 1853, 1854, 1855, 1856, 1857, 1858, 1859, 1860, 1861, 1862, 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866, 1867, 1868, 1869, 1870, 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, 1879, 1880, 1881, 1882, 1883, 1884, 1885, 1886, 1887, 1888, 1889, 1890, 1891, 1892, 1893, 1894, 1895, 1896, 1897, 1898, 1899, 1900, 1901, 1902, 1903, 1904, 1905, 1906, 1907, 1908, 1909, 1910, 1911, 1912, 1913, 1914, 1915, 1916, 1917, 1918, 1919, 1920, 1921, 1922, 1923, 1924, 1925, 1926, 1927, 1928, 1929, 1930, 1931, 1932, 1933, 1934, 1935, 1936, 1937, 1938, 1939, 1940, 1941, 1942, 1943, 1944, 1945, 1946, 1947, 1948, 1949, 1950, 1951, 1952, 1953, 1954, 1955, 1956, 1957, 1958, 1959, 1960, 1961, 1962, 1963, 1964, 1965, 1966, 1967, 1968, 1969, 1970, 1971, 1972, 1973, 1974, 1975, 1976, 1977, 1978, 1979, 1980, 1981,

VARIETIES.

—Made to order—slaves.—Puck.
—The Home of the Cæsars.—The Custom-House.
—The carmen have sculled the last rows of summer.
—Love never dies, but it will sometimes get bald-headed.—Whitcomb Times.
—The fact that the Bible starts out with a snake-story is making lots of fellows.—Boston Post.
—A man never knows how many friends he has until he purchases a billiard table.—N. Y. Star.
—The fall of an apple set Sir Isaac Newton to thinking, but the fall of a shingle has made more boys think than all the apples that ever grow.
—The estimated hog yield in the nine principal pork-producing States this year is 15,500,000. But what the average citizen wants to know is how much pork he is likely to get for a shilling.—N. Y. Express.
—Martin F. Tupper asks, "Where are the pure, the noble and the meek?" Don't know where they are in England, but in this country they are running for office.—N. O. Picayune.
—The Philadelphia Ledger informs an "anxious inquirer" that "poets are born, not made." We regret to learn this, for we had intended to take a block of wood and a penknife and whittle out a few for the fall trade.—Norristown Herald.
—A correspondent asks us what is good for moths. We don't know much about it, but we should recommend plenty of healthy, nourishing food, with seltzer-water occasionally to aid digestion.
—Judging from the way women cut hair, even in these advanced times, Sampson must have been a frightful sight when Delilah got through shearing him. It's no wonder he got weak and left all broke up.—Wheeling Leader.
—The prevailing style of wide belts worn by the ladies is calculated to impress one with the belief that a great deal of leather belting is going to waste.—Keokuk Gate City.
—Ah, me," sighed a rising young genius, throwing down his pen and leaning back wearily. "You don't know how much pleasanter and easier it is to read these little poems of mine than it is to write them." Sympathetic but awkward friend—"Gad, how you must suffer, then!"
—A young clerk in Holyoke spent six hours in a refrigerator the other day, having been imprisoned by mistake. He left, on coming out, as though he had just been entertained at a fashionable church soiree.—Turner's Falls Reporter.
—Willie, aged ten, and Jenny, aged six, were playing together. One of them was minutely examining a fly. "I wonder how God made him," he exclaimed. "God don't make flies as ear-pickers," observed the other. "Well, how did he make them, and there is flies."—Philadelphia Press.
—Very genial was good old Dean Erskine, of Ripon, when a jocular rural dean said to him in a bantering way, "I don't see why, if you eathedral deans have the prefix 'Very Reverend,' we rural deans shouldn't have some prefix too?" "Well," said the canny Scot, with a chuckle, "suppose we call you 'Rather Reverend'!"—Temple Bar.
—Down pin my heart I feel this new—
When she hath thrust in this heart-line
How much I need little wife, She'll say if I am a scoundrel mind.
—Two Lines.
—A skinless grape, a seedless tomato, a woolless peach, a coreless apple and a rindless watermelon are the needs of the day. Until some agricultural genius invents these necessities, we shall have to be content with the very bungling work of nature.—New Haven Register.
—A great purple spot was lately discovered on the face of Jupiter, and the scientific question of the day is, What's the matter with Jove? After thorough investigation of the matter, and the making of many comparative observations, we conclude that Jupiter told Mars he was a liar.—Cincinnati Gazette.
—A New Jersey farmer put a nap on the end of a long pole, saturated it with coal oil, set it on fire, and then undertook to dislodge some aggressive hornets that had erected a nest under the eaves of his barn. He dislodged them. He also dislodged a horse, two cows and all his summer crops. No insurance.—Norristown Herald.
—"A Tight Squeeze" is an unfortunate title for a new book. An old maid will never—no, never—enter a bookstore and ask a spruce young clerk for "A Tight Squeeze," although she may want one very badly, and a much better-titled and banged young lady will hardly ever call for "A Tight Squeeze" so publicly, when she is already squeezed so tightly that she can hardly draw her breath. And a young man, well, a young man doesn't go to a bookstore when he wants "A Tight Squeeze."

—A butcher enters the office of a lawyer. "Sir, I want your advice. I am the owner of a dog responsible for any damage that the animal may do." "Certainly." "Then your dog has run off with a leg of mutton from my stall, and I will trouble you for ten francs." "Very well, my friend, have you five francs change?" "Yes, sir." (Producing them.) "That just makes it square, my fee for advice is fifteen francs."
—Twas Sunday morn, and Rev. Jones
Was breakfasting with Gray;
Said Jones: "Another bit of steak,
As I have to preach to-day."
"Guess I'll brace up a little too,"
Said Gray, his eyes a-glisten,
And he helped himself to a hunk of meat.
"For you know I have to listen."
—Cincinnati Enquirer.
—Some extracts from Puck's dictionary of definitions: Barley-sue—A play in which poor actors struggle hard to show a double meaning in words without any insance.—The owner of a pistol when it goes off and kills his enemy. News-paper—A combination (not patented) of original sin, perpetual motion and ubiquitous omniscience. Ovation (from the Latin ovare)—throwing of eggs; e. g. "The Count Joannes received a perfect ovation." Style—Putting on a swallow-tail and a white tie to go to the circus. Xerxes—Was a great man;

this is not a definition, but then X is a mighty worrisome letter, anyhow.
—"Cham's" great delight was to give nice little dinners to his friends and then disparage them. As thus: "Terrible about Dumas, isn't it?" "Terrible about Dumas? Isn't what?" "His being arrested last night for theft. A man of his talents and position, with such a future before him, to be arrested for petty larceny!" "Why, I didn't hear of it before. He was at dinner with us at your place last night." "Yes, I know it, and leaving us he took a loaf of bread at a bakery. However, he pleaded that hunger drove him to it—that he had dined with me—and so they let him go."

—A lady walking down King street, the other day, while she cast furtive glances at the store windows, was heard to remark: "That husband of mine is such an old muff he won't get me a new set this fall. I've a notion to gopher a new box that shall be furnished with such things as he had other. He'll have to be very careful; if I catch him trading with that coming ugly woman, I'll make him pull his woe, or seal his destiny for him. I won't bear it any longer, so now!"—O. P. Dillcock, in Toronto Graphic.
—"Talk about your narrer scapes," said Ozardine, "I must tell you 'bout the one I had. Ten year ago last winter I went out into the woods where bear and panthers was thicker than gun chewsers in a female academy. I soon got my eyes onto a big, noble looking bear. My gun had been loaded with a bigger charge of powder than usual. I just pulled a bead onto that bear and crack! went the rifle and over went the bear, while my gun just give one powerful kick, which laid me out on my back. But the best of the thing was ground. 'This I didn't see a big panther which was on a bluff behind me, and as I shot, the cuss jumped for me, only to meet the butt of my gun, which was going his way, and the ugly animal fell dead, while his skull crushed in by the gun stock."—Whitcomb Times.

Good Times Again.

Extended inquiries made among the leading dealers in many branches of commerce were met in every case by most encouraging answers, both as to the opening of the fall trade and the promise of a steady and even increase of business. A long era of commercial and industrial prosperity is confidently predicted for the country, all sections of which seem to share in the improvement deemed by the merchants to justify them in holding that better times already come, will long remain to the people.

Among the main hopeful signs, prominent is the fact that the demand is general for a better class of goods at better prices, and that in many instances prices are establishing themselves at a more reasonable profit to the manufacturer and dealer, and are paid with less haggling by the buyers. The general feeling of the market is reported to be more healthy. Purchasers are more careful in their choice of stock; more prompt in their payments. The increased demand is happily equalled by the increased confidence in commercial credits, and the whole spirit and tendency of trade are regarded as favorable to the realization of the brightest and most cheerful anticipations.

The dry goods trade opened this fall with an increased demand for all kinds of stock. The Southern and Western trade is unusually brisk. Both the quality and prices of the goods offered are indicative of improvement, and the leading dealers speak confidently regarding the future, looking for steady growth of profitable trade.

The clothing business shows a decidedly increased demand, although there is no tendency on the part of small dealers, as in years past, to over-buy. The tone of the market is healthy in every section of the country. The margins are reported to be somewhat less than last year.

In future, with an increase of from ten to fifteen per cent in prices, there is an increase of twenty-five per cent in the demand, and factories are obliged to run until midnight to supply the stock required. Such indications better the condition of the business in excellent condition, present and prospective.

Leading dealers in crockery report excellent prospects for the fall and winter trade with increased demand, accompanied by increased competition, and in instances somewhat lower prices. The American manufacturers are turning out goods as rapidly as possible, and are said to be now making nearly as much crockery as is imported.

The trade in paper and stationery is reported to be very satisfactory. Prices in certain lines of goods incline to advance. The imports are growing less, home manufactures are in greater demand, and an increasing export trade gives great encouragement to this branch of business.

Dealers in boots and shoes show marked improvement. With an advance of ten per cent in prices, the purchases are larger and payments unusually prompt. The manufacturers and wholesale dealers, who have suffered heavily from failures, now hope to recover their losses and express great confidence in the financial condition of the country.

The hide and leather trade since 1873, regard the present condition of the trade as promising better things. The exports of leather have largely increased. The best indication of improvement is in the fact that tanneries which have been closed for years are soon to be reopened. Prices have advanced from fifteen to twenty per cent.

The trade in hats and caps is more lively than any period since 1870. Sales and collections are reported alike easy. The demand for umbrellas has been uncommonly heavy all the year, though the season has been a dry one. In the important line of groceries the reports show that the outlook is more hopeful than it has been hitherto, since the close of the war. The southern trade is exceptionally good. Fancy groceries, imported cigars and other goods classed as luxuries, are in uncommon demand. The sales of canned goods are larger this year than ever before, and the finer classes of groceries find ready sale at good prices.

Provision dealers consider the tone of the provision market more healthy than it was last fall. The prospect is favorable to a large legitimate business, both at home and abroad. Better prices are expected to be obtained.

The iron trade is marked by a considerable advance in the price of raw material. The tone of the market is, however, healthy and improved. The demand for iron building material is greater than the supply. Profits in this line of business are small, and it was stated that builders were ordering a class of materials which were more substantial houses do not care to keep. The hardware business shows an increase in both demand and prices, although the latter are not higher than they were last year. The bottom was reached during the present year, and now the tendency is upward. Since August prices have advanced from fifteen to twenty-five per cent, and the condition of the trade is sound and satisfactory.

The business in fancy goods, millinery and kindred branches is more active and prosperous than it has been since the close of the war. In lace, an increase of fully one-third in the demand is reported, and in millinery, hat and fancy goods generally, there has been nearly an equal increase.

The jewelry trade has shaken with the other departments in a radical improvement in the character and volume of business. Its prosperity is even more marked, as in hard times this class of goods ranks among the luxuries which can best be spared. People are buying more freely and prices are maintained at a reasonably profitable rate.—N. Y. Times.

Stopped by a Tramp.

Residents in the neighborhood of Madison, N. J., have been greatly alarmed recently by the accounts of a highway robbery committed by a day laborer, named Morris Hopkins, the grandchild of Judge Francis S. Lathrop, the receiver of the New Jersey Central Railroad. The story was that her carriage was stopped by a tramp, who demanded money, and that Miss Hopkins, who were some valuable diamonds, with great presence of mind, threw what money she had in her purse into the road, and when the highwayman went to pick it up whipped up her horse and drove off. The story was learned by a reporter for the Star yesterday, are as follows: Miss Hopkins, who is about 16 years of age, had been visiting at the residence of A. H. McCurdy, of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, a short distance from Morris Plains. She was riding in a new phaeton drawn by a gentle family horse, and was in afternoon attire without jewelry. She was driving along leisurely in the pleasant summer afternoon, and had reached a somewhat lonely spot near a clump of woods, about half a mile from any house. The place is near the old camp meeting ground. Suddenly a man appeared from the woods, and she stopped beside the horse. He did not stop the horse or take hold of the animal. Neither does Miss Hopkins recollect that she stopped the horse. But she is certain that the horse did stop, and the man took hold of the reins of the phaeton, saying: "I am going to New York, and I want some money."

Miss Hopkins was frightened, and threw fifty cents into the road, and the phaeton started. The man went to pick it up, and she drove off rapidly. He made no attempt to follow, and she does not recollect anything else he said except the sentence quoted. He did not take hold of the horse, and she does not recollect anything else he said except the sentence quoted. He did not take hold of the horse, and she does not recollect anything else he said except the sentence quoted.

She says she took such slight notice of him that she would not be able to recognize him now. All the description she can give is that he was a tall, thin man, with a high forehead, and a long nose. She does not recollect his name, but she is certain that he was a tramp, and that it was his first attempt at robbery. In fact, she thinks he was quite as much frightened as she was. She is positive that he did not take hold of the horse, and she does not recollect anything else he said except the sentence quoted.

The road is much travelled, and no other incident of the kind has happened there in many years. Judge Lathrop's friends caused the neighborhood to be thoroughly searched, and inquiries were made for suspicious persons. All investigations resulted in the opinion that the man was a passing tramp, and not a professional robber.—New York Sun.

Irrigation Near Los Angeles, Cal.

The soil varies from sand to clay, but the general character is alluvial loam, more or less mixed with sand. The soil, very rich in its chemical constituents, is a physical condition which enables a capillary attraction of moisture to the surface to a most wonderful extent. The rainfall during the rainy months of January and February is but very light; the farmer relies for moisture to his growing crops entirely on irrigation, either through canals and ditches from the rivers, or on artesian wells. By boring from 100 to 300 feet deep artesian water can be found in almost absolute certainty, and in most places it will come high above the ground. The town of Westminster alone has over 400 flowing wells, any one of which will furnish sufficient water to irrigate from 100 to 400 acres of land.

Great improvements have lately been made in irrigation. The system of sub-irrigation, of which you have had descriptions in the press, is as much an improvement as the railroad is on the stage-coach. Sub-irrigation requires only one-quarter the water to produce the same effect, or the same quantity formerly required for one acre will suffice for four. Besides this, it has the great advantage of leaving the surface perfectly dry, preventing packing of the ground which greatly stimulates evaporation, and it prevents the growth of weeds.

Where the water in the artesian well does not flow above the ground, it comes within a few feet of it, and can easily be obtained through pumping, either by steam or wind. Through the kindness of Mr. Tompkinson I was enabled to observe the whole process, from the firing up of the steam-boiler till a tremendous stream of water was flowing through a seven-inch pipe several feet above the ground, to be directed anywhere where the growing crops needed water. This arrangement furnishes about 2,000 gallons of water per minute, and the stream was flowing at full force in fourteen or fifteen minutes after the fire was kindled. Such a water supply will entail a cost of about three dollars per day, and will supply all the moisture to grow a crop to perfection on fully 300 acres. With continuous sunshine, the most fertile soil, and an independent supply of water for irrigation, the farmer of Southern California is absolutely independent of the seasons, and such a thing as a short crop is unknown, unless caused by negligence.—Professor Genert, in Rural New Yorker.

Patents on Old Inventions.

It is a little singular that some persons desiring to become rich in this city and elsewhere, are taking up a revolving grindstone. It would not be necessary for him to engage in the manufacture and sale of them. He could quietly remain at home and send his agents about the country, securing for infringement on his patent. Examiners in the Patent Office are not supposed to have seen a grindstone, and as the records of the department are quite likely to regard it as a novel invention, and so report to the Commissioner, who would issue a patent on it. The patentee would then have a wide and rich field for his operations. By threatening to bring a suit for damages in the United States Court, nearly every person who uses a grindstone would settle and congratulate himself that he had escaped so easily. A considerable number of persons would be numerous persons with reference to implements and processes that have been in use longer than the common grindstone. In some instances they have made arrangements with the holders of the patent, who attended to their claims in different countries, and received a commission on all sums they collected by means of sending out warning notices.

A few years ago a person came to this city and succeeded to dispose of a patent process for drying blood. One of the claims in this patent was for "dried blood as a new article of commerce." He represented that the blood that could be obtained and dried in this way would be worth several millions of dollars annually, and that by having a monopoly on the manufactured article an individual or corporation could obtain a fortune in a single season. As he offered his patent with "all the rights and privileges thereunto belonging" for the modest sum of $1,000, several persons of means thought it a great bargain, and made arrangements to secure it. One man, however, of sound mind, investigated the matter and found that dried blood was a common article of commerce in this country long before the owner of this patent-right was born, and had been bought and sold in other countries at least a thousand years previous to the discovery of America.

A sliding gate has been used by Western farmers almost from the time of the first settlement. However, the practice of this circumstance, however, did not prevent a person from procuring a patent on it a few years ago, and from that time to the present men have been traveling about the country making demands of every farmer on whose premises these gates were found. In most cases they have succeeded in collecting a sum by way of damages, and in selling a farm right to make and use these gates. In a few instances, however, the farmers have combined to resist the pretensions of these agents, when they departed in quest of victims who were more easily frightened. The patentee of this device may have been sincere in declaring that he was the only one who had discovered it, but it was not only not described, but illustrated in an agricultural paper before he applied for a patent shows that he was not the original inventor, and that his patent is therefore invalid.

The latest account of attempting to collect damages from farmers who are declared guilty of employing an old process that has recently been patented comes from Ohio. In many parts of the State farmers have been in the habit of bleaching apples and peaches dried in the sun by exposing them a few minutes to the fumes of burning sulphur. The method employed is the same as that used for bleaching old straw bonnets and hats. Many farmers who were discovered bleaching their dried fruit were served with notices that they would be made parties to a suit in the United States court if they did not pay a considerable sum by way of damages for infringing on a patent. One large dealer who operated as fruit-drier was called on to pay the sum of $20,000, but the claim was so large that he took no notice of the matter. It is now understood that combined action will be taken to resist the demands of the owner of this patent.

It is certain that the process of bleaching by means of the fumes of burning sulphur was very extensively employed in the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, and an operation claiming so great antiquity can not reasonably be claimed as a novelty. It is possible that none of the exhumers in the patent office ever read the book in which the above account is recorded, and it would appear that they rarely read any work devoted to ancient or modern discoveries in the industrial arts.—Chicago Times.

Our Young Folks.

THE MOTHER.

O Mother! In that early word
What loves and joys combine;
What hopes—twofold, alas! deferred.
What sighs, griefs—are thine?
Yet never till the hour we roam,
By worldly thrills oppressed,
Learn we to prize that trusty home—
A watchful mother's breast.
The thousand prayers at midnight pour'd
Beside our couch of woe;
The wasting weakness endured
To soften our repose;
Whispering marmar mark'd thy tongue,
Nor thence our eyes
How, mother, is thy heart so strong
To pity and to love?
Or could repay, the part?
Alas! for grateful duty I Rejoice that rarely best;
"Only when the dust is thrown
This lifeless bosom o'er."
We use thee in thy kindness shown
And wish we'd loved thee more!
On every hand, in every clime,
To her sacred cause
Fid to the future's sublime
From which her strength she draws,
Still is the mother's heart the same;
The Mother's lot is trial.
Thou hast the name and that name
With filial power and pride!

A BOY ALL OVER.

As I was sitting in my friend's room the other day, some one came up the stairs, whistling a jolly air.
"There comes Ned," said a lady in the corner of the bay-window, busy with worsted work, "and now every thing will be topsy-turvy. You may as well finish your story another time, for there's no use in trying to do anything when that boy is around."
In the next moment an embodied breeze of one of those fluttering, fragrant, saucy, summer breezes, that scatter your manuscript leaves over the lawn, as if they were so many rose-leaves—prayed your hair, and flutter your ribbons, if you happen to be of the beribboned sex, and play the mischief generally with whatever airy possessions you chance to have around you. I saw Ned, in the next moment, a breeze. Every body in the room was a little afraid of him, yet the sound of his footsteps, the echo of his merry whistling, the ring of his boyish voice, brought smiles to every lip, a quick, prying, coming brought life into the room. In the course of a minute Ned had stepped into his mother's work-basket, had tossed his aunt's ball of pin worsted to the ceiling, had pulled the cat's tail, and teased his mother's cat's nose, and boys would not boister; then he sank into a chair and began to beg emphatically for his dinner. But at the sound of a comrade's voice he dashed the room again, grinning, his mother's hair, and breaking the mother's yarn by a vigorous kick as he shut the door.

"I should think you would send that boy away to school, if you are going to be a mother," said a lady, taking a false stitch in her crocheting, and making a very bad place. "I would as soon live with a whirlwind!"
"Ned has wonderful spirits," said the mother, joining her several yards of worsted, "and he is a little hard upon Ned, sister. He is generous, and brave, and truthful, and—"

"And utterly inconsiderate of everybody's feelings or comfort," interrupted the aunt. "What do you think of this matter?" Came pounding on his door at five o'clock—after paper for his kite; and he knows what a poor sleeper I am, and how much I depend upon my morning nap!"
"He knows, but he forgets," said the mother gently.

"I suppose he forgot when he dressed up that bolster, and set it in the corner of my room, and frightened me nearly out of my wits—me with such nervous trials as a duck's back shivers over under the best circumstances."
"O, that was—"

The mother's speech was interrupted by what seemed a miniature hail-storm, but proved to be a shower of pebbles from a young auntie's window, giving the good lady a sad "start." Mamma looked grieved and anxious, and I took up the engels for "that young good-for-nothing."

"I tell you, auntie," said I, "that you are a great stickler for the best of its kind in everything."
"Of course I am," replied the irate lady, the blush of indignation fading from her thin cheeks.
"Well, for you ought to rejoice in Ned, for you must admit that he is boy all over, from the crown of his crooked head to the soles of his mud-tracking feet—no adulterated article there."

"What of it, then? Real boy, real man. All this noise and nonsense means courage, enterprise, will, perseverance—a joyous, irrepressible temperament, that sheds troubles and trials as a duck's back sheds water. Effervescence now means fitness by and by. Your jovial, rollicking boy, provided he has a sound, warm heart, full, genial, useful man, with not only the wish, but the force, to do his part toward setting the world right."

Ned's mother smiled and drew a long breath as I finished my little speech.
"I am glad to hear you say a good word for Ned," she said.
"I don't wonder," said auntie, somewhat softened. "Somebody is always complaining about him, and wishing he would go to school; and yet I don't know what we should do without him, after all."
"Aye, there's the rub—what to do without him! Many a mother and many a sensitive, fastidious aunt, rubbed and jarred and fretted through the child's life, and how true to the defense of their country. Then, indeed, the house was still! And how true to the flag were those blustering, careless, troublesome boys! What courage, what endurance, what splendid manliness they showed! How patient were they in prisons, how dauntless on the field! The irrepressible force that their friends and guardians sought to bottle up found in the right time glorious use."

The patience of kindly hearts can no longer avail for their boys. They just upon no sensitive nerves, they disturb no quiet. But others fill their places—boys as full of possibilities, aye, and every whit as troublesome as they. They are here, brave, big-hearted, hot-headed fellows. Often you are at a loss to know what to do with them, but what could you do without them?—Mrs. M. F. Butts, in Ethnological Journal.

Postal Peculiarities.

Blue books are seldom light and pleasant reading. People do not usually go to official reports for amusements; and there is an idea generally prevalent that statistics are dry. But now and then the records of public business have really some juice in them. There is, after all, a romance hidden under masses of official figures, if one would take the trouble to dig it out; and perhaps no reports contain more interesting curiosities than those of the Post-office. Since Sir Rowland Hill's cheap postage, to set an example of cheap postage to all the world, nearly forty years ago, the Post-office has become a great medium of intercourse, a notable instrument in the tragedies and comedies of life. What histories of domestic romance has it silently conveyed from place to place! What news of death and marriage, of prosperity and ruin it has quietly passed from mind to mind! A recent report of the English Postmaster-General betrays, too, how limitless is the popular idea of the functions to be performed by Her Majesty's mails. Letters, papers, circulars, sundry goods and parcels, are not, it appears, the only articles forwarded by the post. During the past year the Post-office has found itself carrying live rabbits and rats, moles and tortoises, crabs and bees. It has been burdened with Devonshire cream, an egg, fruit, mince and pork pies, sausages and hogs, show nails, artificial teeth and china ornaments, geranium cuttings, tobacco and cigars, glaziers' diamonds and notions. One parcel was found to contain a live snake, and an inquiry was made as to the snake, and it was found that a lizard had been "posted" with the snake, and that during transmission through the mails the snake had waxed hungry and had swallowed his reptile brother.

Human carelessness is somewhat startlingly exemplified by a year's history of the post-office. Over 22,000 letters were posted in England in a twelve-month without any address, and of these nearly a thousand contained money, to the aggregate value of $40,000 in cash and checks. Thousands of postal cards were sent to invisible recipients, and thousands more were addressed, indeed, but presented a blank, and "message" side. Letters, with money in them, were sent unsealed; packages of golden sovereigns lay unclaimed in the office, either by sender or intended recipient. A letter arrived from United States, addressed to "Little Alice, a serio-comic singer, England," perhaps with a message from home which "Little Alice" would have given a week's salary to receive. Another came, "My Nelly in London," possibly from some rich and idle country uncle who, receiving no reply, forthwith cut said "Nelly" off with a shilling. A letter from Versailles was sent to England, with "Please put this young man into the right train for Penge." As the letter never fulfilled its object, it will forever remain a mystery whether the "young man" ever reached Penge or not. Misdirections, or no directions, on letters, have their serious results, as they have their comic. What hopes may have been forever blighted by the failure to receive some all-important message, carelessly sent; what friendships may have been broken, what lover's quarrels unhealed, what business advantages seized by the hurry in posting a letter, or a mistake in its address! A letter is seemingly a trifling thing; yet upon its words and its speeding often hangs a destiny. Such a report as this, upon which we have commented has the use, besides that of amusement, in warning people to be careful how they write, how they direct, and how they send money, in their missions to friends and correspondents.—Boston Post.

The Czar's Body-Guard.

A correspondent, speaking of a late review of Russian troops by the Czar, writes: After inspecting all the troops, the Emperor took up position on one side of the field, surrounded by his general, military attaches, etc. Here he remained while the regiments all marched past him—the infantry, the artillery and the cavalry. At the head of this latter division came one hundred horsemen, each horse and rider differently caparisoned, and all evidently from some of the most distant eastern provinces of the Empire. There was a great quantity of weapons about them of various antiquated shapes, richly decorated and utterly useless; the horses were covered with steel or gilt trappings; everything about them savored of barbarism. This was the Emperor's body-guard, composed of men from the Caucasus. Each province is required to furnish a certain number; each man provides his own horse, saddle, uniforms, etc., hence the motley and picturesque array. They are extremely proud of themselves and their position, and they think that they are the chief bulwarks of the throne. As for the Emperor, they think he could not get on without them. It is said that a diplomat went down to Crimea on some business and neglected to have the proper passport. Arriving at the palace, he had some difficulty in being admitted, but at last he found an officer whom he knew very well and who got him in. But the unfortunate gentleman did not enjoy his visit much, for everywhere he went he was followed by one of these Caucasians. Inside several halls, and invariably found the man waiting for him outside the door, and during his entire stay the soldier never lost sight of him.

A caution is given by an excellent authority not to put glass goblets that have held milk, into hot water, as this causes the milk to penetrate the glass and can never be removed.

Some Paris, meeting, out disd, Mme. E. Marshall would have Moltke's self at a expense, the first fast and champion lived his end of hated his His Exce. Moltke's a demand second his stay in paganes. Moltke is the full particular, east to his English. Moltke's Mr. Moltke's especially the warri winters tection to teen sum. "And there it was that died in 18 was as a Moltke's observed his way, toward a ble mona hill, over the cross, leum, ma is the full. Moltke situated unit and think, K through morning lighting a step tow coffee. A turn a than at seven, Marshal's spection of practical carences, medals. On one a groom grave him which has comment since. B speak and one ever over hand pre gloves. At ten a second brass of the letters and Molt always e he goes to books" d day. At noon shal taken central o takes plac work. B if any ap happens a On a fine will take a most inva Moltke's Pr crops has rain; my I will not ment that "Special" n shal, for d er who do Fainting persons, cause of non-profes kaing, valua. A horary la heated in does not loses all prevented, frequently tion. Th though he hardly be at such a ple of a There are merely fee what pale swoning, no sooner other sue day alter c to say that need prom various, affected by their fing Their defe weak miss at such a some, stro ever weak commonly foul air be ever great bad news able or he and loss of rious incite.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 3.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1879.

NUMBER 36.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, etc.

D. E. OFFUTT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Machinery, Musical Instruments,
Guns, Pistols, etc.

G. W. LEGGE,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Second & Oak sts.

D. H. LOAR,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jew-
elry, etc.

I. W. STALNAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third and Oak Streets.

L. BISH & SON,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third & Oak sts.

J. A. GRANT,
Dry Goods, Notions, Crockery,
SPECIAL LIST OF GOODS.

DAVIS & TOWNSEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agents Agricultural Machinery,
Opposite Bailey's Park.

C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Suits, Hats, Confectionery, etc., Next to O'Connell's Hotel.

RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods, Fruit, etc.

HOTELS.

CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,
W. M. CODDINGTON, Prop'r,
Main St., Opposite Jackson's Billiard Saloon.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

G. A. SHIRER,
Oak Street, near Second.
A general line of Stoves and Tinware.

PHYSICIANS.

DR. J. LEE McCOMAS,
Office on Main Street.

DR. E. H. PARSONS,
offers his professional services
to the people of Oakland and vicinity.
Office in the old O'Connell building, 38 St.

PLASTERER.

JAMES ARNOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street.

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.

W. M. M. WAGNER,
Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.

GEO. F. LOUGHRIDGE,
Leave orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.

J. B. BLANT,
Surveyor, Auctioneer and
Conveyancer,
Oakland, Garrett county, Md.

JOHN HARNED,
Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.

A. B. WOODCOCK,
In Wm. Snouse's Building,
Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY GOODS.

MRS. M. E. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Gents' Furnishing
and Fancy Goods, and Suits,
Main Street, Opposite Dr. McComas' office.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

GEO. C. STURGEISS,
Drugs, Medicines,
Perfumery, Toilet articles, Stationery,
Tobacco and Cigars.

G. W. MERRILL,
Near Depot.
Pure Drugs, Medicines, Toilet Goods, Station-
ery, Cigars and Cigars, French Candy, Palm, Fishing Tackle, etc. Physician's prescriptions accurately compounded.

PAINTING & PAPER HANG- ING.

E. J. FRINGIER,
House and Sign Painter.
And Paper Hanger.
Leave orders at Bash's Store.

S. V. B. WARD,
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER
Shop near Davis House.

BLACKSMITHS.

CHAS. SINCELL,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

JOHN M. JARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,
Residence on Liberty St., nearly opp. Depot.

P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
And Builder,
Residence on Centre Street.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Residence opp. School house.

JOSEPH M. CRIM,
Residence on Alder Street.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.

CABINETMAKERS AND UN- DER-TAKERS.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SHATZER,
Shop on Second Street.

FALL & WINTER GOODS.

GOODS FRESH & NEW

and Cheap as the Cheapest.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

Has on hand a full stock of New

Ready Made Clothing,

which he will sell very cheap for cash.

Gents Furnishing Goods,

In great variety, and at prices to suit the times.

Suits Made to Order

In the most fashionable manner. Orders by mail promptly attended to.

Also Agent for the Celebrated

"Pearl Shirt."

A Large Assortment of

BOYS' CLOTHING

Kept always on hand.

All work WARRANTED to give entire satisfaction.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,
26-ly Oakland, Md.

MEAT MARKET.

H. B. WOLFE,

Formerly of Cumberland, Md., Takes orders for all kinds of meat, and has his business located in Oakland for the purpose
of carrying on the

BUTCHERING BUSINESS

In a first-class manner.
FRESH MEAT, (stuffed), SUTTON, PORK,
BOLOGNA SAUSAGE, PORK SAU-
SAGE, &c., at all times.

Shop near the Post Office.
Customers can get what they want without
delay and at any hour of the day.
Your patronage is respectfully solicited.
H. B. WOLFE.

PATENTS.

To Inventors and Manufacturers.
ESTABLISHED 1865.

GILMORE SMITH & CO.

Solicitors of Patents & Attorneys at Law.

American & Foreign Patents.

No fees in advance, nor until a Patent is allowed. No fees for making preliminary examinations.

Special attention given to Inter-
ference Cases before the Patent Office,
Infringement Suits in the different States, and all litigation pertaining to Patents or Inventions.

Sent Stamp for Pamphlet of Sixty
Pages.

GILMORE & CO.,
629 F. Street, N. W.,
Washington, D. C.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

THO. J. PEDDICOE, A. B. GONDER, PEDDICOE & GONDER,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW

SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY,
OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany Counties, the adjoining Counties of West Virginia, and in the Court of Appeals
of Maryland. Jan. 30-11

S. A. COX, H. WHEELER CONDR, COX & CONDR,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW

SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY,
Office, Alder Street, Oakland, Garrett county,
Maryland.

Will practice in all the Courts of Maryland
and adjoining counties of West Virginia, and the United States Circuit Courts. Jan. 30-11

CHARLES S. HAMILL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY,
OFFICE IN OFFICE BUILDING,
Lower Floor.

Particular attention given to Conveyancing,
negotiation of land titles and collection of debts. Loans negotiated. Jan. 30-11

J. W. VETTER,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY,
OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett County
and the adjoining Counties of West Virginia,
and in the Court of Appeals of Maryland.
Jan. 30-11

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG

Late Resident Surgeon, New York
Eye and Ear Infirmary.

HAS LOCATED PERMANENTLY in the
City of Cumberland, Md., for the EX-CLUSIVE treatment of all diseases of the Eye and Ear, including those of the Nasal and Throat.

Office, No. 29 South Centre Street,
aply 11

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LESSONS.

SUNDAY, NOV. 2, 1879.

THE PERFECT PATTERN.

GENERAL STATEMENT.

This epistle was probably written about the year 53 or 54 A. D., perhaps while the Apostle Paul was a prisoner at Rome; and when Peter, his writer, was a young man, in the immediate expectation of imminent conveyance or martyrdom. He was writing at the ancient city of Babylon in Chaldea, when word reached him of the troubles under which the churches of Asia Minor were suffering just on the eve before the terrible Neroian persecution. He writes to comfort the disciples and especially those of Jewish origin who were everywhere Persecuted. In this passage the addresses pertaining to a class of which in those ages the Church was largely composed, Christian slaves who were under harsher masters, and were being persecuted by the heathen world.

1 Peter 2, 19-25.

19 For this is thankworthy, if a man for conscience toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully.

20 For what glory is it, if when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently?

21 For even hereunto were ye called; because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that we should follow his steps:

22 Who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth:

23 Who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not;

24 Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, being dead to sin, but alive unto God, that he might bring us to himself by his stripes, which ye have received.

25 For ye were as sheep going astray; but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls.

HOME READINGS.

M. The perfect pattern. 1 Pet. 2, 19-25.

Th. The pattern of lowliness. Matt. 20, 20-29.

Fr. The pattern of compassion. Matt. 9, 35-39.

Sa. The pattern of suffering. Isa. 53, 1-12.

Sc. The pattern of purity. Heb. 1, 9-16.

S. The pattern of love. John 15, 9-16.

S. The pattern of self sacrifice. Matt. 27, 30-34.

GOLDEN TEXT.

Who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth. 1 Pet. 2, 22.

LESSON HYMN, L. M.

How beautiful were the marks divine,
That in thy lonely pathway, led Thy wandering feet, O Son of God!

O wonders! Lord, my soul would be Still more and more conformed to thee,
And learn of thee, the lowly one,
And follow thee in all thy ways.

QUESTIONS ON THE TEXT.

1. "SUFFERING." v. 19, 21; Heb. 12, 1, 2. Who is here said to have suffered? What was his suffering? For whom did he suffer? How was this stated in Isa. 53? What has Christ suffered for us? v. 21. Wherein did he suffer?

What should we endure? v. 19. What is acceptable to God? What does Christ say in Matt. 5, 10?

2. "O SON OF GOD." v. 22; Heb. 12, 3, 4. What is said in the golden text? Of whom is this said? What prophecy does we find in Isa. 53, 9? What fact in John 8, 14? How did he bear his cross? How should we treat our crosses? Matt. 5, 16. How did Jesus pray on the cross? Luke 23, 34. To whom did Christ commit himself? What honor did he receive from God. Phil. 2, 9-11. How should we then follow him?

TEACHINGS OF THE LESSON.

1. That Christ is our example? 2. That Christ is our redeemer? That Christ is our restorer?

3. In the lowest walks of service, and the common duties of life, true religion will show itself. v. 19, 20.

4. In the common duties we should keep before us the thought of the divine approval.
v. 19.

5. In the hour of service we must always place men even though we may be pleasing
God. v. 20.

6. If we are sure that rebukes and sufferings are undeserved, we can well afford to be patient under them. v. 20.

7. In all suffering, let us keep in view the example of our savior Christ, and his submission to the will of God. v. 21.

8. When wronged and abused, let us be submissive, and leave events with God. v. 22.

9. The cheering and constantly brightening prospect that the Republicans will carry the next Legislature. If the Ring should "count in" Mr. Hamilton, in Baltimore, as they did Mr. Carroll four years ago, a Republican Legislature would be a grand check on the future raids of the Ring upon the State Treasury, and would mow their past misdeeds and expose their rottenness to the public.

Parents, mothers, nurses,—do not fail to give Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup to the little ones for all cases of Coughs or Colds. Costs only 25 cts.

The Old Story.

It has been so well understood that the watchword had been passed along the lines that the Democratic party expected every register to do its duty, that there was no surprise felt yesterday at the intelligence that thousands of voters had been disfranchised, and that the Superior Court was jammed with a great multitude of applicants for certificates of registration. Some of the best-known gentlemen in the city found themselves bereft of the right of suffrage,
but the mass of the disfranchised were, as usual, colored voters. A few score of omissions or misspelling of names in each of the 115 precinct books would present a total of several thousand; and, according to the returns, it therefore appears that Mayor Latrobe owes his election largely to the efforts of the registers.
Although a general public opinion has caused their supply of baby carriages, books of poetry, gold pens, &c., which they used to include in their allowances of stationery, to be cut off, yet their activity has not abated, and they rallied courageously to the breach occasioned by the retreat of the Supervisors of Elections from the old and approved methods of the Democracy. The sorn and opprobrium of decent men fall lightly on these fellows; and, indeed, we doubt whether there will be much expression of indignation. The sense of utter helplessness to prevent the commission of such frauds be-muds the moral sense of the community. What can be done? The members of the legislature have practically the appointment of the registers for their several wards, and they take good care to select fitting instruments for the work of fraud that alone now maintains Democratic supremacy. People may protest as they may against the methods of the Democratic party, just as they used to protest against the methods of the Know-Nothing party, when it, like the Democratic party of to-day, had become corrupt and ruffianly; but the relief came only through the action of the legislature, and so only will it come now. The sole way to protect the community against frauds in the registration is to make provision for the scrutiny of the opposition upon every step of the process.
This has been the method adopted in New York, and in practice it is found to be as complete a check upon fraud as can be established. There the wards are divided into precincts of 250 voters each, and in each precinct there are four inspectors of election and two poll clerks, who are equally divided between the two political parties. In addition, each political party is entitled to have a challenger present in the room, and each ward candidate has also the right to be represented by a challenger. Applicants for registration must state their residence, nativity, color, length of residence, &c., so that if the statements of an applicant are false, the fact can be readily ascertained and the entry cancelled. The vote is taken by the same inspectors and clerks, under provisions that are a perfect safeguard against ballot-box stuffing, and which should be copied in this state, whenever our rulers vote safe to pass laws for the prevention of fraud. Our present laws give the registers and judges of election a discretion which, if it were exercised honestly, would secure a fair election; but the sole check upon them is the requirement that the judges shall go before the grand jury, and the grand jury is virtually appointed by the party managers, acting through the sheriff, himself always an active Democratic politician, so that this in practice amounts to no safeguard whatever. The only way to prevent election frauds is to give the two parties who are the real contestants, complete facilities for watching each other at every step of the process of registering voters, and receiving and counting their votes.—Baltimore American, 23d.

The Two Canvasses.

There has been a very marked difference between the canvasses of Mr. Gary and Mr. Hamilton throughout the various sections of the state; not in the manner in which they have been treated, for each has received everywhere a hearty reception, but in the platform utterances that have accompanied their visits. A gubernatorial candidate, be he Republican or Democrat, is generally sure of a warm reception in any county town, from the fact that all desire to see the men who are nominees for the highest position in the gift of the people in the state. Democrats have turned out in masses to welcome the coming of Mr. Gary, and we have no doubt that many a Republican has been seen in the audiences that have stood still and listened while Mr. Hamilton spoke. In the lower and Eastern Shore counties, however, many of the Democrats who reached out the warm hand of welcome to Mr.
Gary were men who have determined to vote for him; men who are dissatisfied, and even disgusted, with Democratic mismanagement of county and state affairs, and who recognize in Mr. Gary a candidate intrinsically with the bonds of a long list of disinterested office seekers and office-holders. Nothing more clearly marks the canvasses of the two candidates for the governorship than the differences between the utterances
in their interest on the stump. Mr.
Gary and the gentlemen who have so ably assisted him in the campaign have devoted themselves almost entirely to local issues; to matters relating to the management of affairs in this state of Maryland; to legislative reforms that are demanded by the people, and to questions relating to the welfare and prosperity of each county they have visited. These are the matters at stake in the coming state elections, which every voter should consider carefully before handing in his ballot on November
4. On the other hand, the speeches of the Democratic orators in various parts of the state have been marked with a careful avoidance of all such issues, and have been devoted almost exclusively to the discussion of national politics, which have, at best,
but a secondary bearing upon this canvass. It is true that Mr. Hamilton has been at times obliged to come down from topics relating to affairs at Washington to topics relating to affairs at Annapolis, and has promised that if elected he will do this and that to reform abuses in the state government. But these instances have been rare indeed; and the bread and butter of Democratic orators in the state campaign has been the Electoral Commission, "federal bayonets at the polls," and other matters which have no pertinence to the coming election. When Mr. Hamilton has found himself compelled to come back to state matters it has been with but poor grace, at the best;
and his promises to reform abuses in the state government may seem to him well-grounded and his intentions of the best, but we all know the power behind his throne is stronger than he. He can execute, but not legislate; and how can he do what Governor Carroll failed so completely to do?—Baltimore American.

POSTMASTER NIX'S CASE.

WASHINGTON, October 18.—Upon the principle that the greater will always absorb the lesser, an important and significant event has been overlooked, which, but for the all-engrossing interest in the recent political contests, would surely have received the consideration it deserves.

The country is already more or less familiar with the assassination of Mr. Nix, the Postmaster at Blackville, S. C. The affair has been investigated by three special agents of the Postoffice Department, and their unanimous verdict is that Nix, a colored man, and a Republican, was shot at by a Democrat, as the result of a political conspiracy, in which the leading Democrats of the locality were implicated. The head and front of Nix's offence was that he was objectively to the Democracy of his postal bailiwick. They did not like him for three reasons: First, he was a negro; second he was a Republican third, he had superseded a female Democrat, who had been removed because she detained mail matter sent by and arriving for Republicans, in order that her party friends might have an opportunity to break open their letters and apprise themselves of their plans and purposes. These three crimes were deemed sufficient to justify the setting of a bravo on Nix's back to hunt him down.

The bravo proceeded to the postoffice, and waiting until Nix's back was turned stealthily approached the delivery window, fired and ran,
doubtless believing that he had accomplished his murderous mission.
Fortunately, he missed his aim, and Nix escaped with no other injury
than a bullet-hole through his coat.
No attempt was then made (nor has any attempt been made since) to apprehend the would-be assassin, and bring him to justice. He is still at large—free to repeat his effort to kill a government officer. And now come Wade Hampton, M. C. Butler and the leading officials of South Carolina with a petition to the Postmaster General, praying for the reappointment of Miss Maher as post mistress at Blackville! The murderer not having succeeded in his work, the master-spirits of the South Carolina Democracy practically ask for the removal of Nix. They prefer no charge, nor assign any cause for the change.
Whether they think that to be mis-sioned by the assassin's bullet constitutes a good and sufficient reason for elec-ment from office does not appear.
Perhaps the government ought to be accommodating enough to employ postmasters in its service down South who, when fired at, will stand steady and be hit. Nervous and flighty Republicans as Nix proved himself to be make very poor targets, and it is not surprising that he is objectionable. But, strange to say, the Postmaster General not only takes a different view of the affair from Hampton, Butler & Co., but he intends to call the attention of Congress to it, in order that legislation may be enacted authorizing the federal courts to protect the persons of our postmasters.

Food greatly benefits when properly given at the right periods, but to overfeed the baby is to sicken it, and induce a degree of suffering. Dr.
Bull's Baby Syrup is the best remedy for the discomfort arising from over-feeding the baby. Price 25 cents.

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

NAMING THE BABY.

They gather in solemn council
The chiefs in the household band;
They sit in the darkness dimly
A council of grave and grand;
They peer in the twilight crevices
And each with one voice exclaim:
"The baby must have a name!"
They bring forth the names by dozens,
With many an anxious look;
They scan all the tales and novels,
They search through the good Old Book;
Till the happy voice of mother,
Now urging her prize claim,
Cries out in the fond accents:
"Oh give him a pretty name!"

"His grandpa was Ebenezer,"
"Long lived and good, dear son!"
Says the trembling voice of grandpa,
As the quiet tears drop down;
"Oh call him Ebenezer,"
"Yes, the youngest of the family,"
"Plan John," says the happy father,
"I am honest man and strong."
And thus the entire statement
Perhaps, or the soldier's word,
Respecting his future title
Laid before him in the light;
And yet it can matter but little
"I am in the business of fame—
For no name will honor the mortal
If the mortal dishonors the name."
—New York Sun.

EDNA'S TROUBLES.

It was a fine old room, and fitted up with all the luxury that wealth could command. Its two occupants, a lovely girl, and an elderly man, noble in form but dark and stern in face, stood under the full blaze of the great antique lamp swinging above their heads. They were discussing a long-disputed question. Old Mr. Lydell, flaming with passion at the girl's last words, burst out vehemently:

"You are not my slave, forsooth! Nevertheless, my home is a young lady. You are under a heavy debt to me. Tell me what you are—who you are? Tell me that, if you can."

The girl did not answer. She put her hand up to her brow as if a pain were there. He resumed:

"You are called Edna Ivesly Hay; but what do you know of yourself beyond that? Answer me. Have not I been the making of you? Did not I take you from—where?—from the gutter, and transform you into what you are? You are accomplished. Whose money rendered you so? Whose but mine, ungrateful girl! You are graceful as a fairy. Whose money made the master that drilled you? Mine again! You are beautiful in your silks, jewels and dainty laces. Whose money purchases for you those desirable things? Mine, and mine only! And wherefore have I done all this? Did I not take you as my own child, hoping and expecting you would repay me with affection and gratitude? What sort of recompense is this that you are giving me?"

Edna lay put up her hands deprecatingly. It was all true. Grateful, deeply grateful to him she was; but she could not repay him in the manner he wished.

"My son," resumed Mr. Lydell, "my only son, whom I idolize, has set his heart upon your baby loveliness and crowned you with the honor of choosing you for his wife. Think you, then, that I can allow you to bring misery upon this house from your childish whims? If so, think it no longer. If you have not already learned what the sin of ingratitude is learn it now. My son's will is my law—the love I bear him is my only religion! Do you understand? If you understand that I mean you shall become his wife—"

"I do not like him," she gaspingly interposed.

"With or without your consent you shall become his wife, simply because it is his will. Theodore loves you; therefore Theodore's you shall be! Tomorrow he comes home. Be wise and receive him as your future husband!"

There was a dark threat in the old man's eyes as he concluded that sent an involuntary shiver through the girl's slender frame. But a determination equal to his own marked both words and tone as she answered respectfully:

"It is true that I am indebted to you for all that I possess of worldly goods, and I am, Heaven knows, truly and deeply grateful. You bade me look upon you as a father, and I have striven, as in Heaven's sight, to give you all a daughter's duty. But, as I said before, I am not your slave. Theodore Lydell I will not, I cannot, marry. O, don't you see, that he is not a good man—a handsome, gifted though he be, I could not love him."

"Do you wish to be cast out?"

"Cast me out," she answered in agitation. "I would rather die than link my fate with his! Let me go out into the world and battle against the poverty from which you rescued me—"

"Enough!" thundered the old man. "I will listen to no more folly. My son shall have the bride of his choice! And there shall be no delay. Next week—next week, mark you—you shall be his wife. Your wedding dress is already ordered. Now go."

Striding to the door he flung it wide open, admitting in deep tones, as Edna passed, sniveling into the hall, "Go! and remember that for the insubordinate there are means to compel submission."

A swift change passed over the girl's face as the door closed behind her, and it was with fleet foot and panting breath that she sped up the stairs and to her chamber.

"What can he mean? What will he do?" she gasped, shudderingly, as she dropped into a chair before the blazing fire. "Will they force me to marry him? He is so awful, so powerful; and Theodore is deep and unscrupulous as sin. Heaven help me!"

It was a trying position. The girl, left an orphan when little more than an infant, had been taken to by this very distant and rich relative, John Lydell, and brought up as a daughter of his own. Of course she owed him all gratitude for it; she wished to be humble and obedient and to repay him if she could by loving care; but she could not marry his son. She had always disliked the selfish, overbearing Theodore, who was ten years her senior, and she had heard the whispers of her servants about his evil ways. She had said to his father that Theodore was not a good man; she might have gone further into truth and said he was an essentially bad one. No; never, never could she marry him.

And there was Malcolm Payne in the way besides—and Edna's blishes came fast as she thought of him. Mr. Lydell was in the habit of saying that "beggarsly secretary," and would not encourage him at his house. Poor he might be, as compared to the riches of the old man; but Edna felt sure he loved her, and only a few days ago, when they had met at a dance, he whispered to her, when holding her to him in the whirling waltz, that his salary was already quite enough for comfort if she could only think so, and that it would rise higher year by year. She did not know very much about this Mr. Payne, and there had not met many times—but it does not take many meetings for love to grow.

Mr. Lydell's threat had terrified her. If he did indeed mean to force her into a marriage with his son how could she contend against him? Sitting by the fire in her terrible trouble and perplexity, her hands pressed upon her aching brow, the thought came into her mind that there was only one way of saving herself—flight. Edna was young and inexperienced, possessing an inordinate idea of Mr. Lydell's power and of her own imputed weakness, and it was in truth seem to the girl that she could be saved by flight alone. More than ever did she regret that the home had no mistress to whom she could appeal—Mrs. Lydell had been for some years dead.

"I will do it," she whispered at last to herself, in bitter desperation. "I will run away, and this very night. To-morrow Theodore comes, and it might be too late."

In a commotion of heart that few people have experienced Edna made her preparations, hoping to escape when the household should be asleep. It was an early household generally. Mr. Lydell was old enough to feel the need of rest. At ten o'clock Edna heard him come up stairs, and by the very tread of his foot and the bang he gave his door, she knew how angry he still was with her.

Every night at one o'clock a stage coach, called Hart's Corner, on its way to catch the mail train at Braemont. If she could join that coach it would take her to the train, and she might escape all over the world that night.

Waiting and trembling, sick and irresolute, for this running away seemed to be a most formidable expedition in Edna's eyes, little short of wicked, it seemed that the minutes ticked the little clock on the mantelpiece, the slower the hands appeared to move. Should she stay and sacrifice herself, or should she venture on this daring move? For not yet had she thought of Malcolm Payne that would be to attempt it.

When the clock struck twelve she put out the lamp, and taking the small paper parcel in her hand, opened the chamber door softly. Listening, as she did so, for the beating of her heart, she made her way softly across the carpeted landing, down the stairs, and finally out through the glass doors of the breakfast room.

So far, so good. Walking quickly through the garden she stood within the outer gate, trembling, under the friendly shadow of the great trees, through which the sharp December wind was sweeping its weird song. For a minute she stood there, keenly vigilant; there was no movement, no match struck to warn her that aught had been heard within doors. With renewed hope she passed out to the high road.

It was a very lonely neighborhood, and Edna trembled as much from that as from other fears as she went rapidly along in the dark night. The moon ought to have been out, but it was not.

The way was lonely than she had thought for—or seemed so. Hart's Corner was gained at last, and none too soon. She had barely reached it when the stage turned the curve of the hill before her. The coachman drove up. Two male passengers were inside, apparently asleep. Edna shrank into a corner and was soon forgotten. A long hour of feverish desire to push forward more rapidly at last ended. She took her ticket for a distant place, hurried, and was soon whirling rapidly along.

Amid the rush and thunder of a swift flight she matured her still somewhat indefinite plans. As a first step toward the accomplishment of those plans she left the train earlier than she had intended, getting out at an insignificant station. It might be safer, she thought, than going to my large town.

All that Edna walked; not knowing where to go, what to do. Conscience makes cowards of us, and she feared to be seen. It is, however, needless to follow her through the tortuous journey by which she designed to battle poverty. The sun had gone down, indeed, night-long set in, when, heart sick and weary, a gleaming light from a handsome villa tempted her to seek shelter there. In truth, she was physically incapable of proceeding further. Enlured by the gate, she crossed the lawn to the house.

But the exhaustive effects of unusual fatigue and excitement told severely upon a somewhat fragile, nervous system, and it was with unsteady hand and beating heart that she drew the bell. At its first vibration a deep mounded mound came leaping around the wall and barked at her—but did not bite. Nevertheless, Edna was thoroughly frightened; and when the door opened, revealing a tall, raw boned female of severe aspect, her modicum of strength gave out, and instead of the effective little speech so carefully prepared, she gasped out unintelligently, and fell fainting into the arms involuntarily extended to receive her.

The arms were muscular ones, and she was hastily borne into a charming little room, in which sat the mistress of the house.

"What is it, Burns?" she asked, without looking from the glancing knitting needles in her hand. "Edna kin, Miss Ruth, unless it be a woman free the skies that dropped in my arms. It's well they are stout, for she's heavy like, though an illn thing," Burns coolly added, depositing her burden suspiciously on the sofa.

The astonished Miss Ruth sprang to her feet with an alacrity that sent her ball of yarn to the opposite side of the room, and left her work pendant on the corner of the work table beside her.

"Poor thing! poor thing!" she sighed leaning over Edna's inanimate form, her helpful fingers actively busy. "Chafe her hands, Burns, while I loosen her cloak. What a beautiful girl she is! Quite a lady, I am sure."

Burns set to work her tongue keeping time to the operation.

"Now Miss Ruth, I'm the oldest sevir of this old house of the Neals, and you must list to me. Edna be running daff. You kin naught o' this face, though it be sweet, and I pray you to be careful. What good did you ever know o' these night tramps? Leddies don't go abroad in this fashion—coming down on decent folk in the dark without word or warning. Edna forget the puir, weak old woman who sped away on a moon's legs, w a dozen o' the auld Neal spoons I her gown pocket."

Miss Neal, actively engaged in efforts to restore Edna to consciousness, suffered Burns to run on to this point, which was in truth a very sore one.

"Hush!" she at last ejaculated, "cannot you see that the poor little thing is a lady? I'm ashamed of you, Mary Burns! There's some mystery of course; but I darsay she will explain it."

But Edna, though unable to give sign, had heard. Opening her eyes on the tall figure, with its stiff angularities, erect as an old grenadier on duty, behind plump little Miss Ruth Neal, she intuitively comprehended that she was an object of suspicion. The serene smile of Miss Ruth was, however, a gift for which she was thankful, and with a few faltering words she attempted to rise.

"Thank you, I am quite well again," she murmured, and then, as Miss Ruth, a low, pleasant, laugh rippling over her lips, at the intellectual effort. "Lie still, my dear young lady. Burns shall give you a cup of tea."

Miss Neal, as the door closed on Burns, And she caught the slender hand that was bending over her, and drew it to her lips. Miss Ruth's heart had pulsated through fifty odd years, but it was still her name, and Edna slipped at once into the softest niche. It was utterly impossible to look at that taking face and not believe in it.

The keen-witted Burns, on returning with the tray, quickly perceived the intelligence of her mistress, and as promptly commented upon it when again out of hearing.

"The Neals war a' aike," she grumbled in her broadest Scotch—"I was generally the case if I met out. 'Shake them,' together I a bang, an' you'd ne'er ken ane frae another, unless Miss Neal might fa' out the simplest o' a'!"

But Miss Ruth, unconscious of Burns' depreciative opinion, and generally the case if I met out. "Shake them," together I a bang, an' you'd ne'er ken ane frae another, unless Miss Neal might fa' out the simplest o' a'!"

But Miss Ruth, unconscious of Burns' depreciative opinion, and generally the case if I met out. "Shake them," together I a bang, an' you'd ne'er ken ane frae another, unless Miss Neal might fa' out the simplest o' a'!"

But Miss Ruth, unconscious of Burns' depreciative opinion, and generally the case if I met out. "Shake them," together I a bang, an' you'd ne'er ken ane frae another, unless Miss Neal might fa' out the simplest o' a'!"

But Miss Ruth, unconscious of Burns' depreciative opinion, and generally the case if I met out. "Shake them," together I a bang, an' you'd ne'er ken ane frae another, unless Miss Neal might fa' out the simplest o' a'!"

But Miss Ruth, unconscious of Burns' depreciative opinion, and generally the case if I met out. "Shake them," together I a bang, an' you'd ne'er ken ane frae another, unless Miss Neal might fa' out the simplest o' a'!"

But Miss Ruth, unconscious of Burns' depreciative opinion, and generally the case if I met out. "Shake them," together I a bang, an' you'd ne'er ken ane frae another, unless Miss Neal might fa' out the simplest o' a'!"

But Miss Ruth, unconscious of Burns' depreciative opinion, and generally the case if I met out. "Shake them," together I a bang, an' you'd ne'er ken ane frae another, unless Miss Neal might fa' out the simplest o' a'!"

But Miss Ruth, unconscious of Burns' depreciative opinion, and generally the case if I met out. "Shake them," together I a bang, an' you'd ne'er ken ane frae another, unless Miss Neal might fa' out the simplest o' a'!"

But Miss Ruth, unconscious of Burns' depreciative opinion, and generally the case if I met out. "Shake them," together I a bang, an' you'd ne'er ken ane frae another, unless Miss Neal might fa' out the simplest o' a'!"

But Miss Ruth, unconscious of Burns' depreciative opinion, and generally the case if I met out. "Shake them," together I a bang, an' you'd ne'er ken ane frae another, unless Miss Neal might fa' out the simplest o' a'!"

But Miss Ruth, unconscious of Burns' depreciative opinion, and generally the case if I met out. "Shake them," together I a bang, an' you'd ne'er ken ane frae another, unless Miss Neal might fa' out the simplest o' a'!"

But Miss Ruth, unconscious of Burns' depreciative opinion, and generally the case if I met out. "Shake them," together I a bang, an' you'd ne'er ken ane frae another, unless Miss Neal might fa' out the simplest o' a'!"

But Miss Ruth, unconscious of Burns' depreciative opinion, and generally the case if I met out. "Shake them," together I a bang, an' you'd ne'er ken ane frae another, unless Miss Neal might fa' out the simplest o' a'!"

But Miss Ruth, unconscious of Burns' depreciative opinion, and generally the case if I met out. "Shake them," together I a bang, an' you'd ne'er ken ane frae another, unless Miss Neal might fa' out the simplest o' a'!"

But Miss Ruth, unconscious of Burns' depreciative opinion, and generally the case if I met out. "Shake them," together I a bang, an' you'd ne'er ken ane frae another, unless Miss Neal might fa' out the simplest o' a'!"

But Miss Ruth, unconscious of Burns' depreciative opinion, and generally the case if I met out. "Shake them," together I a bang, an' you'd ne'er ken ane frae another, unless Miss Neal might fa' out the simplest o' a'!"

But Miss Ruth, unconscious of Burns' depreciative opinion, and generally the case if I met out. "Shake them," together I a bang, an' you'd ne'er ken ane frae another, unless Miss Neal might fa' out the simplest o' a'!"

But Miss Ruth, unconscious of Burns' depreciative opinion, and generally the case if I met out. "Shake them," together I a bang, an' you'd ne'er ken ane frae another, unless Miss Neal might fa' out the simplest o' a'!"

But Miss Ruth, unconscious of Burns' depreciative opinion, and generally the case if I met out. "Shake them," together I a bang, an' you'd ne'er ken ane frae another, unless Miss Neal might fa' out the simplest o' a'!"

But Miss Ruth, unconscious of Burns' depreciative opinion, and generally the case if I met out. "Shake them," together I a bang, an' you'd ne'er ken ane frae another, unless Miss Neal might fa' out the simplest o' a'!"

But Miss Ruth, unconscious of Burns' depreciative opinion, and generally the case if I met out. "Shake them," together I a bang, an' you'd ne'er ken ane frae another, unless Miss Neal might fa' out the simplest o' a'!"

backward movement of Edna's. She came in contact with what seemed to be a basket of clothes pegs, and they came down with a tremendous clatter.

"Then rats again!" ejaculated Burns, irascibly; for she was the night walker. Back she came to the closet door.

"The door open!" cried she in surprise. "The mummy things can run in and out. I'll fetch a candle and the poker."

Turning a key in the lock away went Burns for the poker. Would there be mummy committed?

With heart beating to suffocation Edna prepared for the encounter by drawing the hood of her waterproof more closely about her face. She felt like one in despair.

Very soon Burns returned, bent on the slaughter of the rats. Her hand softly touched the key. It turned; the lock snapped; but ere the door could be moved by the cautious Burns, Edna, hooded and veiled, threw herself against it with all her might, at the same time uttering a low, guttural sound in her throat. And it all proved too much for Burns. Instantly she lay a discomfited heap upon the floor, candle and bravery alike extinguished.

With swift fingers Edna unfastened the back door and darted out, intensity of dread winging her feet as she fled from the place. As the door swung behind her she paused a moment to put on her boots, and then continued her wild flight with redoubled speed. She was not, however, to escape unobserved.

Miss Neal's nephew, who was no other than Malcolm Payne, aroused from his dreams by the commotion below, sprang from his bed, donned a few articles of clothing, flew down stairs, saw the back door open, and went out in pursuit, leaping over Burns to do it.

Meantime, Burns remained quiescent, a prey to a thousand conjectures as to what the matter was. She was not quite sure what the robber had done to her, or whether she was killed or not.

Miss Neal, hovering at the top of the stairs, called down softly and cautiously. "Burns! Burns! careful like, when it reaches the place."

"O, Miss Ruth, run down!" came the appealing answer.

"Where are you? What is the matter?" Miss Neal anxiously inquired. "The matter! I'm dead, Miss Ruth."

"Dead?"

"Right down dead," groaned Burns. "Here, down the hat."

Timorously enough Miss Neal came down. The poker lay along the floor cloth, the extinguished candle lay right under Burns' chin. Miss Neal, suppressing a smile, did what she could to get Burns upright, and inquired particulars.

"My tooth began to ache again, and I came down to get some hot stuff for it," began Burns, excitedly. "An, was gangin' to bed again, when there came a noise frae the closet there. I said it was the rats; so I locked the door till I could get a candle and the poker."

"I locked the door carefully like, when it flew open wi' an awful sound, an' I struck my poor old head a blow that sent me down there. Then two robbers tumbled over my feet; two ma'an; one a minute after the latter, and out o' the house they went, wi' nobody to stop 'em."

Burns' second "robber" was of course Malcolm Payne. In leaping over the threshold he saw something white lying at his feet. Picking it up, he found it was a lady's cambric handkerchief.

A peculiar, delicate perfume, of which Edna was especially fond, thrilled through him and caused him, hurried though he was, to turn to the corner and look keenly at them in the moonlight.

"Edna! he read, gazing incredulously at the embroidered characters. "It cannot be my Edna! and yet—where is she?"

Thrusting the handkerchief into his pocket he rushed onward. Edna, swift footed as a gazelle by daylight, was not so by moonlight and in those strange grounds. Thinking that she was following her she sped onward, uncertain whether. Frantic with excitement and fear she persevered, converting the anguish of "Edna! Edna!" ringing hoarsely on the night air, into so many shouts of triumph. And when at last a light shined on her shoulder and she reeled fainting into the friendly arms behind her, she still believed herself vanquished by a foe.

"Poor darling! poor darling! What does it all mean, I wonder?" murmured Malcolm Payne, gazing down at the poor little face in the moonlight. "Why, my dear child, don't you know me? your own Malcolm!"

And with a faintery of relief she lay upon his arm in peace.

"A dozen more o' the silver spoons were gone, ma'am, for I can't set my eyes on 'em nowhere," Burns was announcing as they got back. "It this does nae teach us to beware o' night tramps—eh, mercy me, Mr. Malcolm! then what is it?"

"It means that this young lady, who has so fortunately taken refuge here, is my promised wife, Burns," answered Malcolm, who had heard of word or two of explanation from Edna as they came in.

Little more remains to be told. With her head pillowed on Miss Neal, and her hand a prisoner in Malcolm's, Edna told her story in detail. And Malcolm told his aunt his story—to tell which had been the chief purpose of his visit to his aunt—that he intended to make this young lady his own with all speed. The excitement Edna had undergone, during which she had not a more gentle attendant than Burns—who had found her spoons were safe. The wedding followed. For her lover consented to master of that she could not be safe from John Lydell and his son until she should be placed beyond their power as Mrs. Malcolm Payne.

A ton of gold makes a fraction over half a million dollars, and when a man says his wife is worth her weight in gold, and she weighs 120 pounds, she is worth $30,000.—Yonkers Gazette.

The new broom sweeps clean when it is properly handled.—New Orleans Picayune.

Threatened Scarcity of Timber.

Notwithstanding the increasing substitution of iron for timber in construction, the increasing use of coal and the introduction of mineral oil for fuel, the forests of the world are being rapidly diminished. Much of it from sheer wastefulness; and this is especially true in new countries. In the United States 20,000 people are living in perishable wooden buildings, and immense quantities of the best timber is destroyed in the process of bringing the forests of the west under cultivation. Unfortunately, too, the most valuable and slowest growing species affect the soils best fitted for grain, and the pioneer never thinks of saving portions of timber on his allotment, or of replanting. The result is, that in the North American, which, when first settled, was clothed in greenwood from sea to sea, a note of warning has for some time been raised against the indiscriminate destruction of timber, and planting in some of the States has been encouraged by pecuniary inducements. The splendid pine forests of Nevada, the monarchs of which take centuries to mature, and which exercise such an influence on the climate that without them the country would probably become a barren desert, are in danger of being utterly destroyed by the short-sighted selfishness of the inhabitants of the territory. The effect of this wholesale destruction is becoming apparent in the recurrence of periods of successive drouth, and the drying up of lakes and streams.

In the old world the future of the Russian possession in the Caucasus is threatened by the upspring, and the official journal asserts, in many instances, senseless destruction of trees. In Daghestan, owing to the cutting down of the timber on the mountains to fuel the steamships of the Caspian, the contiguous valleys formerly richly fertile, have become arid gulches; and other parts of Asia, such as the valley of the Oxus, formerly seats of large populations, are now barren deserts. The same cause, recently, in Australia, from its physical peculiarities still more liable to drouth than North America or Central Asia, the effects of the destruction of its timber, have been more rapidly and more distinctly manifested. The colonists appear to be seriously alarmed as to the consequences. They are calling for restrictive measures, and others of a reproductive character are already in operation. The rainfall of a treeless region, even when it reaches an average limit, is always fitful, and the rivers rise rapidly and flood the surrounding country, as has been the case in the South of France. In South Australia, the clearance now rapidly proceeding from the forest, has resulted in an ever-increasing aridity of climate and ever diminishing fertility of soil—a scorching, arid summer, and an intensely cold and dry winter, with no intervening spring.—London Iron.

A Bridge-Runner Kidnapped.

There was an intense excitement at Calverton, in the western suburbs of the city, recently, over a case of forcible kidnapping on the highway that occurred not long after nightfall. About eight o'clock a hack was rapidly driven from the Franklin road, and in it were two young men in swallow-tail coats and white neckties. One was named J. W. Walker, residing at No. 81 North Charles street; the other Leo Laley, an employe at Base's photograph gallery, on Charles street. The former was expecting to be married that evening, and the latter was the best man. As the pair were rolling along, indulging in the pleasant thoughts and conversation natural to such an interesting situation, they little thought that a band of determined men were lying in wait in the shadow of a little patch of woods, ready to crush all their fond anticipations.

The hack was not far from the window on the Franklin road, when the driver was suddenly aroused from his complacent musings over the prospective size of his fee for carrying a bridal party, by hoarse voices, which commanded him to halt, and his horses were grabbed and suddenly checked by a half dozen strong hands. Looking about him, the affrighted driver saw a party of men armed with guns, revolvers and bludgeons, who gathered about the doors of the hack. Terrible blunderbusses were pointed at the cowering inmates, but a tall, slender man, who seemed to be the chieftain of the band, called out in a tone of command: "Don't shoot! The hack were naturally horribly frightened for it was impossible for them to know that the weapons had been carefully left unloaded, for fear of accidents. Still, under the circumstances, it was not to be wondered at that, as the doors of the hack were thrown open, and several enormous horse-pistols were presented at the heads of the young men, the pale moonlight revealed to gals and bridesmaids a ghastly scene, which they had appropriately doimed for a far different occasion. The chieftain of the band, advancing to the door of the hack, commanded J. W. Walker to alight, and, after addressing him a few short and angry sentences, turned him over to the custody of some of his lieutenants, who, taking him by the arms, collar, or wherever else they could get a grip on, bore him rapidly and sternly away to a point where a hack was in waiting, in which they got with him, and were borne swiftly away. But whether? That is a profound mystery. Mr. Laley was not allowed to remain upon the scene after the abduction of his companion, but no sooner had he disappeared in the gloom to his mysterious fate, than the driver was ordered to turn about and convey his remaining passenger—back to the city. "Who is to pay me my fare?" cried the unfortunate hackman, his golden visions of splendid remuneration vividly back to him as soon as his fears that he had fallen into the hands of an ordinary band of robbers had been dispelled. Mocking laughter was the sole reply, and goaded into a frenzy the hackman lashed his horse into a gallop of fully five miles an hour, and at length came tearing into the city at this furious rate. Mr. Laley immediately sought out a lawyer, and the matter was brought to the attention of Captain Earhart, of the Northwestern Police Station, with an earnest appeal to keep it dark. A Sergeant and two policemen were detailed to proceed to the scene of the abduction, and thither the party proceeded, but, although they sought long and diligently, they could not discover any trace of the missing man.

Something about the antecedent circumstances did, however, get out, and a reporter of the America was successful in discovering one of the band of highwaymen and obtaining from him a statement of the remarkable affair. It appears that Mr. J. W. Walker has for some time past been paying his addresses to the daughter of the late Cary McClelland, Esq., and was actually engaged, when rumors derogatory to his character as a gentleman and man of honor got into circulation. Mr. E. P. Suter, Miss McClelland's brother-in-law, took the matter in hand and procured what he regarded as conclusive evidence of dissolute conduct on Mr. Walker's part, and also the lack of integrity in business dealings. These charges Mr. Walker vehemently denied, and Mr. Suter said that he should have every opportunity to clear himself, but that in the meantime his visits to Miss McClelland must cease. Mr. Walker did cease his visits, but found means to communicate with the lady, who, with woman's constancy, clung to him through good and evil report. Mr. Suter's investigation led him to the conclusion that in disposing of a drug business at the corner of Harlan avenue and Cass street, Walker had grossly deceived the purchaser Charles A. Henwood, by misrepresenting the extent of the business. It was charged upon Walker that he made up a false cash-book and a false prescription in order to make it appear that the business was much more valuable than it really was. A suit was instituted by Mr. Henwood to recover part of the purchase money, which, it was stated, was compromised yesterday by Mr. Walker by the payment of $1,000. Mr. Suter anticipated an attempt at an elopement, and watchers were on the lookout to prevent it. Mr. Suter determined that no marriage should take place until he had done all he intended to do in the way of displaying Mr. Walker's character to his betrothed, and, inasmuch as the lady's liberty could not well be restrained, he determined to take Mr. Walker into custody if he should come after the lady. If he then made arrangements which resulted in the scene described in the first portion of the article, and he it was who figured as the chieftain of the band.

The police could not find Mr. Suter last night, although they searched for him; but, as he is a gentleman of the highest character and responsibility, he will doubtless be heard from soon. There are no fears for Mr. Walker's safety, but merely that his whereabouts is a complete mystery.—But more America.

The Chancellor and His Dog.

"My dog! Where is my dog?" were Prince Bismarck's first words on alighting on the platform of Westhall railway station, recently, and, as he stepped enough, there he was, the sleek, ruddy-haired dog who so seriously imported the precious existence of Prince Gortschakoff during the Congress. With a bound Sultan, who in a twinkling had become a familiar sight at his master's side, covering him with boisterous manifestations of canine affection, and not taking the slightest notice of Count Andrassy and Prince Reuss, who kept a respectful distance until Sultan had satisfied himself that the Prince was none the worse for his journey. The meeting between Count Andrassy and his illustrious guest was a cordial one, and arm-in-arm they walked to the court carriage, a private brougham of the Emperor's, that was waiting to take Prince Bismarck to the hotel where he was staying.

Hardly were the two statesmen seated and ready to start on their journey, when the window on the rear side, and a stentorian voice cried out: "Mein land! Wo ist mein land?" If anything had befallen that blessed dog while Prince Bismarck's attention was momentarily turned in another direction, it is my firm belief that it would have been all up with the Austro-German alliance, and the incensed Chancellor would have taken the train back to Berlin. Sultan is, however, an experienced traveler, and has a very good notion of how to take care of himself. In a twinkling he was at the carriage door, and assisted by two court flunkies, he sedately took his seat on the rug at the foot of the two-legged animal inside. Judge of the stupefaction of the crowd assembled outside the Hotel Imperial on seeing the four-legged occupant of the court brougham leap out with a bark, and, contrary to all etiquette, greet the nearest by standards in a most unbecomingly demonstrative style. I never saw such a ridiculous sight in my life. People led in all directions, for Sultan has a bad reputation. He nearly upset the Congress by an unbecomingly loud bark, and a very good notion of how to take care of himself. In a twinkling he was at the carriage door, and assisted by two court flunkies, he sedately took his seat on the rug at the foot of the two-legged animal inside. Judge of the stupefaction of the crowd assembled outside the Hotel Imperial on seeing the four-legged occupant of the court brougham leap out with a bark, and, contrary to all etiquette, greet the nearest by standards in a most unbecomingly demonstrative style. I never saw such a ridiculous sight in my life. People led in all directions, for Sultan has a bad reputation. He nearly upset the Congress by an unbecomingly loud bark, and a very good notion of how to take care of himself. In a twinkling he was at the carriage door, and assisted by two court flunkies, he sedately took his seat on the rug at the foot of the two-legged animal inside. Judge of the stupefaction of the crowd assembled outside the Hotel Imperial on seeing the four-legged occupant of the court brougham leap out with a bark, and, contrary to all etiquette, greet the nearest by standards in a most unbecomingly demonstrative style. I never saw such a ridiculous sight in my life. People led in all directions, for Sultan has a bad reputation. He nearly upset the Congress by an unbecomingly loud bark, and a very good notion of how to take care of himself. In a twinkling he was at the carriage door, and assisted by two court flunkies, he sedately took his seat on the rug at the foot of the two-legged animal inside. Judge of the stupefaction of the crowd assembled outside the Hotel Imperial on seeing the four-legged occupant of the court brougham leap out with a bark, and, contrary to all etiquette, greet the nearest by standards in a most unbecomingly demonstrative style. I never saw such a ridiculous sight in my life. People led in all directions, for Sultan has a bad reputation. He nearly upset the Congress by an unbecomingly loud bark, and a very good notion of how to take care of himself. In a twinkling he was at the carriage door, and assisted by two court flunkies, he sedately took his seat on the rug at the foot of the two-legged animal inside

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.50
Six months, .75
INvariably in advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, $1 per square of 8 lines;
50 cents per square for each additional insertion.
Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, NOV. 1, 1879.

Republican State Ticket.

For Governor,
JAMES A. GARY.

For Comptroller,
SAMUEL MALLALIEU.

For Attorney General,
F. M. DABBY.

For Clerk of Court of Appeals,
J. T. McCULLOUGH.

Republican County Ticket.

For Clerk of the Circuit Court
W. H. TOWER.

For House of Delegates,
GEORGE W. WILSON,
AUSTIN SPEICHER.

For Sheriff,
GEORGE D. WHITE.

For Register of Wills,
W. H. HAGANS.

For County Commissioners,
D. HARRISON FRIEND,
WM. W. BROADWATER,
JOHN WILHELM.

For Judges of the Orphans' Court,
JOSEPH DEWITT,
WM. HARVEY,
ISAAC H. KOOKEN.

For Surveyor,
JOHN HARNED.

Every man on the Republican ticket is temperate.

There are few men in Garrett county more competent to fill the office of President of the Board of County Commissioners than Judge D. Harrison Friend.

Every Union Soldier in the county should vote the Republican ticket;
and more especially should they vote for Hon. G. W. Wilson, and Mr. W.
H. Hagans, who served faithfully in the Union army.

Mr. Hamilton is running for governor, and if elected, will not constitute the legislature. The same crowd will be there as before, and things will run along at Annapolis just as they have always done since the ring has had control.

A few of the would-be leaders in the Democratic party are industri-ously circulating a report to the effect that Geo. W. Wilson, Republican candidate for the House of Delegates, is an infidel. We are authorized to say that this report is a malicious falsehood manufactured out of the whole cloth. Mr. Wilson is as far from being an infidel as any of those who are engaged in trying to defame him. We have conversed with a minister of the gospel who has known Mr. Wilson for many years and from him we learn that Mr. Wilson has often requested ministers to preach in his (Wilson's) neighborhood and on such occasions
has invariably invited the ministers to stay at his house. We are further informed by this minister that, whenever he has spent a night with Mr.
Wilson he has always been requested by Mr. Wilson to engage in family worship night and morning.
We are further informed from the same source that whenever there has been a church dedicated anywhere in that neighborhood Mr.
Wilson has been there and has contributed liberally of his means to such enterprises.

These are not the acts of an infidel.
This report will not injure Mr. Wilson, but will react upon the party that resorts to such base measures to accomplish its purposes. It was through Mr. Wilson's influence and instrumentality that a local code for Garrett county was passed by the last legislature and although this county had been suffering for local legislation, not one of the Democratic members from this county had ever accomplished this much desired object. Mr. Wilson has looked after your interests faithfully whilst in the legislature and you can trust him again. Such reports only serve to show to what desperate straits the Democracy of this county are reduced, and further show how fertile is the imagination of the whisky blastard brains of the inebriated tail end of State Democracy, whose only political capital is malicious lies and a bad quality of tangled foot whiskey.

Democratic Economy.

Our Democratic friends seem disposed to fight this campaign on the issue of economy. Any party with such a record, less brazen than a brass monkey, would instinctively shrink from such an issue. The Democrats of Garrett county have developed considerable capacity as chronic grumblers, but no capacity at all to serve the people faithfully and economically. We seek in vain for a single, solitary instance wherein they did the county a service or saved it a cent. Their opportunities for mischief of late have been happily curtailed by Republican successes; but whenever they have had an opportunity, the methods of the Maryland ring have always, spontaneously and instinctively, cropped out. In the session of 1876, when a solid Democratic delegation represented this county in the Legislature, there were important county matters demanding attention, and they were so busy legislating for the ring that they had no time to look after the real interests of the county.

Along our western boundary we were losing the tax on a considerable strip of territory and suffering by litigations in consequence of conflicting titles; matters urgently demanding speedy legislation. The National had become impassable for want of repairs, while under the supervision of the all-told and no-work Democrats placed there as so many sinecures on the people. Our county had no local laws, but was heavily taxed, but our Democrat Senators and members of the House of Delegates could find no time to attend to these matters. A fraudulent Governor had been inaugurated and there must be places made for the tools of the ring who could be depended on to do its work.

A bill providing for a new assessment was prepared and passed, and although the property of what is now Garrett county had been assessed by a Republican board of assessors in 1866 at a cost of $1,000, they wanted to pay Democrats more liberally. They appointed two Boards of Assessors and a Board of Control and Review. They appointed such men as would bleed the county well, and we all remember how they had their time extended, protracted and lengthened out through the whole summer and fall—how the grog-shops flourished and how the bill was run up against the county (it nearly five thousand dollars was wrung from the faces of the honest toilers of Garrett county to reward the faithful adherents of the Ring and its fraudulent Governor.

When the work at last was done 1,200 Military Lots and a great many tracts and surveys had escaped the notice of these assessors, and for three years the county lost the tax on perhaps a thousand acres of land by the carelessness and inefficiency of the assessors. Besides the loss to the county of $8,000 per annum on lands not assessed, several hundred dollars were expended in advertising and otherwise searching out the owners of delinquent lands. This is a fair example of Democratic efficiency and economy, and now, as then, they are running the same candidate on the same sort of a platform.

The people are not arrant fools,
and will speak on the fourth of November for honesty and economy, but not for the tricksters who have brought disgrace and ruin on the Democratic party in Garrett county.

Democrat or Republican.

The one is the party of slavery;
the other, the party of freedom. The one is the party of nullification, secession and rebellion; the other is the party of nationality and union.
The one is the party of inflation, repudiation and National dishonor;
the other is the party of the honest payment of honest debts with honest money. The one is the party of false pretenses, of sham and deception; the other is the party of straight-forward, honest purpose.
The one party seeks to perpetuate itself in power by appealing to the baser passions, by cheating with padding tickets, tissue-balloons and the deadly shot-gun; the other seeks to commend itself to the favor of the people by giving every man entitled to vote, a fair chance to vote once as he pleases. The one has always been the party of slavery and oppression of the poor; the other the party of equal rights and fair opportunities for everybody.

From early education, from the force of habit, or from surrounding influences, men identify themselves with the one party or the other; but if they could be allowed to choose without having their minds biased by prejudice or other influences, all right-minded men would choose the party of equal rights, of National integrity, of honest money and equal opportunities.

In some of the Southern States,
where the Democracy have undisputed control, they have devised a system of poll tax by which poor men have to labor ten days on the public roads, while the property of the planter pays nothing at all. This same system, in a modified form, exists in the eastern counties of this State. In those counties, where the Democrats are all powerful, the poor man has to work from four to six days on the public roads, without pay, or else pay a fine, while in those counties polling a large Republican vote, Washington, Frederick, Alle-gany and Garrett, the property bears the expense of keeping the roads in repair, and the laboring man is not driven like a beast of burden to work whether he will or not, as in Democratic counties; but when he works on the public roads he is paid fair wages, and he need not work unless he is willing.

The above is a fair representation of the tendencies of the two parties, as any one may know who will take the trouble to get the information.

Laboring men of Garrett county, choose ye whom you will serve. Will you turn Garrett county over to the Democracy, and take upon your shoulders the burden of our road system, or will you support the party of good government, fair elections and equal rights? For just as surely as that party becomes as firmly seated on the backs of the poor man in Garrett county as they are in other counties of this State, you may expect the same systems to be established here as there.

Pungent Paragraphs.

The surest way of keeping the rag baby in its grave is to tumble the Democratic party in on top of it.

It looks more and more like a National Republican jubilee and a wholesale Democratic funeral all at once.

You have been taxed to pay nearly $3,200 for printing. If you don't want to pay it in the future vote for Wilson and Speicher, who are in favor of repealing the law requiring so much printing to be done. The Democrats are opposed to repealing this law.

Mr. Getty voted in the Senate to exempt the rich man's mortgages from taxation, but he voted to tax the poor man's little furniture. Do you want to send him back? Now is the time to settle this matter.

The Republican party has had nothing to do with the management of your schools. If there is anything wrong in this matter the Democrats are responsible, and it is the fault of Hamill and Getty, as they claim to own the Democratic party in Garrett county. Vote for Wilson and Speicher, who are in favor of electing the School Commissioners
by the people.

The school funds of Garrett county have usually been increased by $1,200 from the academic fund, but last year through the influence of
P. Hamill, W. R. Getty and G. S.
Hamill the Comptroller refused to pay this sum to the school board and your children are deprived of the means of acquiring an education.
The proof is conclusive and comes through Democratic sources. Will you vote for the men who rob your children of an education?

G. S. Hamill says it don't pay to go to the Legislature, but he wants the honor. It will pay him whenever he goes there from Garrett.

Mr. P. Hamill a short time ago said that W. R. Getty was a base liar and that he would have nothing to do with him, and now he supports Getty for the Legislature.

Mr. Getty never did anything in four years in the Senate to lessen your taxes. Do you want him to go to the Legislature to vote with the ring to increase your taxes in the future?

George Colton calls the Stars and Stripes the black flag of Republicanism and says the Democrats are going to take it down from the capitol at Washington and trail it in the dust. Mr. Getty and Mr. Hamill belong to the same school of politicians that Mr. Colton does. Can you vote for such men?

W. R. Getty in 1871 and 1876 when in the Senate was under the complete control of the ring and voted for all the jobs and infamous measures which the ring brought forward. Examine the Senate Journal for these years and then say whether you want him to go to the legislature to further increase your taxes.

The Democrats are demoralized and have no hope of electing their ticket. Now is the time for you to carry the county by 200 majority and you can do it if you will.

Thomas J. Keating, Comptroller, withheld $1,200 from the poor school children of Garrett county. The law gave them this sum, but he refused to obey the law. Can you vote to re-elect him?

Mr. Hamilton owns $69,000 in mortgages in Washington county on which he pays no taxes. Is he the sort of a governor for poor men?

The Democratic party promised us to bring about all the reforms we needed in 1876, but it did not keep its promise. Can you trust it now?

The late assessment law was an outrage upon the people, and cost Garrett county nearly $5,000. You have to foot the bills. Mr. Getty voted for that law. Remember this when you go to the polls.

By the passage of the House of Correction bill in the Legislature the people were robbed of at least $75,- 000. Mr. Getty voted for that bill in the Senate. Comment is unnecessary. Look at the Senate Journal and see for yourself.

If you want your taxes lessened,
vote the Republican ticket.

The Democratic party has nearly bankrupted the State in twelve years.
Do you want it to take charge of Garrett county? If not, vote the Republican ticket.

An intolerant spirit abides with the Democracy of Montgomery county. During the Congressional campaign of '61 and '66 we witnessed raucously efforts to interfere with Republican meetings in that county, and it seems that time has not improved the manners of our neighbors.

We are led to this observation
from reading an account of the Republican meeting held last Friday at Rockville. The following is a sample extract from the American's report.
In his speech Mr. Gary incidentally
said:

I do not believe there is an honest Democrat in the land to-day who is not glad that, after all this glorious old country of ours has been preserv-

Samuel Matlock (a well known Democrat arising and in a loud tone of voice)—Yes, there is one. I am one who don't want it and never did.
[Cries of "Amen!"]

Mr. Gary—I am very sorry to hear that there is a man to-day, calling himself a man, who is capable of such a sentiment. I should beashamed. [Great applause.] As for myself I am glad we are as we are, and glory in my country. [Applause and cheers.]

Mr. Matlock—Hurrah for Jefferson Davis! He was a man worth dozens of your Grants and Babcocks.
[Laughter and some applause.]

Mr. Gary (coolly)—I am proud of the land I live in; I admire its government; I value the achievements of the party which claims the credit of its present supremacy among the nations of the earth, but I am also conscious of the weakness of the grand old State of Maryland, and, aside from all considerations of party preferences or fealty, desire to see it relieved from the burdens of financial and political mismanagement which now weigh so heavily upon it. [Applause.] As for my friend here, who has aroused this burst of feeling, I am satisfied from his conduct that he never fought for the continent head-onwards. [Cries of "True!"] "That is a fact." I will venture to say that he was one of the skinkers. [Laughter.] The men who fought and bled in advocacy of what they esteemed the right have long ago passed on to another life, leaving the brave men and true citizens, and have expressed their devotion to the Union of their old love now reconciled [applause]; but it comes with ill grace now to hear such a sentiment as this seventeen years after the war from one who had not the spunk to risk his dangers.
[Great applause.]

In one district of Prince George's county nearly three hundred Republican voters are stated to have been arbitrarily dropped from the list;
and in another district an order from the ring had to be obtained before the register would return his book, so that it might be examined. The Kent Independent states that in the Second district of that county the register selected as his clerk one of the Democratic candidates, and between them they have managed to put a number of names on the list which, it is said, have no right to be there. At the same time, the gentleman who has heretofore acted as opposition judge in that district has been turned down, and a gentleman has been substituted whose acquaintance with voters is small. Such is the strength of the independent movement in Kent county that it cannot be beaten except by fraud, and the actions of Democratic politicians show that they intend to make use of this resource.

The Garrett county Republicans in convention required their legislative candidates to pledge themselves to strive to secure such legislative action, as will secure the election of School Commissioners by the people.
All persons, who oppose the present unconstitutional method of appointing the officers in charge of our Public Schools and favor their selection by the people, will obtain their views, by supporting the Republican candidates next Tuesday. The present abuse should be rectified as speedily as possible. The schools are for the people, are supported by the people, and should be under the control of the people.

The Outlook.

If the Democrats can take any comfort from the mayoralty election in Baltimore Wednesday, they are welcome to it. They expected a majority of 8,000 or 10,000 for Latrobe; they got less than 6,000. It had all along been thought that the electors supervisors were men against whom less objection could be brought than any in a similar capacity for years past, and the result on Wednesday has seemed to confirm the justness of that opinion. There were one or two men in the board of supervisors whom the "Ring" feared. The actual election machinery is not the channel through which Latrobe's majority was obtained this year. It was done through either corrupt or incompetent registrars.
Between 4,000 and 5,000 Republican voters were disfranchised by the mis-spelling of names and by other devices well known in such cases.
Taking even the most charitable view of the matter, it is undeniable that Latrobe's majority would have been hundred's where it is thousands, if there had been a fair field and no favor. We say this not simply in the spirit of partisanship or to rug campaign platitudes. We regret sincerely that the State metropolis, whose honor is the honor of the whole State, should stand before the country year after year tainted with fraud. We expect better things of Baltimore city; and we are even pleased that the election of Wednesday was somewhat less of an outrage than usual. Just in proportion as the elections in Baltimore city increase in fairness will the Democratic majority decrease.

In its bearing on the State campaign the election in Baltimore is full of cheer. Mr. Latrobe's personal popularity, his identity with large moneyed interests, his conservative attitude in city affairs, have been sufficient to account for several thousand votes that Wm. T. Hamilton cannot cover without fraud. If in the next battle the Democrats do not carry Baltimore city by a larger majority than they did in the mayoralty contest the State is ours. Mr.
Gary has not exhibited himself at county fairs and spread himself so generally through space as Hamilton, but he has managed the campaign with consummate practical sagacity and skill that must make every Republican feel proud of their leader. He has shown a grasp and mastery of State affairs that is absolutely refreshing. You cannot read his speeches, clear and pointed, courteous to his opponents, full of details that convey the fullest information, without feeling that here is an honest, intelligent gentleman who knows what he is talking about. Nobody has seen such utterances in the speeches of Continental William. In him reappear the old stereotyped stage tricks of the political charlatan who has made a successful and lifelong trade of seeking for votes, and has thriven and waxed rich thereat.
The rural intellect is Hamilton's pasture ground. He can tell exactly when the old gray mare died, and inform you accurately when your grandfather shook off this mortal coil. "Continental damn, sir! I remember well your dear old father, sir! Why, sir, he was an old Jackson Democrat, sir! A man, sir, I was proud to know, sir! Exactly, sir!"—that's the same old tune that Mr. Hamilton has been harping on for a score of years, and harped on until he has got nearly every office in the gift of Maryland except the governorship; and it will be a crying shame if he gets that. Mr. Hamilton—he is as amusing and entertaining a harlequin as ever attitudinized
on the stage of American politics, and is a charming fossil handed down to us from the old log cabin and backwoods days—has been in office from early manhood until now and is still after office as insatiable as ever, but who ever quotes anything he has said, or who can name a speech that he has delivered that has been heard of outside of Maryland.
—Cumt. Critic.

Democratic Frugality.

When a citizen of Annapolis is showing a stranger the points of interest in the ancient city, he generally does not fail in the course of the tour to bring him to look at the Governor's stable. The stable itself is no wise remarkable, being a plain, low, brick structure, destitute of ornament, with an upper story, in which the stable hands may sleep; but what makes it such a curiosity is, that it cost the state $13,937.59. The fact that so much money could be laid out in the erection of a brick shed will always make it an object of interest. The expenditure was incurred without any authority from the legislature, whatever, as is the fashion with Democratic officials. The Commissioners entrusted with the erection of a mansion for the Governor gave a man permission to build a stable at a cost not to exceed $7,000, taking it for granted that the legislature, although it had not authorized the expenditure, would, nevertheless, make an appropriation for it.

But the man thought that, inasmuch as there was no law in the matter, he had as much right to fix the amount as the Commissioners, and he fixed it at $13,937.59, and the result showed that he was quite right. Although the Joint Committee of Public Buildings of the legislature of 1870 made a report, signed by every member except one, that "many" of the claims presented "for the erection of the stable" were "extravagant in the extreme," and recommended that only the amount of $8,122.12 should be paid, the legislature paid the full amount of $13,937.59.

Indeed, to have done otherwise would have been to have marred the uniformity of the Democratic record in regard to the construction of public buildings. Such has been the submissiveness and humility of Democratic legislatures, that public officials never think of restraining themselves from making any expenditure they wish on account of a legislative prohibition or restriction.
The frugal, humdrum way in which the Republican party used to manage the public affairs not suiting the gentlemen who direct the conduct of the Democratic party, they fixed upon a more lavish scale of expenditure as soon as their party came into power. In order to avoid the annoyance of having details squabbled over by the legislature, they took upon themselves the arranging of all they desired to have done, and left to the legislature only the payment of the bills. The first thing to be done was to build a fine new house for the Governor, and in 1868 the legislature passed an act for the purpose, which provided that "the cost of the erection or adaptation and alteration of the said building and improvement of the grounds, including the purchase of the lot or lots of ground, shall not exceed in cost the sum of seventy-five thousand dollars." The Commissioners appointed to do the job, however, cared nothing about the amount. All they wanted was authority to make a start, and they would spend what they pleased.
When they were through the Governor's mansion, grounds and carriage house had cost $205,813.28. It is true that there was some outcry in the legislature, but the lash was laid on and soon hushed complaints to a whimper, which is expressed in the following proviso attached to the last section of Appropriation bill for 1871:
"Provided that no contract shall hereafter be made for any matter of public expenditure without an appropriation being previously made authorizing such expenditure." Governor Carroll was a member of the State Senate at that time and voted for that proviso.

From the character of the men who hold the whip and reins it was not to be expected that such barriers as these could check them in their course, and so when a fresh job was taken in hand the authority of the legislature was again calmly ignored.
The act of 1876 appropriating $32,000 for the repair and improvement of the State House, specified the amounts to be expended on the different portions of the work. Six thousand dollars were set down "for painting and frescoing the Hall, Senate, House of Delegates, Governor's room and the painting of the work necessary on the interior and exterior of the building." But this was too small and mean for the Governor, Comptroller and Treasurer who had charge of the work, and it cost fully that much to fit up his Excellency's room alone. The large chandelier of his Excellency cost $550 and the hangings in each of the windows of his Excellency's room cost $107.
Everything had been done regardless of expense, and regardless of the comfort of members, too, for the senators found their new, elegant cushioned chairs so hot and disagreeable that they had them taken to the lumber room, and the comfortable cane-seat chairs, put in new the previous session, were returned to them.
The members of the House would have very generally followed their example had not the Speaker interdicted the removal of any of the new furniture. Had it not been for the limit of time allowed, the board would have spent more than the amount of $111,338.29, which they did spend, but they had cut out work to finish which $25,000 more was needed. There is no need of going into the House of Correction expenditure. It is a parallel case.
The act of 1874 appropriated $100,000 for the purchase of the land and the erection and equipment of the House of Correction. In 1878 Governor Carroll informed the legislature that it would take $110,000 to complete the building, and $74,000 to fit for occupancy the wing that had been finished. Instead of building a prison the board had built a fine hotel with a prison wing attachment. Our rulers never fail to provide for themselves.
Supplies of liquor, restaurant charges and hack hire constitute many items of the account of $91,000, which was the cost of Gov. Carroll's ridiculous military campaign in the summer of 1877.—Balto. American.

LOCAL NEWS.

—The first snow of the season visited this place on Friday of last week.

—$20,000 to loan on first-class commercial paper. Apply to D. E. Offutt. oct18-1f.

—290 sacks G. A. Salt for sale at Wm. P. Totten's Cheap Cash Store, Oakland, Md. a26-1f.

—Mrs. Yutzky, residing on the West Union road, will please accept our thanks for a basket of splendid apples and several very large heads of cabbage.

—A Democratic meeting was held here Thursday afternoon. Mr. Hamilton was announced to be present but did not put in an appearance.

Church Services—Sunday. Preaching in the Memorial church at 10½ A. M. and 7 P. M., by Rev. Samuel Graham.

Lutheran Church—Preaching in the morning at 10½, by Rev. O. C. Miller.

Notice.

All persons indebted to me on open account are hereby requested to call and settle the same on or before the 10th day of November, with cash or note, otherwise said accounts will be placed in the hands of an officer for collection.

G. W. MERRILL.

Handsome New Flag.

A large and handsome flag was unfurled to the breeze from the Republican campaign pole in Oakland Wednesday morning. The money was raised by subscription for purchasing the material mainly through the exertions of Messrs. John O. Michael, DeConsey Bolden and Trauman Miller, and was made under the supervision of Mrs. Capt. W. R. Jarboe, by Mrs. Rebecca Hoopes, Mrs. John C. Danham, Mrs. J. O. Michael, Mrs. Jas. White, Mrs. Geo. D. White, Mrs. Lloyd Chambers, and Misses Mary Hoopes, Lou A. Thayer, Lizzie Shirer, Lizzie Bolden, Sallie Roth, Lizzie Mason, Mattie Kepner, Addie Tower, Maggie Tower, Mary White and others. There were used in its manufacture 176 yards of bunting, which cost about $50. The flag is 25 by 40 feet.

Committed for Horse Stealing.

William Johnson, colored, aged about 12 years, and hailing from Washington, D. C., who has been about Oakland for two or three weeks, one day this week left town taking with him a small pony, together with saddle and bridle, belonging to Mr. H. A. Rasche, of this town. A dispatch was sent to Keyser to have him apprehended and Tuesday notice was received that he was in the custody of officers at that place, and Mr. John A. Delawder, of G., was deputized to bring him to Oakland. He was brought here Wednesday, and after a trial before Justice Osburn, was committed in default of bail to await the action of the Grand Jury in May.

Election of Officers.

The following officers were elected at a meeting of the Good Templar Lodge, on Tuesday evening last:

C. T.—Frank P. Arnold.
V. T.—Lou A. Thayer.
R. S.—Thos. J. Peddicord.
F. S.—Chas. S. Davis.
C.—Zealous Tower.
D.—George Little.
M.—Addie Tower.
T.—David Little.
I. G.—Ellsworth Townsend.
O. G.—Arch. Loewenstein.
R. H. S.—Katie Townsend.
L. H. S.—Claggett Peddicord.
P. W. C.—W. P. Townsend.

Personal Mention.

Dr. W. F. Funderberg, the oculist and aurist from Cumberland, who has been spending the entire summer with us professionally, leaves here this week for another field of labor. He goes to Keyser, W. Va., where he will spend the greater part of the remaining weeks of this year. Until the Doctor's advent, or we might say, his exit, we had no idea of the number of diseased eyes and ears in this neighborhood. He has been kept very busy every day and has treated a large number of cases, every one of which has been eminently successful. We have from time to time noted his operations in these columns, but the two following ones are also worthy of being noted. Mr. Chas. Whetzel, of this place, had been suffering with a foul discharge from one of his ears for the past 15 years, which had caused a perforation of the drum, together with a complete loss of hearing. This disease had resisted the treatment of a number of physicians, but after being under Dr. F's. care for a short time the discharge entirely ceased, and the hearing was completely restored. The other case was that of a son, aged 21, of Jno. W. Lee, Esq., of this place, who was afflicted with almost total deafness of both ears, together with two tumors, each as big as a walnut, which had formed in the throat, blocking up the internal passage to the ear. The removal of the tumor was a necessary adjunct to the successful treatment of the deafness. The operation was exceedingly difficult, but was entirely successful, and the hearing of both ears entirely restored. The delight of these two gentlemen at the restoration of their hearing can easily be imagined.

Poll Every Vote!

We trust that it is not necessary to remind any Republican at this late day of the great importance of having a FULL Republican vote polled on Tuesday, the 4th of November. Every man must recollect numerous instances of good men being defeated for want of a vote or two, when he could count perhaps half a dozen of his neighbors who entertained political sentiments similar to his own, who did not go to the polls. We say then, POLL EVERY VOTE.

Grand Republican Rally.

The State Campaign was opened in this county Wednesday afternoon by a large and enthusiastic meeting in the court house. Nearly every district in the county was represented. The meeting was called to order by H. Wheeler Combs, Esq., who announced the following officers:

President—S. L. Townsend.
Vice Presidents—Joseph Friend, W. J. Wilson, Joseph DeWitt, E. Kitzmiller, J. I. Livingston.
Secretaries—F. A. Thayer, J. A. Hayden.

The chairman first introduced Hon. Jas. A. Gary, who spoke for about an hour. His speech was an able review of the State issues, and was attentively listened to and frequently applauded. Mr. Gary was followed by Mr. Darby, who addressed himself both to State and National issues and made a strong speech of more than an hour. His speech like Mr. Gary's was frequently applauded. The closing speech was made by Mr. J. J. Stewart. His speech was full of argument, and most pleasantly and eloquently placed before his hearers.

The meeting was enlivened by music furnished by the Oakland Cornet Band.

After dining at the residence of Mr. A. A. Perry, the party left for Grantsville, via Accident.

The party accompanying Mr. Gary through Garrett county is composed of Mr. Darby, Hon. Lloyd Lowndes, Mr. J. J. Stewart, Mr. A. A. Perry and others.

Important Surgical Operation.

On Saturday Dr. W. F. Funderberg, our oculist, operated upon Mrs. Josiah Towell, of Centerville, Bedford county, Pennsylvania, for the removal of her right eye, the sight of which has been entirely lost since three years, from what cause is not known. For the past year or so the eye has been giving her very much pain, and recently has been much worse, endangering the sight of the sound one to such an extent as to justify the removal of the blind one, which operation was successfully performed, the patient being under the influence of chloroform. She returned home to day fully recovered from the effects of the operation and will come back in a few weeks, to have an artificial one inserted.—Cum. Daily Times.

Military Organization.

The organization of a military company was perfected in Oakland, Wednesday night, with the following officers: Capt. E. H. Wardwell; 1st Lieut., A. L. Osborn; 2d Lieut., D. M. Mason; 1st Sergeant, P. A. Chisholm; 2d, R. S. Jamison; 3d, W. S. Wolf; 4th, Joseph Haslam; 5th, L. W. Stonaker; 1st Corporal, John A. Delawder, of G.; 2d, John F. White; 3d, J. S. Combs; 4th, J. L. Johnson; 5th, E. M. Spedder; 6th, Wm. Woodcock; 7th, John Taggart; 8th, Wm. Criss; Company Clerk, Kling Delawder.

Marriage Licenses.

Marriage Licenses were granted to the following parties during the month of October:

Enoch Loraw and Marla Davis, Franklin M. Thomas and Ellen Monroe, James Lockridge and Ellen Barnard, Thos. P. Kight and marla J. Michael, Joseph White and Christena Ganer, Jas. H. Endler and Mary E. Hilleky.

The last Grand Republican Rally will be held at Bloomington Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock. H. Wheeler Combs, Thos. J. Peddicord, Esq., and others will address the meeting.

Spurious Tickets!

Tickets have been circulated by J. W. Veitch and V. L. Rawlings, headed "Republican Tickets," on which the name of W. H. Hagans, candidate for Register is omitted and that of W. L. Rawlings substituted. On these tickets the name of one of our Judges of the Orphans' Court is misspelled, being Wm. L. Harvey, instead of simply WILLIAM HARVEY. Mr. Harvey has no middle name. Republicans, see that none of these are voted.

OAKLAND, MD., Oct. 28, 1879.

J. A. HAYDEN, Esq., Dear Sir:—

In the last issue of THE REPUBLICAN, over the non de plume of "Ryan's Glades," I notice a communication from the Red House, charging me and other Democrats from Oakland with attending a meeting in No. 8, and with carrying whiskey and beer for general distribution among the faithful. In regard to myself I will state that I did attend the meeting aforesaid and have no apology to make. With regard to the whiskey and beer, I had no knowledge whatever. That it was there, I do not doubt, but as to my either carrying or distributing it, I most emphatically deny and charge Ryan's Glades with malicious lying when he says so, and am inclined to the opinion that he knew when he wrote the article that he lied and any man who makes such an attack over a non de plume would not be too good to both carry and distribute to the faithful anything, rotten or else.

Not excepted. Or it may be, for aught I know, that Ryan's Glades was at the meeting with his mask on, drinking that which was intended alone for the faithful, and in his effects saw through a glass darkly. I have no desire to ready farther, for I assure you any time can be better employed than in replying to a man destitute of honor, who endeavors to stab his fellow man under an assumed name.

I am, respectfully yours,
ALEX. L. OSBORN.

GRANTSVILLE, MD., Oct. 20th, 1879.

EDITOR REPUBLICAN:—You will allow me space in your well filled columns, to give your many readers a few items from here. As for politics, the Democrats are so mixed as not to know who was on their ticket last. Hiram says he was out electioneering for Dr. Bartlett and when he got back, to his agreeable surprise, the Dr. was no nominee. Well posted Democrats admit things are in a bad shape. Republicans propose going to work in earnest and chase a flag with inscription, Garrett 100 Republican.

Mr. A. Bonig has just finished the finest residence in Grantsville, and his carpenters proposed a large time, and it was. All fun and blackberry wine.

E. J. Miller is commencing, the foundation of a neat dwelling in Miller's addition to Grantsville. They intend moving their extensive Planing mill machinery to Grantsville next spring.

We had the pleasure of seeing Mr. Jonas E. Gaughey's fine six months' old Costwood bucks on their return from the Cumberland fair, with first premium awarded. They weigh respectively 131, 105, and 103 pounds. They have never been taken care of other than having woods pasture. They are without exception the finest in Garrett.

Yours, respectfully,
GRANTSVILLE.

GRANTSVILLE, MD., Oct. 27, 1879.

ED. REPUBLICAN:—As politics is just now the all-absorbing topic, and seeing the "ball" is rolling so lively in other parts of the county, it may be of interest to your readers to know of some of the doings of the "brethren" at this place. And be it known that old Grantsville is just now one of the centres of interest on both sides, and the source of the Democratic thunder which we hear rolling throughout the county. For here dwelleth the "master," and here in his mighty stronghold will the battle be fought and the contest decided. Yea, even now is the contest begun. The hosts are marshaled. The arms are being distributed, and the ammunition furnished. The "barrels" are opened and freely flows the contents.

As announced by a few diminutive hand-bills, the Democratic speakers assembled here on Saturday and in glowing language held forth their specious promises of "reform." One of their speakers—he who announced that he devoted his time, not to the small guns of Republicanism who had been here, but to those to come—went so far as to promise reforms in the school laws. Yes, even to taking the appointing power out of the Judges' hands and placing it in the Governor's. Great and mighty reform, thy magnitude almost overwhelms us. Nor does he stop there. He would by the election of the Democratic county ticket carry reform into the National government. Stop the oppression of the South and bestir that great Democratic hobby "annexation," and when other sources failed, would bring down spots from the moon whereon to colonize Democratic repeaters and ballot box stuffers. Others told us what they would do when they got to the Legislature and what Republican members had failed to do; in their opinion, in fact, our late representation had done nothing but drawn the salary. After they had concluded their admonitions to the faithful they adjourned to those sources of enthusiasm up town, and after indulging freely of those "barrels" they were able to keep up the "noise" till long after night.

As to our Republican meeting held here on Tuesday, and those through the District, it is not necessary to say more than that they were a grand success and put our forces in splendid working order, and we all expect a handsome majority for our ticket in Garrett. Mr. Combs' able exposure of Democratic tricks and frauds having done much to awaken our men to their duty.

Hoping that we here in No. 3 will be able to demonstrate to Democracy that their "crap" was premature, and that the Republican party of District No. 3 still survives, We are, very truly, &c., Mc.

REPUBLICANS, don't listen to any proposition of your Democratic neighbor to trade; that is their only hope of electing any of their nominees. Vote the ticket as you find it printed, without a scratch, and we will have a grand Republican Victory!

GRANTSVILLE, MD., Oct. 21st, 1879.

EDITOR REPUBLICAN:—The series of meetings being held by the Republicans in this part of the county have been a grand success. The meetings at McHenry and Sang Run on the 15th and 16th showed that the old banner district was fully awake and is determined to roll up a handsome majority on the 4th of November. Never were the Republicans of this district as much in earnest, coming for miles in the darkness to attend these meetings; and every man seemed to feel that he was a committee of one to see that himself, as well as his neighbor, does his duty and is out on the day of election.

The next meeting was held at Friendsville. Early in the evening the people began gathering in from all points of the compass, and by the time the hour for speaking had arrived, a large audience had assembled to hear the issues of the day discussed, and like in district No. 6, the Republicans are alive and working for the whole ticket.

The next meeting was held at Accident on Saturday, at 2 P. M. Although but short notice was given, the meeting was well attended, and showed that No. 5 was in line and marching to certain victory on the 4th of next month.

The meeting at Sabhyport was not so well attended as the previous ones owing to a report being circulated that there would be no meeting there that night; and the speakers being late, having to ride from Accident after 4 o'clock, over the roughest road in Garrett county, many of the people who had gathered in went home; but there was a meeting held which, under the circumstances, was larger than could have been expected. The Republicans in this part of No. 2 are fully awake to the importance of the campaign and by the deep interest manifested, prove the report that the Republicans there were divided and dissatisfied, to be false.

As per previous announcement, a meeting was held at the Forks S. 11, on Monday evening the 20th, and had you been present, Mr. Editor, it would have done your soul good, and you would have been convinced that the people in this locality mean business.

The meeting at Grantsville was held at great disadvantage, being a dark, rainy night many people from the country being kept away. But what the meeting lacked in numbers was made up in enthusiasm, and we feel confident Grantsville will be found at the post of duty.

In conclusion I would say never were the Republicans as much in earnest as at present. Every man seems to be up and doing. The call to arms has been sounded, from far and near they are falling in line, in solid phalanx they are marching to the battle; victory is perched upon their banners, and, on the 4th day of November the Democracy will be routed horse, foot and dragoons, and the little 2 of the Democrats wiped out by a glorious 200.

I must not forget to mention our friend H. Wheeler Combs, Esq., who is doing such good service for his party. I tell you he has been throwing hot shot into the Democratic ranks. If you don't believe me, ask Chris. Snyder. Mr. Combs has been untiring in his efforts, and by his logical speeches gives evidence of great ability, and we predict for him a bright future, not only in political matters, but in the legal profession. Mr. Combs has made for himself many warm friends, not only in the Republican, but also the Democratic party.

REPUBLICAN.

SHADE MILLS, Oct. 17, 1879.

EDITOR REPUBLICAN:—When at Oakland during court in September last, I promised you a short correspondence from the eastern portion of Garrett county.

The matter of most interest to the people of our section of the county, has been the repairs on the National road, and as the supervisors have mostly completed the work on their different sections, I can say to the people of the county that we now have a road fit to travel upon.

The supervisors deserve much credit for the manner in which the work has been done.

The weather for the past three weeks has been lovely, giving the farmers ample time for seeding, digging their potatoes, threshing their grain and doing all kinds of farm work.

Our hay crop was exceedingly short, but is being increased by a second crop, which will greatly aid us during the winter. The wheat, corn, buckwheat and out crops were generally good in this section. Besides these the crop of chestnuts, acorns and beech mast is large, and will materially aid in making our supply of pork.

Business is brisk in all branches. The lumber business is looking up with a good demand. Our enterprising firm, Dorsey & Willison, formerly Dorsey & Beall, are pushing things largely, and turning out ten to fifteen thousand feet of white pine per day. Their mill is situated about two miles from this point, south. The firm have a contract to furnish 1,500,000 feet of lumber suitable for bridges and trestling for the Cumberland and George's Creek railroad.

Another large lumber firm from Clearfield county, Pa., it is said, will commence business this fall and winter on Pucey Run. Next spring they propose laying a broad gauge railroad extending about five miles up the stream, into a forest of timber owned by C. M. Graham, of Frostburg and Thos. W. Frost, of this place. There are over 6,000 acres in this tract, and it is estimated that 100,000,000 feet of lumber can be manufactured from it.

The Lochiel Lumber Company have camps about five miles south of here on the Savage river. They have ready for the first rise logs which make about 7,000,000 feet of lumber. This company has been operating for about five years, and has paid out for labor, supplies, &c., many thousands of dollars, benefitting our section of the county greatly.

Success to all such enterprises and investments.

SHADES.

[The above communication, as well as two others from Grantsville, were received last week too late for publication. Owing to the crowded condition of our columns this week we were compelled to condense the Shades letter, for which we hope the writer will pardon us.—ED. REPUBLICAN.]

When a coterie of charlatan Democratic leaders presume to put up the State of Maryland for barter and sale they may find that they can't deliver the goods. Mr. Gorman, with all the arrogance of an autocrat, has apparently struck hands with Mr. Hamilton and sealed a compact, whereby the former is to give the latter his support for Governor, in consideration of the United States Senatorship being given to Gorman. The anti-canal Democrats, who vote for Hamilton and the Democratic legislative ticket this fall, are really casting a ballot to put A. P. Gorman in the United States Senate. That's about the size of it.—Cum. Citizen.

No State under Republican control has ever repudiated its debt. Sticka pin there.

Let every Republican voter feel it to be his duty, not only to vote himself, but see that no lukewarmness prevails in the ranks. We want a united effort to ensure such a success that will give us victory at this election.

Only through apathy in our ranks can the Republican cause be endangered in Garrett county. If we can secure a full vote there can be no question as to what the result will be. Republicans make such arrangements now that nothing will keep you from the polls on November 4th.

Speaker Randall, who stumped in Ohio for Ewing, has been heard from on the result. He says: "This thing seems to have set in for the Republicans, and I don't see how we are going to stop it."

Senator Ben Hill is greatly afflicted over the state of affairs in New York. He has twice appealed personally to John Kelly to plead for peace and Sammy Tilden; but it is no use, as Kelly is obdurate, and says: "I went into this fight to beat S. Jones Tilden, and now that I am sure of victory, I see no reason for backing out." As Mr. Hill recognizes the fact that if New York is lost this fall there is no hope for the Democracy next year, this is very discouraging to him and to the other leaders of the Democracy.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Notice to Wool Growers.

I have now on hand five Cotswold Bucks, six months old, weighing respectively 131, 105, 102, 101, 100. Any one wishing to purchase one of these fine Bucks can do so by calling on me at my home, one mile from Grantsville. nov1-3m JONAS E. GAUGHEY.

Trustee's Sale.

By virtue of a decree of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in Equity, passed in a cause between Wm. L. Crump, complainant, and Benj. Kirby and wife, defendants, the undersigned, trustee, appointed by said decree, will offer at public sale at the house of Johnson Bros., three miles above Frostburg, on the National pike, on Monday, Nov. 24, 1879, at 11 o'clock A. M., all that real estate in Garrett county known as

MILITARY LOT NO. 749, containing 50 acres of land lying about seven miles west of Frostburg and half mile south of the pike and improved by a Comfortable Dwelling House, and proper out-buildings.

Terms of sale, CASH.

WM. BRACE, Trustee.

DANIEL CHISHOLM,

SURVEYOR,

Office in Wm. Merrill's drug store.

A. M. Jarrett, D.D.S.,

will be at Oakland every six months.

Nitrous oxide gas used for the painless extraction of teeth.

Artificial teeth warranted to be neat and substantial.

Fine artistic gold filling a specialty.

Address, Grilton, W. Va. oct28-y

Wolf, Thayer & Co.,

are now paying the highest CASH prices for

Furs, Sheep Skins,

Game of all kinds

and Produce Generally.

Ware-room in Ott's Old Building, Main Street, Oakland, Md. 10 25 1f.

Notice to Trespassers.

This is to give notice that all parties are hereby forbidden from Trespassing, either by hunting, fishing, or in any manner whatever, upon my land. Parties thus trespassing will be dealt with to the fullest extent of the law. 10 18 4 J. W. LEE.

JOHN RICHARDSON,

Manufacturer of and Dealer in

WAGONS AND FARMING IMPLEMENTS.

GRAIN CRADLES A SPECIALTY.

Also an Improved Hand Sower, &c. Near the Depot, Oakland, Md.

To the Democratic and Republican

Voters of Garrett County:

I respectfully announce myself as an Independent candidate for the office of Sheriff.

E. R. BROWNING.

Private Sale

OF

VALUABLE LAND

The undersigned as Attorney for John Swain, Esq., will offer at private sale, at his office in Oakland, the following property, to-wit:

Military Lots Nos. 401, 480, 487, 497, 1231, 1235, 1234, 1234, 1335, 1338, 1401, 1558, 1596, 1595, 1590, 1813, 1811, 1913.

And also as Attorney for Alexander C. Good, and Mary E. F. Good, his wife, all the right, title and estate of said Good and wife, in and to the following lands, to-wit:

Military Lots Nos. 31, 32, 33, 34, 62, 85, 258, 373, 477, 998, 1286, 1590, 1519, 1520, 1521, 1699, 1613, 1802, 1848, 1909, 1940, 1942, 2517, 2518, 2529, 3355, 3506, 3567, 4000, 216, 250, 1473, 1492, 2169, 1483, 1288, 2536.

Many of the above Lots are valuable and will be sold promptly.

TERMS CASH on day of sale.

The deeds will be signed by the parties themselves and all cost of conveying, &c., must be paid by the purchaser.

J. W. VEITCH,

Attorney for John Swain and for A. C. Good and wife. Sept. 24-1f.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

SHERIFF'S

NOTICE OF ELECTION

Notice is hereby given to the qualified voters of Garrett county, that an Election will be held at the usual places of holding elections in the several districts of said county.

On Tuesday after the 1st Monday, being the 4th day of November, 1879,

Between the hours of 9 o'clock A. M. and 6 P. M.,

For the purpose of balloting for one (1) person to serve as Governor of the State;

One (1) person to serve as Comptroller;

One (1) person to serve as Attorney General;

One (1) person to serve as Clerk to the Court of Appeals;

And for the purpose of electing

One (1) person to serve as Sheriff of the County;

One (1) person to serve as State's Attorney;

Two (2) persons to represent Garrett county in the Legislature of the State—House of Delegates;

Three (3) persons to serve as County Commissioners;

Three (3) persons to serve as Judges of the Orphans' Court;

One (1) person to serve as Register of Wills;

One (1) person to serve as County Surveyor.

Now I, Thomas Coddington, Sheriff of Garrett county, Md., in pursuance of the Act of Assembly, chapter 371, passed March 13, 1867 of the Public General Laws, relating to the attendance of Judges of Election, and in Section 9 of said article prescribing notice of elections to be given by the Sheriff of the several counties, hereby GIVE NOTICE that

"At any general election, State, Federal or Municipal, to be hereafter held in the State, if none of the Judges of election appointed according to law, shall attend at the place of election for the space of one hour after the time prescribed by law for opening the election, it shall be lawful for the Justice of the Peace for said county, or city, then present at the place of election, or a majority of them, or for one Justice of the Peace in the event of one being present, to act as Judge or Judges of the Election, or if no Justice of the Peace be present, it shall be lawful for the voters then present or a majority of them, to choose by ballot three persons, being voters, to be Judges of Election, and the said Justice or Justices of Peace, or persons chosen by ballot as aforesaid, to be Judges of Election, and who shall act in that capacity for that election, shall be vested with the same power and authority as if they had been appointed by the Commissioners or other lawfully authorized power."

The Ninth section of said law prescribes that "Every Judge of Election, at every election to be hereafter held in pursuance of law, before he proceeds to take or receive any vote, shall take the following oath or affirmation:

I, A. B. do swear (or affirm) that I will permit all persons to vote who shall offer to vote at the election now to be held for _____ County, or _____ City, whose names shall appear on the registry or list of voters furnished to me according to law, as qualified voters under the Constitution and laws of this State, and that I will not permit any person to vote at the same election whose name shall not be found on the said registry or list of qualified voters, and I will in all things execute the office of Judge of the said election, according to the best of my knowledge, without favor or partiality, so help me God."

The Twelfth section of said law, in speaking of the notice to be given by the Sheriff of the several counties of the State, of the time and places of holding said elections, says: "But if for any cause said notice shall fail to be given, said failure shall not affect the validity of any election; but it shall be the duty of the Judges of Election to hold the election in their several election districts at the time prescribed by law, and at the usual places of holding elections in the several election districts where the last preceding election was held, under the penalty of five hundred dollars for each Judge refusing or neglecting to hold such an election, if he can be lawfully compelled to do so."

The Twelfth section of said law, in speaking of the notice to be given by the Sheriff of the several counties of the State, of the time and places of holding said elections, says: "But if for any cause said notice shall fail to be given, said failure shall not affect the validity of any election; but it shall be the duty of the Judges of Election to hold the election in their several election districts at the time prescribed by law, and at the usual places of holding elections in the several election districts where the last preceding election was held, under the penalty of five hundred dollars for each Judge refusing or neglecting to hold such an election, if he can be lawfully compelled to do so."

President, E. C. Tillson; Commissioners, John Riley and Jeremiah Guard.

Clerk—Wm. H. Hagans, who will be in the office on Tuesdays and Saturdays of each week.

County Surveyor—John Harned.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

of the papers published the following notice: "We sincerely trust that our readers will forgive us. Yesterday giving a recipe for the cholera, we inadvertently stated that the remedy was to be taken internally. It is, on the contrary, for external use. We hope that Providence has restrained the hands of our beloved subscribers, for every one who drank of this compound died by this time. We present in the enclosed our condolence to the bereaved families of our subscribers. Even several districts of said county."

Laughter.

The world grows more tender hearted as it grows older. If we examine the sports that have amused our ancestors, we find them more and more cruel as we go backward into history. Even the sports of our ancestors were cruel.

PHOS. CODDINGTON, Sheriff.

Constable's Sale.

By virtue of three writs of fieri facias, two issued by Alexander J. Osborn and one by Richard H. Johnson, Justices of the Peace for the State of Maryland, in and for Garrett county, at the suit of Geo. W. Lange, against the estate and children, lands and goods of Alexander C. Good and Mary E. Good, all the right, title, interest and equity, both at law and in equity, of the said Alex. C. Good and Mary E. Good, his wife, in and to the following real estate, to-wit:

Military Lots Nos. 85, 258, 988, 1509, 1519, 1520, 1609, 1613, 1800, 1802, 1818, 1909, 1910, 1912, 3355, 3506, and 3507.

being the same lots obtained from John Swann and wife by deed dated December 2, 1871, and recorded in Liber W. H. T. folio 211, one of the land records of Garrett County, Md. Said Military Lots are situated in Garrett county Md.

And I hereby give notice that on

SATURDAY, November 22d, 1879,

at 2 o'clock P. M., in front of Coddington's Hotel in the town of Oakland, Md., I will offer at public sale the property so seized and taken in execution, to the highest bidder, for cash, to satisfy said judgments and costs thereon.

JAS. S. JOHNSON, Constable.

10 25 td

HEADACHE PILLS

NEURALGIA

"DR. J. W. HESSON, a PILLS

practicing physician at 106

N. E. corner, Baltimore,

MD., who has sold much attention to nervous diseases, has discovered that the extract of Colony and Chamomile combined in a certain proportion gives

daily cures of either bilious disorders, nervous debility,

headache, neuralgia and all the ailments of the head, and in many cases, this is the only remedy that will cure

the country are ordering

by mail. He prepares it in bulk, at 25 cts. per box,

and in small quantities, at

the price of 50 cts. per box,

and in small quantities, at

the price of 50 cts. per box,

and in small quantities, at

the price of 50 cts. per box,

and in small quantities, at

the price of 50 cts. per box,

and in small quantities, at

the price of 50 cts. per box,

and in small quantities, at

the price of 50 cts. per box,

and in small quantities, at

the price of 50 cts. per box,

and in small quantities, at

the price of 50 cts. per box,

and in small quantities, at

the price of 50 cts. per box,

and in small quantities, at

the price of 50 cts. per box,

and in small quantities, at

the price of 50 cts. per box,

and in small quantities, at

the price of 50 cts. per box,

and in small quantities, at

the price of 50 cts. per box,

and in small quantities, at

the price of 50 cts. per box,

and in small quantities, at

the price of 50 cts. per box,

and in small quantities, at

the price of 50 cts. per box,

and in small quantities, at

the price of 50 cts. per box,

and in small quantities, at

the price of 50 cts. per box,

and in small quantities, at

the price of 50 cts. per box,

and in small quantities, at

the price of 50 cts. per box,

and in small quantities, at

the price of 50 cts. per box,

and in small quantities, at

the price of 50 cts. per box,

and in small quantities, at

the price of 50 cts. per box,

and in small quantities, at

the price of 50 cts. per box,

and in small quantities, at

the price of 50 cts. per box,

and in small quantities, at

the price of 50 cts. per box,

and in small quantities, at

the price of 50 cts. per box,

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

MEDICAL.

H. T.

HELMBOLD'S

COMPOUND

Fluid Extract

BUCHU.

PHARMACEUTICAL

A SPECIFIC REMEDY FOR ALL

DISEASES

OF THE

BLADDER & KIDNEYS.

For Debility, Loss of Memory, Indigestion, Excretion of Urine, Stricture of Urinary Passages, Hemorrhoids, Pains in the Back, Chest, and Head, Rash of Blood to the Head, Pale Countenance and Dry Skin.

If these symptoms are allowed to go on, they frequently result in Piles and Consumption. When the Constitution becomes debilitated it requires the aid of an invigorating medicine to strengthen, and here up the system—which

"Helmhold's Buchu"

DOES IN EVERY CASE.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

IS UNEQUALLED

by any remedy known. It is prescribed by the most eminent physicians all over the world, in

Rheumatism,

Sprains, Strains,

Neuralgia,

Nervousness,

Dyspepsia,

Indigestion,

Constipation,

Aches and Pains,

General Debility,

Kidney Diseases,

Liver Complaint,

Nervous Debility,

Epilepsy,

Head Troubles,

Paralysis,

General Ill Health,

Spinal Diseases,

Sciatica,

Deafness,

Bleeding,

Lumbago,

Catarrh,

Nervous Complaints,

Female Complaints, &c.

Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Cough, Diarrhea, Sour Stomach, Eruptions, Etc.

Pain in the Mouth, Swelling of the Throat, Pain in the Region of the Kidneys, and a thousand other painful symptoms, are the offspring of Dyspepsia.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

Invigorates the Stomach.

And stimulates the torpid Liver, Bowels, and Kidneys to healthy action, in cleansing the blood of all impurities, and imparting new life and vigor to the whole system.

A single trial will be quite sufficient to convince the most hesitating of its valuable medicinal qualities.

Price $1 Per Bottle,

Or Six Bottles for $5.

Delivered to any address free from observation.

"Doctors" may consult by letter, receiving the same attention as by calling.

Competent Physicians attend to correspondence. All letters should be addressed to

H. T. HELMBOLD,

DRUGGIST AND CHEMIST,

Philadelphia, Pa.

CAUTION:

See that the private Proprietary Stamp is on each bottle.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

my 10-1 yr.

FOR SALE.

A Furnished Cottage and Fifty Acres of land

on time, near Oakland, Garrett county, Md

Apply on the premises to

J. A. KILBOURN,

Of JOHN R. LARNER,

1401 F. Street,

Washington, D. C.

my 20-4m

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

DR. J. DAILY.

RESIDENT DENTIST

WESTERNPORT,

MARYLAND.

From one to a full set of teeth inserted in the most beautiful and substantial manner. Particular attention paid to cleaning and filling the natural teeth. All work warranted to give satisfaction, or money refunded.

SUBSCRIBE FOR

"THE REPUBLICAN,"

AND AID IN THE

CIRCULATION

— OF —

The (Cheapest Newspaper

IN WESTERN MARYLAND.

ONLY

$1 50

PER YEAR

IN ADVANCE.

EVERY VARIETY

OF

JOB WORK

PROMPTLY EXECUTED.

We desire to call the attention of

Merchants, Mechanics, and Business

Men generally, to our extensive facilities for the prompt, speedy and accurate execution of

FIRST-CLASS

JOB PRINTING.

We keep on hand, for printing

purposes, an assortment of the best

Paper, Envelopes, Cards, &c., and have one of best

JOB PRESSES

now in use, and the

ONLY ONE IN OAKLAND.

We are determined to be up to the times in everything connected with the printing business.

Address

"THE REPUBLICAN,"

Oakland, Garrett Co. Md.

We have also a complete stock of

New Plain and Fancy Type, &c.,

of the latest styles, for all the different kinds of Job Work and can now fill all orders for

Show Cards,

Business Cards,

Circulars,

Letter-Heads,

Bill-Heads,

Legal Blanks,

Certificates,

Envelopes,

Tags,

Statements, &c.,

Posters,

Handbills,

Programmes,

Pamphlets,

Catalogues,

Dodgers, &c., &c.

and every description of

Plain and Fancy Printing

At the Lowest Rates.

Drop in and take a look at a

— COMPLETE —

Printing Office,

YOU WILL BE

WELCOME AT ALL TIMES.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1879.

NUMBER 37.

VOLUME 3.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, etc.

D. E. OFFUTT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Machines, Massey Instruments,
Guns, Pistols, etc.

G. W. LEGG,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Second & Oak sts.

D. H. LOAR,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jew-
elry, etc.

I. W. STALNAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third and Oak Street.

L. BUSH & SON,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third & Oak sts.

J. A. GRANT,
Dry Goods, Notions & Groceries,
SPECIAL LINE OF TOBACCO.

DAVIS & TOWNSEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agents Agricultural Machines,
Opposite Valley's Park.

C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Sausages, Cakes, Confectionery, etc., Next to O'Connell's Hotel.

RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods, Fruit, etc.

HOTELS.

LODDINGTON'S HOTEL,
W. M. LODDINGTON, Proprietor,
Main St., Opposite Hamilton's Billiard Saloon.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

A. SHIRER,
Oak Street, near Second.
A general line of Stoves and Tinware.

PHYSICIANS.

D. R. J. LEE MCCOMAS,
Office on Main Street.

D. E. H. PAISONS,
Offers his professional services
to the people of Oakland and vicinity.
Office in the old O'Connell building, 38 N. 3d.

PLASTERER.

JAMES AINOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street.

FOOT AND SHOE MAKER.

W. M. WAGNER,
Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.

GEO. F. LOUGHRIDGE,
Leave orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.

J. B. BRANT,
Surveyor, Auctioneer and
Conveyancer,
Oakland, Garrett county, Md.

JOHN HARNED,
Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.

A. B. WOODCOCK,
In Wm. Stinson's Building,
Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY
GOODS.

MRS. M. E. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Gents' Furnishing
and Fancy Goods, and Shoes.
Main Street, Opposite Dr. McCome's office.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

GEO. C. STURGIS,
Drugs, Medicines,
Perfumery, Toilet articles, Stationery,
Tobacco and Cigars.

G. W. MERRILL,
Near Depot.

PAINTING & PAPER HANG-
ING.

E. J. FRINGER,
House and Sign Painter,
And Paper Hanger.

S. V. B. WARD,
HOUSE and SIGN PAINTER
Shop near Davis House.

BLACKSMITHS.

CHAS. SINCELI,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

JOHN M. JARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder.
Residence on Liberty St. nearly opp. Depot.

P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
Residence on Centre street.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Resid. opp. School house.

JOSEPH M. CRIM,
Residence on Alder Street.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.

CABINETMAKERS AND UN-DERTAKERS.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SHATZER,
Shop on Second Street.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FALL & WINTER GOODS.

GOODS FRESH & NEW
and Cheap as the Cheapest.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,
MERCHANT TAILOR,

Has on hand a full stock of New

Ready Made Clothing,

which he will sell very cheap for cash.

Gents Furnishing Goods,

In great variety, and at prices to suit the
times.

Suits Made to Order

In the most fashionable manner. Orders by mail promptly attended to.

Also Agent for the Celebrated

"Pearl Shirt."

A Large Assortment of

BOYS' CLOTHING

Kept always on hand.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,
Oakland, Md.

MEAT MARKET.

H. E. WOLFE,
Formerly of Cumberland, Md.

Takes this mode of announcing to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity that he has permanently located in Oakland for the purpose
of carrying on the

BUTCHERING BUSINESS

In a first-class manner.

FRESH BEEF, (stall-fed), MUTTON, PORK, BOLOGNA SAUSAGE, POIK SAU-
SAGE, &c., at all times.

Shop near the Post Office.

Customers can get what they want without
delay and at any hour of the day.

My patronage is respectfully solicited.

H. E. WOLFE.

PATENTS.

To Inventors and Manufacturers.

Established 1865.

GILMORE SMITH & CO.

Solicitors of Patents & Attorneys at Law.

American & Foreign Patents.

No fees in advance, nor until a Patent is allowed. No fees for making preliminary examinations.

Special attention given to Inter-
ference Cases before the Patent Office,
Infringement Suits in the different
States, and all litigation appertain-
ing to Patents or Inventions.

Send Stamp for Pamphlet of Sixty
Pages.

GILMORE & CO.,
629 F. Street, N. W.,
Washington, D. C.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

THO. J. PEDDICOLO, A. B. GONIER, PEDDICOLO & GONIER,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW
AND
SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY,
OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany Counties, the adjoining Counties of West Virginia, and in the Court of Appeals
of Maryland. Jan. 30-41

S. A. COX, H. WHEELER COMBS,
COX & COMBS,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW
AND
SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY,
Office, Alder street, Oakland, Garrett county,
Maryland.

Will practice in all the Courts of Maryland
and adjoining counties of West Virginia, and the United States Circuit Courts. J18-9.

GILMORE S. HAMILL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND
SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY,
OFFICE IN OFFICE BUILDING,
(Lower Floor).

Particular attention given to Conveyancing,
Verification of land titles and collection of debts. Louis negotiated. J18-19.

J. W. VEITCH,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND
SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY,
OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett County
and the adjoining counties of West Virginia,
and in the Court of Appeals of Maryland.
Jan. 30-41.

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG
Late Resident Surgeon, New York
Eye and Ear Infirmary.

Has located permanently in the
City of Cumberland, Md., for the EX-CLUSIVE treatment of all diseases of the Eye and Ear, including those of the Nose and Throat.

Office, No. 29 South Centre Street,
ap12131

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LESSONS.

SUNDAY, NOV. 9, 1879.

THE PERFECT SAVIOUR.

GENERAL STATEMENT.

No other man ever lived in such close communion with Christ as did John the beloved disciple, and no other could speak of spiritual truths out of an experience so deep and full.
Long after the rest of the twelve had ascended to their thrones in heaven John was still living at Ephesus in a happy old age, revered throughout all the churches. About A. D.
90, or nearly two generations after the ascension of Christ, he wrote this epistle. There is a "divine glow" in its arrangement, and it is more fervent in its style than systematic in its plan. Its general theme is Christ's fellowship with the Father and the Son in heaven, and with believers on the earth. It opens with a declaration of his personal knowledge and experience of Christ, and his aim in writing to complete the Christian joy of the church. The nature of the joy is described, and the fellowship with God is given as light upon the path of life, and cleansing from sin in the blood of Jesus, a cleansing which every heart requires, and may receive upon humble confession of guilt,
looking to the Lord for grace.

1 John 1, 1-10.

Memory Verse, 5-9.

1 That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the Word of life; 2
For the life was manifested, and we have seen it, and bear witness, and show unto you that eternal life which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us; 3 That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us; and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ.

4 And these things write we unto you, that your joy might be full. 5 This then is the message, which we have heard, which we have seen, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the Word of life;

6 If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie and do not the truth; 7 But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ
cleanseth us from all unrighteousness.

8 If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. 9 If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

10 If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us.

HOME READINGS.

1. The perfect Saviour. 1 John 1, 1-10.

2. "The life was manifested." John 1, 1-10.

3. "Fellowship with him." 1 Cor. 1, 1-9.

4. "Walk in the light." 2 John.

5. "Fellowship one with another." 3 John.

6. "Blood of Jesus cleanseth us." Heb. 9, 11-28.

GOLDEN TEXT.

The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. 1 John 1, 7.

LESSON HYMN, C. M.

My dying Saviour and my God,
I thank thee for guilt and sin;
Sprinkle me ever with thy blood,
And cleanse and keep me clean.

Wash me, and make me thus thine own;
Wash me, and mine thou art;
Wash me, and thou art mine;
My Saviour, my Lord, my heart.

QUESTIONS ON THE OUTLINE.

1. The word of life. v. 1-2; John 1, 1, 14.

2. What is the Word of life? v. 2; John 1, 14.

3. How long has the Son of God existed? v. 2; John 1, 14.

4. What personal experience does John mention in verse 2? v. 2; John 1, 14.

5. What is the fellowship with him? v. 3; John 1, 14.

6. What is the fellowship with him? v. 3; John 1, 14.

7. How may our joy be made full? v. 4; John 1, 14.

8. What message is here given concerning God? v. 5; John 1, 14.

9. How, then, may we walk in the light? v. 6; John 1, 14.

10. What is it to walk in darkness? v. 7; John 1, 14.

11. What is the light? v. 7; John 1, 14.

12. What is the light? v. 7; John 1, 14.

13. What is the light? v. 7; John 1, 14.

14. What is the light? v. 7; John 1, 14.

15. What is the light? v. 7; John 1, 14.

16. What is the light? v. 7; John 1, 14.

17. What is the light? v. 7; John 1, 14.

18. What is the light? v. 7; John 1, 14.

19. What is the light? v. 7; John 1, 14.

20. What is the light? v. 7; John 1, 14.

21. What is the light? v. 7; John 1, 14.

22. What is the light? v. 7; John 1, 14.

23. What is the light? v. 7; John 1, 14.

24. What is the light? v. 7; John 1, 14.

25. What is the light? v. 7; John 1, 14.

Animals in Religion and Law.

The doctrine of transmigration of souls, which is still held in one form or another by millions of heathen people, has at least the practical merit of shielding animals from cruel treatment, for a man cannot be sure when he beats his donkey that he is not maltreating his grandmother. The religion of Buddha also inculcates scrupulous protection of dumb creatures against every form of abuse or harm; even noxious insects may not be killed. The Christian Union lately has a chapter of very curious incidents connected with this phase of sentiment, and certain equally remarkable legal aspects of the topic.
The first referred to is the suit—filed a few years ago by London papers—between two servants of a Calcutta native merchant, who quarrelled over the division of their pay for "feeding bugs." The magistrate's inquiry elicited that the merchants were much annoyed by certain pestiferous insects at night.
But religion forbade these should be killed, hence servants were employed to sleep (he awake more likely) in the employer's bed an hour or two before his time for retiring, that the vexing appetite might be somewhat checked, and the master have a better chance of rest. It was the wages for this service of respect to the sacredness of insect life that the quarrelling
Hindoo could not divide.

Four or five centuries ago, and upon the continent of Europe, animals were treated as responsible beings, amenable to legal proceedings and punishments. They were arrested and brought before courts to answer for crimes, and meantime were shut up in prison. The public prosecutor prepared a formal accusation, and a counselor was selected to plead for the defendant. Witnesses were examined and judgment gravely pronounced. If the accused animal was found guilty, the judge passed sentence of death, and this was executed with great formality, and in a variety of ways; the offending beast being often dressed in the clothing of a man. Ancient European law books contain reports of trials of swine,
bulls, horses, etc., in public courts,
for the offence of killing persons and their property.

The ecclesiastical courts of four and five centuries ago had appropriate forms of proceeding against creatures whose profligate manners forbade their being arrested and punished individually. Rats, in one case, were cited before the tribunal for devouring the barley of the region, and their counsel established a successful defence
in substance, that his clients desired to retire from the territory, and would have done so if allowed, but had been prevented by the multiplicity of cats lying in wait to destroy them! In another case locusts were prosecuted for their ravages,
and a sentence of anathema pronounced against them. In Mayence, Spanish flies, and in Savoy, weevils,
were proceeded against by a public trial. Their counsel succeeded in obtaining a decree that a distant territory might be assigned to them to which they might retire. In Val-ence, a plague of caterpillars was prosecuted. The points of law were so numerous and difficult, and the trial was spun out so long, that the insects all died before judgment was pronounced!

Instances of this procedure are found as late as the earliest settlements in America. In Brazil there was a case of proceedings against swarms of ants. And, in early Canada, turtle-doves were excommunicated for mischief they had done.
But the most curious and amusing case of this character is credited by Forest and Stream to the Rev. Mr.
Scudder a missionary in India. Four men bought a quantity of cotton in copartnership. That the rats might not injure it they purchased a cat, and agreed that each should own one of its legs. Each leg was then adorned with beads and other ornaments by its owner. The cat accidentally injured one of its legs, and the owner wound a rag around it, soaked in oil. The cat by chance set the rag on fire, and, being in great pain, rushed among the cotton bales, where she had been accustomed to hunt rats. The cotton was totally burned.
The three other partners brought suit against the owner of the injured leg
to recover the value of the cotton, and the judge decided that, as the injured leg could not be used, the cat carried the fire to the cotton with her three remaining legs. They only were enphatic; and their owners were required to compensate the owner of the injured leg for his share of loss.

Kentucky Lawlessness.

The feud between the Holtbrook and Underwood families in Kentucky has taken a new phase. The widow and orphans of the Underwood name have been notified to quit the county by Sunday next, and the public generally have been warned against testifying to the recent murders before the grand jury. Now, we are not very brave in this part of the country. We do not go about with bowie knives sheathed in our boots and breech-loaders slung over our shoulders. But we venture to say such bull-dozing as this would not be tolerated in Kentucky as it is in other States. Indeed, the lack of backbone which the local authorities of that State display in such cases as this, is even more shameful than the want of backbone of the murderers themselves. Their policy appears to be that of "Let alone," and instead of taking active measures for the arrest of the assassins and the prevention of further bloodshed, they calmly fold their arms and await a settlement of the difficulty by the extermination of the parties to it. It is claimed in justification of this state of affairs
that society is in a crude state there,
and that such affairs would be as liable to happen in any section of the North where similar conditions prevailed. But if this be admitted, what becomes of that much vaunted Southern chivalry which has been help up so often for the admiration of phlegmatic Northerners? And how different is the treatment of lawlessness in the two sections! No one who is familiar with the history of the Mollie Maguire assassinations in Pennsylvania will dispute the statement that, in bringing the murderers to justice and restoring peace and order to the disturbed sections, the authorities of that State had a much more hazardous and difficult duty to perform than ever confronted Kentucky officials, yet we have seen how resolutely they undertook the task, and how thoroughly they completed it. In Pennsylvania the assassins were under the protection of a powerful secret order. The mysteries of a far-reaching conspiracy had to be penetrated before a single step could be taken towards bringing the guilty to judgment; and the profound sagacity of the Paris detectives was fairly rivalled in the subtle methods employed to fathom the secrets of this band of criminals. In Kentucky, on the other hand, the murderers are known. So far from being hidden, their deeds—and even their intentions—are boldly published to the world, as if they were achievements to be proud of. Their defiance of the law is telegraphed the length and breadth of the land. Yet the law itself is silent. Not a word comes to us of any attempt to insult the brag-garts; and Justice, insulted in her own temples, is dumb. So common an event has this become that it scarcely awakens surprise; and that criminals should go unwhipped of justice in Kentucky is taken as a matter of course. We submit that such a state of things is disgraceful to any State, and that Kentucky will deserve the stigma she now bears until her authorities, by greater vigilance and courage in the discharge of duty, wipe out the stain.—Bullo. American.

A Democratic wiseacre declares that if Tilden had gone to Europe in 1877 and staid for three years he would have been the next President of the United States; but he got a notion that he could do it something bad about President Hayes's election, and so he staid at home and yelled fraud. This is true. Instead of finding the fraud he was after, he blew up his own elpher barrel, and made himself the laughing-stock of the country. Exile might have prevented this unfortunate explosion, and there would have been still room in this country several persons who would have believed that Tilden Reform was a genuine thing, and not a sham.

The following poetical sentiment from the Burlington Hawkeye is going the rounds:

Grant us, good Lord, four years of strength and peace;
Grant us from lawless force a sweet release;
Grant us the dawning of a brighter day;
Grant us the blessing of a hero's way;
Grant us deliverance from brutal might;
Grant us an arm that dare defend the right;
Grant us the man whose actions for him
speak;
Grant us the shield that gleams before the weak;
Grant us the man in whom our hopes we plant;
Grant us the "man on horseback," grant us Grant.

The Coming National Campaign.

Senator Carpenter, in the course of an interview recently, stated that the only reason why he had not taken an active part in this campaign was owing to the feeble state of his health. He says: "If New York and Pennsylvania should go strongly Republican it will then be pretty certain that the Republican party, with any good candidate, will sweep the field in 1880, and the effort will undoubtedly be to open the prize to the widest competition among the candidates in the convention, and the choice will be determined by personal preferences or by chance.
Conkling, Sherman, and Blaine will in that event have about equal chances, provided Gen. Grant should refuse to be a candidate, as against him no one would have any chance. If General Grant is not nominated, or refuses to accept, the Republican candidate may be either Conkling, Sherman, Blaine or Chandler, and either one would be elected. From present appearances it makes but little difference who the Democratic nominee is. Under the two-thirds rule in force in the Democratic convention no man can be nominated unless he is in full accord with Southern sentiment and policy. I believe it makes but little difference who the Democratic nominee is, he will not be elected. The nomination of Judge Settle for Vice President would be very popular. He is a man of ability and integrity, would carry all the Republican strength in the South, and I think would carry North Carolina, Florida and perhaps some of the other Southern States. He would also carry a full vote in the Northern States, because after the matter is plainly understood the Republicans of the North would understand that the nomination of a Southerner on our ticket would free us from the charge of being a sectional party. The Democrats will,
of course run a Northern ticket, so to speak, and the bulk of their vote lies in the South. These facts will enable them to claim that they are not sectional, you see, while, if our ticket is composed of Northern men exclusively, and the bulk of our support of Northern votes, the charge will rest against us that we are sectionalists; besides this, Settle has been tried and trusted; he is as good a Republican as any man in the North to-day."

The story of Josephine Meeker's captivity reads like a page from some exciting border novel. From the moment of the first attack on the agency to the day of her rescue by Commissioner Adams she seems to have never once lost her self-possession nor flinched in the presence of any danger. She endured without a murmur the hardships of long forced marches, the pangs of hunger and exposure to rough weather. She was equally unmoved by the threats of the Indian braggarts. Three times Douglass placed his loaded gun to her forehead, but she did not quail. "I told him," she says, "I was not afraid of him nor of death, and should not run away." Her courage was unmistakable, and the Indians, when they saw her intrepidity in the face of danger, turned on Douglass, and made such sport of him that he was glad to sneak away. But if she was brave, she was not the less tender-hearted, and her

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.

OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

MY LOVERS.

THAT four noble lovers,
Young and gallant, blithe and gay,
And in all the land no maiden
Had a sweeter troupe than they:
And never princess, guarded
By knights of high degree,
Known sweeter, purer home,
Than my lovers pay to me!

One of my noble lovers
Is a self-poised, thoughtful man,
Gravely gay, serenely earnest,
Strong to do, and kind to plan;
And one is sweet and sunny,
Pure as crystal, true as steel,
With a soul resounding ever
When the truth makes high appeal!

And another of my lovers
Bright and debonair he is,
Brave and ardent, strong and tender,
And the flower of courtesy;
Last of all, an eager student,
Upon lofty aims intent;
Manly force and gentle sweetness
In his nature rarely blend!

But when of noble lovers,
All alike are dear to me,
And my heart to choose refuses,
Pray, what can a woman do?
Ah, my love! For this I know ye,
Even as I myself am best,
That I care not which is best,
That I care not which is best!

CRISIS-CROSS.

MISS LYDIA CRANE was an old maid; there could be no mistake about that; not in virtue of her age merely, for she was only thirty-five when Mr. Sylvester came to Lyndon to preach, and many a woman has become wife and mother after that age; but Miss Lydia was a born old maid. Her parents died during her early childhood, and she passed into the care of three maiden ladies, daughters of old Parson Beach, whose place Mr. Sylvester afterward filled in Lyndon church; and the three trained her in true spinster fashion, her inexpressive nature falling readily into their ways.

She had a little money of her own, and a small house with a garden and orchard pertaining to it, and as all three of her guardians died before she came of age, when that period arrived she gave notice to her tenants that she wanted that house herself. And then what a reign of expurgation began within the four walls! All that soap, sand, chloride of lime, hot water, paint, and whitewash could do, was done there, by the aid of strong arms and stronger will. The house was much like every other house in Lyndon; white, oblong, bedecked with green blinds, and having a kitchen at the back; but no other house was ever so spotless, so sweet of scent, so fearfully clean.

It was kept dark, to be sure; no sunshine allowed on the premises; and it was bare of ornament, for pictures and brackets and vases gathered dust; but it was clean, and Miss Lydia devoted her daily energies to keeping it in this condition.

She had money enough to live on, but her nature was frugal and industrious; so she took in linen sewing, and made shrouds and coffin trimmings for the Lyndon manufactory, till her bank account grew visibly from year to year, and she was more respected as a person of "means."

She had but one relative, a half brother, living in Ohio, who had been sent to his mother's relatives when his father died, and was scarcely a memory to her personally; yet they kept up a feeble correspondence, and she cherished a shocking quartet of daguerotypes in her drawer as representatives, in the oldest style of art, of Joseph and his wife, and their two children, John and Marietta.

With assured comforts, luxuries if she wanted them, and no real trouble, Miss Lydia ought to have been a happy woman; even her heart, such as it was, had so long been idle that it scarcely seemed to beat, and she seemed to have been spared her the aching and throbbing that so disturbs the peace of her sex generally; but the very absence of genuine causes of suffering rendered her life a grievance, and she longed for life. There is a curious tendency in human nature to crave sorrow in a hidden and unconscious way, that does not need words, but betrays itself in actions. It is like the physical longing for salt, pure joy and peace are savors less without this pungent flavor of tears; there is no relief to sculpture without shadow, no delight to the eye like down, and yet down implies darkness, inevitably.

So Miss Lydia found her own troubles, and used them well; petted, cherished and made the most of them. Her neighbors had hens, and the first and strongest tendency of her mind was to be communicative; they want to and will share all the property about them; their cackling souls knew no reason why Miss Lydia's garden was not for them to scratch up as well as the rest of creation's attainable food. But this "blatant property-holder" objected, and after years of skirmishes, rous, reiterated charges and fresh repulses, screams of battle and clamors of victory, she defended her rights by a seven foot paling all about the garden, which cost twice as much as all the hens had destroyed since their earliest trespass, but effectually discomfited them, and added mother to the long list of the triumphs of capital over labor.

Then there were the boys in Lyndon, as usual; boys are an obstinate fact everywhere; we thank kind Providence that the Indians are exterminated in these regions, and blame ourselves on the fact that the last of the Mohicans pointed a moral and adorned a tale long ago; but do we ever reflect on the host and hordes of boys that are still left? I think Miss Lydia would have preferred the Indians.

However, boys seem to be a necessity in the scheme of man, "mighty maze" as it is, and it seems to be an equal necessity to boys to steal apples. Miss Lydia's orchard was tempting as the Hesperides. Early summer apples bedecked it with green crimson spheres and balls of gold, juicy and fragrant enough to have beguiled a demon; and when the winter crop lent those gaudy bluffs with all sorts of fruit splendors, blushing Peck's Pilestones, rich dark gilliflowers, the striped Northern Spy, red as rubies, and enormous yellow pippins, glowing beside Red-bay muscats, the Quakers of the tribe, and honest Newtown pippins, better far than their exterior promise; how could any boys resist them? Yet to see one urethin pick up an apple through the bars was agony to Miss Crane; she would have given them pecks for the asking, she was not stingy—but she knew her rights and wanted them respected. But what fun is there in asking anybody to give you an apple when you can just pick it up? It was almost an adventure to steal "old Lyd's" apples in the face of her watchful eyes and alert ears; the fence went for nothing, boys will.

"And out the way" to fruit, over more obstacles than Love in the old ballad; so here was a good, steady affliction coming every other year as sure as the apple crop. Then there were the flies. But flies are an inextinguishable subject, not for the brief limits of this article; I can only say in passing that if Miss Lydia had pursued Satan with half the energy, truculence, and untiring persistence with which she hunted flies, he would have fled from her atmosphere and left her to peace and saintliness very early in life.

Besides these special and recurrent grievances, there were the daily "happenings," as we call them, of all human experience; times when the soup would not come, "do what you would; when the chimney smoked, the spout leaked, and crockery slipped from her fingers without rhyme or reason; when pork grew rusty in the barrel in defiance of precedent, moths got into the carpets and mice into the garret; in short, days when everything, to use her favorite expression, went "criss-cross."

Now Lydia Crane was not naturally inclined to be querulous or selfish; she had been duly converted in the progress of a revival in Lyndon, and joined the church during Parson Beach's lifetime. She read her Bible daily; said her prayers—I use the word advisedly—she was punctual attendant on means of grace. She was the head and front of the church sewing-society, and Secretary of the Foreign Mission Circle, yet in the living of her life she had been, at the age of thirty-five, fretful, self-centered, opinionated and domineering; but perfectly certain that she was an exemplary Christian. Charity, sympathy, tenderness do not grow in such a solitude as hers; it is no good, for man or woman to be alone; and if to be a Christian is to wear the image of Christ, as the gospel seems to imply, there was very little obvious likeness in Miss Lydia to the Master whose name she wore.

Yet she was a thoroughly honest woman, anxious above all things to do right, ready to give to every "object" that impelled the long-handled contribution boxes, with deacons and the other brethren, through every slip on every Sunday, though she had not even a kind word for the beggar at her door; for begging implied "shiftlessness," and that was unpardonable.

But just before Mr. Sylvester was settled in Lyndon Miss Lydia received a letter from her niece that amazed and disgusted her. It ran this wise:

"DEAR AUNT: If you see me some of these days walk in at your door, don't be surprised. If you don't stop I shall run away. I certainly shall, and if you haven't got anywhere else to go. You see I want to marry Alf. Peck, just the nicest fellow you ever saw. I don't care if he is poor, he's awfully smart; but pa has got a kind of prejudice against him; he won't let me see him, if he can help it; but you better believe he can't look me up if he tries! So anyway, if he gets too mighty I'm going to run for it, and I know you're real good, everybody says so. Just when you see Alf, Peck for me. Don't for anything let pa know, but I don't believe you will. Good-bye. Your affectionate niece, MARIETTA."

The impudence of the thing took away Miss Lydia's breath. She gave a shout to a runaway girl, the idea was monstrous. She had a great mind to inclose the letter directly to her brother; but the bell rang for preparatory lecture just then, so she tied on her bonnet and went to church, and after she had slept that night on the matter, she resolved to delay any action at present. A dim sort of sympathy made her unwilling to betray Marietta to her father; an esprit de corps that she would not have acknowledged to herself, for Lydia never had a real lover; two or three elderly widowers had made prudential advances to her in vain; but no tender sentiment had ever stirred her chilly heart. Yet after all she was a woman, and shrank from violating this girl's confidence, however she disapproved of it.

Several weeks passed and her fears vanished; she took no notice of the letter, determined neither to "make nor meddle" in the matter. In the meantime Mr. Sylvester had been ordained to the church, moved his family into the parsonage, and commenced a round of pastoral visits. It was one of the loveliest of June afternoons that he stood at Miss Lydia's door knocking for admittance. The white roses that clambered up to the chamber windows were thick set with bloom in every stage of beauty, from the swelling bud folded in green wrappings to the full-blown trembling blossom in whose heart a dew drop quivered; sure token that the night wind had parted those pure leaves and dropped a tear of forbidding over their certain fading. Beds of pinks scented the fresh air with spice, and the early cinnamon rose tree was dull with half-finished and half-dead roses, sending a sickly, oriental odor of rot of roses across the perfume and honey that freighted every breeze.

Miss Lydia herself came to the door; her usually calm and rigid face was flushed with some trouble, evidently, and in her hand she held the yellow cover of a telegram; but she was glad to see Mr. Sylvester, he was a minister, and the new minister; it was a duty to be glad to see him. As he seated himself in the prim, cold parlor, he opened the conversation with a remark on the weather, that sure and safe first step.

"Yes, it's good weather," allowed Miss Lydia. "We generally do have the best weather in June. I wish it sometimes it would last right along through the year."

"Perhaps we should not enjoy it as much if we had it all the time," quietly answered the minister.

"Mebbe not; but I can't say I like cold weather; it makes such a sight of dirty work. Wood is trying enough; always drooping everywhere, specks and slivers; but coal—coal is a heap worse."

Mr. Sylvester smiled. "But June is dusty."

"Yes, there's trouble everywhere. Seems sometimes as though you couldn't pass a day without it."

"Yet one would think, Miss Crane, that you had very little; and you have a lovely home here, and no family cares or sorrows."

"Well, everybody has their own troubles," her mind reverted here to the list we have already chronicled, and she felt rather unwilling to confide them to the minister, so she would just with a glittering generality:

"I have mine as well as other folks; there's a good many days when everything under the canopy seems to go criss-cross with me."

"Then you ought to be blessed indeed," gravely answered Mr. Sylvester. Miss Lydia stared; but he went on:

"I mean if you fully entertain the meaning of that word; it is only a contraction of 'Christ's cross,' surely if you hear His cross daily you are an unusually privileged woman."

"I don't know what you mean," she answered with rude honesty.

"You are a Christian, Miss Lydia?" "Well, I should hope so! I've been a professor near about twenty years."

"But I mean a Christian," insisted Mr. Sylvester.

Miss Lydia darted a keen glance at him, but it sank before the clear, penetrating look of his gray eyes. She moved uneasily on her chair.

"Why, I suppose I am. I mean to be. I think, if things go with you according to Christ's cross every day, it is well with you, certainly."

"I don't know as anybody liked criss-cross."

"No; but there is a wide difference between the cross we carry for ourselves, and that we bear for Christ; there was Simon of Cyrene, you know, that he was compelled to bear the cross."

It was harder for him, no doubt, than it would have been for John, who loved the Master, and would have been rejoiced to save him from even that burden.

Miss Lydia's face grew interested; intelligence and honesty quickened its worn lines; she did not understand, but she began to suspect there was something in the gospel she had never understood, and desired to know now.

"I don't believe I sense you yet," she said more gently.

"It is very simple, my friend, if you look at it; it is merely taking Christ's cross instead of our own; that is, taking the Bible and study the gospels; read them over and over. You know already what Christ endured, hunger, cold, thirst, temptation, the loss and desertion of friends; can you find any other way to be like him? He does not even allude to his crucifixion as a thing terrible to himself. He did not go about telling all men how dreadful his sufferings were; would he; what else would he do? He is recorded for our benefit only, for our instruction in the way of life. Did you ever think, Miss Lydia, why Christ chose to be poor and lonely, when he might just as well have been a king and still undergone death for us?"

"Well, I never thought on't much. I read the Bible, too, considerable; but seems to me, somehow, as if it wasn't like other reading."

Mr. Sylvester understood; formalism was his special dread in dealing with such a class of people; people who "say" their prayers and read their Bible daily and dutifully, but simply as a duty, without apprehension of the divine depth and sweetness in either practice, if only he done with the heart, not with the head.

It is this which makes the conversion of the heathen an apparently easier matter than the conversion of many church members; the gospel is new, fresh, living to the heathen; but to the latter, appeals or loving promises before; but where it is simply a ceremony to read the Word of God, and done ceremonially day after day, the pathetic words of the prophet become a mockery. "And lo! thou art unto them as a lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice and can play well upon an instrument; for they hear thy words, but they do them not." For it is not the poetry, the splendid images, the lofty moral tone of the Scriptures that make it a two-edged sword; but its living truth and practical application.

Mr. Sylvester went on: "I don't think you are alone in that feeling, Miss Lydia, but think a moment. How could Christ have given in any other way such abundant force and help to us as by suffering all things that we suffer, even the lowest and the poorest of us, so that we can never say, 'I cannot carry daily troubles to God; he is too great to understand them.' You know what Paul says to the Hebrews: 'For we have not a high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted like us we are;' and this for the very purpose of making known to us his sympathy and power to help in all things. This was part of His cross; the cross on which He lived perhaps as hard to endure as that on which He died."

Miss Lydia looked strangely moved; her religion had been that of form and routine; a "desire to be as good as she knew how to be," and a very honest desire, but so far it had not led her, as every such intent will lead sooner or later, to the foot of the cross.

"It's as good as three sermons to hear you talk, Mr. Sylvester," she said. "I see how blind-like I have read the Scripture along back; but it does seem, nevertheless, as though there were some things that pester one amazingly, that they are too small to talk about in that solemn kind of way."

"Then they are too small to be troubles at all," said the minister, smiling; "anything that is real trouble, and can be borne cheerfully, silently, bravely, because Christ sends it to us to bear, will certainly turn into a blessing to ourselves or somebody else; it will be Christ's cross instead of criss-cross."

Miss Lydia's mind had been dwelling on the heathen, the boys, the flies, and her unnumbered troubles before, but while these last words dropped from the minister's lips her eyes fell on the yellow telegram.

"Well," she said, "thank you kindly, Mr. Sylvester, for your talk. I'd thank you a great deal more if you would just give me a word about some trouble that came this morning. I'll fetch the letter first."

While she bustled away the minister looked at his watch; it was late, he was tired, he had much to do that morning, he did not know how to spare Miss Lydia another moment; but he was a man who had learned to be afraid to preach without practicing, and for a long time it had seemed to him he could not preach to ask himself, "What would Christ have done in this place and these circumstances?" and act accordingly. Not that he could always certainly know; but he read the Gospel so much that it seemed to him he could generally tell what would have been the Lord's course of action, and being naturally a considerate, just and deliberate man, not blinded by impulse or passion, and one who prayed fervently for divine guidance, it is to be presumed the result of his judgment was as near as humanity can achieve to the Master's example.

This was the secret of Mr. Sylvester's great usefulness; he was not a very brilliant or eloquent preacher, but he believed the Word of God with all his heart, and acted on it in all his life; and nobody who knew him doubted or caviled at his religion, for it was his daily living.

Miss Lydia came back directly with the letter from Marietta, and in her hand also the telegram whose yellow envelope lay on the table.

"There!" said she, "read them if you're a mind to. I think that is nigh for a real trouble, Mr. Sylvester."

"I think it is," he said, as he glanced over them.

"Well, what had I ought to do about it?"

An unconscious sharpness toned her voice as she asked the question.

"What do you think the Master would do, Miss Lydia. Here is a young girl, head-strong, evidently regardless of her duty to her parents, and 'in love' as she would call it, with a young man probably quite unfit for her."

Miss Crane looked disgusted.

"But see here; she throws herself on your protection; you are her only relative, and she has heard of you; I think you have a character to keep up, my friend, a Christian character. It may be the turning point of this child's life—the way in which you receive her, as you act she will judge your religion. Shouldn't you like to bring reproach on the gospel?"

An indignant warmth, strangely sweet and novel, seemed to elate the good woman's heart.

"Why you know I wouldn't!" she exclaimed.

Mr. Sylvester's cool eyes glowed. "I thought not. Then comes in the first consideration, what would Christ do with her? We need not seek that knowledge; we know it; we know the forbearance, the tenderness with which he treated individual sinners; worse sinners a great deal than this silly, willful girl. Here is a real cross, coming right into your house; may it prove Christ's cross to you truly!"

"You'll come again, won't you?" said Miss Lydia, a strange dimness in her dark eyes; "come and see Marietta."

"Yes, indeed I will!" And so the good man departed, having done his good work.

Miss Lydia took up the telegram again.

"Coming on four o'clock train," it said, sweet Marietta had gone home, and round at her next and orderly house, and groaned in spirit; habit was strong and the words sprang to her lips. "How things do go criss-cross!" but scarcely had they been uttered when she checked herself with a feeling of shame.

Like many lonely people she had a habit of talking aloud to herself, and now she went on: "I never did! I've forgot already! If I had something or another to kind of remember, I'm sure I should be ashamed of myself. I wonder what there is to sort of jog me when I forget?"

She hunted up an old-fashioned ring, but hard work and rheumatism had swollen and knotted her joints; the ring would not go on any longer. Then a bright thought came to her. She went out of the door and cut the crossed end of a fir twig from the great green power of a Norway fir that guarded the north door; she tied the cross pieces straight to a bit of wire and hung the symbol above her mantel-piece; a simple reminder of her duty, touching enough had any spectator seen her gathered and placed there; but to her humble, simple soul just the help she needed.

Years after, when grace had ripened and softened her still more, Miss Lydia would never allow any scorn or ridicule to be poured upon the symbols of other sects before her.

"Maybe it helps them greatly," she always said. "Such things do sometimes; I've been helped by 'em myself."

After this was pinned and tacked safely, she went about her preparations for dinner, and when that was over made up a bed for her guest in the spare chamber, and then lying on her homnet went to the ears. Lyndon Station was a lonely platform, half a mile from the small village, and she was the only waiting woman; so when the train stopped it was no wonder that Marietta at a glance threw herself into Miss Lydia's arms, crying out:

"You are Aunt Lydia, ain't you? O, you dear, dear thing!"

Miss Lydia was taken by storm; never in her life had she seen anything like this pretty child, for Marietta was small for her age and only seventeen at that; her face was pure red and white as the fragile petals of a sweet pea, and her eyes and the red-brown hair curling in countless rings and waves about her pretty head, betrayed an excitable temperament, that the clinging arms and clattering tongue did not belie. Miss Lydia could not help folding her arms about the little thing and giving her a kiss that was almost motherly; there was something that was so sweet and child-like in her aspect nobody could help petting her and Lydia conveyed her home in a state of shameful triumph that surprised herself.

This, however, was the beginning; a hundred times a day the tiny green cross helped Miss Lydia to bear the annoyance that this pretty, spoiled child brought into her quiet home, yet as often as she looked at it, and remembered that she had first put it to the test of practice; the work that Christ reveals to us, also reveals Him; if we love Him we keep his commandments, and in keeping them learn to love him more and more. It is true that the habit of life, that worked its own remedy; the primitive meaning of her favorite expression rose up and confronted her every time, and she had again to bow her head in shame and ask grace to help her.

Yet with all the minor trials of her presence, Ety, as she learned to call her niece, grew dearer daily; youth and beauty and gaiety seemed to illuminate the formal house like an incarnate sunnier; and though at first Miss Lydia even rebelled at the flowers which were gathered to deck the parlor shelf and the sitting-room table every day, she opened her heart to them before long, as she had to Ety.

For a few weeks Marietta was restless and capricious; evidently she was wounded and grieved because her lover neither followed nor wrote to her. Aunt Lydia had let her parents know of her safe arrival in Lyndon, but even from home no answer came. At last the girl's reticence gave way; she leaned her head on the spinster's shoulder, and poured out her girlish sorrows and profuse tears together. It was a strange office to Miss Lydia, that of comforter; but she did as well as she could, and perhaps better than she knew, by assuring Ety that no doubt Mr. Peck was a great scamp and had had never loved her at all. This naturally made Marietta angry.

But she forgot to cry, and called Aunt Lydia a heartless old maid, in good set terms, so arousing the ancient Adam in that good lady's breast that she scarce refrained from boxing Ety's ears, and did call her a "little nuisance" on the spot. But the next day's mail brought a letter from Marietta's father which vindicated Miss Lydia's penetration into character. He had gone at once to young Peck when Marietta could not be found, and demanded his daughter, but the fellow denied all knowledge of her, after a time, under threat of personal chastisement, and warned in the most impressive way that Ety never would have a word of her father's money if she married him, he had promised solemnly to let her alone for the future and had even left town and gone west.

Till he had disappeared Mr. Crane read and reread Marietta's letter, and therefore did not write; now he was ready to receive and forgive her if she was ready to repent and return. But Ety did not want to go. She loved Aunt Lydia, and she had become attached to Mr. Sylvester, who had kept his promise to her aunt, and helped her guide and guard the wayward girl. Besides, she did not like to go home and face the gossip of the village, and the end of the matter was that Aunt Lydia asked her brother to leave Ety with her for the next year at least. It was surprising, even to Mr. Sylvester, to see how Miss Lydia took his words to heart, and lived up to them. He had not reckoned on the extreme honesty and simplicity of her real character, or the readiness of the good ground to receive and fertilize the truths sown in it, but they did indeed bear fruit a hundred fold.

It was her aunt's life that proved a living epistle to Ety; when a few years after some one asked her under whose preaching she had been converted, she smiled and said, "Under Aunt Lydia's printed and spoken."

For Ety never left Lyndon. Before her year's visit was over she had formed a very intimate acquaintance with a well-to-do young man who kept the village store, to whose character and principles her father could not object; so it turned out that she came to live close by Miss Lydia, who blessed the day many a time that she had so dreaded—the day of Ety's arrival at her house.

The boys profited by Miss Lydia's conclusion; grace, like sunshine, warms even the corners of life. She let them freely into her orchard to pick up the about nut windfalls, and when they were so free to come there was no fun in coming. So this, like many other of her minor trials, faded utterly away; for when our eyes are fixed on the mountain tops we do not see the pebbles under our feet, or if we do then they cease to trouble us, as we are hardly conscious of it in the absorbing splendor of those radiant heights where our home is.

As years went by patience became a habit, and peace an abiding guest; she forgot to say that things went "criss-cross" and she entered more into the meaning and services of Christ's cross. Old age came, and decrepitude, but the Master she had served cared for her still; as she had gone into His image friends had also grown up about her, and were glad to make her last days easy with affection and sympathy; her life was hid in the deepest sense, with Christ in God; and when it passed away from this world it was only to be found in another and a better, redeemer and glorified. If she had lived an even longer life, at least she left behind her one lesson—that "criss-cross" means, and is, Christ's cross.—Rose Terry Cook, in Sunday Afternoon.

Our Volunteers at the Onset of the War.

Beyond a very little drill, our officers at the onset knew nothing of their duties. I have seen a Colonel, a man of much militia experience, deploy column under fire in such fashion as to bring his rear rank in, and the right of every company where the left should be, with the necessary result of throwing his regiment into utter confusion. I have known a Captain sent out on vidette when he did not know what a vidette was, and formed his men as skirmishers. Commandants of grand guards were ignorant of the necessity of vigilance, and thought it a shame not to let their tired "boys" sleep on post. No one can estimate the number of brave men who perished uselessly in small operations because their immediate officers did not know how to manage them. In large operations it was still worse. Of men fit for independent commands, or even fit to handle a division under direct instructions, the State troops had none other as they always will have none. If we had not been opposed to troops about as ill directed as ourselves, and if we had not had the science of West Point and the regular service to organize and discipline and guide us, our early experiences would have been far more disastrous than they were.

The chief strength of the volunteer forces lay in the very superior character of the rank and file. They were brave, intelligent, self-respecting citizens, determined to master their own duties, and determined to win. More drill they learned rapidly, and to admiration. The necessity of discipline, and actually aided their officers in establishing it. Of their patience under the cruelty of forced marches, and of their courage on the field of battle, I cannot write now without a groan, and a shudder. The fragment of my old company, in its last bloody fight with a gallant enemy, made charge after charge under a corporal. "You don't go into such a hole because you like it," explained a trooper, describing a dash through a cannon-swept valley; "you go in because you are nattered to go back on the boys." "It's a burning shame that the Captain should be sent up without his own company," exclaimed a private soldier, when his officer was ordered forward to rally a forlorn hope which had already lost three commandants. "We may as well do it to-day as to-morrow," said the private, and he was the last to fall under Sheridan's to recover the field of Cedar Creek. Such was the spirit of the masses of that memorable army, and, also, as I suppose, of the very similar army which confronted it. Self-reliance, a sense of duty, a noble earnest purpose, and common sense, supplied in great measure the lack of complete discipline and of trained regimental officers.—November Atlantic.

Thinking the Census.

Gen. Francis A. Walker, Superintendent of Census, with a view to securing greater accuracy and uniformity in the agricultural statistics to be compiled for the tenth census, has just issued a circular setting forth the aims and wishes of the bureau with regard to the method of arranging such statistics. The agricultural schedule annexed to the act of 1880, which is also made a part of the act of March 3, 1879, providing for the tenth census, requires a report of the chief productions of agriculture "during the year ending June 1." There is, however, no distinct agricultural census taken on the 1st of June, and there is reason to believe that the statistics of agriculture from 1850 to 1870 in regard to many of the principal products embraced portions of two different years, and that the enumeration was protracted three, four or even five months. By the act approved March 3, 1879, it is provided that the tenth census shall be taken and completed during the month of June, 1880. This revision greatly reduces the liability to error which has been noted.

As the enumeration begins on the 1st of June and closes on or before the 30th, all the crops which are gathered once a year will fall under the census on one side or the other of the dividing line. Thus, the cotton crop reported in the census will be that of 1879, gathered in the fall of that year, while the wool clip or "wool year" will be that of the spring of 1880, except in portions of California and Texas, where both a fall and a spring clip are secured. For certain agricultural products, however, there is no harvest in the usual sense of the term, but the product is gathered week by week or day by day as it matures. Milk, butter, cheese and meat belong to this class.

To remove any doubts that may arise concerning the crops to be returned in the census, the following list presents the several crops specifically mentioned in the agricultural schedule, arranged as they fall into the calendar year 1879, or that of 1880, or are to be returned for the twelve months beginning June 1, 1879, and closing May 31, 1880. Of the crop of the calendar year of 1879: Wheat, corn, rye, oats, barley, buckwheat, rice, tobacco, cotton, potatoes, peas and beans, orchards, vineyards, small fruits, hay, clover seed, grass seed, hops, hemp, flax, flax seed, sugar cane and sorghum, acres and quantity; bees, number of hives, pounds of honey and wax. Of the crop of the calendar year 1880: Wool, number of fleeces and pounds; maple sugar, pounds; maple molasses, gallons. Of the yield of the twelve months ending May 31: Butter, cheese and milk sold, quantity; animals slaughtered, value; marketable gardens, acres and value; forest products and home manufactures, value.

SEVERAL young graduates have dropped into the New York Tribune office lately to inquire: "Have you all the Macaulays you want on the local?"—Cincinnati Commercial.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one cent.
Six months, $1.50
Twelve months, $2.50
IN ADVANCE.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, 5¢ per square of 8 lines;
5¢ more for each additional insertion.
Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, NOV. 8, 1879.

Those "barrels" didn't save the ticket.

All honor to Sang Run, the banner district of Garrett.

Accident was redeemed from a Democratic rule last Tuesday.

Is there any doubt as to the political status of Garrett county?

Where is that poor little "2" buried with the "rag baby"?

Getting beautifully less year after year. The Democratic majority in Oakland district.

The Result in Garrett.

Elsewhere we publish full returns of Tuesday's election in Garrett, and it will be seen that we have won a glorious victory, electing every man on the ticket by good majorities. The Republicans were rather surprised at the extent of their victory, but not so much so as the Democrats, who confidently counted on electing part of the county ticket. We have always maintained that this county was strongly Republican; all that is necessary is for our voters to turn out.

The Elections Elsewhere.

The elections Tuesday resulted in a sweeping victory for the Republican party. From all parts of the Union comes the intelligence of heavy Republican gains, as the people's rebuke of the attempt of the Democratic caucus to overthrow the independence of the Chief Executive, and destroy the distribution of the powers of government made by the founders of the republic. In New York the entire ticket makes large gains, and Cornell is elected by 25,000 majority. The legislature remains Republican; and of the senators elected yesterday, many hold over to vote in 1881 for a successor to Senator Kernan. In Connecticut and New Jersey the Republicans secure a majority in the legislature, ensuring the election of Republicans in place of Senators Eaton and Randolph. In Massachusetts, Butler is buried beneath a majority large enough to keep that demagogue down in his political grave; and in Virginia the indications are that the honesty of the state has triumphed, and a majority of the legislature will oppose all the schemes of the repudiators, and sustain the settlement of the debt question made by the last legislature. The elections show that the hopes and confidence of the people are with the Republican party, and its success in 1880 is plainly indicated.

CONNECTICUT.

HARTFORD, CT., November 4.—The election in Connecticut to-day was for members of the legislature and senators in only eleven out of the twenty-one counties. Of these, the Republicans elect ten and the Democrats one. The Senate will stand 17 Republicans to 4 Democrats. The House will probably stand about 150 to 93, or a Republican majority of between 60 and 70 on joint ballot. The assemblymen now elected do not choose a United States senator, but the senators elected now hold over till next year, and will vote for a senator to succeed Mr. Eaton.

MASSACHUSETTS.

BOSTON, November 4.—8:35 p. m. Returns, as far as received, indicate that Long, Republican candidate for Governor, is elected by 10,000 to 13,000 plurality, and this may be increased to 15,000 by further returns. The Republican candidates for state offices are probably all elected, and the legislature will be largely Republican. The vote shows a material falling off as compared with last year—the prohibition vote amounting to little and the straight Democratic ticket receiving but small support.

WISCONSIN.

MILWAUKEE, November 5.—12:30 a. m.—One hundred and thirty-nine towns and cities, including Milwaukee, show a net Republican gain of 8,677, over the vote of two years ago. Smith (Rep.), for Governor, has a majority of 17,000 so far, with half the state to hear from. His majority is safely estimated at 22,000, and with a strong probability of 24,000. The Assembly and Senate are strongly Republican. Ex-State Treasurer Kuehn is defeated for the Assembly by more than 200 majority, the district giving him four years ago 660 majority. No more returns expected from the state to-night.

PENNSYLVANIA.

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 5.—Returns from all but five districts in Allegheny county give a Republican majority on the State ticket of 6,000. The Republican county ticket is elected by majorities ranging from 3,426 to 6,000.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 5.—Pennsylvania has gone Republican by 50,000 majority.

MINNESOTA.

ST. PAUL, Nov. 5.—Very heavy Republican gains throughout the State.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, Nov. 4.—Cornell's plurality in the entire State will be from 25,000 to 30,000. The rest of the state ticket is still doubtful, but probably elected by small plurality. The Legislature remains Republican.

NEW JERSEY.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 4.—The Republicans have gained one state senator in New Jersey, and probably five or six members of the Assembly. They will retain control of both branches of the legislature—the Senate by a majority of 3, and the Assembly probably by 14 or 16 majority.

NEBRASKA.

LINCOLN, NEB., Nov. 4.—11:30 p. m.—Election returns come in slowly. Indications are that Cobb, Republican candidate for Supreme Judge, is elected over Wakely, (Dem.) by 12,000 majority. Gannett and Carson (Rep.) for Regents of the University are elected. The total vote of the state will reach 60,000. Republican county tickets are generally successful. The Greenbackers make a very small showing.

ILLINOIS.

CHICAGO, Nov. 4.—The election to-day was quiet and peaceable. A good, full vote was polled. Party lines were strictly drawn. The indications are that the city is Republican by 5,000, a gain of 10,000, and the county by 7,000 to 8,000.

MARYLAND.

The Democratic State ticket is elected by from 15,000 to 17,000 majority.

MISSISSIPPI.

Mississippi was carried by the Democrats by their usual majority.

A few special tickets were printed at this office for J. W. Vetch, Esq., in which the names of Samuel Mallahan and F. M. Darby were reversed. This mistake was made by us in the hurry of printing, and no one else is responsible in the least.

As the Democrats in Congress during the coming session seem determined to revise the customs laws, with a view of reducing tariff and decreasing the tax on whiskey, so as to relieve the moonshiners of Tennessee and North Carolina from the temptation of evading the law, the composition of the House Committee of Ways and Means, which will have charge of the matter, becomes of interest. Four of the Republican members—Frye, Conger, Kelly and Dannel—are strong protectionists, and Garfield will vote with them against revision, although he rather favors a tariff only for revenue, and Phelps, of Connecticut, is the only Democratic protectionist, while Morrison, of Illinois, is the only out-and-out free trader. The other members—Tucker, Gibson, Mills, Carlisle and Felton—call themselves free traders, but they want cotton, tobacco, and sugar protected, while Wood, the chairman, will favor a revision. The committee thus stands seven for revision and six against it. With a majority of only one, and the ablest man on the committee opposed to any change, the Democrats who hope to revolutionize the tariff schedule will probably find the job too big for them to handle.

Arrangements are making to send a number of Northern Republican speakers to assist in the Louisiana canvass, and the President is known to heartily approve of the plan. It is argued that the presence of distinguished Northern statesmen would deter the rifle clubs from interfering with Republican meetings, and would encourage the Republican voters to form campaign organizations. We are also of the opinion that such an arrangement would have a good effect; but not on account of any fear which the presence of Northern speakers might inspire, but from the appeal it would make to Southern hospitality and courtesy. We do not doubt that if Senator Blaine should visit Louisiana, he would be treated with distinguished consideration and he as free from molestation in stamping the State as he would be in Maine. The intercourse of Northern Republicans with the White Leaguers would give each a better understanding with each other, and promote the growth of more just and kindly feelings between the two sections.—Baltimore American.

Value of a Vote.

INTERESTING TO CANDIDATES.

It was the morning after an election. A weary-faced, patient-eyed man came to the reporter and said: "I want you to make a few figures for me. I'm a little unstrung to-day, and can't trust myself."

We recognized him as a defeated candidate for the Legislature and a good fellow in his way. We signified our willingness to accommodate him, whereupon he drew forth a little note book with the explanation: "You see I am keeping a little account of my expenses in this canvass—wanted to find out what it would cost me, you know. I set the items down as they came, and I think I've got nigh about all, though there may be a few which I overlooked. I want to see what each vote cost me. Are you ready? Well, put down Benjamin Joseph Mallen, candidate for the Legislature.

Received 341 votes.
Cost—9 months and 23 days' time, 1,376 hours' sleep, 4 acres of tobacco, 25 acres of corn, whole sweet potato crop, 25 sheep, 2 front teeth and one handful of hair.
GIVE AWAY—531 papers garden seed, 37 plugs tobacco, 863 drinks of whiskey, 27 Sunday School books, 2 pairs of gaiters, 4 calico dresses, 7 dolls, 19 baby rattles.

MISCELLANEOUS—Lied 2,199 times, shook hands 11,770 times, talked 1,600 Patent Office Reports full, held 122 horses and 125 babies, kindled 6 kitchen fires, cut 2 cords of wood, pulled 90 bundles of fodder, toted 17 buckets of water, hung out one washing of clothes, put up 3 steves, got dog bit twice, got watch smashed by corn sheller.

LINT OUT—3 barrels of flour, 8 bushels of meal, 75 lb. of bacon, 18 lbs. butter, 5 dozen eggs, 3 umbrellas, 13 lead pencils, 1 Bible dictionary, 1 movin' blade, 1 hoe, 1 pair pants—none of which have been returned.
Dated opponent a penumbulating liar, doctor's bill $10, had 2 arguments with wife, resulting in destruction of flower vase, 1 dish of hash, 1 shirt bosom, 10c. worth of sticking plaster.

Had it proved possible that my great uncle was a cannibal, that my grandmother wore hoops, that I will die in the penitentiary, and that my boy will be worth a million in bonds.
Spent $551 traveling and sundry expenses, and let me see, oh, yes, I left the other items at home; I get 'em this evening. And then I want you to add up and divide, and tell me how much them 341 votes cost me—divide into all them items separately, you see; 1 vote to so many dollars and so many potatoes and hand-shakes and cannibals and front teeth and so on all run out in fractions, you see. And then you can go on and calculate how long they things or their equivalent would'er run Memphis durin' the yellow fever, and how many eight-day clocks the time I spent would run, and how many threshers, and how many grist-mills, and how many trains of cars from here to Boston, filled with pig iron, could be moved by the power and energy I spent in the race; and oh! you can make lots of beautiful statistics of them when I bring you the other items this evening—lots and lots."

Then he left, and we have been dodgin' around corners ever since to keep from meetin' him again.

Capt. Burke, of the Gate City Guards, Atlanta, Ga., which recently made a tour of the Northern and Eastern States, made a speech on his return home, in which he said: "While mingling with the Northern people there was one prevailing sentiment, which was that, while the memories of the past are sacred with the people of both sections, a grand future is before us. As brave men they did not ask us to forget memories that are dear to us, nor did we ask them to obliterate recollections that are sacred to them. There is not a vacant chair in our Southern homes that has not its counterpart in Northern households. The past is to be deplored, and looking to the future, our Northern friends assert that our visit among them has accomplished more toward harmony and good feeling between the sections than all the politicians could have achieved in a century."

General Sherman is generally credited with holding the opinion that all live Indians are bad, and in his annual report he does not hesitate to say that the Utes are the worst of the lot. Not only are they so by nature, but also by circumstances, inhabiting one of the wildest and most dangerous tracts in the country. They no longer have buffalo to hunt, but there are plenty of bear, deer and elk in the mountains; and General Sherman thinks there will be no civilization in them until they are starved to it. The last letters of Major Thornburgh and Agent Meeker, which are given with General Sherman's report, in another column, will be found very interesting, as they go to show that the massacre of Thornburgh and his soldiers was not due to any mistake or neglect on his part or that of Agent Meeker, or to any want of knowledge among the Indians in regard to the purpose of Thornburgh's mission, or any misunderstanding, but to pure cussedness on the part of the White River Utes.

Since the close of the war military titles have been so common that a man with a military handle to his front name has not been invited to drink offener than the plain misters. But there is a general who is now returning to this country after a long absence, and whose permanent residence with us for the future will be most enthusiastically greeted by all classes, sects and parties. We do not allude to the illustrious Ex. President, the brave chieftain who commanded the United States army in war and who ruled in peace for two terms the Nation he preserved from dismemberment. He will be welcomed as he deserves in all our cities, when he appears there after his protracted tour in foreign lands, where he was feted by kings and awarded higher honors than had heretofore been tendered to an American citizen. We refer especially to General Prosperity, who makes his glorious campaigns in the times of peace and plenty when no personal risk or danger is incurred, and all our citizens participate in the triumph of industry, trade, commerce and agriculture. The advent of this well-beloved General is heralded by the revival of business, resumption of specie payments, active demand for labor and other auspicious symptoms that diffuse universal joy and gladness in the community.—Balto. Herald.

The Southern Democrats begin to look upon their Northern allies as they did during the war, as men who encouraged them into a fight and then left them to their fate. It is a fact that sets out strongly that the Democrats in the Northern States have not dared to maintain their State Rights ground before Northern constituencies, as they did in Congress, and as the Southern Democrats do. On this subject the Washington correspondent of the New Orleans Picayune takes the "Secessionism" of the Ohio Democrats in the recent canvass as a striking example. They evaded, he says, the issue used with the greatest effect by the Republican party, and still far heralded their cowardice by keeping the more reprehensible by the fact that the issues which are made the basis of a new agitation, and are charged to the Southern account, were in reality demanded by Ohio Democrats. The demand for the repeal of the Election laws came from Ohio "so, too," he says, "as to the repeal of the laws prohibiting the employment of troops at the polls," and the corresponding fair remarks that "the main cause for Northern Democrats would be to take the whole brunt of the whole fight on themselves," instead of allowing the policy to be regarded as the Southern policy, and withholding from Southern the opportunity of stating their case in their own way. The cur criticism passed upon these tactics of the Ohio Democratic managers is that whenever the party "gets so that a prominent Democrat from any part of the country cannot go before the people in another part of the country, the nationality of the party has received a serious if not fatal injury." This is a just criticism. But unfortunately for the Confederate Democratic party, the cause of the criticism cannot be helped. During the war the Northern Democrats could not risk their necks by recklessly exposing the Southern rebellion; so now, they cannot be expected to risk their political hold entirely to gratify their rebel friends.

The following is an extract from the last speech ever delivered by Senator Chandler: The mission of the Republican party is not ended. I tell you furthermore, Mr. Chairman, that it has just begun. I tell you furthermore, that it will never end until you and I can start from the Canada border, Black Republican speeches wherever we please, vote the Black Republican ticket wherever we gain a residence, and do it exactly with the same safety that a rebel can travel through the North, stop wherever he has a mind to, and not for judge in any city he chooses.

The following is an extract from the last speech ever delivered by Senator Chandler: The mission of the Republican party is not ended. I tell you furthermore, Mr. Chairman, that it has just begun. I tell you furthermore, that it will never end until you and I can start from the Canada border, Black Republican speeches wherever we please, vote the Black Republican ticket wherever we gain a residence, and do it exactly with the same safety that a rebel can travel through the North, stop wherever he has a mind to, and not for judge in any city he chooses.

GARRETT O. K.

The Democrat will take a last fond look at that poor little "2."

GARRETT COUNTY ELECTION RETURNS.

STATE AND COUNTY ELECTION, TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1879.

CANDIDATES.	No. 1, Altoona.	No. 2, Selkirk.	No. 3, Grantsville.	No. 4, Bloomington.	No. 5, Accident.	No. 6, Sang Run.	No. 7, Oakland.	No. 8, Ryans Glade.	No. 9, Frostburg.	Total.
Governor.
James A. Garey, R.	111	155	236	93	198	105	199	104	23	1122
William T. Hamilton, D.	125	96	204	93	107	42	205	69	51	1001 Comptroller.
Samuel Mallahan, R.	130	125	226	93	108	105	198	104	23	1121
Thomas J. Keating, D.	127	97	204	99	107	42	203	63	54	1002
Attorney General.
F. M. Darby, R.	130	121	225	93	108	105	198	104	23	1119
C. J. M. Gwinn, D.	127	96	204	100	107	42	205	69	51	1001
Clerk Court of Appeals.
J. T. McCullough, R.	138	125	236	93	108	105	199	104	23	1121
Spencer C. Jones, D.	127	96	202	99	107	42	205	69	51	1008
Clerk Circuit Court.
W. H. Tower, R.	102	136	237	100	120	93	232	111	52	1210
R. T. Browning, D.	96	82	104	80	95	55	166	60	21	852
State's Attorney.
J. W. Veitch, D.	128	95	204	102	106	45	247	69	54	1050
Sheriff.
George D. White, R.	140	121	223	94	109	105	195	93	21	1107
James W. Mason, D.	128	96	204	97	105	42	205	80	53	1010
House of Delegates.
George W. Wilson, R.	133	119	200	96	107	98	195	102	53	1100
Austin Spierker, R.	132	121	212	92	105	105	187	102	41	1113
C. S. Hamill, D.	132	99	200	86	95	49	233	76	30	983
W. R. Getty, D.	115	90	235	96	105	41	183	63	22	979
Register of Wills.
W. H. Hagans, R.	113	124	214	90	108	107	188	96	18	1108
W. L. Rawlings, D.	128	96	196	101	107	40	215	76	50	1016
County Commissioners.
D. Harrison Friend, R.	127	126	222	90	114	116	214	102	53	1131
John Wilhelm, R.	119	121	236	93	109	101	196	102	55	1136
Wm. W. Broadwater, R.	132	121	233	100	108	102	195	102	21	1121
Melchior J. Miller, D.	116	97	197	91	181	41	195	68	55	968
Rudolph Beckman, D.	132	91	191	91	105	41	198	72	21	957
J. F. Robinson, D.	125	91	205	96	107	30	199	70	55	975
Judges Orphans' Court.
Joseph DeWitt, R.	141	131	229	91	118	107	207	104	23	1151
William Harvey, R.	147	123	226	87	108	63	210	101	23	1114
Isaac H. Knooken, R.	110	124	216	93	108	103	180	105	23	1104
A. J. Michael, D.	120	91	207	90	102	41	199	69	51	971
E. P. Brant, D.	120	97	201	85	101	49	216	70	55	992
Amos Broadwater, D.	123	90	192	90	101	42	200	69	55	995
County Surveyor.
John Harrod, R.	126	128	230	100	110	106	214	105	23	1102
Wm. McCrobie, D.	138	92	197	83	105	41	192	67	54	995

Major-General Joseph Hooker, died at Garden City, Long Island, on Friday evening of last week. He had been in his usual health until an hour before his death. Gen. Hooker was born in Hadley, Mass., in 1815. He was appointed a cadet at West Point in 1833, and graduated at that institution in 1837 and was immediately appointed a lieutenant of artillery and entered the army. During the Mexican war he distinguished himself on numerous occasions, and on his return he was promoted to the rank of Captain of Artillery. He retired from the army in 1858, and devoted himself to farming until the commencement of the rebellion. He was appointed a Brigadier of volunteers in 1861, and rendered distinguished services.

His acts of valor during the seven days' battle before Richmond secured him the name of "Fighting Joe Hooker," and led to his promotion to the rank of Major General. He was soon after assigned to the command of a corps, then of a division, and on the removal of Gen. Burnside was placed in command of the Army of the Potomac, from which he was relieved by Gen. Meade a few days before the battle of Gettysburg. He served in the Southwest during the latter part of the war, and in 1865 was assigned to the command of the army of the East, with headquarters in New York. He married Miss Olivia Groesbeck, of Cincinnati, the same year.

THE OTHER SIDE.—Miss La Flesche, a daughter of White Eagle, head chief of the Omaha Indians, in a talk recently with a newspaper man, said of the Indian question: "You hear but one side. We have no newspapers to tell our story. I tell you the soldiers do things with the prisoners or dead as horrible as any Indian could think of. Then you people are almost always the transgressors. I'll tell you a case I know of: Two young white men met an Indian with a basket of potatoes. One of them said he would like to say when he went home to the East that he had shot an Indian. The other dared him to shoot this one. He drew a revolver and shot him. The Indian was an Omaha, Oh, I tell you, if he had been a Cheyenne or a Sioux you would have heard from it. But we knew we would gain nothing, and nothing was done. I propose that you white people treat us on a platform of plain honesty, and let us be citizens. We now are farmers, and are doing well. We want to stay there, and want assurance that we can live like other farmers. We have denounced the chiefs, and want to be just like any other citizens of the State."

President Hayes on the Third Term. Some curiosity has been manifested of late to know what the views of the President are on the third term question and the Grant "boom" generally. The President has studiously maintained of late an unbroken silence touching all matters pertaining to the next presidency, and not even his closest friends have been able to elicit from him anything that would indicate that he has a preference for any of the several aspirants, or that he favors any one more than another. It is true that the expression has gained ground that Gen. Sherman is his first choice, and that he will exert whatever influence he possesses to advance his interests. There is no foundation whatever for this supposition. Regarding Grant and the third term, the President long ago defined his position. He cherishes a warm friendship for him. He does not think that the simple fact that Grant had been President heretofore would necessarily bar him from candidacy in 1880 should the people want him. The lapse of one term has placed Grant on a footing with every private citizen, no more, no less. The dangers of second and third consecutive terms were that the incumbent could use the vast powers and patronage of his office to aid him in securing a re-nomination. But Grant was entirely out of public life, and these objections, therefore, did not hold as to him. At the proper time the American people, with whom rest is a sovereign power, would judge of this matter, and no doubt determine wisely.

COSTLY PEeping.—A young school mistress who peeped has lost her certificate, and the Supreme Court of Iowa will give her no redress. She had applied for a certificate, and during the examination was caught glancing over the shoulder of another applicant and getting answers to questions propounded in arithmetic. The superintendent refused to issue the certificate, and the young lady brought suit in the circuit court to compel him to do so. She carried her point in the lower court, but the decision has been reversed in the Supreme Court.

The supreme bench of the circuit court of Baltimore city has decided that it is not in the power of the court to reinstate upon the registry lists persons whose names have been stricken therefrom. In other words, there is no redress for the incompetency or rascality of registrars.

LOCAL NEWS.

—D. E. Offutt shipped 100 bushels of chestnuts west, this week.

—$20,000 to loan on first-class commercial paper. Apply to D. E. Offutt. oct18-1f.

—"Deem" Spiker says he cast the vote in Accident that gave the Republicans a majority of one.

—200 sacks G. A. Salt for sale at Wm. P. Totten's Clean Cash Store, Oakland, Md. a26-1f.

—T. J. Archibald, residing on Deep Creek, this county, raised from the seed this season, onions weighing 10 ounces each.

—Died—At the residence of his son, in Oakland, Md., Tuesday, Nov. 14th, 1879, James Chisholm, aged 60 years, 6 months and 12 days. Deceased was born in Halifax, Nova Scotia.

—Mr. John Pfeiffer had a finger cut off a few days since, by a bar of iron falling upon it. A few days later his little son was thrown from a horse and had his arm badly cut by the horse stepping on it between the elbow and shoulder.

—Our enterprising merchant, D. H. Lutz, is somewhat of a granger. He raised this year on his lot in Oakland cabbage weighing 19 pounds and turnips weighing 14 pounds. This is ahead of anything in the cabbage or turnip line we have noticed this season.

—The Mines Commission has pressing invitations to visit the Elk-Garden, Connellsville and New Creek coal regions and examine their resources with a view to mention in connection with their report of Maryland mining interests. These do not include several undeveloped coal properties they have promised to explore in this county. They will probably accede to the requests made.—Probury Journal.

Church Services—Sunday.

M. E. Church.—Preaching in the evening at 7 o'clock, by Rev. H. C. Sanford.

Large Buck Killed.

Tuesday last Messrs. Yancy and John L. Walz, of Oakland, killed a six-prong buck, near this town, which weighed, drawn, 220 pounds, the saddle weighing 93 pounds. This is one of the largest deer that has been killed here for several years.

Allegany County.

Allegany county gives the Republican State ticket nearly 200 majority, and elects the county clerk, the State's attorney, all of the Delegate ticket, four out of five Commissioners and two out of three Judges of the Orphans' Court. Garrett is proud of her mother.

Grand Fair and Festival.

By reference to our advertising columns, it will be seen that a grand Fair and Festival will be held in Offutt's Hall on Nov. 12, 13, 14 and 15, for the benefit of the Garrett Guards and the Oakland Cornet Band, to aid in procuring uniforms and equipments. It is proposed to exhibit the agricultural and manufactured products of the county, and our farmers and manufacturers are cordially invited to exhibit their produce and wares, for which premiums will be given. The citizens of the county generally, and our neighbors of Preston are cordially invited to be present. Want of time and space prevents a more extended notice.

Loading in Stores.

The long nights are here, the fall has arrived, the flies will be luxuries in stores and other places as the evenings get cooler. As a usual thing from time almost immemorial, old fogies will congregate in the stores, stretch their legs in front of the stoves to the disgust of the clerks, and to keep their tongues in motion, will enlighten every one who listens to them on the most important topics of the day. For example—they will tell you what a minister ought to say; that John Johnson's wife has too many new dresses in a year for John's pocketbook; then Simons Shingle's hog will be the heaviest in town come killing time, and will produce the most lard, etc.; and when they have "had their say" they will go home and wonder what the world would be had they "never been born" to enlighten their ignorant neighbors.

Support of the Ministry.

The Methodist Recorder, in a long editorial on the "Support of the Ministry," discourses thus: "Another difficulty in the way of ministerial support would be removed if the members of the church would remember that their pastor is dependent on their contributions for their support, and that he does not live three months or a year at a time, but that he lives day by day like other people, and as he has a constant outlay, he should have a constant income. Many people think that the preacher can live on promises to the end of the year, and that assured that he will then receive what is promised him, it will be all right. This is not correct. A preacher never feels entirely sure that he will receive all that is promised him, even at the end of the year; and if he is under the necessity of going in debt to live, he is not certain that even at the end of the year he will receive enough to pay his debts; so that all the year his mind is burdened and distressed lest he shall, at last, be unable to meet his obligations, and thereby bring reproach upon himself and upon the cause of Christ.

Why should not Christian people act toward their pastor as they act toward others in their employ. In almost every branch of business men are paid at the end of the week. They are not expected to work for a month, or three months, or six months before they receive their wages. This is not necessary. They must be paid to enable them to live and work. And why should not the same rule apply to ministers? They are generally as dependent as other men, and should be paid for their services as regularly as others. Men who work in our rolling mills, and glass houses, and cabinet shops, and carpenter shops, and printing offices, and almost everywhere receive their wages at the end of the week, so that they may square accounts and supply the wants of their families. So it should be with the pastor. He should be paid as regularly as any other man, for the labor he performs is just as important and his necessities are just as great as those of other men.

Garrett County.

(Adapted from the Madison, Ind., Star.)
Ha! ha!
Hi! hi!
Huzzah!
Bite us!
Slap us!
Jerk us!
Kick us!
Ha! ha!
Pinch us!
Ha! ha! ha!
Shake us up!
Pull our hair!
Call us a liar!
Tear our shirt!
Give us a kick!
Ha! ha! ha! ha!
Bash us with tar!
Pull us this way!
Pull us that way!
Beat a brass drum!
Tip our breeches!
Scratch our head!
Jag us with a pin!
Talk "Lajun" to us!
Spit on our boots!
Nip us in the flank!
Trip upon our toes!
Call us a mule-head!
Pull us the other way!
Pull out our shirt tail!
Bring on another horse!
Cuff us about the ears!
Bring out a velocipede!
Blow paper balls at us!
Throw mud all over us!
O, we feel so very jolly!
Treat us to a good cigar!
Pull us all around about!
Punch us in the left ribs!
Bring us a bottle to kick!
Stand us upon our head!
Spill the ink on our table!
Blow smoke into our eyes!
Sing us with a hot poker!
Pull your hat over your eyes!
Get a pretty girl to hug us!
Stick a stove up your nose!
Bother us with an old fogey!
Tie the dog's tail to a tin pan!
Blow a tin horn in our ear!
Talk to us about "pessum eggs!"
Send us a can of fresh oysters!
Run us down with a corn cob!
Pin read tannal to our coat tail!
Stick sauer kraut under our nose!
Get a lady to cross a mud puddle!
Boat pin pans in front of our door!
Talk about the Live Men's March!
Clip off one half of our mustache!
Squeeze us with spruce old maid!
Tickle our neck with brown straw!
Have the band play Mollie Darling!
Show us a red striped female stocking!

Anything to keep us from exploding with joy over the glorious Republican victory in Garrett county!

A circular has been issued from the Treasury Department prohibiting the importation of neat cattle from the Dominion of Canada on Dec. 1st, and after until otherwise directed. Similar precautions having been taken by the Dominion authorities to prevent the introduction of diseased cattle in the provinces, and as there is just the same danger to the United States from the introduction of provincial cattle, this precaution is only fair.

See to it that your child meets with no neglect; when sick, use for its relief Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup. Price, 25 cents.

Thurman has been heard from. He admits the result surprised him somewhat, but declares that it will relieve him of the duties of an arduous position and give him a chance for needed rest. It does look that way. As for the Democratic party, of course that isn't dead. He regards that as indestructible. With the Republican party, he says, there is a "necessity for making now and then a tremendous struggle to retain existence, and this is one of the occasions." It seems to have been. The conflict which began in 1861 was another of those "tremendous struggles." A peculiarity of them, which the Senator didn't mention, is that they always succeed. There will be another in November, and still another in 1880.

TELEGRAPHIC.

Thanksgiving Day Proclamation.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 3.—The following proclamation was issued by the President to-day:

"At no recurrence of the season which the devout habit of a religious people has made the occasion for giving thanks to Almighty God and humbly invoking his continued favor, has the material prosperity enjoyed by our whole country been more conspicuous, more manifold, or more universal. During the past year, also, unbroken peace with all foreign nations, the general prevalence of domestic tranquillity, the supremacy and security of the great institutions of civil and religious freedom, have gladdened the hearts of our people and confirmed their attachment to their government, which the wisdom and courage of our ancestors so fittingly framed, and the wisdom and courage of their descendants have so firmly maintained, to be the habitation of liberty and justice to successive generations. Now, therefore, I, Rutherford B. Hayes, President of the United States, do appoint Thursday, the 27th day of November, instant, as a day of national thanksgiving and prayer; and I earnestly recommend that, withdrawing themselves from secular cares and labors, the people of the United States do meet together on that day in their respective places of worship, there to give thanks and praise to Almighty God for his mercies, and to devoutly beseech their continuance. In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed. Done at the city of Washington this third day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-nine, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and tenth."

"RUTHERFORD B. HAYES.
"By the President—
"WM. M. EVARTS, Secretary of State."

SUDDEN DEATH OF SENATOR CHANDLER.

CHICAGO, Nov. 1.—Senator Zachariah Chandler, of Michigan, was found dead in his bed, at the Grand Pacific Hotel this morning. He had been speaking in Wisconsin, and last night addressed an immense audience at McConnell Hall, in this city, and spoke with his usual earnestness. After the meeting, when he, Senator Logan and Hon. Jose Spaulding were sitting in his room engaged in conversation, Senator Chandler complained of indigestion. As he had complained of the same distressing feeling while enroute to the city with these gentlemen, Mr. Spaulding suggested that he might remain over in the city until Saturday night, but he said business affairs required his attention at home, and the order was given to have him called in the morning at 7 o'clock. His friends then bade him good night and left. That is the last time the Senator was seen.

REBUKES REPUTATION.
RICHMOND, VA., October 31.—The Intelligencer this evening publishes what it says is not a stolen statement, but the out spoken and candid statement of the views of President Hayes on the Virginia debt canvass, given to its editor, Col. John H. Popham, during his recent visit to Washington.

The President said: "I have nothing to conceal or withhold from any one and prefer that my position should be known to all. I do not assume to command or control the votes of the Republicans of Virginia, nor do I speak in a despotic way to influence the action of Federal officers, yet I would be much surprised if the Republicans should ally themselves with the readjusters in your State. They should not countenance or encourage or touch any proposition or project whatever that contains even the germ of repudiation. They must not sacrifice the great principle involved in the payment of the honest debts of Virginia, even though to do so would result in some transient advantage over their adversaries. This is not a question of to-day but of all time. Virginia is making the greatest mistake of her life. Forcible readjustment is in principle nothing less than repudiation. Don't your people know that there is not a respectable man in all the North who will be likely to settle in your State unless you act the part of honest men and pay what you owe? Here, in Washington, where I am living, so near to your State, I almost feel I am within its territory, my interest has been aroused in your troubles. Indeed, in a speech which I made at Detroit, Mich., a few weeks ago, I had Virginia and Tennessee almost solely in my mind when I dwelt on the enormous wrong and injury of repudiation in all its forms and that speech I sent to Gen. Wickham, with this portion of it (pointing to the part) marked that he and all others interested might understand my feelings about the controversy in Virginia. My views on the general subject are those which I know are entertained by Gen. Grant, Senator Blaine, Secretary Sherman and all other leading Republicans in every part of the North, East and West, and surely Southern Republicans will not place themselves in opposition to such leaders."

The Intelligencer states that the President said a great deal more on the subject and finally inquired if Federal officials—namely the district attorneys and collectors of customs at Richmond, Norfolk and Harrisonburg, collectors of internal revenue at Petersburg, Richmond and other points and postmasters of this and other important cities and towns in the State were not supporting the debt-payers. He seemed gratified to hear that they were, and then said he hoped the colored people of Virginia would not be misled by the appeals of demagogues and be induced to cast their votes against the debt-payers, the party of honesty and right in this contest.

GEN. GRANT'S EASTWARD JOURNEY.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Mo., Nov. 3.—The special train sent from Chicago by the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad, with Col. and Mrs. F. D. Grant, Capt. J. G. Walker, secretary of the road, and two reporters of the press, arrived at Council Bluffs early yesterday morning. The engine is gayly decorated with American flags and evergreens. The train consists of a baggage car and six passenger cars. At 9:30 this morning a detachment of infantry, headed by the regiment band, and followed by carriages containing Gen. Grant, the mayor of Omaha and Mrs. Grant, came in sight. They were received by Col. Grant and his wife. Owing to a misunderstanding as to the date of leaving, there were only a few hundred people at the depot when the train started, to the tune of "Marching Through Georgia."

RED OAK, IOWA, Nov. 3.—The special train which had backed into Omaha was received by a large crowd at Council Bluffs. Thirty-nine members of the Grand Army of the Republic welcomed Gen. Grant, and Gov. Gear made a speech of welcome and offered an escort of the Grand Army across Iowa, which Gen. Grant accepted, with the remark that "there was a time when their protection was more needed than now. I hope this occasion may prove more pleasant than when I needed your escort before. I thank you, Governor, and the State of Iowa heartily, for your good-will and escort." Three cheers were then given for the General, and an enthusiastic German procession "three cheers for the American King."

Soon after the train started a man who was attempting to climb to the platform was fatally injured by falling under the wheels. Arriving here about noon State Senator Hibbard stepped on the platform and introduced Gen. Grant, who spoke briefly, assuring the people of Iowa that he was always glad to take them by the hand, both at their homes and in the field. Mrs. Grant being called for appeared and bowed as the train moved off.

IRELAND.

LONDON, November 3.—The so-called anti-rent and land reform demonstrations in Ireland are rapidly degenerating into terrorism and mob rule. It is reported that in the County Mayo armed and disguised agrarian bands are threatening vengeance upon all tenants who pay their rentals. Pickets warning and threatening all such are nailed on church doors in the night time, and terrifying symbols are distributed through the neighborhood. Many landlords are organizing defense and vigilance committees and protesting against the vilifications of the partisan press.

The Catholic Bishop of Cashal has sent a vigorous protest to the Government against the proposed scheme to colonize Irish peasantry in Zululand, and urging that Ireland be the fittest place for Irishmen.

Peter Leary, who came over from Canada to investigate the truth of the reported destitution among his countrymen at home, has made a tour of inspection of several Irish counties, making careful observation of the real condition of things. He reports to the Chancellor of the Exchequer that a famine is imminent, unless the Government take immediate measures for the relief of the people. The Chancellor coolly replies that the whole subject will be submitted to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland for investigation and report.

WHAT MONTGOMERY BLAIR THINKS OF THE OHIO IDEA.

WASHINGTON, November 13.—Of the irrepressible conflict now progressing in the Democratic party, the following extracts from a letter recently written by Montgomery Blair respecting Ohio politics and politicians, furnishes an excellent illustration. The letter discloses among other things that to the best of the writer's knowledge and belief the Democratic party has no principles which any person is bound to respect, and it is liable at any time to be bought and sold in open market. Mr. Blair says:

They alone (the leaders of the Ohio Democracy) are responsible for "the impossible conjunction" of "the hard money candidate and soft-money platform"—itself sufficient to account for our defeat in 1868. They then stultified themselves and the party, and have since kept it in a false position for the merely selfish object of securing the advancement of the "Ohio man" of the day. Thus in 1868, when the South was in the throes of reconstruction and negro suffrage, and carpet-bag domination was forced on the people by military usurpation, we had the advantage presented to us of an appeal to the instincts of the white race in support of the constitution, an issue which would have enabled us to have bought back to the party the whole war Democracy, if Mr. Pendleton had not then brought confusion into our councils by endeavoring to whoop up a party for himself within the party to command its nominations on the greenback issue. Having himself declared the legal tender act unconstitutional when proposed as a means of carrying on the war, his proposition to flood the country with greenbacks to pay off the public debt was naturally hailed by our opponents as repudiation of the public debt, and they eagerly seized upon this issue to withdraw the public mind from their gross usurpation on the right of local self government. The greenback issue was, in fact the continuation by our own men of the war issue. It was treated as an appeal to the South and to the Southern sympathizers to repudiate the debt contracted in putting down the rebellion, and the fact that the leader in the movement had opposed as unconstitutional the issue of greenbacks as a means of carrying on the war, and now sought to multiply this unconstitutional issue till it becomes worthless, and thus abolish our public debt, was the most effectual means which could be conceived to keep alive the party division of the war. The effect within the party was for the same reason very great, sufficient to have the doctrine incorporated in our platform, but not sufficient to secure Mr. Pendleton the nomination. His followers, however, had the power to name the nominee. They did not confer it upon Gov. Hendricks, who stood with them on their platform, but upon Gov. Seymour, who repudiated it altogether, shows how entirely the movement was personal; for the consideration that Gov. Hendricks was a Western man—they supposed his nomination in 1868 would be in the way of the nomination of Mr. Pendleton in 1872, whilst the nomination of Governor Seymour at that time would leave the nomination open for their favorite in 1872—governed their action. Before 1872 came, however, the movement for accepting the Liberal nomination had prevailed; and there being, for that reason, no "Ohio man" on the list for the party nomination, the Ohio politicians concurred without a murmur in disavowing the "Ohio idea" and adopting the resolutions for resumption at the earliest moment. But when the election of 1876 approached and lists were again open to the "Ohio men," the "Ohio idea" was at once revived and again pressed into service to command the nomination, and although the Ohio politicians again failed to secure the nomination, in their efforts to do so they succeeded in weighing out their anti-resumption platform, and thus, undoubtedly, lost their state to him.

The character of these politicians is further illustrated by the fact that they had two candidates in training for the nomination of 1876, one of whom fully accepted the "Ohio idea," while the other then utterly repudiated it, and though they were uncle and nephew, they and their followers were apparently at daggers drawn on this factions question. But this was all a sham; for the nephew's followers supported the uncle enthusiastically in the convention upon the understanding that if the "Ohio idea" could not win, the hard-money nephew should then be supported in like manner by the uncles soft-money followers.

GRAND CIVIC AND MILITARY

FAIR AND FESTIVAL

TO BE HELD AT

Offutt's Hall

OAKLAND, MD.,
Nov. 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th,

For the Benefit of the GARRETT GUARDS

AND
Oakland Cornet Band,
In procuring Uniforms and Equipments.

Citizens of the town and county are most earnestly invited to co-operate, and lend us their aid and approval.

It is proposed to exhibit in a modest way, the Agricultural and Manufactured products of the county, and we cordially invite farmers and manufacturers to exhibit their produce, and wares of all classes. (Live stock excepted.)

PREMIUMS WILL BE GIVEN:

For the finest exhibit of apples, potatoes, turnips, cabbage, pumpkins, celery, beets, &c.; for the best bundle of shooks; best bundle of shingles; best pair boots or shoes; best roll of butter; best print of butter; best dressed chicken; best dressed turkey; best pair pheasants; best saddle of mutton; best jar of preserves; best loaf bread; best biscuit; best sponge cake; best pound cake.

EXHIBITS OF PICTURES.

Hardware and Mechanical Apparatus of all kinds are solicited for exhibition. Articles for exhibition must be received by 5 o'clock, Tuesday evening the 11th inst. In addition to the Exhibition there will be Variety Tables with Fancy Goods of all kinds for sale. Fish Ponds, Stereoscopic Views, Fortune Wheels, Children's Exhibition of Magic Lantern with dissolving views, Cakes, Candies, Fruits and all manner of Confection tables. A Restaurant, (with an imported Oyster Cook,) will furnish meals at a moment's notice. OYSTERS Fried, Roasted, Broiled, Stewed and Law on the shell, day or night.

Ice Cream Saloon and French Cafe.

Citizens of Deer Park, Accident, Garrettsville, Altamont, Swanton, Bloomington, and all sections of Garrett county, and our neighbors of Preston county, Va., are cordially invited to be present.

COMMITTEE:

MILITARY.—Capt. E. H. Ward, Lieut. A. L. Osbourn, Lieut. D. M. Mason, Surgeon E. H. Bartlett, Sergt. R. S. Jamison, Sergt. W. S. Wolf, Corp'l Jno. A. Delawader, Corp'l W. W. Fairall, King Delawader, W. A. Dally.

CIVIC.—Hon. J. W. Veitch, Wm. L. Rawlings, G. W. Delawader, D. E. Offutt, A. G. Sturgess, Thomas Carr, T. L. Bush, Wm. Moody, G. S. Hamill, G. W. Merrill, J. J. Smith, John Bailey, J. A. Hayden, J. R. Bishop, H. P. Tasker, S. L. Townsend, W. L. Brydton, M. L. Scott.

BAND.—Dr. J. Lee McComas, F. A. Thayer, W. P. Townsend, A. Lockenstein.

LADIES.—Mrs. G. W. Delawader, Mrs. D. E. Offutt, Mrs. A. C. Good, Mrs. Dr. Bartlett, Mrs. E. H. Ward, Mrs. J. Lee McComas, Mrs. G. S. Hamill, Mrs. J. W. Veitch, Mrs. Wm. H. Jarboe, Mrs. W. F. Totten, Mrs. W. H. Hazen, Mrs. John M. Davis, Mrs. M. L. Scott, Mrs. O. C. Miller, Mrs. W. W. Fairall, Mrs. H. P. Tasker, Mrs. W. A. Brydton.

THE BEST PAPER I TRY IT!!

BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED.

85TH YEAR.

THE Scientific American.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is a large First-Class Weekly Newspaper of Sixteen Pages, printed in the most beautiful style, profusely illustrated with original engravings, representing the newest inventions and the most recent advances in the Arts and Sciences, including New and Interesting facts in Agriculture, Horticulture, the Home, Health, Medical Progress, Social Science, Natural History, Geology, Astronomy. The most valuable practical papers, by eminent writers in all departments of Science, will be found in the Scientific American.

Terms, $3.20 per year, $1.00 half year, which includes postage. Discount to Agents. Single copies, ten cents. Sent by all Newsdealers. Remit by postal order to MIFN & CO., Publishers, 37 Park Row New York.

Patents. In connection with PATENTS, the Scientific American, MIFN & CO., are Solicitors of American and Foreign Patents, have had 35 years experience, and now have the largest establishment in the world. Patents are obtained on the best terms. A special notice is made in the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN of all inventions patented through this Agency, with the name and residence of the Patentee. By the immense circulation thus given, public attention is directed to the merits of the new patent, and sales or introductions often easily effected.

Any person who has made a new discovery or invention, can ascertain, free of charge, whether a patent can probably be obtained, by writing to MIFN & CO. We also send free our Hand Book about the Patent Laws, Patents, Agents, Trade-Marks, the costs, and how presented, with hints for procuring advance on inventions. Address for the paper or concerning Patents.

MIFN & CO., 37 Park Row, New York. Branch Office, cor. F and 7th Sts., Washington, D. C.

JOHN RICHARDSON, Manufacturer of and Dealer in WAGONS AND FARMING IMPLEMENTS, GRAIN CRACKERS A SPECIALTY. 22 Abbot Improved Road Scoot Society, July 1. Near the Depot, Oakland, Md.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 1879.

NUMBER 38

VOLUME 3.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, etc.

D. E. OFFUTT,

GENERAL MERCHANDISE,

Agricultural Machines, Musical Instruments,

Guns, Pistols, etc.

G. W. LEGG,

GENERAL MERCHANDISE,

Cor. Second & Oak sts.

D. H. LOAR,

ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,

General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jew-

elry, etc.

I. W. STALNAKER,

Grocery and Provision Store,

Corner Third and Oak Street.

L. BUSH & SON,

GENERAL MERCHANDISE,

Cor. Third & Oak sts.

J. A. GRANT,

Dry Goods, Notions & Groceries,

SPECIAL LINE OF THIBAU.

DAVIS & TOWNSEND,

GENERAL MERCHANDISE,

Agents Agricultural Machines,

Opposite Bailey's Park.

C. C. MICHAEL,

GENERAL MERCHANDISE,

Nations, Clocks, Confectionery, etc.,

Next to Coddington's Hotel.

RICHARDSON BROS.,

GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,

General Goods, Fruit, etc.

HOTELS.

CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,

W. M. CODDINGTON, Proprietor,

Main St., Opposite Jackson's Billiard Saloon.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN,

Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

G. A. SHIRER,

Oak Street, near Second.

A general line of Stoves and Tinware.

PHYSICIANS.

DR. J. LEE MCCOMAS,

Office on Main Street.

DR. E. H. PARSONS,

offers his professional services

to the people of Oakland and vicinity. Office in the old Olcott building,

3 S 3m

PLASTERER.

JAMES ARNOLD,

Residence on Fourth Street

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.

W. M. WAGNER,

Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.

DR. F. LOUGHRIDGE,

Leave orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.

J. B. BRANT,

Surveyor, Auctioneer and

Conveyancer.

Oakland, Garrett county, Md.

JOHN HARNED,

Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.

A. B. WOODCOCK,

In Wm. Stouffer's Building,

Watches and clocks cleaned and repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY

GOODS.

MRS. M. E. DAVIS,

Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,

Millinery, Gents' Furnishing

and Fancy Goods, and shoes.

Main Street, Opposite McClellan's office.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

GEO. C. STURGIS,

Drugs, Medicines,

Stationery, Patent Articles, Stationery,

Tobacco, etc. Alder St.

G. W. MERRILL,

Near Depot.

Pure Drugs, Medicines, Patent Goods, Station-

ery, Cigars and Tobacco, French Candy,

Fruits, Pickling Tackle, etc. Physician's prescriptions accurately compounded.

PAINTING & PAPER HANG-

ING.

E. J. FRINGER,

House and Sign Painter.

And Paper Hanger.

Leave orders at Fish's Store.

S. V. B. WARD,

HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER

Shop near Davis House.

BLACKSMITHS.

CHAS. SINCELL,

Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

JOHN M. JARBOE,

Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,

Residence on Liberty St. nearly opp. Depot.

P. A. CHISHOLM,

Carpenter, Contractor,

And Builder.

Residence on Centre street.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,

Reside near opp. School house.

JOSEPH M. CRUM,

Residence on Alder Street.

A. C. BROOKE,

Res. near Republican office.

CABINETMAKERS AND UN-

DERTAKERS.

A. C. BROOKE,

Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SHATZER,

Shop on Second Street.

FALL & WINTER GOODS.

GOODS FRESH & NEW

and Cheap as the Cheapest.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

Has on hand a full stock of New

Ready Made Clothing,

which he will sell very cheap for cash.

Gents Furnishing Goods,

In great variety, and at prices to suit the

times.

Suits Made to Order

In the most fashionable manner. Orders by

mail promptly attended to.

Also Agent for the Celebrated

"Pearl Shirt."

A Large Assortment of

BOYS' CLOTHING

Kept always on hand.

22-47 work WARRANTED to give entire atisfaction.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,

Oakland, Md.

MEAT MARKET.

H. E. WOLFE,

Formerly of Cumberland, Md.

Takes this mode of announcing to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity that he has permanently located in Oakland for the purpose

of carrying on the

BUTCHERING BUSINESS

In a first-class manner.

FRESH BEEF, (small-cut), MUTTON, PORK,

BOLOGNA SAUSAGE, PORK SAU-

SAGE, &c., at all times.

22-47 Shop near the Post Office.

Customers can get what they want without

delay and at any hour of the day.

Your patronage is respectfully solicited.

22-47 H. E. WOLFE.

PATENTS.

To Inventors and Manufacturers.

ESTABLISHED 1865.

GILMORE SMITH & CO.

Solicitors of Patents & Attorneys at Law.

American & Foreign Patents.

No fees in advance, nor until a Pat-

ent is allowed. No fees for making preliminary examinations.

Special attention given to Inter-

ference Cases before the Patent Office.

Infringement Suits in the different

States, and all litigation appertain-

ing to Patents or Inventions.

Send Stamp for Pamphlet of Study

Pages.

GILMORE & CO.,

629 F. Street, N. W.,

Washington, D. C.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

THO. J. PETERSON,

A. B. GOSDNER,

ATTORNEYS AT LAW

AND SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY.

22-47 OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and

Allegany Counties, the adjoining Counties of

West Virginia, and in the Court of Appeals

of Maryland.

Jan. 30-17

S. A. COX,

H. WHEELER COOKS,

ATTORNEYS AT LAW

AND SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY.

22-47 OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.

Will practice in all the Courts of Maryland

and adjoining Counties of West Virginia, and

the United States Circuit Courts.

1879-80.

GILMORE S. HAMILL,

ATTORNEY AT LAW

AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.

OFFICE IN ORETT'S BUILDING.

Lower Floor.

Particular attention given to Conveyancing,

liquidation of land titles and collection of debts. Terms regulated.

22-47

J. W. VETTEL,

ATTORNEY AT LAW

SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.

OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett County

and the adjoining Counties of West Virginia,

and in the Court of Appeals of Maryland.

Jan. 30-17.

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG

Late Resident Surgeon, New York

Eye and Ear Infirmary.

HAS LOCATED PERMANENTLY in the

City of Cumberland, Md., for the EX-

CLUSIVE treatment of all diseases of the Eye and Ear, including those of the Nose and

Throat.

Office, No. 20 South Centre Street.

22-47

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LESSONS.

SUNDAY, NOV. 17, 1879.

THE LOVE OF THE FATHER.

GENERAL STATEMENT.

Dearest of the impulses in our human nature is the power of love, controlling all the conduct, shaping all the character. It was the province of the Apostle John to set forth

the relations of love to the Christian scheme,

as Paul presented the doctrine of faith, and

James the principles regulating the outward life. Love is revealed as the crowning attribute of God, and as manifested toward man in the gift of the only begotten Son. As the heart of the Christian, hearing its grateful response toward the Father, and flowing forth in fellowship with all his children. We may not be God-like in any other attribute, but in love,

and he in us, because he hath given us his likeness, and, dwelling in love, may dwell in God.

1 John 4. 7-16.

Memory Verse, 7-11.

7. Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God.

8. He that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love.

9. In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him.

10. In him is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins.

11. Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another.

12. Whosoever loveth not his brother, at any time, if we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us.

13. Therefore know we that we dwell in him,

and he in us, because he hath given us his spirit.

14. And we have seen and do testify that the Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world.

15. Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God.

16. And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us: God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and

God in him.

HOME READINGS.

M. The love of the Father, 1 John 4. 7-16.

N. The love of the Son, 1 John 4. 19-21.

O. Preserving love, 1 John 4. 21-23.

P. The love of the Son, 1 John 4. 19-21.

Q. The love of the Son, 1 John 4. 19-21.

R. The love of the Son, 1 John 4. 19-21.

S. The love of the Son, 1 John 4. 19-21.

T. The love of the Son, 1 John 4. 19-21.

U. The love of the Son, 1 John 4. 19-21.

V. The love of the Son, 1 John 4. 19-21.

W. The love of the Son, 1 John 4. 19-21.

X. The love of the Son, 1 John 4. 19-21.

Y. The love of the Son, 1 John 4. 19-21.

Z. The love of the Son, 1 John 4. 19-21.

1 John 4. 19-21.

1 John 4. 19-21.

1 John 4. 19-21.

1 John 4. 19-21.

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.

OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

AFTER THE FROST.

A blight has fallen on the corn and vine,
All dry and shriveled are the leaves and leaves,
The grapes' red cups have lost its pungent wine,
And stubble tells of lately garnered sheaves.

The blossoms in the morning-glory's crown
Hang limp and the bonnet from the trellis slain,
Beneath the rickett sits in southern gown,
And pipes a requiem for the flowers that died.

Lone and deserted is the robin's nest,
The days are many since the blue-bird's flight,
And long ago the tiny oriole's nest
Deeper and deeper faded, vermillion bright.

O! flowers! O flowers! O sweet sunny hours!
O spring of budding, longing and desire!
O summer roses! vine-creepers, perfumed
O youth! O passion! Gone—while we aspire.

Gone, yet, oh, lives on the first sharp frost
Descends with blighting touch and wintry chill,
Take heart, the winter is not yet, nor lost,
The splendor of the sunshine on the hill.

Not even the tender breath of early spring
Nor hot excess of summer's transient prime
Such benediction to the heart can bring
As the soft kisses of this harvest time.

A purple veil is on the land and sea,
A lotus languor in the quiet air,
All red and yellow flames the forest tree,
And autumn's banners blazon everywhere.

Earth's mother-heart is full to overflow,
All garments from her autumn's transient prime
Such benediction to the heart can bring
As the soft kisses of this harvest time.

So when for the first time the frost of earth
Has fallen and withered from the sight
The hills shall be bright through garden's
And peace and hope shall crown the autumn day.

—Christian Union.

RIDICULOUS JOHN.

CERTAINLY I was getting discouraged;
and no wonder.

For three months I sat in my solitary office, the loneliness and gloom of all its appointments a constant aggravation;
for three months there had been blazoned upon its door, in characters too unmistakable to be misunderstood:

HUGH BLATHEREM,

COUNSELLOR-AT-LAW.

And still no client had crossed its threshold, neither had the humble citizen of the place manifested any desire to avail himself of the vast legal knowledge I had stored up in my brain, for the benefit of the world in general, and myself in particular.

This state of things not being very enlivening or remunerative, I began seriously to contemplate the transfer of my legal talents and acquirements to some more appreciative community.

But it is ever darkest before the dawn, and one morning, as I sat turning listlessly the leaves of a novel, in lieu of anything better to do, I saw a lady crossing the street, and who passed as she reached the sidewalk in front of the office, glancing up at the door with a timid, hesitating air.

I looked a little curiously at her,
though closely veiled, she was evidently young and attractive, judging from the neat waist and trim ankle, and the graceful, jaunty air with which she carried herself; this conclusion being in strict accordance with the rules "for such cases made and provided."

I will here mention that my attainments in the interesting study thus casually alluded to were considerably in advance of my legal lore, being fully equal to that of the average "young man of the period."

Having apparently satisfied herself that this was the place she was seeking, the lady began to mount the steps.
My heart beat fast. Was this the client for whom I had been waiting so many weary weeks, and who was to open to me the gate of fame and fortune?

Bob, my office-boy—whom I kept
"just for the looks of the thing," having about as much use for him as for the pretentious-looking documents and papers that were scattered over my table—was cooling his heels on the stairs
in the entry.

The door was slightly ajar. I listened breathlessly.

"Is Mr. Blatherem in?"
Instantly the door was slipped under a ponderous law-book, and I was deep in the mysteries of the papers aforesaid—so deeply absorbed, in fact, that I did not lift my head at the entrance of my visitor until Bob, who stood upon the threshold, evidently amazed at my sudden fit of industry,
said:

"A lady to see you, sir."

"Is this Mr. Blatherem?" inquired the person asked.

"That is my name, madam," I said,
rising—taking care to infuse a proper degree of professional dignity into the insinuating blandness of my tone and manner.

"Pray, sit down," said Bob, who traced, got the lady a chair."

The frown accompanying these words was intended as an extinguisher to Bob whose face was on the broad grin, evidently considering the altered manner consequent upon my new role as something got up expressly for his amusement.

As soon as Bob had disappeared,
which he lost no time in doing, greatly to my astonishment there issued from beneath the veil which completely hid the face of my visitor, something which sounded like a suppressed giggle.

A moment later the veil was thrown back, revealing a pair of saucy black eyes, sparkling with fun and mischief.

"You must really excuse me, sir, but it is so ridiculous!"

"Ridiculous, madam?" I said, with an increased assumption of professional dignity.

"My being here, you know, in a lawyer's office, and on such an errand?"

And again there issued from between the rosy lips a ripple of laughter, so genuine and contagious, that I could hardly forbear joining in it.

"I am glad to see you view the matter so pleasantly, madam; people do not, ordinarily, consider the law in the light of a joke. Indeed, to most people it is no joking matter."

The smiling face grew suddenly sober, and it was evident that the black eyes could sparkle with anger as well as mirth.

"Nor is it any joke to me, I assure you, sir. And it's all along of that stupid, ridiculous, pig-headed John Claypool, who, after the day is set, and everything in readiness, declares he won't marry me!"

"Alas! a breach of promise case?"

was my inward comment.

Then, aloud:

"Proceed, madam. If you have come to consult me professionally, as I presume you have, it is necessary that you should tell me the whole story."

"Of course; that was what I came for," retorted my fair client, who was evidently of a very practical turn of mind, with no nonsense about her.

"Are you sure that there is no one within hearing?"

"Quite sure, madam. And I will add, that whatever you may say to me will be considered in the strictest confidence."

"I suppose so," was the cool response, "though I haven't the least doubt but what ridiculous John has blurted it all over town by this time. It is just all he knows. The long and the short of it is, that I have been shamefully treated and imposed on. If John Claypool vowed once that he loved me to distraction, and would marry nobody but me, he did a hundred times."

"Have you any witnesses to these declarations?"

"Scores of them. John was so ridiculously fond of me, or pretended to be, that he would make love to me, no matter who was present. I was actually ashamed of him!"

"Have you any letters to the same effect?"

"Any quantity. When I was at grandpa's, he pestered me with letters twice a week. Not that I bothered my head to read half of 'em. I brought you a few."

Here the speaker emptied out upon my table a confused mass of correspondence, addressed in a cramped, painstaking hand, to "Miss Hannah Jane Hooker," and whose appearance indicated that they were not of any great value to the recipient.

"You see, I used some of 'em for curl-papers," remarked Miss Hannah Jane, as, snatching together her retic-ule, she resumed her seat. "But I guess you can make 'em out, seeing you are a lawyer. Goodness knows, it's more than I ever tried to do!"

The young lady concluded her sentence with a significant toss of the head.
I regarded her in silence for a moment; this entire absence of the sentimentality usually attending such cases was not a little remarkable, to say the least.

"Then you have no particular affection for him, no? If you'd ever seen him, you wouldn't ask that question.
Why, he's twice my age; fat, bald-headed, and as awkward as a bear! He promised to marry me, and, and, and then he turned back on me, and I intend that he shall suffer for it—in his pocket, where he will feel it most."

"A very just and praiseworthy resolution, madam. Is Mr. Claypool a man of property?"

"John Claypool is worth every cent of a hundred thousand dollars that his brother left him who died in California, though you wouldn't think it to look at him."

A few more questions, and I had gained pretty clear idea as to how matters stood.

Miss Hannah Jane Hooker—appropriate name—had besieged the heart of John Claypool, a susceptible, good-natured fellow, not overburdened with sense, which, having fairly hooked, she played "fast and loose" with until she lost it. She was now in search of some consolation in the shape of greenbacks, which, being applied as such, and plaster to her broken heart, would make it as good as new again.

This was the plain prose of the matter, stripped of all its adornments; yet it contained material for a very good case, if properly worked up, as I was not slow to perceive.

For, though manifestly in the wrong,
and getting no more than she deserved,
the fair Hannah Jane was a woman—a young and attractive woman, and I was in any way conversant with the marvelous workings of the masculine heart in such cases could doubt the issue?

I counted not a little on the letters of the defendant, evidently written at the height of his love fever; but my main point was the fair plaintiff herself, and my main anxiety to have her appearance in court such as would "tell" most effectively on the minds of the jury.

It being within a few days of court time, I gave her almost daily instructions in this important particular. And to her justice, she was a very apt pupil, falling in readily with all my hints and suggestions. There was one difficulty, however, and which occasioned me no little anxiety and perplex-
ity, and this was the young lady's insistible propensity to laugh on almost any occasion, and especially when any mention was made of her quondam
suitor.

But it was in vain that I impressed
upon her mind the disastrous effect that any exhibition of mirth would have; her
invariable response was:

"I can't help it, Mr. Blatherem; I shall laugh, I know I shall, especially
if that ridiculous John is there!"

At last I hit upon a plan by which
this little peculiarity of hers could be turned into a positive advantage.

I provided her with a large pocket
handkerchief, with instructions, whenever she felt this irresistible inclination
to laugh, to bury her face in it, keeping it there until the paroxysm had passed.

The day came for which I had made
such careful and anxious preparations,
and which was full as important to me
as to my client; and never shall I forget
the feelings with which I entered the court room, with my first brief under my arm.

It is unusual in such cases, it was filled
to its utmost capacity, many being obliged to stand.

I had taken care to secure a seat for
my client within the bar, in full view
of both Judge and jury, and east a critical glance at her as I sat down.

Nothing could be more appropriate
and becoming than her dress, attitude
and expression.

In accordance with my suggestion she was attired in deep mourning, which heightened to pallor the exquisite fairness of her complexion, while, as is generally the case, the very effort to keep
a sober face resulted in a demure gravity entirely foreign to its usual expression.

John Claypool was among the first of my witnesses.

His appearance fully justified Hannah Jane's description; he was a large, bald-headed, red-faced man, as little like the ideal of a young girl's heart as well could be imagined, and his frightened and sheepish air, as he took the stand, deepened the unfavorable impression he produced upon the Judge and jury.

I glanced a little apprehensively at my client, the muscles of whose pretty mouth began to twitch at her first glimpse of him, but the handkerchief was not forgotten; burying her face in it, she gave way to the emotion that overpowered her.

The effect of this can be imagined. The jury looked at each other, and then glared at the unfortunate witness, upon whose red face the perspiration started.

To do him justice, he forgot, in a measure, his unpleasant position in his sympathy for the apparent grief of his fair accuser.

"I wasn't none of my doings, Hannah Jane."

The Judge frowned.

"Silence in the court!" growled the
clerk.

"You will attend to me, if you please, friend, addressing the ashamed man in a tone of ironical politeness.
"You are now in the hands of the law, and you will find quite another man to deal with from the gentle, confiding heart of the woman you have so basely betrayed."

I will pass over the examination that followed. Suffice it to state that I induced the witness, who had evidently come with the intention of speaking the simple truth, to tell as crooked a story as it is possible to conceive, to make the most extraordinary and damaging admissions, to say what he never intended to say, and to acknowledge what he never thought of doing.

In the severe cross-examination to which I subjected him, he got so confused and bewildered that he contradicted nearly everything he said in his direct testimony.

Having thus held him up to the jury,
not only as a depraved and heartless villain, but as one whose testimony
could not be believed, even under oath,
I allowed him to slip back under his seat, feeling more like a convicted sheep-stealer than the man who had let it an hour before.

In my closing plea to the jury I drew a vivid picture of the wrongs and sufferings of my fair client, dwelling feelingly upon the love and devotion which had met with so base a return; Hannah Jane's frequent recourse to her pocket-handkerchief, as a sort of safety-valve for her feelings, showing her keen appreciation of the several points of this appeal.

Curiously enough, the defendant listened with deep and absorbing interest, betraying strong emotion as I proceeded.

Taking advantage of a pause, he got upon his feet, stammering forth:

"May it please the court, if I had known that Hannah Jane was so fond of me as this young chap says, I would never have gone back on her."

Alarmed at the turn affairs were taking, I now interposed.

"Your Honor, I protest against this interruption, declaring it to be against all rule and procedure. I would show that the defendant is a man of no feeling, showing her keen appreciation of the several points of this appeal."

In the meantime Hannah Jane again
retired behind her pocket-handkerchief,
and to her justice, she was a very apt
pupil, falling in readily with all my hints and suggestions. There was one difficulty, however, and which occasioned me no little anxiety and perplex-
ity, and this was the young lady's insistible propensity to laugh on almost
any occasion, and especially when any
mention was made of her quondam
suitor.

But it was in vain that I impressed
upon her mind the disastrous effect that
any exhibition of mirth would have; her
invariable response was:

"I can't help it, Mr. Blatherem; I shall laugh, I know I shall, especially
if that ridiculous John is there!"

At last I hit upon a plan by which
this little peculiarity of hers could be turned into a positive advantage.

I provided her with a large pocket
handkerchief, with instructions, when-
ever she felt this irresistible inclination
to laugh, to bury her face in it, keeping it there until the paroxysm had passed.

The day came for which I had made
such careful and anxious preparations,
and which was full as important to me
as to my client; and never shall I forget
the feelings with which I entered the
court room, with my first brief under
my arm.

It is unusual in such cases, it was filled
to its utmost capacity, many being
obliged to stand.

I had taken care to secure a seat for
my client within the bar, in full view
of both Judge and jury, and east a critical glance at her as I sat down.

Nothing could be more appropriate
and becoming than her dress, attitude
and expression.

In accordance with my suggestion she
was attired in deep mourning, which
heightened to pallor the exquisite fairness of her complexion, while, as is generally the case, the very effort to keep
a sober face resulted in a demure grav-

The Captive Zulu King.

A reporter who accompanied Ceteywayo on his voyage to Simon's Bay, says: "In the surf boat Ceteywayo had his first experience of sea sickness, and it he wanted to be shot when caught by Major Marter, it is certain that he wished he were dead ten minutes after embarking. All the dignity with which Ceteywayo had borne his captivity gave way as he saw the sea and realized his fate, while the antics of the whole party in the surf boat are said to have been ludicrous. Nothing could persuade them to sit down quietly, and when they moved they did so crawling on all fours."

"Ceteywayo was placed on deck, inasmuch as the builders of the Natal never contemplated carrying a passenger who would require that four wives should sleep in his cabin with him. In the krali His Majesty occupied a central mattress, and his four wives and an intombi (young girl) had mattresses around him. Everything in the way of personal comfort that he asked for has been given to him. During the voyage of the Natal there was one rough night,
and the krali had a very bad time of it,
but he generally kept up his spirits,
and conveyed in his cheerful moods his impression of new sights. The first morning when there was no land in view, he, after looking around, held up his hands in intense astonishment; but,
like all natives, he does not permit himself to appear to be much surprised at anything. At home he was rather a considerable beer drinker, but he thinks our beer very inferior stuff, and palms that off on his wives, while he is quite ready to do his share of the 'firewater'.

"He has rather a wild way of taking to European food, and as a preliminary to a substantial feed of beef the other day he devoured a pot and a half of jam. He was good enough to accept of a glass of brandy, and if colored photograph was being taken, and the smiling face he put on, as his photograph will show, proves that he is not altogether
unacquainted with the ways of the world.
When his wives were being photographed nothing could induce them to leave off giggling or to sit still until Ceteywayo sternly commanded them to do so, and then at once they were motionless as statues. It was evident that they had forgotten the temper of the king and the way he once reigned in Zululand. When he was afterward asked to sit for another photograph, he declined doing so, on the ground that he was not going to make a fool of himself by being photographed in a bad pose. He would not sit with his wives, because, he said, having his photograph they could easily cut the group of women in two to put him in the centre, and he suggested that if other photographers wanted his photograph they should take him as he often is as they liked, and the pictures would sell just as well, for the white man would buy anything."

"The photo will show Ceteywayo to be an enormous man, of a little over five feet high, a handsome, overfed specimen of humanity, with nothing repulsive whatever about him. A tape measure around the chest would probably show sixty inches, and each thigh half that number. He is a very fat man, and he is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un-
graciously pleased at the attention of the
camera. He is not ungraciously pleased
at the attention of the camera. He is not
ungraciously pleased at the attention of
the camera. He is not ungraciously
pleased at the attention of the camera.
He is not ungraciously pleased at the
attention of the camera. He is not un

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1 50
Six months, $1 00
Three months, $0 75
INvariably in advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, $1 per square of 10 lines
Second insertion, $0 50 per square
Third insertion, $0 30 per square
Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, NOV. 15, 1879.

It is the Democratic rather than the Republican party that needs a strong man for a presidential candidate. But where can they find one?

Eighteen of the States have evil damage liquor laws. Their provisions are substantially the same—making dealers responsible for all harm resulting from the sale of alcoholic beverages. If the Prohibition party in Maryland fail in their Local Option scheme, they might perhaps try to secure the enactment of such statutes as prevail in New York, Massachusetts, Illinois, Ohio and various other commonwealths.

Hon. Lewis C. Cassidy, who will head the Democratic delegation from Pennsylvania to the Democratic National Convention, attributes all the demoralization in the Democratic party to two ambitious but extremely selfish men—Tilden and Randall.
The ambition of the latter to be re-elected speaker has caused the loss of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, California, Ohio, Connecticut, Wisconsin and Indiana—a frightful
price to pay for so small a man.

Gentlemen from the North, who have been engaged for some time in developing mining interests in Virginia, report that the result of the late vote on the debt question in that state is proving a sad blow to the state. They have already received notice that capitalists who had contemplated early investments have abandoned their projects, while some who have made a start in several ventures in the state are considering how they can best wind up their affairs and return to the North.

It is very nice to sit by our firesides and read of the Indian trouble,
but not so funny to those on the border. Through the action of the Democratic Congress our army is not at all equal to the emergency. The editor has a letter from a relative in the far west which puts the matter in a light far from pleasant to contemplate. The Indian has been the subject of a great deal of poetry and song, but we venture the writers thereof were never pulled around by the hair, or shot at by the poor Indian. It makes a mighty sight of difference how drinks are mixed.

The Democrats, disunited by the result of the New York election, have raised the cry of fraud; and, pointing to the delay in the counting of the vote in the rural districts, have made bold to say that it is in accordance with a preconcerted plan on the part of the Republicans to count their candidates in. A good deal may be pardoned a party in such keen distress as the Democrats find themselves at the present moment, but it is trespassing a little too much on good nature to accuse Republicans of altering returns in counties which are notoriously Democratic, and which are the only ones from which the official returns have not been received.

We want to call attention to one interesting and important fact developed by the election last week, to wit: This Congressional district is Republican. And this was their favorite leader heading the ticket of Democracy. We do not believe our opponents could have presented to the electors a stronger man than Mr.
Hamilton, yet with the prestige of his great name, and under the spur of his active personal canvass, with the immense party interests and office patronage to back him, Mr.
Hamilton loses his own Congressional district, as will be seen by the following table:

Counties.	Gary.	Hamilton.
Allegany	271	271
Frederick	293	103
Garrett	121	191
Montgomery	219	232
Washington	168	176
	1230	773
Gary's majority	120

This result we think demonstrates that this district is Republican, in a fair and square, knock-down and drag-out fight, and if our party makes no mistakes between now and next fall, and we do not see how any are likely or even possible, with a proper nomination we can carry the district. This is the next job of work ahead of us.—Camb. News.

Crumbs of Comfort.

It was undoubtedly a great day for the Maryland Democracy, and it shows that for once the sentiment of the party had its way when Hamilton was nominated; but still the flood brought with it some crumbs of comfort to the Republicans. In the first place, Maryland Republicans, inasmuch as they belong to a strong,
able, victorious national party, can afford to be magnanimous. They can well afford to sustain a local defeat, for they have a copious supply of encouragement and good cheer from the victories of their party elsewhere, and from the success of the national administration in bringing back good times and national prosperity by effecting the resumption of specie payments against the determined opposition of the Democratic Congress. While the Republicans are enjoying their affluence of political triumphs, it would ill become them to begrudge the poor, unfortunate Democracy the forlorn satisfaction of rolling up a big majority in Maryland. When the result of the State election is analyzed, there are found even here substantial reasons for encouragement. The returns suffer from comparison with the election of 1875, when party lines were not strictly drawn. The Republican party made no nominations, but supported the ticket nominated at the Masonic Temple mass meeting. It was a Democratic revolt at Carroll's nomination that caused that ticket to sweep the State. Leaving that election out of consideration we find that the Republican party carried a greater number of counties, and elected more members of the legislature, than it has since it became the opposition. In the contest between Bond and Bowie, the latter made a clean sweep. When Tome ran against Whyte, he carried only Frederick, Allegany and Cecil. Gary carries Garrett, Frederick, Charles, St. Mary's, Dorchester and Somerset. In the elections that followed immediately after the adoption of the constitution of 1867, the Republican representation in the legislature was almost extinguished. The Republican strength in the legislature of 1872 was only 32 on joint ballot; in the legislature of 1874 there were 22
Republicans; in 1876, twenty three,
and ten reformers and independents additional; in 1878, seventeen Republicans and eight independents.
The result of Tuesday's election show that the Republican vote in the next legislature will be twenty-six on joint ballot, and, in addition, there will be two independents in the Senate. It certainly cannot be denied that this is a pretty comfortable showing. Maryland is tenacious of political prejudice and slow to change, but eventually it will see that its true interests and its best traditions affiliate with the Republican party.

A Slashing Review of the Fall Elections—Plain, Forceful and Healthful Words.

The result of the November elections is the complement of the October elections. It was everywhere an overwhelming popular repudiation of the party of Bourbonism and Southern brigadierism. It was a further and conclusive manifestation of the forceful consequences of a politically solid South arrayed in hostility to the Northern understanding of the meaning of the civil war.

Great efforts were made by politicians of the Southern school to explain the Bourbon Waterloo in Ohio on other grounds than hostility to the solid Southern brigadierism and its retrogressive tendency. Hard-money Bourbons said it was owing to the insane "Ohio idea" on the fiscal question. Sham-money Bourbons said it was owing to local dissensions, etc. Both classes tried to deceive themselves with the notion that it was not the response of the North to the reactionary spirit and policy of the Southern brigadiers and their Northern allies, manifested so offensively in their attempt to "wipe out" the political fruits of the war between nationalism and Stateism.

It was, however, generally admitted that the result in Ohio was the extermination of the rag-baby. And this was everywhere manifest in the November canvass. The sham-money Bourbons presented no figure in New York, New England, Pennsylvania,
Wisconsin, nor in any November
State. The contest in all the elections held last Tuesday was fairly made on the issue between the progressive Northern idea and the retrogressive Southern idea of our politicians; between Nationalism and Stateism; between political modernism and political antediluvianism.
Underlying all local issues and predominating over all other questions was the issue between the so-called principles of Jefferson, Calhoun, Buchanan and Jeff Davis, constituting Bourbonism, and their opposite, which the North established by the overthrow of the State Sovereignty rebellion. Upon this issue, in a contest made upon both sides with distinct reference to the next Presidential contest, the Bourbons have been overwhelmingly defeated in every Northern State.

In New York it may be said they have beaten themselves, in order to get rid of a political Old Man of the Sea. But their division on the pretensions of The Claimant will not explain their loss of the legislature, involving the retirement of their only Senator. Nor will it account for the fact that candidates upon which they were wholly united barely escaped defeat by an adversary not wholly united in support of its own leaders. It was asserted, and not denied, that the ticket headed by Cornell was a weak one. The character of his nomination was offensive to a large and respectable portion of his own party. The returns show that the weakness of the ticket lost it some thousands of votes. The outcome only proves that the administration people, with a weak and objectionable ticket, were strong enough against an adversary who was weaker and more objectionable cause. As the canvass and the result have shown, the contest was not a contest of men so much as a contest of measures. The outcome, in New York, as elsewhere, is the popular condemnation of the reactionary measures and policy of the ancient graveyard politicians.

It is the destruction of the Bourbon majority in the national Senate. The Senate is now made up of 42 Bourbons, 33 administrationists, and one Independent. Of the Bourbon Senators, thirty are from the South and twelve from the North. Of the administration Senators, thirty-one are from the North and two (Kellogg and Bruce) from the South. The terms of twenty-five Senators expire in 1881; sixteen from the North and nine from the South. Politically, there are divided as follows:

SENATORS.	Dem.	Rep.
Administration Senators	20	12
Opposition Senators	13	21
Independent Senators	1	0

By the popular decision of the recent elections, five of the six opposition Senators from the North whose terms expire in 1881 are sentenced to retirement. They are: Thurman of Ohio, Eaton of Connecticut, Kernan of New York, Randolph of New Jersey, and Wallace of Pennsylvania.
Every one of these Senators spoke for and voted for the Bourbon programme to wipe out the national legislation of the war. The North people have decided that every one of them shall retire and give place to a Senator who will support and defend the political fruits of the war against reactionary Bourbonism.

At the South, the Administration party will lose and the opposition gain one Senator, in place of Bruce, of Mississippi. The Senate, on the 14th of March, 1881, will therefore be made up of thirty-eight Bourbons, thirty-seven Administrationists and one Independent. Practically, the Bourbons will have lost their majority in the Senate. Their party in the Senate will contain only seven Senators from all the North—namely, McPherson, of New Jersey; Pendleton, of Ohio; McDonald and Voorhees, of Indiana; Farley, of California, and Grover and Slater, of Oregon. Nearly five-sevenths of what will remain of the Bourbon party in the Senate will be Southern, while all but one of the Republican party in the Senate will be Northern. A solid North against a solid South—this is the Northern answer to the retrogressive action of the solid South.

It is also a foregone conclusion that the Bourbons will wholly lose their majority in the House by the next Congressional election. This, too, is what the recent elections have determined. Their loss in New York and Pennsylvania alone will give a good "working majority" in the House to their adversaries; but they will also lose members in Ohio, in Illinois, in Wisconsin, and probably in other Western States. This is as plainly forecast by the recent elections as any event of the future has ever been by the result of a political contest.

The lesson of the result is that the country will not trust its destiny to the direction of reactionary Southern brigadiers and their Northern allies.
There is no reason to think it has any special affection for that which goes by the name of Republican party; that there is good and ample reason to believe that the North will adhere with considerable solidity to that organization until something appears to take its place, and whether that which offer to take its place be better or worse, the North will judge.
It is the plain judgment of the North that the Bourbon organization, composed in its controlling part of a retrogressive South, is not something better, but something a great deal worse. The Bourbon party and its reactionary doctrines are offensive.
The country has a deep-seated antipathy to them, which will not be removed by any programme the managers can devise. The country realizes no need of the Bourbon politicians or the Bourbon party. They are an obstruction that ought to be moved out of the way. They were dead twenty years ago. They ought not to linger unburied any longer.

The stench of their decaying fragments poisons the political atmosphere and prevents healthful political progress. They are an offense in the nostrils of civilization. It is time this nuisance from the old Bourbon graveyard was abated.

The Republican Pyramid for 1880.

It grows almost daily, and will be an immense structure by this time next year:

OHIO,	INDIANA,	ILLINOIS,	COLORADO,	NEW YORK,	WISCONSIN,	MICHIGAN,	NEBRASKA,	CALIFORNIA,	MINNESOTA,	NEW JERSEY,	CONNECTICUT,	RHODE ISLAND,	PENNSYLVANIA,	MASSACHUSETTS,	NEW HAMPSHIRE,	MARYLAND,	VIRGINIA,	MISSISSIPPI.
James A. Gary, R.	William T. Hamilton, D.	Samuel Mallahan, R.	Thomas J. Keating, D.	F. M. Dudley, R.	C. J. McGinnis, D.	J. T. McGinnis, R.	Spencer C. Jones, D.	W. H. Sawyer, R.	R. T. Browning, D.	J. W. Veitch, D.	George D. White, R.	James W. Mason, D.	George W. Wilson, R.	Austin Spieker, R.	C. S. Smith, D.	W. R. Gentry, D.	W. H. Hagan, R.	W. L. Rowlands, D.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.
WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 11, 1879.

We ought to be satisfied with our triumphs over hies with out New York. But it looks as though we could claim a clean sweep there, also.
The Democratic habit of bragging,
and then to claim the State at first by 25,000 majority. They have, however, come down from high figures, and are now frantically searching for signs that will justify the claim to one state office. The following table will show the estimates of both parties on the offices claimed and upon those conceded. Where the figures occur in both columns against the same names, they are differing estimates of the majority for the candidate whose election is conceded by both.

Dem.	Rep.
Cornell, Rep. Gov., 25,000	30,000
Carroll, Ohio, 25,000	30,000
Hoskins, Rep. U. Gov., 25,000	30,000
Carroll, Rep. of State, 25,000	30,000
Wassworth, Rep. Comp., 25,000	30,000
Ward, Rep. Atty. Gen., 25,000	30,000
Stanton, Rep. State Treas., 25,000	30,000
Seymour, Dem. State Eng., 25,000	30,000

Thus the Democrats concede the election of Cornell, Carr, Wassworth, and Mackin, both parties claim the election of Lieutenant Governor, while the only Democrat elected beyond doubt is Seymour on the fall of the ticket. There is no question that we have the legislature by a large increased majority, and a mortgage on the state for the Presidential election next year. From New York, we turn to every other Northern State with congratulations. The North is in fact solid. One fact stands out with great significance, it is that the greenback party is disposed of finally—it is dead. The stunning blow was given in Maine, and there for that small party was bound to fall out of the race. The grand Republican gains in Pennsylvania and Wisconsin, and every Western State are very encouraging. They show that we are not obliged again to nominate candidates for President, for expediency's sake, but may nominate our first, and most staidly men in the assurance that they will carry the country. Of course these results have started anew
the discussion of Presidential candidates. Mr. Blaine, of course is affectionately regarded in the East, and has friends in the West. Gen. Garfield is a strong man anywhere, and growing stronger every day, and there are many who say he will be elected President some time if not the next year. It is considered by all that he must be Ohio's next Senator, and will make a good one.

The Republican National Committee will meet here in December to choose a successor to the late Senator Chandler as chairman. There are two candidates who would fill the bill completely. They are General Andrew of New York, W. E. Chandler of New Hampshire.

The Democratic repudiators of Virginia have apparently triumphed at their election, and the result is that many investors are trying to sell out and quit the State. Moral: Honesty is the best policy in politics
as well as in business.

LOGAN

Avoid using those remedies containing Opium, Morphia, etc., but when the Baby is sick use Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup—perfectly safe and always reliable. Price only 25 cents a bottle.

Anagram from the New York
Tribune: S. J. T.—1880—NIX.

GARRETT COUNTY ELECTION RETURNS—OFFICIAL

STATE AND COUNTY ELECTION, TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1879.

	No. 1, Allegany.	No. 2, Solidsport.	No. 3, Grantsville.	No. 4, Bloomington.	No. 5, Accident.	No. 6, Saint Rem.	No. 7, Oakland.	No. 8, Ryans Glade.	No. 9, Frostburg.	Total.
CANDIDATES.
Governor.
James A. Gary, R.	141	15	226	93	108	105	199	101	23	1121
William T. Hamilton, D.	125	96	201	99	107	42	205	69	51	1001
Comptroller.
Samuel Mallahan, R.	139	125	226	93	108	105	198	105	23	1122
Thomas J. Keating, D.	12	97	201	99	107	42	203	69	51	1002
Attorney General.
F. M. Dudley, R.	139	121	225	93	108	105	198	105	23	1111
C. J. McGinnis, D.	127	96	201	100	107	42	205	69	51	1004
Clerk Court of Appeals.
J. T. McGinnis, R.	139	125	226	93	107	106	199	104	23	1123
Spencer C. Jones, D.	127	96	201	99	107	41	205	69	51	1002
Clerk Circuit Court.
W. H. Sawyer, R.	162	136	225	109	120	93	232	111	52	1240
R. T. Browning, D.	96	82	194	80	96	51	166	60	24	852
State's Attorney.
J. W. Veitch, D.	128	95	204	102	106	45	217	69	51	1050
Sheriff.
George D. White, R.	140	121	223	91	109	105	195	93	21	1107
James W. Mason, D.	128	96	201	97	105	42	205	80	53	1010
House of Delegates.
George W. Wilson, R.	129	119	200	95	107	38	196	102	51	1100
Austin Spieker, R.	12	121	212	92	125	105	183	112	41	1113
C. S. Smith, D.	115	99	200	86	95	49	233	76	30	1083
W. R. Gentry, D.	132	99	235	96	105	10	183	65	22	978
Register of Wills.
W. H. Hagan, R.	113	121	231	90	108	107	188	96	18	1108
W. L. Rowlands, D.	128	96	196	101	107	40	215	76	51	1048
County Commissioners.
D. Harrison Friend, R.	127	126	222	90	111	116	211	102	51	1131
John Wilhelm, R.	119	121	236	93	109	104	196	103	55	1136
Wm. W. Broadwater, R.	132	122	233	109	108	102	195	102	21	1121
Melchior J. Miller, D.	116	97	197	91	181	41	196	61	55	1058
Rudolph Beckman, D.	133	91	194	94	105	43	197	72	22	957
J. F. Robinson, D.	125	91	202	95	107	39	198	70	55	975
Judge Orphans' Court.
Joseph DeWitt, R.	111	131	229	91	118	107	207	101	23	1151
William Harvey, R.	117	123	226	87	108	103	200	101	23	1118
Isaac H. Kooker, R.	110	121	216	85	108	105	189	105	23	1103
A. J. Michael, D.	129	94	207	99	102	41	194	69	51	1034
E. P. Brand, D.	129	97	204	85	101	40	216	70	53	992
Amos Broadwater, D.	123	90	192	90	101	42	200	69	53	983
County Surveyor.
John Harrod, R.	126	128	230	100	110	106	231	105	23	1132
Wm. McMahon, D.	138	92	197	80	105	41	162	67	51	936

The State Result.

The State has gone Democratic, and Mr. Hamilton is elected by a majority of about 22,000, which is some thousands more than he would have received but for the cooking of the registry lists in Baltimore. The Democrat say that this is the usual annual Republican yell of fraud. But the charge is one of simply a dry matter of fact. If there was not fraud in Baltimore in the matter of registration the Democrats have signally failed to prove that there was not. But this is digression. The city and nineteen out of 23 counties give Mr. Hamilton a total vote of 82,428, and Mr. Gary, 60,671. Carroll and Prince George's give Mr.
Hamilton an aggregate of 700 majority, and Dorchester and Somerset an aggregate majority of 100 for Mr.
Gary. The next Senate will stand 5
Republicans, 2 Independent Democrats and 19 Democrats. The House will stand 21 Republicans and 63 Democrats. The next Legislature will have to elect a United States Senator, a State treasurer and police commissioners for Baltimore city.

The following is a list of the members of the General Assembly. Where the party is not given, the members named are Democratic:

SENATORS HOLDING OVER.
Allegany—John S. Combs, Rep.
Carroll—Thos. F. Gary, Independent Dem.
Cecil—John M. Miller.
Charles—F. M. Lancaster, Rep.
Dorchester—Clement Sullivan.
Garrett—Balthasar Weidley, Rep.
Harford—Herman Stump.
Montgomery—George Peter.
Prince George's—Wm. B. Hill,
Ind. Dem.
St. Mary's—Robert C. Combs.
Talbot—Edward Lloyd.
Worcester—Littleton P. Franklin.
Democrats, 7; Republicans, 3; Ind.
Dem, 2.

NEWLY-ELECTED SENATORS.
Anne Arundel—Dr. Geo. Wells,
Baltimore City—John H. Cooper,
Wm. A. Fisher, Wm. H. Blas.
Baltimore Co.—Geo. H. Williams.
Calvert—John T. Bond.
Carrall—Henry Vandeford.
Frederick—Lewis H. Ste

LOCAL NEWS.

—Mr. George L. Bosley is digging a well on his premises.

—Dush's new engine, for his shock mill, arrived here Wednesday.

—Over a hundred kegs of butter were shipped from this station the latter part of last week.

—$20,000 to loan on first-class commercial paper. Apply to D. E. Offutt. oct18-47.

—A sugar beet, placed on exhibition at the fair and festival by Mr. E. C. Tillson, weighs 16 pounds.

—Married: At Deer Park, Thursday, 6th inst., by Rev. J. S. Laughlin, Mr. Joran B. Wilson and Miss Emily E. Tice, all of Garrett county.

—The Band of Hope will meet in the M. E. Church, Thursday evening, 20th inst. All are cordially invited to be present.

—The winter schedule of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad will go into effect Sunday. But few changes will be made.

—Wahlroff Furnace, at Ironton, W. Va., advertises for good men, who will be given employment for the winter. Houses will be furnished to men of family.

—200 sacks G. A. Salt for sale at Wm. P. Totten's Cheap Cash Store, Oakland, Md. a26-47.

—The public schools opened Monday. In Oakland, the same teachers are in charge as last year. The attendance here is very large, and demonstrates the fact that the building will have to be enlarged in the near future.

—Died—Monday, Nov. 31, 1879, near Selbyport, John T. Frazer, in the 75th year of his age. Though not a member of the church, it is hoped that he made his peace with God, and that he is now at rest. He leaves a wife and six children to mourn their loss.

—In the Circuit Court at Cumberland Friday prisoners convicted at the present term were sentenced as follows: W. Scott Dawson, outrageous assault on his cousin, Rachel Dawson, six years in the penitentiary; Theron Kinberly, burglary, five years in the penitentiary; Jos. A. Warthon, burglary, three years in the penitentiary; George Washington, colored, assault with intent to kill, two years in the penitentiary; Argyle Wilson, assault, three months in jail and $25 fine.

Church Services—Sunday.

M. E. Church.—Preaching both morning and evening, by Rev. H. C. Sanford.

Lutheran Church.—Preaching in the morning at 10 o'clock, by Rev. O. C. Miller.

The Fair and Festival.

The fair and festival now in progress in Offutt's hall is a very creditable affair and promises to be a success financially. The display of goods, ware, machinery, fruits, vegetables, &c., is worth seeing. It will close on Saturday night.

Another Burglary.

Mr. A. J. Greenstein's merchant tailoring establishment in Oakland was again entered by burglars Friday night of last week, and clothing and piece goods to the value of about one hundred dollars taken. We would urge that the corporation authorities and citizens generally take some action that will lead to the suppression of these raids, which are getting too frequent.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending November 13:

Albert M. Robinson to Minerca J. Custer, Military Lots Nos. 1535, 1557, 1558 and 1559, excepting seven acres of Lot No. 1556; $800.

Benjamin F. Friend and wife, to Alfred C. Brooke, Lot No. 11 on the plat of Lot No. 816, containing 2 acres; $60.

Samuel Engle and wife to Henry Weber, a tract of land called "Civilians," containing 100 acres, more or less; $2,500.

Susan Zimmerman and others, to John H. Slicer, lot of land in the town of Grantsville $185.

Oakland, Nov. 13th, 1879.

Ed. REPHILMAN:—I beg space in your columns to say to those who are in the habit of helping themselves to kindling wood in my absence, to come when I am at the shop, as I can give them such as is useless. Flooring is too expensive for kindling. To those who take lumber to be used in the manufacture of articles, I would say to them that buying is more honorable than stealing.

Respectfully,
JOHN SHATZLER.

Church Dedication.

Friday, October 31st, was an anxious, and in the end a happy day, for the Reformed congregation in New Germany. For a year the congregation had been engaged in building a new church. The members had labored heroically and given the enterprise very liberal aid according to their means, still on the above named date, when the church was to be dedicated, there remained an unpaid debt of $160. The question that caused the anxiety among this little flock was, where shall the money come from to liquidate this debt?

The pastor, Rev. C. U. Hellman, said, "The money must and will be raised." With this determination the appeal was made to the congregation present on the day of dedication. The people first had the pleasure of listening to a good and appropriate sermon by the Rev. S. R. Brindolaugh, of Berlin, Somerset county, Pa. Then the pastor made a statement of what had been done and what yet remained to be done before the church could be consecrated to the service of the Triune God. Appeals were then made for pledges by the pastor and the assisting brethren. The pastor headed the list by a subscription of $80, on condition that the whole debt be paid within a year. Slowly but gradually the response came, until the amount was raised. Then the church was dedicated as Trinity Reformed Church, the pastor reading the ceremony, at which all joined heartily in singing "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

The services in connection with the dedication of the new church began on Monday evening previous. On Wednesday evening Rev. J. S. Wagner, of Stoytown, Pa., preached; on Thursday evening and Friday morning Rev. S. R. Brindolaugh, of Berlin, Pa., on Thursday evening, Rev. A. E. Traxel, of Somerset, Pa., and on Saturday afternoon and evening, and on Sunday morning, when the Holy Communion was celebrated, Rev. A. B. Koplin, of Heliertown, Pa., a former pastor of the charge, preached. It was a joyful occasion for the small Reformed congregation of New Germany. All present on Friday shared the joy with them, and many added their name to paying the debt. A Mr. Buehrer, a member of the Methodist church, donated the ground on which the church stands, and gave $10 besides. An ex-Senate Senator and an incoming one, also gave substantial expression of their sympathy. Pastor and people of this small but growing congregation, deserve the encouragement of all the good people for their faith and labors.

ALLEGORIES.

Democratic Demoralization.

The New York election appears to have had a paralyzing effect on the Democrats. They still cling to the hope of 1880; but they are unanimously silent as to the ways and means. They concede, or at least they do not deny, that Mr. Tilden is no longer available; but in his place they have no one to propose. We might expect to hear the distant rumbling of a Bayard boom; but even the name of their most able and honest leader fails to arouse any enthusiasm among the Democracy. The truth is, they feel that in the defeat of Tilden the Democratic party itself has met its Waterloo. Leaving out of the question the extreme probability that in the short time now remaining the discussions in the party can be healed so as to secure a harmonious campaign in New York next year, the condition of the party at large is such that nothing but some remarkable piece of good fortune can save it from going to pieces all over the country—in the South as well as the North—in the West as well as the East. The succession of Republican victories this autumn has not only demoralized the party organization, but it has left it without any vital issues upon which to go to the country in 1880. For evidence of this fact we need look no further than the leaders themselves, who, with one accord, charge their defeat to the mistakes of the majority in Congress, and admit that all is lost unless the adoption of "a broadly national and conservative course" shall restore public confidence in the innocence of their schemes, and the harmlessness of their intentions. In other words, after boasting that the people would endorse their course in Congress, they are forced to admit that the people do not endorse it, and are preparing to turn a complete somersault and start again on a new track. From violent denunciation of the policy of the government to weak acquiescence in it is a long leap; but the Democrats are ready to take it. There was a time when the party had a fixed platform of principles, and it adhered to it with saintly devotion. But that time is long past. One after the other it has abandoned the cardinal points in its creed for the passing fancies of the hour. As it forsook the cause of hard money in the hope of riding into power on the tidal wave of greenbackism, so it will sacrifice any other principle that, for the moment, may seem to stand in the way of success at the polls. We venture the prediction that at the next session of Congress nothing but velvet paws will be visible, where last winter the claws of the Democratic tiger were but too plainly visible, and that the power of the caucus will be used as vigorously to prevent extreme action as it was a year ago to secure it. That this course will deceive any save those who wish to be deceived, we nevertheless seriously question. A already pointed out, the verdict in every Northern state is decisive as to the state of public sentiment on the sectional issues which the party has raised, and it is only likely to be set the farther in its present direction by such a display of sham repentance. But if the Democrats do not adopt this policy, what can they do? Will they burn the bridges behind them and resume their aggressive tactics? One alternative is as discouraging as the other; but it is precisely in this dilemma that the Democrats find themselves on the eve of the presidential campaign. It is not a pleasant situation to be in; but it is the natural result of playing fast and loose with principles, and the victims have only themselves to thank for the misfortune. —Balto. American.

Though the Republicans have been beaten in this State, yet the defeat is not without its consolation in the gains that we have made in the Legislature. The American summary of the situation says:

"In the contest between Bond and Bowtie, the latter made a clean sweep. When Tom ran against White, he earned only Frederick and Cecil; Gary carried Garrett, Allegany, Frederick, Charles, St. Mary's, Dorchester and Somerset. In the election that followed the re-construction of the constitution of 1872, the Republican representation in the Legislature was almost extinguished. The Republican strength in the Legislature of 1872 was only thirteen on joint ballot; in the Legislature of 1874 there were twenty-two Republicans; in 1876 twenty-three and ten Reformers and Independents additional; in 1878, 17 Republicans and eight Independents. The result of Tuesday's election shows that the Republican vote in the next Legislature will be twenty-six on joint ballot, and in addition there will be Independents in the Senate. It certainly cannot be denied that this is a pretty comfortable showing."

In all Democratic calculations about the division of the Electoral vote next year, Oregon and Wisconsin are put down as "doubtful States," while Connecticut, New York and New Jersey are put in the Democratic column. By this figuring the Democrats make for their side 26 votes, give the Republicans 156 and leave 14 doubtful. This is a striking confession of weakness. Oregon is not a doubtful State. It may have been so before the celebrated Crokin College of the was founded, but it is cured by that innovation and is now surely Republican. Wisconsin is so surely Republican that it is simply absurd to call it doubtful. These two States transferred to the Republican column give it a footing of 106. Connecticut has safe Republican State also, and yesterday New York and New Jersey are. But leaving Connecticut and New Jersey in the Democratic column, and putting New York in the Republican column, the Republican vote rises to 201, or 16 more than enough to elect. Adding Connecticut and New Jersey, the Republican total reaches 216, or 31 more than enough to elect. This would be a majority so large that no Democratic Congress would dare to meddle with it.

The postage of the world, according to a valuable computation of Dr. Fischer, of the imperial German postoffice, shows that in 1873 the letter post of the whole world amounted in round numbers to 3,300,000,000 letters, or about 9,250,000 daily, and the numbers have been increasing daily at an astonishing rate. Thus in Japan the number of post offices in 1872 was 1,119, and in 1876 it had risen 3619. The number of separate articles which passed through the Japanese post in 1878 was 47,000,000, of which 25,000,000 were letters, 10,000,000 post cards and 9,500,000 newspapers. Postcards were first brought into use only in 1865, and now they are employed in almost every country of the world. The parcel post has, however, not yet got beyond the first stage of its development. The number of telegraphic despatches sent in 1877 amounted for the whole globe to nearly 130,000,000, or an average of 353,000 daily. More than one-third of the total number of the telegraphic despatches are private, dealing with purely personal concerns. The newspaper press absorbs a large proportion of the telegrams of the world, while the world of finance and commerce also appropriate a giant's share.

Roughs in Howard

Reports of fighting near Elkridge Landing, in Howard county, reached the city by evening trains arriving at Camden Station. The reports were to the effect that a party of roughs from Baltimore had attacked the colored men waiting to vote at the polling place near the Landing, and by firing pistol shots had driven them away. Two colored men were shot and wounded, but not seriously. After this had been done a large party of the colored men returned, it is said, armed with shot guns, whereupon the roughs started off in the direction of Jessup's Cut. A report from the Relay House at others at Camden Station was to the effect that the roughs were by a well known Baltimore Democratic politician, who is presented as having made an assault on a baggage man in the employ of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, named R. Baldwin. The baggage man, it is stated, innocently asked a bystander, "what crowd of roughs that was," whereupon he was assaulted. Several reports of attacks on colored men by Baltimore roughs reached Mr. Gary on German street, from what were considered well authenticated sources. A colored man named Morly was reported as having been shot and badly wounded in the Third district of Howard county. It was also stated that a party of roughs penetrated as far as Skykesville, which is on the line between Howard and Carroll counties. They fired pistols into the crowd, scattering the colored men. A war was made out by a justice of the peace for the arrest of a man who seemed to be the ring leader, but the deputy sheriff in whose hands it was placed declined to serve it, stating that the risk was too great. At this a number of Republican citizens present asked to be summoned as a posse compitatus to see that the arrest was made, but this request was not acceded to, on the ground that it might cause greater violence. In Elkridge City the election passed off quietly. One man known to be from Baltimore made an attempt to vote, but was recognized, and promptly left the neighborhood. —American, of Wednesday.

OUR THIRTY-NINTH STATE.—It looks as if Dakota would be the 39th State. It received a sudden setback in 1878 from the postponement of the Northern Pacific project, but it shortly recovered, and its growth has since been rapid. In 1870 its population was about 14,000. Now it is estimated at 120,000, and its people think it will be 180,000 by 1880. This will clearly entitle it to admission unless the Territory is divided, a question which will be much discussed. Dakota is just three times as large as New York, which would seem to make it rather too colossal for convenient management. The Missouri river is a natural division north and south, having Bismarck or Yankton for the capital of the eastern State, and the western with the political and business centre in the Black Hills mining region. If a division is decreed, however, (in which case the eastern half might be called "Pembina") admission to the Union would have to be delayed. It is asserted that three-quarters of the soil of Dakota is unsuited for the sowing of wheat growing, and there are six lines of railroad now being pushed across these lands from east to west.

What You Drink.

The Louisville Courier Journal, which is published in Kentucky, where they boast of pure Bourbon whiskey, confirms the statement that probably nine hundred and ninety-nine gallons out of every thousand that are sold as brandy are made from a vile compound of whiskey still, distilled spirits and chemical abominations, and adds: "And as it is also equally true of whiskey what in the name of goodness are we to do for ourselves? If this kind of stuff is to be driven to the pump in spite of us, if the world at large knew of what villainous stuffs brandy and whiskey and wines are made the present crop of drunkards would be about the size of a pin's point. Nearly, or quite, all the liquors that are retailed now-a-days are undoubtedly a slow, but sure poison, and to drink them habitually is simply a roundabout way of committing suicide, and unless you guard yourself carefully the way is not so roundabout either."

If so conservative a journal as the Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle and Constitutionalist can be taken as a reflex of the opinion of that section of the country, the South does not relish the results of Tuesday's elections. Its election head lines read as follows: "A Solid North, an Implacable East and an Obdurate West. A United Verdict for Centralism and Imperialism. Cornell Elected in the Face of a Democratic Majority. Pennsylvania Gives a Mollie Maguire Yell for the Empire." Just what it means by this kind of jargon it does not explain, but it evidently feels very sore. If the Constitutionalist and other Southern journals had not been so violent almost in their support of the ultra position taken by the Democrats during the extra session of Congress, the October and November election perhaps would not have given them cause to weep so bitterly. It is to be hoped they will heed the lesson.

LAWLESSNESS IN KENTUCKY.—The regulators in Edmon county, Ky., have served a notice on the Judge of the Circuit Court, asking that he will not continue any of the cases that are on the docket on mere technicalities, but give them a speedy trial. They say: "We don't want to threaten this court, but we want thieves, robbers, houseburners and men who slay their wives, and are so handy with pistols, to distinctly understand that we mean business. If we have to call a special term of our court, we be up to you, for death is your portion, and remember the walnut." The organization now extends over four counties, and is said to number nearly 3,000 citizens.

TELEGRAPHIC.

OFFICIAL RETURNS.

ANNAPOLIS, November 8.—The official returns from the counties have begun to arrive at the Executive chamber, about one-third of the counties being already here. The commissions of the clerks, registers, sheriffs, surveyors and county commissioners have all to be made out by the Secretary of State and sent to the county seats of the respective counties. Altogether they look up a total of four hundred. One commissioner only has been forwarded, that of Sheriff-elect Wakeman P. Morgan, of Harford county. It has been the custom for years to make out this commission and that of the sheriff of Baltimore county the very first ones. In the case of the sheriff of Harford, it is for the purpose of allowing him to begin his term of office with the November term of the County Court.

THE DEMOCRATIC COLONY RE-CHIEVES A TERRIBLE SHOCK.

WASHINGTON, November 10.—The Democratic colony here has experienced a terrible shock by the publication of a leading editorial in today's New York Sun, the pith of which is contained in the following extract: "The elections which have just taken place in several States show conclusively such an augmentation of Republican strength as to render altogether probable that the Republicans will be able to elect their candidate for President next year. The greatest question—the one great question—now before the country becomes, who that candidate shall be?" This is a view of the subject which the Democracy had never taken before, and which they are not willing to take now. Mr. John G. Thompson, Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, in commenting upon the Sun's declaration, says that no "thoroughbred" ever shows the white feather a year in advance of the battle, and that the Sun is a weathercock anyhow and no reliance can be placed upon it.

A REPUBLICAN VICTORY IN NEW YORK.

NEW YORK November 11.—Official canvass of the election return throughout the State began to-day, and will not be completed before Friday or Saturday. Up to this hour (11 P.M.) returns have been received from fourteen counties. The Times' last table made out an apparent majority of 622 for Hoskins for lieutenant governor, 2,978 for Carr for secretary of State, 6,953 for Wadsworth for comptroller, 7,229 for Ward for attorney general, 3,040 for Wendell for treasurer, and 6,155 for Seymour for engineer. All the above are Republicans except Seymour. The fourteen counties above referred to, as compared with the Times' table, show the loss of 36 for Hoskins, 116 for Carr, a gain of 33 for Wadsworth, a loss of 570 for Ward, 770 for Wendell, and again of 1,515 for Seymour. The Sun says: "The official returns from about half of the counties show slight Republican gains over the previous estimates, enough to indicate that the vote for lieutenant governor will be very close, and that the Republicans may have carried the remainder of the state ticket except engineer and surveyor."

WHAT POLITICIANS HAVE TO SAY ABOUT PRESIDENTIAL ASPIRANTS.

WASHINGTON, November 8.—To the several presidential aspirants and their friends, nothing is more provoking than the impenetrable silence General Grant maintains respecting his political intentions. "I don't aspire," is the nearest approach to an expression that has been obtained. The General's intimate friends have tried to make the sphinx tell them what he proposes "to do about it," but without avail. He will talk to them freely about his travels, tell them what a delightful trip he had, how emperors and kings received him with princely honors, what a powerful and great country this is, and how glad he is to return home; but the moment the presidency is broached, that instant the General becomes dumb and puffs his cigar. Then Mrs. Grant is attacked, but she "never talks politics" with her husband, and the visitor retires in despair. Mr. John C. New, of Indiana, is the latest arrival from California who talked very freely with General Grant about the presidency, but Mr. New has nothing more definite to communicate than the others who have been heard from on the same topic. Mr. New says, as the others have said, that "the General has an aversion to allowing his name to be used," and he (New) doubts "if any circumstances can induce him to run." Mr. New, as the result of his free talk, is "positively certain that General Grant does not seek a nomination," and thinks that "he would much rather be at the head of the United States Army than in any other position in the power of the nation to bestow upon him." But, most of all, Mr. New believes that "Grant wants to make some money in business pursuits." Mr. New concludes with the significant remark, which certainly sounds strange contrasted with the foregoing, that "if Grant runs, it will be because he is forced to do so; and if he is the candidate of his party, it must be as the unanimous choice of the nominating convention." This leaves the parties interested just as much in the dark as before. Will Grant be forced to run? That is the very question to which they desire an answer, and the only person who can state what precise amount of force is necessary to make him run is Grant himself. But while General Grant keeps his own counsel, his friends are active and conducting his "boom" with vigor and earnestness. The fact that the unsavory element of the last administration is absent from all demonstrations in honor of Grant is sufficient proof of the sagacity of the managers of the third term movement.

In the Whole History of Medicine

No preparation has ever performed such marvellous cures, or maintained so wide a reputation, as AYER'S CATHARTIC PILL, which is recognized as the world's remedy for all diseases of the throat and lungs. Its long-continued series of wonderful cures in all climates has made it universally known as a safe and reliable agent to employ. Against ordinary colds, which are the forerunners of more serious disorders, it acts speedily and surely, always relieving suffering and often saving life. The protection it affords by its timely use in the most delicate members of children, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will forget its knowledge of its composition and effects. Physicians use the CATHARTIC PILL extensively in their practice, and Clergymen recommend it. It is absolutely pure, and does not contain either calomel or any other dangerous or poisonous ingredients.

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

JAS. A. ENLOW, Dealer in General Merchandise and Country Produce, General Store, Building Oakland, Md. 11-45

NOTICE.

All persons having claims against the estate of Jacob Schreyer, deceased, are hereby notified to file said claims with the Register of Wills for Garrett county, on or before the 15th of December, 1879.

T. J. PRINCE, Attorney. W. L. HAWKINS, Reg. of Wills.

NOTICE.

I have $7,500 to loan in sums from $1,000 to $5,000 on first-class mortgages.

11-15 if T. J. PEDDICKORD.

Estate of George J. Walter, deceased.

THIS IS TO GIVE NOTICE THAT the said George J. Walter, late of said county, deceased, has left a will, and that the undersigned is the executor of the same, and that all persons having claims against the estate of said deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, to the undersigned, with the vouchers therefor, legally authenticated, on or before the 15th day of May, next. They may otherwise be lawfully excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are notified to make immediate payment. Given under my hands this 11th day of November, 1879.

11-15 JAMES W. WHITE, Executor.

THE BEST PAPER! TRY IT!!

BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED.

35TH YEAR.

THE

Scientific American.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is a large First-class Weekly Newspaper of Sixteen Pages, printed in the most beautiful style, profusely illustrated with elegant engravings, representing the latest inventions and the most recent Advances in the Arts and Sciences, including New and Interesting Facts in Agriculture, Horticulture, the House, Health, Medical Progress, Social Science, Natural History, Geology, Astronomy. The most valuable practical papers, by eminent writers in all departments of Science, will be found in the Scientific American.

Terms, $3.00 per year, $1.00 half year, which includes postage. Discount to Agents. Single copies, 10c. Sent by all Newsdealers. Remit by postal order to MUNN & CO., Publishers, 37 Park Row, New York.

PATENTS.

MUNN & CO., in connection with American and Foreign Patents, have had 25 years' experience, and now have the largest establishment in the world. Patents are obtained on the best terms. A special notice is made in the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN of all inventions patented through this Agency, with the names and residences of the Patentees. By the immense circulation this gives, public attention is directed to the merits of the new patent, and sales or imitations are often easily effected.

Any person who has made a new discovery or invention, and ascertains, free of charge, whether a patent can probably be obtained, by writing to MUNN & CO. We also send free our Hand Book about the Patent Laws, Patents secured, with hints for procuring advances on inventions. Address for the paper or concerning Patents.

MUNN & CO., 37 Park Row, New York. Branch Office, cor. F and 7th Sts., Washington, D. C.

JOHN RICHARDSON.

Manufacturer of and Dealer in WAGONS AND FARMING IMPLEMENTS. GRAIN CRACKERS, A SPECIALTY. Also an Improved Hand Sown Sower. 11-15 Near the Depot, Oakland, Md.

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

—Kansas has now a school population of 300,000; the increase since last year is 15,000.

—The Moody and Sankey hymns have been published in many languages. Friends of Mr. Sankey have recently sent him copies of the hymns in Spanish, Chinese and the Sandwich Islands, and printed in the languages of those countries. He has four editions of them in Chinese, and believes each edition is by a different publisher.

—The decree of the King of Portugal providing for the civil registration of Protestants, and granting to such as shall register all civil rights and freedom from all disabilities, has been in force since January last. Since then Protestant missionaries have suffered occasionally from attacks, but the police have never failed, it is said, to give them help when called upon.

—Mrs. Amanda Smith, a colored evangelist, formerly a slave, well known as a successful Christian and Temperance worker in this country, and who has recently been conducting meetings successfully among the higher classes in England and Scotland, started in October by the overland route for Bombay, India. She was called there by the Rev. William B. Osborn, who has charge of the missions established by the Rev. William Taylor in that city some years ago.

—Another massacre of Protestant missionaries is reported to have taken place in Mexico. It occurred at Toluca, about fifty miles from the City of Mexico, in the Presbyterian Mission. How many were killed is not stated, but one man, after being badly cut, was dragged through the streets and hung to a tree, where his body remained all night. The Rev. John Butler, a Methodist missionary in the City of Mexico, reports the outrage in a letter to the Christian Advocate.

—Mr. W. E. Forster, said in an after-dinner speech the other evening, that before the school census of England was taken there was no idea of the enormous multitude of children who were untaught. Before the School Boards came into operation teachers were disgracefully ill-paid. At present it is a ridiculously small proportion of children who learn the higher branches. What is making teaching more costly in England than it was before is not the teaching of higher subjects to the well-to-do child, but the teaching of the lowest elements—reading, writing and ciphering—to those children who had been swept in by the compulsory provisions of the Education Act.

—Those happy beings who are to study Chinese at Harvard are obliged to give half their time to the work, and must have great patience and a good ear for the distinctions of the "four tones." The University has procured for its students in this language three copies of the Wade's text book. The Boston Advertiser says that Mr. Hillier, interpreter to the English legation at Peking, and an excellent Chinese scholar, writes to Mr. Knight that a faithful student will get a fair hold of the language in three years' time. Mr. Edward B. Drew, a Harvard graduate, a resident of Ningpo, and practically acquainted with the language, says that at the rate of four hours and a half a day the student should master Wade's colloquial course in from fourteen to eighteen months. On the other hand, one of the subscribers to this experiment at Harvard, a gentleman who held for several years a Consular position in China, says that he quitted in six months a knowledge of Chinese which, though very imperfect, was, nevertheless, of great use to him in the discharge of his official duties. This new Harvard venture is mainly the work of Mr. Francis P. Knight, who procured two years ago a subscription of about $8,500 to defray the cost of the experiment; he also selected Mr. Ko, the instructor, in China.

Mysterious Disappearances.

In ancient times it was sufficient designation of an unbeliever, a worshiper of false gods, to call him a pagani, a pagan, or dweller in the Latin pagus, a heathen, or dweller on the open heath, the Gothic heath. The dweller in the city (urbis) was not only urbane, but he, and he alone, heard and comprehended the Gothic word. The times are changed. The pagani, the child of darkness who threatens the institutions of civilization, is a member of the civitas. To the countryman (pagani) we now look to preserve the faith and furnish the police to keep in check the wild man of the forest. In the ancient days, if a man wanted to avoid his obligations to society, or to escape the penalty of a crime committed against society, he fled to the wilderness; now he finds his safest refuge in the most densely populated part of a great city. He buries himself in a tenement house, filled to overflowing with his urbane fellow-men of the clan Kearney, who are less for his incoherence and outbursts than for the benefits of the field reared for those of the malefactor of old who hid himself in a cave.

There is something at once fascinating and terrible in the idea of being lost in a crowd, of being with the crowd but not of it. The feeling of loneliness which takes possession of one surrounded by his fellow-beings, who know him not and who take no note of him, is comparable only to the sense of isolation which one might experience if stretched breath at midnight. The dishonored man and the dishonored woman, the broken in heart and the broken in fortune, those who seek to be alone, alight in the public haunts where they may pass unnoticed in the crowd.

In every large city there are thousands of men, women and children whose past history and whose present means of living are unknown to those with whom they come most closely in contact. It is only when some crime, at once frightful and mysterious, has been committed, and the newspaper reporters tell us of the inability of the police to identify the victim, or to find an adequate motive for the crime, that we fully appreciate the conditions of our modern city life. In American cities, especially where police surveillance is slight, and where an asylum is afforded to immigrants of all nations and all classes, and no questions are asked, the possibilities of passing unrecognized are much better than in any European city, except, perhaps, London. That city, says Mr. John Timba (who has a pretty intimate knowledge of it), is the only place in all Europe where a man can find a secure retreat, or remain, if he pleases, many years unknown. If he pays regularly for his lodgings and for what he has to eat and drink, nobody will inquire whether he comes or whither he goes. —November Atlantic.

Cooking Food for Stock.

A good many farmers have tried cooking stock feed, and have after a few months, abandoned it, on the supposition that it did not pay. This has undoubtedly proved true with many where their labor and feed costs are particularly high, and where the value of the stock is not so high as it is found that soaked corn, or soaked meal, for swine, is relished as well or better than cooked food, and if it has a less tendency to fatten, the difference is not great, and perhaps no difference has been proven. Hence we find abandoned feed steams all over the country, the owners having gone back to the old-fashioned ways. We have before taken occasion to say that the young pigs, especially, are the best to feed with feed excepting milk. It is equally valuable for older swine. But while this is true of corn, it is not true of potatoes. We have referred in another place to the value of cooked potatoes for swine, especially cooked and mixed with cooked or raw meal, and allowed to ferment slightly. It has been asserted, and we think the statement may be quite correct, that of all the vegetables in use for stock feed, potatoes are doubtless the most valuable in the raw state. The cooking of potatoes for swine has not been much practiced, yet the following shows the very favorable result of experiments made in Germany by Dr. Wolff. We invite especial attention to this, because there is a lesson embodied in it, of no mean value. In a daily ration of hay and straw, varied with other materials, potatoes were added in succession, first raw, and then cooked. The result was that with raw potatoes the ration gave 282 pounds of milk per week, yielding 6 pounds of milk; while with cooked potatoes it gave 218 pounds of milk, yielding 2 pounds of milk. This showed that milk from cooked potatoes, though 34 pounds less in quantity, was so far improved in quality as to yield nearly half as much again in butter. In other words the gain of butter from cooking the potatoes was 23 pounds per week for each cow, which is equal to 100 pounds in forty weeks, and a herd of ten cows, would make a difference of about 1,000 pounds per year. Thus it appears that the results of the German experiment is, in this case, in harmony with the views of President Hoffman, General Diven and others.

Queen Victoria's Foot Guards.

Of the officers in Queen Victoria's Foot Guards, seven are of Irish birth. In the Household Cavalry, six are English, eleven Scotch, and two Irish. In the whole army there are 3,738 English, 1,396 Irish, and 78 Scotch officers. There are three regiments of Foot Guards, the Grenadier, Coldstream, and the Scots Guards. Their officers are, as a class, more highly connected than are the officers in the Household Cavalry, and a man of means gets into the Foot Guards unless he has a large infusion of blue blood in his veins. The members of the Guards Club are restricted to the foot regiments. A large proportion of the Foot Guards are composed of younger sons, and there is thus great diversity of means in a regiment, one officer being heir or perhaps possessor of three or many thousands a year as another has hundreds. As a rule, they are the aristocracy of the army, and the inferior class of men intellectually, but the Guards are almost invariably very smart officers. The Guards are almost always in London or at Westminster—occasionally in camp at Aldershot. Until recently a battalion was always quartered at Aldershot, but this has been given up of late. On rare occasions they go abroad, and thus served in the Crimea, and Waterloo, and in Canada. To be in the Guards is considered a social distinction, and would always enable a man to command an entrance into very good society, even if he were not born to such advantages. —N. Y. Sun.

American Enterprise.

Word comes to us from across the water that W. G. Wilson's visit to Europe was to make arrangements for the manufacture of the new Wilson oscillating shuttle sewing machine in England for the European market, and that the well-known "Wellington Works" of Oldham, near London, owned by the stock company known as Bradbury & Co. (Limited), for the manufacture of the Singer, Howe, Wheeler & Wilson, and Wellington sewing machines, since 1850, have been secured for the manufacture of the Wilson oscillating shuttle sewing machine exclusively hereafter. An interview with Mr. Sheldon, the General Manager of the Wilson Sewing Machine Company, elicited the fact that no information is to be given out, and that this course was absolutely necessary in consequence of the incapacity of the company's large works at Grand Crossing to turn out a sufficient number of Wilson sewing machines to supply the market. —The Sewing Machine Alliance.

"You play poker, of course," said one gentleman to another who was shuffling a pack of cards in such a confident manner as to betray an intimate acquaintance with the article. "No, I never do," was the response. "Indeed," exclaimed the questioner, "thought every body in Europe played poker." "I am the solitary exception," "And how is that?" "Well, you see, I got into a big game, had an ace full, and lost $300; then I held four queens and got beat out of $600 more. I then said to myself, 'Old boy, this isn't your game; there's no money in it; you'd better stick to solitaire; it ain't so exciting, but it's safer; and so I've stuck.'"

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

—Huff Cake.—Three cups of flour, three eggs, two cups of molasses sugar, one cup of milk, one cup of butter, two cups of cream of tartar and one spoonful of soda.

—The best butter that is made in France for exportation to England is not salted, but at the final washing is washed in a strong solution of salt in water of pure water.

—To Stop Bleeding.—Take the fine dust of ten and bind on the wound. This is at all times accessible and easy to obtain. After the blood has ceased to flow, a few drops of laudanum will help close the wound.

—Gloucester Pudding.—Boil half a pound of rice in new milk; when it is cold mix half a pound of sugar, half a pound of butter and ten well beaten eggs. Flavor with finely pounded cinnamon and nutmeg. Bake in a pudding dish one hour. No nuts.

—Royal Cream.—One quart of milk, one-third of a box of gelatine, four tablespoons of sugar, three eggs, and vanilla. Put the gelatine into the milk, and let it stand half an hour. Beat the yolks well with the sugar, and stir into the milk. Set the kettle into a pan of hot water, and stir it until it begins to thicken like soft custard.

—Fig Pudding.—Divide with a sharp knife half a pound of figs, and add to them one-fourth of a pound of brown sugar, a teaspoonful of molasses and half a pound of sifted flour, one-fourth of a pound of sugar, the whites and yolks of three eggs, and sift in about the fourth of a nutmeg; butter a mold, and having poured it well, boil the pudding for four hours; eat with a sauce.

—Salt on Wheat Land.—Last spring Mr. Joshua Knight, of Ogle County, Ill., sowed thirteen barrels of salt on a strip in the middle of the piece without salt. The ground on which he sowed the salt produced over eighteen bushels of good spring wheat per acre, while that on which there was no salt was hardly worth cutting—the wheat being badly shrunken, injured by rust, chinch bugs, etc.

—Parsnips for Cattle.—In France efforts are being made to extend the cultivation of the parsnip. It is much employed for cattle feeding in Brittany, where it is given to cows in a raw or cooked state. M. Le Bian, a famous horse breeder, has reared his horses for twenty years on this root, instead of carrots and oats, and invites all who desire to visit his stables and the delectable food of his animals and the sturdiness of his horses. The yield is about twelve tons per acre, and has the advantage of being able to remain safely in the ground throughout the winter, and is said to endure the cold of old lands.

—The Rural New Yorker says the old idea that clover hay is injurious to horses has been pretty well exploded. Dusty hay is hurtful, and clover from its succulence and the difficulty of properly curing it, is never injurious to any horse. Care must be used in feeding it. Horses are so fond of clover that if allowed all they can eat they will distend their stomachs, and thus lay themselves open to colic. Clover is rich food, and if given in small quantities, with grain, horses will work and travel on this food as well as on timothy. The advantage which timothy has is that it is so hard and tasteless that few horses will fill themselves with it. Hence with grain they are in the best possible condition for work or travel.

Onions.

Mr. Benjamin P. Ware, at a farmers' convention at Auburn, Mass., spoke as follows on the subject of raising onions: "Heavy corn land is good for onions, and is better the second year than the first devoted to them. The manure should, if possible, be applied in the fall, if coarse, and should be well worked in a few inches deep. In the spring they have the ground fine, mellow and smooth when the seed is sown. Plant five to six rows, when ready to sow, in five to six rows, throwing the onions together in a long heap, after which plow or cultivate the ground where they grew to kill weeds; then pull six more rows and throw upon the freshly cultivated earth, and in a week pull and cultivate the weeds, but through gathered into rows and the ground cleaned of weeds. When thoroughly dried store in bins thirty inches deep, in barns or other outbuildings, till they can be marketed.

If the onions are stiff necked when they ought to be ripening off, roll the stems down with a barrel drawn over the rows by hand. When ready to harvest pull six rows, throwing the onions together in a long heap, after which plow or cultivate the ground where they grew to kill weeds; then pull six more rows and throw upon the freshly cultivated earth, and in a week pull and cultivate the weeds, but through gathered into rows and the ground cleaned of weeds. When thoroughly dried store in bins thirty inches deep, in barns or other outbuildings, till they can be marketed.

At an old physician, retired from practice, having lived in his hands by an Essex vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested his wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, he felt it his duty to make it known to his fellow-men. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, he will send free of charge to all who desire it, this remedy, in German, French, or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by enclosing with stamp, naming this paper, W. W. SUGAR, 149 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Try Smith & Curtis' Cleveland, O. Sterling Baking Powder, which will never use any other. All grocers will tell you that it is the best.

Ladies, C. Gilbert's Starches are pure.

Pilgrimages to Buffalo, N. Y., are made by thousands of invalids annually to consult with the medical and surgical staff of the World's Dispensary and Invalids' Hotel, the largest private sanitarium in the world. All chronic diseases are treated by scientific methods. The practice is divided among nine eminent specialists. Among the most popular domestic medicines in the land are those manufactured by this Association, among which are Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, the greatest of alteratives or blood-purifiers, and Dr. Pierce's Peppermint (Little Pills) that have largely superseded the old-fashioned cathartic pills. Compound Extract of Sarsaparilla is deservedly popular as a remedy for diarrhoea, dysentery, flux and kindred diseases; also as a purgative and tonic for children. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the great remedy for female weakness and associated derangements. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is the "Old Reliable." Invalids' Guide-Book—10 cents, post-paid. All-Drugs' World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y., or London, England.

VEGETINE—For eradicating all impurities of the blood from the system, it has no equal. It has never failed to effect a cure, giving tone and strength to the system debilitated by disease.

Chew Jackson's Best Sweet Navy Tobacco.

VEGETINE

Purifies the Blood, Renovates and Invigorates the Whole System.

ITS MEDICAL PROPERTIES ARE

Alterative, Tonic, Solvent and Diuretic.

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

Vegetine

THE NEWEST MUSIC BOOKS.

WHITE ROBES.

A New Sunday School Song Book of unusual beauty, by S. J. Amos and M. J. Mayhew. Price 20 cents. For which specimens 6 copies will be mailed. Featuring this charming collection when new books are needed. Every song is a jewel.

The newest Opera are

CARMEN, by Bizet. $2.00.

LA TRAVIATA, by Verdi. $2.00.

DOCTOR OF MEDICINE, by Puccini. $2.00.

BOYS OF CORNWALL, by Planquette. $1.50.

THE NEWEST Church Music and Singing School Books are

VOICE OF WORSHIP, L. O. Emerson, $2.00 per dozen.

TEMPLE, Dr. W. O. Perkins, $2.00 per dozen.

The newest Voice Training Book is EMERSON'S VOICE METHOD, $1.50. Compact, complete and useful either for private pupils or classes.

A new Anthem Book is nearly ready. The Musical Record is always new. $2.00 per year, 6 cents per copy.

CLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

C. H. DITSON & CO., 834 Broadway, N. Y.

A TEN DOLLAR GOLD-MOUNTED REVOLVER

—READ THIS!

O. W. TURNER & SON—New York—

My daughter has received great benefit from the use of this medicine. It has cured her of all her ailments, and she is now as healthy as ever. I can heartily recommend it to all who are afflicted with any of the ailments mentioned in the advertisement. It is a most valuable medicine, and one that every family should have on hand. It is sold by all druggists.

Price, 75 cents per bottle. Sold by all druggists.

My daughter has received great benefit from the use of this medicine. It has cured her of all her ailments, and she is now as healthy as ever. I can heartily recommend it to all who are afflicted with any of the ailments mentioned in the advertisement. It is a most valuable medicine, and one that every family should have on hand. It is sold by all druggists.

Price, 75 cents per bottle. Sold by all druggists.

My daughter has received great benefit from the use of this medicine. It has cured her of all her ailments, and she is now as healthy as ever. I can heartily recommend it to all who are afflicted with any of the ailments mentioned in the advertisement. It is a most valuable medicine, and one that every family should have on hand. It is sold by all druggists.

Price, 75 cents per bottle. Sold by all druggists.

My daughter has received great benefit from the use of this medicine. It has cured her of all her ailments, and she is now as healthy as ever. I can heartily recommend it to all who are afflicted with any of the ailments mentioned in the advertisement. It is a most valuable medicine, and one that every family should have on hand. It is sold by all druggists.

Price, 75 cents per bottle. Sold by all druggists.

My daughter has received great benefit from the use of this medicine. It has cured her of all her ailments, and she is now as healthy as ever. I can heartily recommend it to all who are afflicted with any of the ailments mentioned in the advertisement. It is a most valuable medicine, and one that every family should have on hand. It is sold by all druggists.

Price, 75 cents per bottle. Sold by all druggists.

My daughter has received great benefit from the use of this medicine. It has cured her of all her ailments, and she is now as healthy as ever. I can heartily recommend it to all who are afflicted with any of the ailments mentioned in the advertisement. It is a most valuable medicine, and one that every family should have on hand. It is sold by all druggists.

Price, 75 cents per bottle. Sold by all druggists.

My daughter has received great benefit from the use of this medicine. It has cured her of all her ailments, and she is now as healthy as ever. I can heartily recommend it to all who are afflicted with any of the ailments mentioned in the advertisement. It is a most valuable medicine, and one that every family should have on hand. It is sold by all druggists.

Price, 75 cents per bottle. Sold by all druggists.

My daughter has received great benefit from the use of this medicine. It has cured her of all her ailments, and she is now as healthy as ever. I can heartily recommend it to all who are afflicted with any of the ailments mentioned in the advertisement. It is a most valuable medicine, and one that every family should have on hand. It is sold by all druggists.

Price, 75 cents per bottle. Sold by all druggists.

My daughter has received great benefit from the use of this medicine. It has cured her of all her ailments, and she is now as healthy as ever. I can heartily recommend it to all who are afflicted with any of the ailments mentioned in the advertisement. It is a most valuable medicine, and one that every family should have on hand. It is sold by all druggists.

Price, 75 cents per bottle. Sold by all druggists.

My daughter has received great benefit from the use of this medicine. It has cured her of all her ailments, and she is now as healthy as ever. I can heartily recommend it to all who are afflicted with any of the ailments mentioned in the advertisement. It is a most valuable medicine, and one that every family should have on hand. It is sold by all druggists.

Price, 75 cents per bottle. Sold by all druggists.

My daughter has received great benefit from the use of this medicine. It has cured her of all her ailments, and she is now as healthy as ever. I can heartily recommend it to all who are afflicted with any of the ailments mentioned in the advertisement. It is a most valuable medicine, and one that every family should have on hand. It is sold by all druggists.

Price, 75 cents per bottle. Sold by all druggists.

My daughter has received great benefit from the use of this medicine. It has cured her of all her ailments, and she is now as healthy as ever. I can heartily recommend it to all who are afflicted with any of the ailments mentioned in the advertisement. It is a most valuable medicine, and one that every family should have on hand. It is sold by all druggists.

Price, 75 cents per bottle. Sold by all druggists.

My daughter has received great benefit from the use of this medicine. It has cured her of all her ailments, and she is now as healthy as ever. I can heartily recommend it to all who are afflicted with any of the ailments mentioned in the advertisement. It is a most valuable medicine, and one that every family should have on hand. It is sold by all druggists.

Price, 75 cents per bottle. Sold by all druggists.

My daughter has received great benefit from the use of this medicine. It has cured her of all her ailments, and she is now as healthy as ever. I can heartily recommend it to all who are afflicted with any of the ailments mentioned in the advertisement. It is a most valuable medicine, and one that every family should have on hand. It is sold by all druggists.

Price, 75 cents per bottle. Sold by all druggists.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1879.

NUMBER 39.

VOLUME 3.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, etc.

D. E. OFFUTT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Machines, Musical Instruments,
Guns, Pistols, etc.

G. W. LEGGE,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Second & Oak sts.

D. H. LOAR,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jew-
elry, etc.

I. W. STALNAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third and Oak streets.

L. BUSH & SON,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third & Oak sts.

J. A. GRANT,
Dry Goods, Notions & Groceries,
SPECIAL LINE OF TOBACCOS.

DAVIS & TOWNSEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Opposite Valley's Park.

C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Notions, Clocks, Confectionery, etc.,
Next to Coddington's Hotel.

RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods, Fruit, etc.

JAS. A. ENLOW,
Dealer in General Merchandise and Country Produce,
Rear of McCas's Building, Oakland, Md. 11-15

HOTELS.

CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,
W. M. CODDINGTON, Prop'r,
Main St., Opposite Jackson's Billiard Saloon

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

C. A. SHIRER,
Oak street, near Second.
A general line of Stoves and Tinware.

PHYSICIANS.

DR. J. LEE MCCAS,
Office on Main Street.

DR. E. H. PARSONS,
offers his professional services
to the people of Oakland and vicinity.
Office in the old Offutt building,
3 & 5m

PLASTERER.

JAMES ARNOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.

W. M. WAGNER,
Shop, Cor. First & Oak Sts.

GEO. F. LOUGHRIDGE,
Leave orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.

J. B. BRANT,
Surveyor, Auctioneer and
Conveyancer,
Oakland, Garrett county, Md.

JOHN HARRED,
Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.

A. B. WOODCOCK,
In Wm. Smoak's Building,
Watches and Clocks cleaned and repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY GOODS.

MRS. M. E. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Gents' Furnishing
and Fancy Goods, and Shoes,
Main Street, Opposite Dr. McCas's office.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

GEO. C. STURGIS,
Drugs, Medicines,
Paraphernalia, Stationery,
Tobacco and Cigars, Alder St.

PAINTING & PAPER HANG- ING.

E. J. FRINGER,
House and Sign Painter,
And Paper Hanger,
Leave orders at Bush's Store.

BLACKSMITHS.

CHAS. SINCELL,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

JOHN M. JARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,
Residence on Liberty St., nearly opp. Depot.

P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
And Builder,
Residence on Centre street.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Residence opp. School house.

JOSEPH M. CRIM,
Residence on Alder Street.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.

CABINETMAKERS AND UN- DERTAKERS.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SHATZER,
Shop on Second Street.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FALL & WINTER GOODS.

GOODS FRESH & NEW
and Cheap as the Cheapest.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,
MERCHANT TAILOR,

Has on hand a full stock of New
Ready Made Clothing,

which he will sell very cheap for cash.

Gents Furnishing Goods,

In great variety, and at prices to suit the
times.

Suits Made to Order

In the most fashionable manner. Orders by mail promptly attended to.

Also Agent for the Celebrated

"Pearl Shirt."

A Large Assortment of

BOYS' CLOTHING

Kept always on hand.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,
Oakland, Md.

MEAT MARKET.

H. B. WOLFE,

Formerly of Cumberland, Md.

Takes this mode of announcing to the citizens
of Oakland and vicinity that he has permanently located in Oakland for the purpose
of carrying on the

BUTCHERING BUSINESS

WHEAT, BEEF, SALT-ED, MUTTON, PORK, Bologna, Sausage, Pork Saus-
sage, etc., at all times.

Shop near the Post Office.

Customers can get what they want without delay and at any time of the day.

Your patronage is respectfully solicited.

H. B. WOLFE.

PATENTS.

To Inventors and Manufacturers.

ESTABLISHED 1865.

GILMORE SMITH & CO.

Solicitors of Patents & Attorneys at Law.

American & Foreign Patents.

No fees in advance, nor until a Patent is allowed. No fees for making preliminary examinations.

Special attention given to Inter-
ference Cases before the Patent Office.

Infringement Suits in the different
States, and all litigation appertain-
ing to Patents or Inventions.

Send Stamp for Pamphlet of Sixty
Pages.

GILMORE & CO.,
620 F. Street, N. W.,
Washington, D. C.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

THOS. J. PEDDICOCK, A. B. GOSDER,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW

SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY,
OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany Counties, the adjoining Counties of West Virginia, and in the Court of Appeals
of Maryland. Jan. 30-11

S. A. COX, H. WHEELER COMBS,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW

SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY,
Office, Alder street, Oakland, Garrett county,
Maryland. July 3-11

Will practice in all the Courts of Maryland
and adjoining counties of West Virginia, and the United States Circuit Courts. July 3-11

GILMORE S. HAMILL,
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY,
OFFICE IN OFFICE BUILDING,
(Lower Floor).

Particular attention given to Conveyancing,
Investigation of land titles and collection of debts. Terms negotiated. July 4-11

J. W. VETTEL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW

SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY,
OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany Counties, the adjoining Counties of West Virginia, and in the Court of Appeals
of Maryland. Jan. 30-11

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG

Late Resident Surgeon, New York

Eye and Ear Infirmary.

Has located permanently in the
City of Cumberland, Md., for the EX-CLUSIVE treatment of all diseases of the Eye and Ear, including those of the Nose and Throat.

Office, No. 20 South Centre Street.
April 1-11

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LESSONS.

SUNDAY, NOV. 23, 1879.

THE GLORIFIED SAVIOR.

GENERAL STATEMENT.

A generation has passed away since the last of Paul's epistles was penned, and now only one of the apostles remains on the earth.
Join the beloved, who has well-nigh reached the years of a century. By the cruelty of Domitian, the Roman Emperor, he is an exile on the barren rock of Patmos, in the Egean Sea. Suddenly he hears a trumpet-like summons sounding in his ears, a call to become the Lord's messenger to the seven leading churches of premonitory Asia. He turns at the voice, and a vision greets his aged eyes. Standing in the midst of seven golden candlesticks, he sees the glorified form of One on whose bosom he rested sixty years before, with a countenance shining as which he stood as of old transfigured on a Tiberian summit. At the sight, the venerable apostle melts in his feet with mingled emotions of love and fear. But the welcome voice, sweet as it sounded on the shore of Galilee, reassures him, saying, "Do not be afraid; I am the Lord, and I am with thee. Write the vision which is now before thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the
seven seals, for the vision which is now before
thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the
vision which is now before thee, and seal it
with the seven seals, for the vision which is
now before thee, and seal it with the seven
seals, for the vision which is now before thee,
and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision
which is now before thee, and seal it with the seven seals, for the vision which is now

The Republican.

JAN. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

A LEGEND OF HARVEST.

So many are the legends of harvest,
No need for record of how long,
Back in the lovely dreamy days,
The days of story and of song.
Before the world had crowded grown,
While wrong on earth was made to end,
And half the earth had never known
The forms and faces of mankind.
When just as now the years would keep Their terms of snows and suns and showers,
It changed that Summer night asleep,
One morning in a field of flowers.
And while the warm weeks came and fled,
In all their beauty of sun and rain,
She slept, with leopards golden head
Laid softly on her weary arm.
She did not hear the waning trees,
The wailing brookside did not hear,
Nor yet the violet-cold bees,
That hummed about her tiny ear.
In many a yellow breezy mead,
The rich wheat ripened far away,
And glittering on the fragrant grass,
Her silver sickle lay.
But then at last, one moonlit hour,
A gorgeous moth, while hovering by,
Met her sweet vision in a flower,
And Summer waked, with startled cry.
She rose, in anxious wonder, now,
To gaze upon the heathen's wealth,
And saw its gleaming golden head
Drooping below the sultry heat.
Half crazed, she wandered East and West,
Amid the peaceful seasons' clime,
Until at length, with quivering breast,
She stood before old Father Time.
With tears of shame she told him all,
While pointing to the wheat unmoored,
And said, "What power shall make it fall,
Ere Autumn's bitter winds have blown?"
Then Father Time, with laughter gay,
Bowed all his frame, and crooked his knees,
And tossed his white hair like the spray
That crowns the crests of wintry seas.
"O daughter, cheer your heart," he cried;
"The wheat shall fall ere the night,
We two shall reap its life by side,
And reap it in the stars' pale light."
So Summer cleared her brow of gloom,
But since that season, fair and blithe,
And bounteous, and kind, and true,
Aunt Autumn has been a myth!
Ere fall of night the harvest fell,
But since that season, fair and blithe,
And bounteous, and kind, and true,
Aunt Autumn has been a myth!
—Edgar Allan Poe, in St. Nicholas for November.

THE CLIFF-DWELLERS OF ARIZONA.

THE Moquis Indians of Arizona, whose curious habits of life fairly entitle them to the above designation, number about 1,700, and live in seven pueblos located on the tops of three of the mesas or bold headlands which rise hundreds of feet above the Southwestern plains. As in the case of all the Indians who live in these old dwellings, each pueblo has its chief—some of whom, however, rule over not more than a hundred persons—and each chief has a council room, entirely separate from the dwelling. Unlike the dwellings, which are an irregular pile of apartments two, or three, or four stories high, the council rooms are subterranean. They are used during the day for weaving articles of wearing apparel, and at night for the purpose of blankets—and in the evening for amusement, or for gathering in council on the affairs of State.

On reaching the villages after a tollsome climb one finds one's self on a flat ledge of bare rock which extends out from the main table nearly half a mile in length, and from ten feet to perhaps three hundred feet in width. In this limited space, at a height of from six to six hundred feet above the plain, the sides almost perpendicular—there are three villages with an aggregate population of about five hundred and fifty. The most populous of these villages, Waka-lapi, is on the top of the mesa, where the width is not over one hundred feet. All the water for all purposes is carried in earthen vessels on the backs of men and women—principally women—from a spring near the foot of the mountain, an average distance of nearly a mile, while the wood is brought from a distance of six to eight miles. Here these people have lived longer than they can tell from their traditions, and hitherto they have been entirely averse to a change of location, notwithstanding the difficulty of obtaining their necessary supplies and the distance from their fields and herds. They are mainly a self-supporting people, and of comparatively industrious habits. They raise grain, vegetables and fruits; have flocks of sheep and make blankets and pottery, in which, like the Navajos, they carry on quite a trade with other Indians.

A white (American) visitor other than their agent and interpreter is a very rare guest, and upon the occasion of my visit we were received with as much cordiality as they knew how to manifest. A room was assigned us to which to sleep, as we expected to remain over night, and an Indian woman prepared our meals. There was nothing in the way of furniture; our food was served on our blankets spread on the floor and our beds were only such as we brought with us. We made a tour of the villages, visiting each of the chiefs and some of the prominent men, all of whom were as kind and hospitable as they could be. At almost every house we were afforded something to eat; bread, baked squash, dried peaches (stewed), watermelons (of last year's growth), pinon nuts, etc. Some of the food, owing to the manner of cooking and serving, was not particularly inviting, and was tasted with a little feeling of fastidiousness, but as was subsequently proven in my case I had not become sufficiently hungry to relish it. My own presence there had reference to their interests, not one of mere curiosity, and after our tour of the villages we were invited to meet the men in council. The meeting was held in one of their underground rooms, which was entered from the top by a ladder. In this room, of about fifteen by thirty feet area, there were gathered by actual count twenty-six Moquis and four Navajos besides our party of four. A fire of small sticks, which was kept burning by one of their number who was appointed to this duty, served to furnish a glimmering light which was quite necessary, and also some heat which was not necessary. The weather on the bleak rock outside was very cold, and we went into the meeting with a good supply of winter clothing. The Indians, however, were their blankets over an evening in a dress, and with them it was the work of a moment to adapt themselves to the temperature of the room. They simply dropped the blanket. The only ventilation was by the entrance, and this also was the chimney. They were here for about three hours, going through the slow process of having our visit and its object explained through two interpreters—one in the Navajo language to their interpreter and he in Moquis to them—and in hearing the round and repetitious replies so characteristic of the Indian. We then took our leave and went to our quarters for the night. The next morning we were informed that the council remained in session until daylight, discussing the matters we had presented, and giving to them quite as favorable a consideration as we could have expected.

The evening view from this elevated point as the sun settled behind the San Francisco Mountain, showing the whole of its clear, bold outline more brilliant than burnished gold, was glorious beyond description. The full moon at midnight, in the clear, pure atmosphere, marked a characteristic at this high altitude, served to fasten and perpetuate the memory of this visit. But it was not without a contrast to make more complete the variety and incident. When the morning came a furious snow storm was raging, and as it was utterly impracticable to get our horses down the difficult mountain trail we were imprisoned for the day. This was peculiarly disappointing to us, as we had intended to visit the other villages and retrace our steps during the day. Besides we found our provisions were not sufficient to carry us over another day and we should be compelled to accept such as our very kind but not very cleanly friends were only too willing to furnish.

Our regret, however, was considerably lessened when we were informed of the effect produced on the snow storm by the presence of the snow storm which marked our visit. With them a snow storm is indeed a godsend. In this country, where rains are infrequent, it gives the grass and crops a start, and the snow storm is a blessing. They now said that it had been predicted days before that a stranger would visit them and would bring snow. This storm, therefore, identified with this visit, was connected by them with the subject presented to them the night before, and all this served to make the advice and counsel more effective. I had no desire to foster any superstitious notions, but as the visit was made with an earnest purpose to promote the best welfare, I could not regret it if in divine providence it should be emphasized in this way.

The morning before we left, one of the chiefs, in a very kindly spirit, came to our room to prepare breakfast with his own hands. We could do nothing else than simply look on. He sliced a frying-pan full of onions, then taking a large lump of mutton tallow shaved off enough of it to saturate the onions, then wiping his knife on his foot he used it to stir the contents of the frying-pan. When the mass was sufficiently cooked he served it in two dishes placed on our blanket, which was spread on the floor, and this with some gasyas (Havas) or Indian bread, also fried in fat, composed our breakfast. Notwithstanding I ate very heartily, to the great amusement of our companions who were accustomed to the frontier way of living.

These people, however, have a better idea of living than many other Indian tribes, with some methods common to all to all who live in pueblos and cultivate the ground, however rude they may be. Some of the water-melons I found very palatable and refreshing even in January. They have dried peaches which are good in flavor when cooked, but the blowing sand hides itself very closely until it is recognized by the teeth. This is true also of their flour, which is thrashed on the field by the tramping of sheep and goats. The grain is ground by a woman who rest on the side of a trough and rub out the grain between two stones, one large and firmly placed while the other is held in the hands, with a movement precisely like that of a man using a wash-board, and humming a tune keeping time with the motion. These methods of thrashing and grinding, however, do not seem to keep the grain from the bread.

The Moquis Indians, like all others I have met, have their religious dances. They dance when they plant their crops, which is at the full moon in February. They plant in pots as a protection from the frost. They also dance to the man's glory, but at the same time, during the growing season, they dance to a "man" below to secure attention to the roots; they dance to a "man" at the north, at the east, at the south and at the west, all to secure a favorable influence on the growing crops. They believe that all these "men" know their thoughts, whether good or bad, and when any of them lie or steal or do anything else that is wrong, that all these "men" come together and are very angry with the guilty person. It seems to them impossible that one being is sufficient to control or direct in all these matters, while they are as little restrained from doing wrong by this belief in ultimate punishment for wrong doing and for wrong thinking as many who hold the Christian faith. They disclaim any recognition or even knowledge of "Montezuma," and assert that the custom of going on the house-tops in the morning has no other object than convenience or fresh air. This, considering the manner of living, may easily be deemed a sufficient reason.

They have also a "snake dance" in which live, poisonous snakes form a special feature. These are handled with apparent freedom from any injury. This dance occurs once a year, and seems to be for the purpose of securing themselves against harm from these reptiles. The traditional origin of this dance was interpreted to me, when related in my hearing by one of their principal men, and is somewhat in this wise:

A young man, a long time ago, was living entirely alone in a valley, and was endeavoring to turn a stream of water in a direction where he wished to till it. Suddenly the stream stopped flowing, and in trying to discover the cause he was startled by seeing a serpent coiled, with head erect, at the very point where the difficulty in the water-flow appeared to be. By some subtle influence of the serpent the young man was induced to ascend a mountain, where he heard voices from a chamber underground. These voices invited him to enter, which he did, and found it occupied by men and women. The women were very beautiful, and one of them was given to him to be his wife. After remaining there awhile he determined to return to his home in the valley. In the time the wife gave birth to a serpent, and he then discovered that he had married into a family of serpents. Soon there were other serpents which, crawling about, bit and poisoned all the other children. A remedy was found through the agency of the women for whom the cause could be avoided or cured. This dance is therefore kept up from year to year, as required by their tradition, to secure them against the poison of reptiles. As I pointed out this tradition could but recall the story of serpents in the camp of the Israelites and the remedy provided for the bitten ones; and also the temptation in the garden and the promise to our first parents, and then the serpent from the old Scripture record "the serpent beguiled me." If we possess the Bible record of the temptation, the fall and the promised recovery, had been left entirely to tradition for the preservation of this record it is more than probable that our knowledge and our faith would have been incoherent and unintelligible as the traditions of these and other Indians whom I have visited.

Their idea of death and the future state are also striking as well as interesting. They believe in the future existence of the spirit, floating about in the air if it is the spirit of a good man, while the body, if it is the spirit of a bad man, is a bad man. A man is buried in a sitting posture, with a feather over the mouth to aid the spirit's flight, and with a vessel of water to be used in helping to make the passage. After death the spirit goes to an underground place on a road where it is stopped and examined; if it be found to have been that of a bad man, the spirit drops through an opening into a place of fire; if it be of one not so bad, it is allowed to pass, but is subjected to a less severe punishment; if it be one that is good, it will be permitted to carry the soul upward and visit the spirits of its kindred, while every one can see and fully understand.

These people, as well as other Indians, have their tradition of the flood, and there is abundant evidence to believe that the Indians have them. The buildings on such elevated places and building them in groups several stories high indicate quite as plainly that the purpose was as much to escape danger from possible floods as from human enemies. There is a striking suggestion of the Tower of Babel as a means of safety from a repetition of such a disaster, and whose language was confused so that they could not understand each other, for among the Pueblo Indians whose dwellings tower up so high above the plain several different dialects are spoken nearest to town; and among the Moquis of the elevated mesa of which I am writing two languages are spoken, each unknown to the other, although the people have lived within a quarter of a mile for a long time, and even the traditions can reveal—Cor. Christian Union.

A Story of Woman's Devotion.

TWENTY years ago, as the story goes, there was a wedding. The bride was of good family, and she loved her husband with the characteristic devotion of a wife. But she found herself grievously disappointed for in her husband she found a series of studied injuries that eventually ended in the loss of her character and a separation. She drifted to this city and became the proprietress of a house of bad repute, in which terrible business she remained to the present day. For years there has lingered in her heart memories of what she was and what she might have been but for this wretch whom at one time she owned as a husband and now she hates as a traitor. The irreparable ruin he had wrought. The husband continued at his old home and prospered, and the world treated him as an honorable man. He surrounded himself with new domestic ties, and apparently prospered, but the old saying "that the mills of the gods grind slowly, but they grind exceedingly small," had illustration in this case; for with reverses in business came disease, and disaster followed so swiftly that in a few years there was none so poor as to do him reverence. Consumption incapacitated him from making a living, and the public hospital was his only resort. There it was that the deserted and cruelly treated wife, whose life of degradation had been of his own making, sent for him, and he was brought here and is now lying on his death-bed in a residence apart from her own, but surrounded with every luxury that can provide so smoothly his descent to the grave. One of the leading physicians of this city, a gentleman high in the profession, is his constant medical attendant, and there with him she sits day or night but this woman is watching over him with the tenderest solicitude. This is no fiction.—Indianapolis Journal.

STATISTICS show that the inhabitants of New Jersey who are in the State prison have better health and longer life than those who are out of prison. Whether this is due to the strong constitutions of the convicts, or to their forced observation of the laws of health is not shown by the figures. But, from other standpoint, the facts are significant.

Mrs. Meeker's Story.

The New York Herald's special says: Mrs. Nathan C. Meeker, wife of the murdered agent, who is here on her way to Greeley, is sixty-four years old, with black hair, now partly tinged with gray, and blue eyes. She is small in stature, her weight being only ninety pounds. She is the daughter of a settler, and was born in Cheshire, Conn. She moved with her parents, when a child, to the Western Reserve in Ohio, when the country was a wilderness, and was reared as a pioneer's daughter, with many sisters and brothers. She taught school for several years, and was married at the age of twenty-nine to N. C. Meeker in Clariden, Georgia County, Ohio. She is the mother of five children. The following is her story:

I was in the kitchen with my daughter, washing dishes, about half-past one o'clock. We had just finished dinner. Some of the Indians had been picking around the table and joking with my daughter Josephine while we were washing the dishes. There came a volley of fire-arms—a succession of sharp explosions. It was startling, and I looked into each other's faces. Mrs. Price, who was washing clothes at the door, rushed in, exclaiming: "What shall we do?"

Josephine said, "Keep all together," and the girl was as cool as if she were receiving callers in a parlor. The windows were shot in. Our first move was to get under the bed in Josephine's room to avoid the bullets, which were whizzing over our heads. Josephine had the key of the milk house, and proposed to go there. The bullets were lying like hailstones, and we locked ourselves into the milk house, which had double walls filled with straw, and there was only one little window.

About five o'clock in the afternoon the firing ceased and all was still. Suddenly we heard the low crackle of flames and small smoke. Then we saw a coming rough the cracks in the ceilings, and knew that the destruction of the agency buildings had begun. We ran, in a line with the buildings, toward the sage brush. The bullets fell all around us, and one struck me on the thigh, plunging through the flesh, just under the skin. It stung me like a wasp and I thought it time to drop. I fell to the ground.

A chief, whose name I could never learn, came to me and said he was "heap sorry." He asked me if I could get up. I said "Yes." He then asked if I would go with him. I said "Yes." He said he was "heap mad; soldier killed Indian." I said "Yes." He said "heap mad." They would "no kill women and children." The Indians had so ordered it. He said he would take me to Chief Douglass' house, and asked me if I had any whiskey. I said "No," and he said "I have some money." I answered that there was some in my room in the building, then on fire. The Indian told me to get it, and he would wait for me. He was afraid to go into the burning building. I got the money, the Indian urging me to hurry up, as he had a great way to go that night. We went to Douglass' camp, and the Indian made me count the money. There were thirty dollars. The Indian took it and gave it to Chief Douglass. I had two silver dollars, and Douglass gave them to the Indian who captured me. The Indian then went away.

Going back once more I told Douglass that I had some blankets. He sent an Indian named Thompson to the burning building with me, and I got a hood, a shawl and one blanket. I handed around bedding, etc., among the Indians, rather than have them steal it. The Indians took them and I afterward saw them in camp when I was suffering for the want of blankets to keep me warm. I went back to Douglass and said that I wanted my medicine and my spirit box. I had lost Douglass and his family. He said: "Go!" so I went back a second time and got a large quantity of "Pilgrim's Progress" and a box of medicines. The box was so heavy that an Indian helped me to carry it. It was lost, but he took the box. When I got back to Douglass and told that chief the Indian had said that the medicine chest was too heavy to carry. Douglass looked disappointed and sorrowful, and asked: "Couldn't you have split the box a little, so you could have brought part of it?"

In going back this last time I saw the body of my husband stretched out on the ground in front of the warehouse; the sight of which I could not bear. The body was not mutilated. The arms were extended at the sides of the head. The face looked as peaceful and natural as in life, but blood was running from the mouth, and I hoped to kiss him. Just as my lips were near his I saw an Indian standing stone still, looking at me, so I turned and walked away. Douglass afterward said that my husband was shot through the side of the head.

Preparations to leave immediately were made. It was now dark, and Douglass lost no time in getting started. Being lame from having had a thigh dislocated three years ago, and not being used to walking, I asked to be carried. Douglass, the moon came out so clearly that the night seemed like day. We forded the river and trotted off toward the mountains to the south. Douglass' breath smelt strong of whiskey. He said:

"Your father dead; I had a father once; he too is dead. Agent no understand about the light Indians make."

The other Indians all took out bottles of whiskey, which they held up between their eyes and the moon as they drank so as to see how much was left. Douglass as he rode along sang what seemed to be an obscene song to a pretty melody in slow measure. When he had finished he asked how I liked it. My limb ached so terribly that I could hardly sit on the horse. Douglass held it a while; then he strapped it in kind of a sling to his saddle. I asked if I should see my daughter Josephine. Douglass replied "Yes." As we rode a villainous-looking Indian trotted alongside and slapped me on the shoulder and asked how I would like to be his squaw, and he made indecent proposals. Chief Douglass listened and laughed. He said the Indian was an Arapahoe and I would kill him if I married an Arapahoe.

We left the trail and came to a little canon in the mountains with high rocks on all sides. All dismounted and the prisoners were searched by the Indians, even to our shoes and stockings. They stole my pocket book, which was full of needles, and a handkerchief, but they gave the handkerchief back. They talked indecently to us and made shameful proposals. They were drunk and their conversation was loud with ribaldry. They even threatened me with death if I did not submit to their brutality. Fortunately I escaped outrage, but had to submit to terrifying threats of violence and death.

Douglass' squaw treated me very well for one or two days, then she began to ill-use me and gave me nothing to eat for one day. While Douglass was gone his son-in-law told me frightful stories. He said the Indians "no shoot" me, but would stab me to death with knives. One of the squaws went through the pantomime of roasting me alive—at least I so understood it. Josephine told me it was only done to torment me.

Many of the squaws looked very sorrowful, as if some great calamity were about to happen; others were not kind to me, and Freddie Douglass, the chief's son, whom I had taken into my house at the agency and washed and taught with knives. One of the squaws made healthy, came to me in my captivity and mocked me worse than all the rest. The Douglass blood was in him, and he was bad. He said I was a bad squaw and an old white squaw. He tried to steal the old white skin that I slept on, and he stole my handkerchief while I was asleep and jeered me during my imprisonment.

In a day or two Johnson became very cross, and early one morning we began to move again. It was a very long and terrible journey that I made that day. I rode a pony with neither saddle nor bridle nor stirrups. There was only a tent cloth strapped on the horse's back, and a coming to guide him with. It was the most distressing experience of my life. Not a single halt was made, and my pain was so great that the cold drops stood on my forehead. I could only cling to the pony by riding astride. We traveled rapidly over mountains so steep that one would find difficulty in walking over them on foot. The dust was suffocating, and I had neither water nor dinner. Josephine and Mrs. Price rode ahead of me, and the chief's aim was so steep that after making part of the ascent, Douglass' party had to turn back and go around it. This incident shows what hardships delicate women on bareback horses had to endure.

We reached a camping ground half an hour after dark and pitched our tents in the valley. The moon was small. I was so faint that I could not get off the horse nor move until a kind woman assisted me to the ground. I was too ill and exhausted to eat, and I went to bed without any supper. We stayed at this place for several days. As the soldiers approached the Indians moved further south at intervals of two or three days, until they reached the pleasant meadows of Plateau Creek, below Grand River, where General Adams found us. Before we reached this place Douglass permitted Josephine to go on a journeying. I had something of a kind of a barbed horse to ride upon. It gave me great joy on one of the evenings of those terrible first days to have her, as we passed each other in the moonlight, sing out cheerily:

"Keep up your courage, mother; I am all right. We shall not be killed." Next day we were washing at the creek, when Chief Johnson came and said a big council was to be held and we must not come up to the tents until he made the signal of the beating. Dinner was sent to us by the squaws, and we began to have hopes of release, after being deluded with false predictions many times before. Finally we saw the foremost of the white men on the hill by the tent. When I first saw General Adams I could not say a word, my emotion was so great. We had borne insults and threats of death, mockery and ridicule, and not one of us had shed a tear, but the sight of General Adams, Captain Clinch, Sherman and their men was too much for me. My gratitude was greater than my speech. We owe much to the wife of Johnson. She is Ouryay's sister, and, like him, she has a kind heart. As my lips were near his I saw an Indian standing stone still, looking at me, so I turned and walked away. Douglass afterward said that my husband was shot through the side of the head.

The council was a stormy one. Various opinions prevailed. The war party wanted us held until peace should be made between the Indians and the Government. They wanted to set us against the guilty murderers, so as to save them through us. After a few hours of violent speeches, Mrs. Johnson burst into the lodge in a magnificent wrap and demanded that the captives be set free, war or no war. Her brother Ouryay had so ordered, and she took the assembly by storm. She told the pathetic story of the captives, and advised the Indians to do as Ouryay requested and trust to the mercy of the Government. General Adams said he must have a decision at once or he would have to leave. That settled it, and we were set free.

Next morning, when we were about to start for the wagon, which was a day's journey to the south, Chief Johnson, who was slightly cool toward us, threw out a poor squaw for me to ride upon. His wife Susan caught sight of it and was furious. She flung it away and went to a pile of saddles and picked out the best one in the lot. She found a good blanket and gave both to me. Then she contempt with such effect that he was glad to sneak away.

So long as I remember the tears which this good woman shed over the children, the words of sympathy which she gave, the kindness that she continually showed to us, I shall never cease to respect her and to bless the goodness of her brother, Ouryay, the Spanish-speaking chief of the South. I trust all the good people will remember them.

Hunting for a Word.

An anecdote of Moore, the Irish poet, shows how good work will take to put the right word in the right place. Moore was on a visit to a literary friend in France, and while there wrote a short poem.

One day while the guest was engaged in his literary labor, the two took a stroll into an adjacent wood, and the host soon perceived that his companion was given up to his own thoughts; he was silent and abstracted, noting neither his friend and entertainer nor the surrounding beauties of the landscape.

By-and-by he began to gnaw the fingertips of his glove, pulling and twitching spasmodically, and when this had gone on for a long time his friend ventured to ask him what was the trouble. "I'll tell you," said Moore. "I have left at home upon my table a poem in which is a word I do not like. The line is perfect save that one word, and that word is perfect save its inflection. Thus it is," and he repeated the line and asked his friend if he could help him. It was a delicate point. The friend saw the need, saw where and how the present word jarred just the slightest possible bit upon the exquisite harmony of the cadence; but he could not supply the want.

The twin eudged their brains until they reached the house on their return without avail. The rest of the day was spent as usual, as was the evening, save that ever and anon Moore would sink into a silent fit of pursuit of the absent word. And so the night, and the poet went to bed in a deep slumber.

The following morning was bright and beautiful, and Moore came down from his chamber with a bounding step, with a scrap of paper in his hand, and a glorious light in his genial countenance. The word had come to him! He had awakened during the night, and the kind genius of inspiration had visited his pillow, and he had got up and torn a scrap from his note-book, and at the window, by the light of the moon, had made the thought secure.

"There," he said, when he had incorporated it into the text; "there it is—only a simple, single word, a word as common as a, b, c, and yet it cost me twelve hours of unrelenting labor to find it and put it where it is. Who could believe it?"

Ingratitude to the Doctor.

The doctors who are called up in the middle of the night at the risk of getting the pneumonia, are just as liable to go without their pay when the danger is past, as though they were called in the day time. One of them was one night aroused by a frightful knocking at his door. Sticking his head out of the window he asked the matter. "O, doctor, it is my poor wife!"

"I beg your pardon, but I haven't the honor of your acquaintance, and I am not accustomed—"

"I know it, doctor, but her life is at stake. If you only know how much I love her. For heaven's sake I beg you!" and he went on for a considerable time in this fashion, until the doctor relented, in spite of the cold winter night. He dressed himself, went out, waded far through the snow, prescribed and saved the cherished woman. Several days passed, and he heard nothing of any just, he sent in his bill. Nothing. Then he sent a collector. The devoted husband greeted the dun with anger, exclaiming: "Go to thunder! The idea of me paying that bill for a woman who has since run off with another man!"

An eminent surgeon was visited by a rich but stingy merchant, whose injured arm needed treatment, and it was feared he might have to have it taken off. The doctor, examining, declared that he could save it, and he did so. When he sent in his bill, the merchant, who was now well and brassy, cried out: "Thunder and guns, what a bill! There must be some mistake. Old Sawbones never cut off my arm at all!"

Where Women Never Go.

During eight hundred years a woman is known to have entered the grounds of the monastery of Camaldoli, Italy, except once, when a princess of the house of Medici, who had a great desire to behold the place, disguised herself in men's clothing and was admitted. But so stricken with remorse was she on beholding the sacred spot that she hastened to the Pope to confess her fault, and, as a penance for it, was commanded to build a new cottage in the inclosure, which she did. The monastery is one of the few institutions of the kind suffered to remain in Italy. A recent visitor says that what are called cells are comfortable little dwellings. Each is surrounded by a wall, and has its garden twenty feet square. A little piazza, with the trunk of a tree planted and squared for a bench as its only furniture, runs along the side of the house. Entering the door, you find yourself in a brick paved vestibule, with an empty chamber where a spring of water is flowing into a basin on the left, and the living rooms on the right. These consist of a study just large enough for one person to sit down, a dining and sleeping room, with the bed built into the wall in the fashion of a ship's berth. A small table, two chairs and a cupboard complete the furnishings. Food is passed to the occupant through a hole in the wall, all being prepared in a common kitchen and brought to the hermits once a day. They never eat meat, and their portion of fish on all except fast days consists of six ounces of fresh or four of salt fish.

A GREAT purple spot was lately discovered on the face of Jupiter, and astronomers are wondering what the matter is. The fact that Jimo packed up and went to her mother's the day the spot appeared may throw some light upon the matter.—Albany Journal.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.50
Six months, .75
Three months, .40
INvariably in advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, 5¢ per square of 8 lines;
5¢ extra per square for each additional insertion. Special contracts for advertising longer than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and address, not necessarily for publication, but as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, NOV. 22, 1879.

Most of the Southern Democratic Congressmen are glad Dr. Felton wrote that letter. They have become thoroughly disgusted with the Northern Democracy.

In future years the fidelity of Montgomery Blair to Tilden may be the subject of the poet's pen or the painter's brush. Mr. Blair could probably drown himself in the pool of ink that he has shed for the neglected claimant.

A Democratic ex-governor of Georgia says if Grant would visit the South and assure the people that he would be a President of the whole people, as Hayes has been, he could carry Georgia, and probably six Southern States next year. Grant and Stephens, he thinks, would carry every State south of the Potomac.

A. H. Stephens does not think Dr. Felton, in his recent letter, reads himself out of the Democratic party, but simply puts himself on record as opposed to the errors and blunders of the extra session. Mr. Stephens as a Democrat finds nothing objectionable or inconsistent with true patriotism in the letter.

There seems to be an entire willingness on the part of Republicans to have the Democrats establish the precedent in the Southern States of having Presidential electors for 1880 appointed by the Legislature. It will be an absolutely sure way of electing a Republican President in 1880, for the Democrats could not secure a solid South and Indiana, leaving the Republicans with a sure majority in the electoral college.

Dr. Felton, Democratic representative from the Seventh Georgia district, says the Northern and Western Democrats are responsible for the blunders and the ultra state rights dogmas of the extra session, while the South has to bear all the blame. He has become so disgusted that in an open letter he has cut loose from the Democratic party. Dr. Felton and Hon. A. H. Stephens have long been intimate friends, and hold almost identical views on political matters.

The Democracy finds cold comfort in the utterances of the New York Sun. Under the heading of "Finished Together" it yesterday published the following pithy editorial:

"The Albany Evening Times quotes with unqualified satisfaction from a journal of Watertown: 'We think it may be safely stated that Sam Tilden is politically finished.' This seems to be true; and it may even more safely be stated that the Democratic party seems to be politically finished also."

All the Democratic statesmen are making resolutions to behave themselves during the coming session of Congress. They declare a determination not to allow the Republicans to prod them into further blundering. Can they help themselves? Suppose, for instance, some meddlesome Republican member introduces a constitutional amendment forbidding the payment of all Southern claims, what will the Democrats do with it? The Solid South will never consent to its adoption, and there can be no dodging the question save with fatal results.

An Atlanta (Ga.) correspondent at the Chicago Tribune describes the ring in that State, exposed by the recent impeachment developments, as the most corrupt that has ever existed in this country, with the exception of that in New York under Tweed. The Independents have taken a stand, and many sensible Democrats do not hesitate to declare that the Democratic control of the State will cease with the next election. Alexander Stephens is generally named as the probable candidate of the Independents for governor; or in case he refuses, Congressman Felton will take the place. The indications are more encouraging now for the overthrow of Bourbon rule in the State than at any time since the Democrats seized control of the state government by force and fraud in 1873.

New York.

Some attention is needed to see the real magnitude of the Republican victory in New York. It does not show so well on the surface as the triumph in Ohio, but it is really a more significant overthrow of the Democracy than the Ohio defeat. In drawing comparisons we will leave out the vote for Cornell, because that was affected more or less by the defection of Tammany. In 1877 Mr. Beach, the Democratic candidate for Secretary of State, was elected by a plurality of 12,000, and he is now beaten by about 2,000. Mr. Olcott, the Democratic controller, was elected the same year by a plurality of 36,000. These majorities of 1877 have been wiped out and Republican majorities substituted in their place in spite of the fact that the Republican State ticket was one of Senator Conkling's making and not the enthusiastic choice of the party, which accepted its nominees reluctantly, while the Democratic party presented a solid front and polled its full votes for all the candidates except Robinson. Within twelve years there have been six elections of Governor. In four out of the five preceding this year, the Democrats had a clear majority. Back of the 24,753 for Governor in 1876, there had been 38,519 for Governor Tilden in 1874, and 29,750 for Governor Hoffman in 1870, and 27,316 for G. V. Hoffman in 1868. Only once in twelve years, namely, in the Grant campaign of 1872, had the Republicans succeeded in electing a Governor of this State. When these figures are borne in mind it will be seen that the Republicans of New York achieved a splendid victory in the face of tremendous odds.

The annual report of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad shows that this great corporation, whose prosperity is almost identical with that of the community, and whose securities lie at the base of municipal finances, is doing an immense business, and is increasing in revenues and profit. The total revenues for 1879 were $11,199,350.43; an increase of $128,710.44 over 1878, and an increase of $984,120.35 over 1877. While the revenues have been increasing, the expenses of the management have been decreased, so that for 1879 they amount to $4,523,551.75, against $4,521,311.93 in 1878 and $4,605,151.87 in 1877. The net earnings are $1,311,245.09 for 1879, against $4,639,611.87 in 1878 and $3,656,893.42 in 1877. The reduction in the indebtedness during the fiscal year amounted to $3,958,763.68. In addition, payments were made on account of the principal of debt and of the sinking funds during the year of $618,581.35, making an aggregate reduction of $4,997,338.03 in the debt of the company. Although the loss in the stock of the North German Lloyd Steamship Company amounted to $265,102.27 during the year, the profit and loss account shows an increase of $1,092,733.64. The surplus fund, representing invested capital derived from net earnings, and which is not represented by either stock or bonds, now amounts to $38,291,647.93. The increase of the tonnage of the road has been remarkable, amounting to 1,425,629 tons for the year, against 1,119,499 in 1878, 1,017,615 in 1877. In 1871 the amount of merchandise carried was 752,256 tons, so that it has doubled in five years. The report of the various divisions of the road show a large and prosperous business, highly encouraging to the stockholders. The gratifying announcement is made that it is the intention of the company to increase its pier, warehouse and elevator facilities. The report concludes with a strong commendation of the Chesapeake and Delaware Ship Canal, presenting in brief considerations which ought to cause favorable action by Congress in support of the scheme.—Baltimore American.

The Sanitarium.

The trustees of the Thomas Wilson Sanitarium for children of Baltimore city, consisting of Francis T. King, John Turlitt, Wm. A. Fisher, James Carey Thomas, M. D., George W. Corner, Wm. H. Graham and Wilson Procter, met on the 15th inst. for organization. Francis T. King was elected President, Wm. A. Fisher, Secretary, and William H. Graham Treasurer. More than an hour was spent in an interchange of views, and in order to thoroughly understand the subject it was decided to obtain essays from five persons, at home and abroad, who are eminent for their experience and success in the treatment and care of sick children. The usual period of a year from the testator's death must elapse before the trustees can come into possession of the endowment of $500,000, but this time will be needed for thorough study of the subject. The selection of a site will not be considered until the trustees have fully investigated all the requirements for such a sanitarium.

Before the Storm.

(From the Sunday American.)

There is at present an apparent lull in local politics, but it is the calm which generally precedes a storm. In a few days the contest for the United States senatorship will begin, and from that time until the third Tuesday in January, when the balloting for that office will begin, the contest will be sharp, animating and interesting. The fight for the other positions in the gift of the legislature, with the exception, perhaps, of that of police commissioner, will not be very exciting. As stated in last Sunday's American, Mr. Compton does not appear to have any opposition for treasurer. There are not many aspirants for the honors of presiding over the two houses, and Mr. Hiram McCullough, who was first mentioned in these columns as the probable Speaker of the House of Delegates, appears to be ahead in the race. The impression generally obtained that Mr. McCullough was the choice of the next Governor for that position, but some of Hamilton's friends claim that he has expressed to no one his preferences as regards the organization of the two branches of the legislature; and that, therefore, assertions that he will use his influence for one or the other candidate mentioned are unfounded. For President of the Senate there are no aspirants except those already mentioned, viz: Hon. Edward Lloyd and Hon. Herman Stump. The great political contest of the session will be the election of a United States Senator. It has already been stated on very good authority that Mr. Arthur P. Gorman will be an aspirant for the high office, and there is at present every probability that Senator Whyte, who has been urged to recede from his position declining to go into the contest, will also enter into the arena before many weeks. The friends of both are confident of success. Mr. Gorman's friends are so confident as to claim that he will be Governor Whyte's successor without the slightest doubt, and that no one has been mentioned for that high office strong enough to defeat him. It is stated that he will resign the presidency of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal next June, to make way for a Western Maryland man, and the calculation is that under a Western Maryland management, the canal influence will overcome the Republican majority in the Sixth district.

Senator Whyte's friends, on the other hand, profess great confidence, and do not think that Mr. Gorman has so easy a road to travel to Washington as his friends imagine. They concede to Mr. Gorman six votes from Baltimore county, two from Harford, three from Howard, three from Cecil, two from Anne Arundel, two from Prince George's, one from Calvert, one from Caroline, three from Kent, two from Talbot, one from Queen Anne's, one from Worcester, one from Wicomico, one from Dorchester, two from Worcester and making thirty-seven, with a number of members as doubtful, among them the two members from Washington county, one from Charles, one from Dorchester and perhaps others. The statement of Mr. Gorman's votes includes that of his own, as there are only three members from Howard county in the legislature. There will be eighty-two members in the caucus, and it will require forty-two votes to elect. Mr. Whyte's friends think that some of the votes credited to Mr. Gorman may eventually go to Mr. Whyte. Some of Senator Whyte's admirers propose to take action at an early day to publicly express their appreciation of his service in the Senate to the people of the state while in that body, and it is thought that a mass meeting will be held, at which resolutions will be passed or similar action taken urging the representatives at Annapolis to give Senator Whyte an endorsement by re-electing him to the Senate. If such a meeting will be called there is no doubt but that it will be largely attended by the representative men in this community, and that their action will have some weight with the members of the legislature. Senator Whyte, it is understood, has frequently expressed himself to the effect that he does not propose to go into an acrimonious fight for a reelection, and that while he would appreciate an election as an endorsement, he thought it unbecoming, after a service of many years in the Senate to engage personally in a protracted struggle for the senatorship. It is admitted that Mr. Hamilton will have it in his power to decide the contest by giving his influence in favor of or against either of the aspirants. One of Mr. Gorman's friends stated yesterday that Mr. Hamilton, if he would interfere at all, would probably lend his influence to a third man, and possibly to Mr. John Ritchie. Mr. Hamilton's friends, on the other hand state that the Governor elect will have nothing to do with the senatorial question, and let the friends of the candidates fight it out among themselves.

Quite a number of Mr. Hamilton's main supporters were in the city yesterday; but Mr. Hamilton, who was expected by a large number of people, remained at his home in Hagerstown. Mr. John Ritchie, of Frederick, and Mr. Edward Mealey, of Washington county, were in Baltimore. The latter is one of Mr. Hamilton's warmest friends, and resides in the same town, and the former is well known as his life-long adherent. Mr. Mealey, while at Barnum's Hotel yesterday, gave it as his opinion that Mr. Hamilton would not interfere in the senatorial question. He would give, as far as it lay in his power, the reforms which he promised on the stump, and those who deluded themselves into the belief that he used these promises to capture voters would be disappointed. At the same time it must be remembered that the legislature is one of those large bodies which moves slowly, and any reforms contemplating the abolition of sinecures and unnecessary offices will not be consummated as rapidly as some persons think should be the case. He did not think the abuses in the Democratic party so sharply criticized by Mr. Ritchie and other Democratic speakers during the campaign were censured a bit more than they should be; and he believed that they deserved the severest censure, and was sure that Mr. Hamilton will do his best to remedy these abuses. The result of the election in Washington county, where the "canal districts" gave large Republican majorities, caused considerable surprise, and evoked criticism. It appears from Mr. Mealey's remarks that the result was rather unexpected for, as those districts are considered much more Democratic than the other section of the county. The causes, he thought, were attributable to members of the Democratic party. Mr. Mealey said he held no particular person or persons responsible for it, but when asked what he thought of the article in the Hagerstown Mail, which accused the canal authorities, &c., as responsible for the defeat, he cautiously replied that the journal in question is generally discreet, well-informed and understands the subject of which it speaks. It has been rumored on the streets of this city that Mr. Hamilton felt keenly his disappointment in the defeat of two of the Democratic members of the legislature in his own county, and who are his personal friends. It is generally believed that those who, as a last resort, favored Mr. Hamilton's nomination as governor, because they could not help it, are rather anxiously waiting what he will do upon his accession to the governor's chair. There is great uncertainty as to how he will act; and as he will not be dictated by others, and least of all by those who opposed him four years ago, the ring leaders are somewhat distressed that he may spoil some of their plans. The impression is that he will not affiliate with any of the factions of the Democratic party, and regulate public matters in his own way.

Made desperate by repeated and signal defeats, the Democrats propose to make up by fraud and lawlessness what they lack in votes. They threaten to begin the raid in Maine by stealing the legislature, which has a Republican majority of 33. The reports we get from there are disgraceful. By a stretch of power the Government and Council propose to refuse certificates to enough Republican members to have the legislature greenback Democratic. This is part of the grand conspiracy by which it is proposed to steal the Presidency next year. The old copperhead Democrats here are boasting that this is the beginning of their assault on Senator Blaine who they fear is too far on the road to the Presidency. Whether an assault on him or the Republican party or both is contemplated it will fail. There must be some way to defeat the threatened burglary. Should it succeed, how ever, it will forever damn the party that dares to commit it.

A short time ago Gen. John Gibbon, of St. Paul, Minn., made the assertion that 100 bushels of wheat had been raised on an acre of ground in the Territory of Montana. The statement having been received with incredulity, he wrote to the president of the First National Bank in Helena for proof. In reply he received the certificate of the president and secretary of the Territorial Fair Association that one James L. Kay, of Lewis and Clark county, was awarded first premium for the best acre of wheat, being 102 bushels to the acre. This is believed to be the largest yield of wheat on record.

TELEGRAPHIC.

BOURBOINISM BOUNCED.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—The following letter from Congressman Felton, of Georgia, has been received here. Mr. Felton was one of the few Democrats who boldly opposed the extra session, both in the caucus and in public, and who denounced the policy of the Bourbon wing of the party. As a representative of the Independent party which is gradually assuming importance and growing in strength in the South, his views are worthy of serious consideration.

CARTERSVILLE, GA., Nov. 4, 1879. Dear Sir—I received your letter requesting for publication my views on the situation and future outlook for the Democratic party, the extent and probable future of the Independent movement in this State, if the South would be satisfied with the nomination of Mr. Tilden for the presidency; also, what effect will the spirit of repudiation in several of the Southern States have on the commercial relations of the South?

I am a Democrat, and sincerely believe that the principles of Democracy are essential to the prosperity of our form of civil government. We must remember that after the late civil war the Democratic party was unjustly represented as antagonizing the Union sentiments of the North. We had lost the confidence of the North, and we can never regain control of the government until we convince the citizens of the United States that we are more conservative, more observant of the constitution and the laws, more honest and economical, more capable and better fitted to guard the integrity of the Union and the rights of the citizens than the Republican party. We must recover the confidence of the people before we can recover political favor.

During the extra session of the 46th Congress I, privately and publicly, expressed the opinion that the proceedings of that session would result in the defeat of the Democratic party. The passions and prejudices of partisanship, rather than reason and wise statesmanship, were guiding the councils of Democratic leaders. They were making capital for their opponents, instead of strengthening their own party, and were solidifying the North against an already solid South. I need not recapitulate the mistakes and criminal blunders of that session. Our threat to withhold all appropriation bills until certain repeal measures were approved by the President; our indirect announcement to the world that we intended to ignore the executive branch of the government, and to make Congress, with its factious turbulence, the absolute dictator of this country; our unsuccessful effort to repeal the election laws—placing our opposition to these laws, not upon the ground of expediency, but upon the ground of their unconstitutionality, and vehemently pressing that objection in the face of the Constitution. Had there been an army at the polls there might have been some sense in this theatrical display. But one of the first acts of President Hayes after his inauguration was to withdraw the army from every Southern State, and during this entire war of political maneuvers was not a single soldier interfering with the ballot box in any of the States, and we were assured there would be none. Yet we received his protestations with ribald jest and biting sarcasm, and his "repudiations" were the mildest epithet we applied to this President, who, for this patriotic work, should receive the respect and gratitude of every Southern man.

All this has been the work of our self constituted leaders. The great masses of the Democratic party are conservative in their opinions, and as true as steel to the Constitution and the Union; yet they are held responsible for the vaporing follies of these hot-heads. In addition to these blunders of the statesmen, there have been in some Southern localities outrages upon law and the freedom of the ballot-box, such as the Dixon and Chisholm murders, which influence the Northern mind against the Southern people, who, as a whole, condemn such outrages as heartily as any man in the North. Of these, I can only say the Democracy has been killed in the head of its friends.

The Independent movement promises to sweep this State next year. I believe our next governor and a majority of our next Congressmen and of our State legislature will be elected as Independents. The masses of this State are determined to throttle and overthrow that organized Bourbonism which has well nigh destroyed the very bulwarks of Democracy; that never learns and never forgets that stands as a barrier to our material progress. Narrow, selfish and filibuster—its only bond of union a struggle for spoils; its only hope of success, the tricks of the caucus and the back of the party. The people of Georgia would not be satisfied with Mr. Tilden's nomination. He might and, I think, would carry the State; but it would be "by the skin of his teeth." The people of Georgia are convinced that he loves his money more than the Democratic party. They believe that had Mr. Tilden never been heard of, Democracy would to-day be triumphant in this Union.

I believe there is but one man in the United States who, as a Democrat, can win the presidency next year—that man is David Davis, of Illinois. Mr. Bayard is an honest, incorruptible man, but his position on the silver bill at the last session of Congress and his financial views generally will array the whole greenback party against him, and, here let me say, that party is not dead, nor does it sleep. The people believe that Mr. Bayard's views on Grant and Secretary Sherman and other Republicans are entitled to all the credit of their establishment, and should enjoy all the honors which may accrue from their successful advocacy.

David Davis would be acceptable to conservative men in all sections—to Greenbackers, to workmen, to capitalists, to Democrats and to thousands of Republicans. But he will not be nominated. I do not believe the spirit of repudiation exists to any considerable extent in the South—certainly not in Georgia. We favor the payment of every dollar of public indebtedness—State and Federal. In the midst of our poverty we are willing to labor and to be taxed for the preservation of the honor and credit of the government.

HOW YAZOO WENT DEMOCRATIC.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17.—The following letter was received to-day. The name of the writer is suppressed, for reason which are apparent: YAZOO CITY, MISS., Nov. 7, 1879.

Friend Dixon—The election is over, and I know you are anxious to hear how it passed off. I will not attempt to give you a full outline of everything, for it would take several days to write it out. I will only state a few facts in regard to what occurred on the day of election. It was understood among the bull-dozers that if the negroes could not be induced to vote with them, that they would not let them vote at all. As soon as the polls were open at the court house Jim Barksdale, Tom Williams, Whitley, Gibson, Bon, Wholes, Lanthorn, and about twenty others, took a stand at the gate and voted them, three at a time, which would have taken at least two days for all to vote if they had been allowed at all. Every time a negro would come up to the gate they would demand him to show his ticket. If he showed an Independent ticket, he was knocked down. They went on in this way until about eleven o'clock, when Jake Holter gave the signal, and all drew their pistols and commenced firing in the air. The negroes all ran off, and, of course, there was no more voting. The same game was played at Benton and Dover. When all the negroes collected at the polls they commenced firing in the air. You have lived long enough in the South to know that a negro can't stand that sort of punishment. I don't think there was exceeding five hundred negro votes cast in the county. At Silver Creek, where everything was solidly Independent, they would not furnish them with either box or register books, so that the vote was thrown out entirely.

I don't suppose, in the history of any country, such fraud and villainy was ever before practiced on a people. Taylor had about seventy deputies appointed to keep peace and order at the polls, all of whom participated in the shooting. Taylor fired four shots. It is amusing to see the negroes walk up the streets with their jaws tied up, and when ever they are asked if he is the matter they will answer, "Oh! nothing." I tried to vote an Independent ticket at the court house.

As soon as I can see all the boys from the other precincts I will write the whole thing up and send it to you. It is getting late; I will close. Your friend.

ABUNDANT HARVESTS.

WASHINGTON, November 15.—The following is the condition of cotton, wheat, tobacco and corn as issued by the department of agriculture:

Cotton.—There was a decided increase in the condition of cotton during the month of October. The returns indicate a yield per acre of 176 pounds last, against 191 last year. This yield, estimating 1000 bales of cotton planted at two per cent. acre, last year, would make a deficit in this year's crop of 200,000 bales of 150 pounds each. All the South Atlantic States show some decline. Texas falls off 35 per cent. All the States bordering on the Mississippi river show decided gains.

Wheat.—The returns of November 1 show an increase in the wheat crop of 25,000,000 bushels over that of last year. This great increase is the result of the very large yield in all the States bordering on the Ohio river and Missouri, Texas, of all the Southern States, is the only one that falls off in yield this year.

Tobacco.—The indicated product for the entire country is 28 per cent. of that of 1878. The gain has been greatest in Tennessee, Connecticut and New York; the loss is greatest in Ohio, Missouri and West Virginia, with a material decrease also in Maryland, Illinois and Indiana. In general, the quality is better than that of the previous crop.

Corn.—According to the returns, November 1, the corn crop promises an increase of over 200,000,000 bushels, or nearly 15 per cent. over last year. The Atlantic and Gulf Coast States note some decrease, but the other sections of the Union have greatly increased their yields. The Southern inland States increase nearly 30 per cent, and the other sections of the Mississippi Valley nearly 20. The Pacific States report about the same yield as last year.

ELECTED WITH ONE VOTE.

ELIZABETH, Nov. 15.—A commission has been granted to Samuel Hollender, of this city, as judge of the peace. The total vote cast for Mr. Hollender was one, and that was cast by way of a joke. Only one candidate was in nomination for the office, and after the returns reached Trenton it was found that there were five vacancies in the justices' offices in the city, and Hollender was declared elected to fill one of them.

LOCAL NEWS.

Numerous flocks of wild pigeons passed over this town Sunday.

New worsteds, cassimeres and overcoats at A. Loewenstein's.

A severe snow storm is prevailing here at the time of going to press, Thursday afternoon.

Davis & Townsend have just received a large stock of goods. Call and examine.

The Garrett Guards have received their accoutrements and expect their arms to day.

We understand that Mr. Ralph T. Wilburn killed a large rattlesnake near Accident, a few days ago.

$20,000 in loan on first-class commercial paper. Apply to D. E. Offutt.

We understand that Professor W. O. Isou has received an appointment on Gov. Matthews' Staff, with the rank of Major.

The terminus of the second and third divisions will be changed from Piedmont to Keyser about the 1st of December.

A party of hunters from Cumberland captured a bear and some smaller game in this county last week.

We have in our office a potato, raised by Mr. Samuel Specht, of Monterey, this county, which weighs 2 pounds and 14 ounces.

The Keystone Coal and Manufacturing Company, which was sold in Cumberland October 16 to Henry T. Weld for $212,000, will be reorganized at Philadelphia, Thursday, December 4.

Church Services—Sunday.
M. E. Church, preaching in the morning at 10 o'clock, by Rev. H. C. Sanford.

Thanksgiving Services.
Union Thanksgiving services will be held in the M. E. Church Thursday morning at 10 o'clock. Sermon by Rev. Sanford.

Dentistry.
Dr. J. Daily, Resident Dentist at Westernport, will visit Oakland on Monday, Dec. 1st, and will remain one week or ten days. Room at Mrs. West's Hotel.

Shooting Match.
A shooting match will be held at Stephen Browning's, two miles from Oakland, on Tuesday, Nov. 21st. Thirty-two turkeys and two geese will be disposed of.

Mistake in the Court.
In the court of the vote of Garrett county at the last election by the return judges, a mistake was made in counting district No. 3. In that district Mr. Tower received two hundred and thirty-five, instead of two hundred and twenty-five votes. This would make Mr. Tower's majority three hundred and ninety-eight.

Real Estate Transfers.
The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending November 20:
Sampson Custer and wife to Albert M. Robinson, Military Lots 1656, 1657, 1658 and 1659; $800.
A. C. Brooke and wife to Davis & Townsend, one-half of Lot No. 11 of the subdivision of Lot 816; $100.
Alice Chelminia to Benj. F. Harvey, Military Lot 1556; $200.

Railroad Men in Uniforms.
The trainmen of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, says the Evening Bulletin of the 12th inst., will soon don their new uniforms. The conductors will wear blue sack coats, with yellow metal buttons, blue pants and straight-brimmed hats, with the letters "B & O" and the number of the conductor neatly worked in the centre of a golden wreath. The brakemen will wear the same uniform, with the exception that white, instead of yellow metal buttons will be used. The outfit will be handsome, and are being made by Harris & Dorsch.

Instantly Killed.
On Saturday morning David Stowell, William Grimm and Samuel Vance, stepped into two mine cars to ascend the first plane at the Franklin mines upon which the cars were drawn. They were on their way to work. When the cars arrived at the top of the plane the halt securing the wire rope gave way from some unaccountable cause, and the cars sped down the plane and were dashed to fragments at the foot. Grimm and Vance escaped with a few bruises by jumping from the cars, but Stowell was thrown against a roller on the plane and instantly killed. The deceased was about forty years of age, an industrious man, and leaves a wife with six children.—Cumt. Times.

The Fair and Festival.

The grand military fair and festival, which opened Wednesday evening of last week and closed Tuesday night, was the most extensive affair of the kind ever held in the county. Offutt's Hall, which is thirty-five feet wide and over one hundred feet long, was filled with exhibits of agricultural and mechanical products, and the display was a credit to the county, but owing to the scarcity of money and the great expense incurred in order to make the affair creditable, but little was realized over the expenses. The gross receipts amounted to about $400. Captain Wardwell and the entire membership of the "Garrett Guards," were indefatigable in their efforts to make the occasion enjoyable to the large crowds in attendance, and they deserve the thanks of the people of the town for the good order maintained.

Following is a list of exhibitors who obtained premiums, and a list of contests for prizes:

PREMIUM LIST.
Furniture—John Shatzer.
Sawed shank—Theo. Bush.
Shaved shank—John Wilt.
Shingles—Chas. Wetsell.
Side-saddle—Hobbs & Leathers.
Man's saddle—Ed. McMillen.
Oil paintings—John A. Grant, 1st premium; Mrs. Theo. Bush, 2d; Dr. E. H. Bartlett, 3d.
Silver candlestick—Mrs. Town. shead.
Sportmen's goods—D. E. Offutt.
Cutlery—G. W. Merrill.
Saws—A. G. Sturges.
Apples—Dr. E. H. Bartlett.
Printing—J. A. Hayden.
Beets—E. C. Tillson.
Patatoes—Mrs. E. D. Kepner, 1st premium; John Hart, 2d.
Parsnips—John D. Stahl.
Celery—Edmund Jamison.
Carrots and radishes—Mrs. G. W. Delawder.
Turnips—Miss Nannie Martin.
Boots—W. M. Wagner.
Dining table—Jed T. Ward, Sr.
Wax work—Mrs. Theo. Bush.
Butter—Peter Gortner.
Apple jelly—Mrs. James Bell.
Sheridan crab jelly—Mrs. Peter A. Chisholm.
Peaches—Mrs. R. B. Jamison.
Spiced peaches—Mrs. A. G. Sturges.
Tomato pickles—Mrs. D. E. Offutt.
Blackberry wine—Mrs. Dr. E. H. Bartlett.
Pear marmalade—Mrs. E. H. Wardwell.
Quince jelly—Miss Jennie Delawder.

Flannels—Oakland Woolen Mills.
China ware—G. W. Latham.
Rugs—Mrs. Hagans.
Sewing—Singer Sewing Machine, L. W. Slonaker, Agent.
Child's dress—Mrs. D. E. Offutt.
Rackie Ink stand—Mrs. Joseph Haslam.
Jewel case—John Daily.
Kitt mat—Mrs. John M. Davis.

CONTESTS.
Bridal Doll, Nellie Sturges and Essie Wardwell. Decided in favor of the latter.
Pearl Card Case, Misses Jennie Delawder and Addie Tower. Decided in favor of the latter.
Sleds, Eddie Offutt and Eddie Bartlett. Each contestant was awarded a sled, owing to the faithful canvass and close vote.
Sled, Percy Veitch and Harry McComas. Won by the former.
Barrel of Flour, Mrs. A. C. Good and Mrs. Ward. Won by Mrs. Good.
Pearl Card Case, Misses Josephine Hoyer and Lizzie Hall. Won by the latter.
Silver Set, Mrs. Wm. H. Hagans and Mrs. W. W. Fairall. Won by the latter.
Autograph Album, Misses Ella Jamison and Kansas Hamill. Won by the former.
Photograph Album, Misses Lizzie Mason and Rosa Carr. Won by the latter.
Photograph Album, Misses Minnie Phillips and Mary Good. Won by Miss Phillips.
Fancy Clock, Mrs. G. S. Hamill and Mrs. J. L. McComas. Won by the latter.
Pearl Card Case, Misses Lou A. Thayer and Sallie Chisholm. Won by the latter.
Ink Stand, Mrs. Wardwell and Mrs. J. J. Smith. Won by Mrs. Wardwell.
Sword Contest, Lieuts. Osbourn and Mason. Not decided.

NEW TIME TABLE.
The new time table on the B. & O. R. R. went into effect Sunday last. The most important change is in No. 5, which formerly stopped here at 12:21 P. M. Its time by the new schedule at this station is 11:31 A. M. The other changes are unimportant.

—200 sacks G. A. Salt for sale at Wm. P. Totten's Cheap Cash Store, Oakland, Md.

Commissions Arrived.

The commissions for the officers elect of Garrett county, except the Judges of the Orphans' Court, were received by Mr. Tower last week. The newly elected County Commissioners will probably meet and organize next Monday.

Bridge Repaired.

The Yough bridge, on the Oakland and Hutton's Switch road, was repaired this week by a force of workmen under the superintendence of Capt. J. M. Jarboe. The bridge was in a very dangerous condition, and in all probability would have broken down of its own weight in less than a month. It is now thoroughly stayed, and will stand for two or three years.

Court of Appeals.

Judge Miller of the Court of Appeals, delivered the opinion of that court Friday, in the case of David Evans vs. Elizabeth Horan and Elzie Preston, taken from Garrett county. The case is an action of ejectment involving the title to two tracts of land in Garrett county containing 81 acres. The court decided that the deed of John Metz to Morrison, by which Prays claimed title, had never been executed. But it said that the question of John Metz's insanity at the time of signing the alleged deed could not be decided in an action of ejectment, and the issue must be settled by a Court of Equity. The judgment of the court is reversed and a new trial awarded, that the plaintiffs, Howard and Preston, may proceed with the action on the grounds of non-execution of the deed by John Metz. Messrs. Bruce & Richmond appeared for Evans, and have succeeded in reversing the lower court.

How to Burn Coal.

A very common mistake is made, and much fuel wasted in the manner of replenishing coal fires both in furnaces and grates. They should be fed with a little at a time, and often, but servants to save time and trouble, put on a great deal at once the first result being that almost all the heat is absorbed by newly put on coal, which does not give out heat until it has become red hot. Hence for a while the room is cold, but when it becomes fairly aglow the heat is insupportable. The time to replenish a coal fire is as soon as the coals begin to show ash on their surface, then put on merely enough to show a layer of black coal covering the red. This will soon kindle, and as there is not much of it, an excess of heat will not be given out. Many also put on the fire by stirring the grate as soon as fresh coal is put on, thus leaving all the heat in the ashes when it should be sent to the new supply of coal. The time to stir the fire is when the new coal laid on is pretty well kindled. This method of managing a coal fire is troublesome but, it saves fuel, gives a uniform heat and prevents the discomforts of alternation of heat and cold referred to.

Richard Smith, the editor of the Cincinnati Gazette, Saturday night last telegraphed from Chicago, regarding Grant's candidacy for a third term:

"Had the convention to nominate for 1880 been held here, he could have been chosen with a shout. The politicians held back or quietly opposed his candidacy, but the people are for Grant without qualification. Everybody but Grant himself talks about it, but it is a singular fact that no one has approached him on the subject. The Hon. E. B. Washburn and General Sherman are nearer to Grant, and share his confidence more truly than any other men; but when I say this subject has not been even mentioned between them, I speak advisedly. In 1872 he said that Grant is not a candidate to the extent of saying a word or giving a sign, but whether he would accept, if nominated, no one knows. It is safe to say that Grant would not permit himself to be made a party to a contest for the nomination, nor would he accept a nomination that would result from a contest in the National Convention. The opinion of those nearest to Grant is that his reticence may be interpreted as meaning that he considers it time enough to speak when he is authoritatively approached; that future events may lead him to a different conclusion from what he might reach now; and that he would not, under any circumstances, permit his name to be used unless it should seem to be the substantially unanimous desire of the Republican party to re-nominate him, as it was in 1868 and 1872, and that even in that case he would express his firm purpose not to serve more than one term. In fine, Grant's purpose, as interpreted by those nearest to him, shall seem to demand from him an expression. His personal movements for the immediate future have been determined. He will go East in December, and spend the winter south. During the summer he will occupy his house at Long Branch.

GEN. TOWN'S EXPLANATION.—Gen. Robert Towns thus explains to the reporter of the Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution his dispatch to the Chicago News welcoming Gen. Grant: "It certainly represents my views. I did not intend to answer the editor's dispatch in full. I merely desired him to congratulate Gen. Grant on his safe return. I then went on to say that I was ready to fight again for my cause—that of establishing the rights of the States to secede. Why shouldn't I say it? I feel it— I mean it—it is in my heart, and why should I deny it? Why should I crawl about and begin to tell lies in my old age? I don't like the Union, and they know it, and I have nothing to hide. The policy of suppressing sentiment is all pretentious. Seymour got a bigger vote in New York in '68 than we have ever got since, and we've been choking the North with butter ever since. The Union cannot last. Honest government is impossible under the 14th and 15th amendments. The radicals injected 500,000 snags into the belly of the constitution, and they did it for the purpose of breaking down our institutions. They will succeed. I hope and believe. Yes, sir; I telegraphed the Chicago man my honest views. I speak for no one but myself, and I don't care to tell a lie about it."

That a new insurrection should have broken out in Cuba at this time is rather unfortunate, because it will probably interfere with and delay the perfecting of the plans for abolition of slavery in the islands that are before the Cortes. If it were possible that the insurgents could throw off the Spanish yoke and establish Cuban freedom, the rising might be considered in another light; but it is not likely to amount to anything more than a protracted guerrilla warfare, with the inevitably accompanying cruelties and horrors. Still, it is undoubtedly the truth that Spain can not hold Cuba in peace so long as slavery exists there. Whether its abolition would quell the rebellions is an open question, but the spirit of the real statesmen of Spain are anxious to try it, and they have addressed themselves to the preparation of the necessary legislation. And this is a very difficult task. They have to face the antagonism of the slave owners of Cuba and a powerful party of Conservatives in Spain who will twist such an outbreak as the present one into arguments against manumission and in favor of the most tyrannous repression and holding of the Gen of the Antilles. Moreover, the Liberals find it hard to agree upon the method of emancipation. It has been conceded that compensation must be made to the proprietors, but whether emancipation shall be fixed by a distant date, or shall be made at once, a fifth provision that the slaves continue to work on the plantations for a certain time, is an open issue. Perhaps, after Cuba has further earned its title of the grave yard of the Spanish army and various districts of the island have been again desolated by the carnage of war, the obstinacy of the hidalgos will relent so far as to consent to the conditions of permanent peace.

When the Rothschilds offer to subscribe one-third of the capital necessary for the construction of the Nicaragua canal, on condition that General Grant accepts the presidency of an American Company organized to prosecute the work, it begins to look like business. The subject was broached to the General at Chicago, and while he would not say that he would accept the position before ample subscriptions had been made, and certain concessions obtained from the Nicaraguan government, he intimated that the original surveys were made at his suggestion, and that he was heartily in favor of the enterprise. As to the making of subscriptions, and the obtaining of the necessary governmental concessions, we have little doubt that both objects could easily be accomplished with such co-operation as that of the Rothschilds, and the question really turns upon the General's personal feeling in the matter. He has often expressed a longing for some business opportunity that would give active employment to all his energies, and we are inclined to believe that his friends are right in saying that he is averse to encountering again the vexatious responsibilities of office. There are few men so well-fitted to undertake a work of such vast proportions as the Nicaragua canal as General Grant, and the confidence of the Rothschilds has been well placed.

THE METEORIC SHOWERS.—Prof. Proctor, in his lecture on "The Wonders of the Heavens," delivered in New York Friday night, spoke of the meteor systems. He said that he had recently been led to adopt the opinion that some of the meteoric stones that fall upon the earth had their origin in the earth itself in the youthful volcanic period of her existence ages ago. Since then they have swung in orbits around the sun, and as the earth's orbit crosses theirs, it happens that at times some of them are called by her attractions, and so they cease their wanderings and fall to rest on the bosom of their mother, on the night of November 27, the lecturer said, we may expect to see a brilliant display of meteors radiating from a point near the star Gamma, in the right foot of the constellation Andromeda, which is now nearly overhead, at about 10 o'clock at night.

New York Sun: The recent elections teach one lesson above all others—that the people who fought for and preserved the Union do not mean that its enemies shall rule over them in this generation. They have no hostility to the South. They fought its battles against carpet-bagging and military domination and Gauleism. They encouraged it in adversity, cheered its efforts for good government and now rejoice in the signs of its returning prosperity. They desire fellowship, intimate intercourse and the ties that a common interest and the love of a reunited country ought to inspire. But it is well the South should understand once for all, that the great majority of the Northern people, without distinction of party, do not believe the time has come when the administration of this government should be given over to those who sought to destroy it.

Gen. Walker, superintendent of the next census, has completed the formation of supervisors' districts. In Maryland there will be three districts as follows: First district, Baltimore city; second, Baltimore (county) Caroline, Cecil, Dorchester, Harford, Kent, Queen Anne's, Somerset, Talbot, Wicomico and Worcester; third district, Allegany, Anne Arundel, Calvert, Carroll, Charles, Frederick, Garrett, Howard, Montgomery, Prince George's, St. Mary's and Washington counties. The appointments of supervisors must be made in each instance by selection from applicants residing within the boundaries of the respective districts. These important offices, which will practically control the thousands of local appointments necessary for the work of taking the census, are to be filled by the 1st of January.

Bob Towns is evidently "a good rebel still," but his rough frankness is more creditable than the oily evasiveness of some of his old comrades in arms. When he says, however that he is ready to try it over again, we must believe that he is only joking. As a local politician, Towns is quite formidable, but as a man of war, he is about as harmless as Alexander H. Stephens. Still, if he insists on mortal combat, he should be gratified, and we suggest that Private Dalzell would be an eminently proper person to engage the enemy. Let Towns and Dalzell fight it out between themselves, financial expenses to be paid by the survivor.—Balto. American.

The Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle opposes any reduction of the President's salary, and the Vicksburgh (Miss.) Herald remarks that "It is time for the people of every Southern state to begin to trust instead of fear the national government," and that "the idea of eternally treating the United States as an enemy is not only silly and cowardly; it is absolutely injurious." These sentiments are in the direction of educating the Southern people to spell nation with a big N.

THE HIGH PRICE OF WHEAT. St. Louis, Nov. 15.—With reference to the announcement of the movement here among the millers to close their mills until the price of wheat declines, principally for the reason that flour is below the price of wheat and can be only produced at a loss, it is stated that many millers have already lost heavily on contracts made when wheat was less than $1 per bushel, and they see no profit in the immediate future. But little flour has been shipped from here for the last three weeks, and large amounts are in store—more than enough to supply all demand for some time. The millers are satisfied there must be a decline in wheat pretty soon. At all events they will not purchase until the price falls or there is a margin on flour.

REGULATORS ON GUARD IN KENTUCKY.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 15.—A special dispatch to the Register states that Lewis Sloggs has been convicted of the murder of Waddell, in 1840 at county, Ky., and sentenced to eight years' imprisonment. Judge Hildner refused a new hearing and the case is to be appealed. The prisoner was removed from the county jail for fear the regulators would shorten the sentence. The regulators in Northwestern Kentucky have issued a proclamation fashioned after the Declaration of Independence. It recites that, in view of the reign of assassination, robbery and rape, which has lasted in that region four years, they have had to band together to protect the lives and property of honest and honorable people. They deny that they are a mob and warn all barn burners and murderers to leave the county and threaten them with lynch law.

The Clarkburg News informs the world that it was the Democratic party who brought about resumption of currency by opposing the Resumption Act! The Democratic party always accomplishes a thing by opposing it. That's the way they freed the slaves, put down the R. R. system, and passed the Amendments to the Constitution.

Nothing Short of Unmistakable Benefits.

Conferred upon tens of thousands of suffering and afflicted humanity, the benefits which AYER'S SARSAPARILLA enjoys. It is composed of the best vegetable purgatives, with the boluses of Potassium and Iron, and is the most effective of all remedies for scrofulous, mercurial, or blood disorders. It cures successfully and certainly in every case, the most obstinate and complete cures of Scrofula, Sores, Rashes, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood, by its purifying effects. It cures rashes and often cures Liver Complaints, Female Weaknesses and irregularities, and is a potent renewer of vitality. For purifying the blood it has no equal. It tones up the system, restores and preserves the health, and imparts vigor and energy. For forty years it has been in extensive use, and no toxic or most available medicine for the suffering sick anywhere.

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

MORTGAGEE'S SALE

—OF—

VALUABLE PROPERTY.

In District No. 9, Garrett county, Maryland.

By virtue of the power of sale contained in a mortgage from John Tighe and Lena M. Tighe to William E. Henshaw, of Allegany county, Md., of his assigns, dated November 10th, 1877, and recorded in Liber W. H. T. No. 10, folio 125, the undersigned, the undersigned, in and to the effect of the said mortgage, to which said power of sale thereunto previously annexed, do hereby certify, that at the time or in the manner therein mentioned, it shall be lawful for the said William E. Henshaw, his assigns or attorney, to sell the said mortgaged premises at public auction, under the National Bank, in Garrett county, to the highest bidder, for cash and debt, having been made, I, John S. Groves, the assignee of William E. Henshaw, do hereby give notice that I will offer at public auction

At Johnson's, on the National Road, in District No. 9, Garrett county, Md., on the 13th day of December, 1879

At 10 o'clock A. M., all the following tract of land known as the

"Walnut Hill Tract,"

beginning and lying as follows, being a part of Lot No. 10, in the Beginning at the southeast corner of the old line of the phone line and running with the line of said lot east 1/2 miles to the line of the old line of the phone line, south 1/2 miles, then bearing and the line of the old line of the phone line, and with it north 1/2 miles to the place of beginning, containing

ONE HUNDRED ACRES,

more or less, being a part of a tract of land known as the "Walnut Hill Tract," lying and being in Garrett county, Maryland, and being fully described in the said mortgage.

TERMS OF SALE—Cash on day of sale.

JOHN S. GROVES,
Assignee of William E. Henshaw.
JOHN S. GROVE,
Attorney and Agent. 1122 ts.

NOTICE.

All persons having claims against the estate of John S. Groves, deceased, are notified to file the same with the Register of Wills for Garrett county, on or before the 13th of December, 1879.

T. J. PHAROCH, W. L. RAWLINS, Attorneys.

NOTICE.

I have $7,500 to loan in sums from $1,000 to $3,000 on first-class mortgages.

1115 tf T. J. PEDDICORD.

Estate of George J. Waller, deceased.
THIS IS TO GIVE NOTICE that the subscriber hath obtained from the Court of Garrett county, Maryland, Letters Testamentary on the estate of GEORGE J. WALLER, late of said county, deceased. All persons having claims against the said deceased are hereby notified to present the same to the subscriber, with the vouchers therefor, legally authenticated, on or before the 15th day of May, 1880. They may otherwise be lawfully excluded from all benefits included in said estate are requested to make immediate payment, to wit: for my money the 15th day of November, 1879.

JAMES W. WHITE,
Executor.

Constable's Sale.

By virtue of three writs of fieri facias, two issued by Alexander L. Osborn and one by Richard B. Jamison, Justices of the Peace of the State of Maryland, in and to the County of Garrett, two at the suit of Geo. W. Lege, and one at the suit of John E. Brown, against the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of Alexander L. Good and Mary E. Good, his wife, I, the undersigned, do hereby give notice that I will offer at public auction, on the 15th day of November, 1879, to-wit:

Military Lots Nos. 85, 258, 988, 1509, 1519, 1520, 1590, 1613, 1800, 1802, 1815, 1909, 1940, 1942, 3535, 3550, and 3567.

being the same lots obtained from John Seem and wife by deed, dated December 7th, 1852, and recorded in Liber W. H. T. No. 6, folio 623, one of the said lots, or in Garrett county, 2d. Said Military Lots are situated in Garrett county Md.

And I hereby give notice that on

SATURDAY, November 22d, 1879,

at 2 o'clock P. M., in front of Cockington's Hotel in the town of Oakland, Md., I will offer at public auction the property so described, to the highest bidder, for cash, or satisfy said judgments and costs thereon.

JAS. S. JOHNSON, Constable.

JOHN RICHARDSON,
Manufacturing and Dealer in WAGONS AND FARMING IMPLEMENTS,
GRAIN CRACKERS, A SPECIALTY.
Also, also, Improved Feed Sifters, &c., &c.
Near the Depot, Oakland, Md.

this corps in August, 1864, in consequence of a question of rank. He commanded military departments after the war, and was retired from active service at his own request October 14, 1868.—N. Y. Tribune.

What to Do With the Saw-dust.

"Yes, I know I said that," said Dan
"but what unde 'em laugh?"
There must be found some use the saw-dust other than to fill up rive
—Red Wing Republican.

LET the next spelling-reform convention be held in Maine, and adopt measures to reform the spelling of the lakes of that State. Some of the lakes there are only a quarter of a mile in length and names half a mile long. The reformers might wrestle with Lake Mngoguehukitchognemnsquitamackinogee to begin with.—Norristown Herald.

Since the undertaking was to be a profound secret they wished to straddle their line where it would not attract observation, and a suitable route was the subject of much discussion.

"Maybe it's 'cause other folks hacept etch tract

as a

through which wild grasses were sprouting, and up the rickety stairs, went boy, as full of ambitious plans as ever been the owner of the place where the ruined structure was new. But the crumbling walls laughed at a boy—not so much older than Tan but with no boyish look on his face—leaning upon a hoe that told he had been working in some of the fields up elared. He gave no reason for the sudden avowed friendship beyond the reiterated assertion that she was "the pluckiest girl in that school," but that was the beginning of happier days for Dode. Tad's home was rich in

But was it all only a chance? or was there One, who, in tender care for little Dode, really sent a message by way of Tad's telephone?—Kate W. Hamilton in November Wide-Awake.

The next day, about eight o'clock in the morning, the vessel was thrown on her side by a heavy swell, and she lay on her for her to recover her equilibrium, but being now hopelessly water-logged, Michel had lashed himself to the wheel, of which he was using the only handle the vessel had over, and to the great all probability, he owed his safety. The steward was killed by the fall of the mainmast, which went by the board, and he was the only one left, and, indeed, the only other survivor, strange to say, saved by being entangled in the rigging at the time. The two survivors were therefore, enabled to climb to the side of the vessel, and to get a firm hold on. The Captain, mate, and three of the crew managed to get into the long boat just as the vessel went overboard. They dared not come near the wheel, and so the only chance of attempting to save the survivors, neither of whom could swim. Two minutes after the long boat left the wreck it was lost sight of. A very few minutes later, at the time and Michel thinks it was lost.

late last Friday afternoon they were aroused from the almost despairing slumber both had now fallen by the wayside. The darkness was deepening down toward them. Darkness was coming on rapidly and they were afraid that their signals might not be noticed. The Enrieque was a man of great strength was capable of so attractive a person, and shouted with all his might. The Enrieque and his countrymen were not able to see anything in the night. Both men lost everything they had in the world except the clothes they wore. They are profuse in clothing and they are very fond of the things of the Enrieque, who kindly furnished them with everything—shelter, clothing, and food. Michel says he never experienced any trouble or difficulty in his life. He has never experienced anything so dreadful as his last disaster, although he has been the mate of the Robert Kull, of Galveston, Texas, during the voyage of the ship in 1877. Most of the time he has spent from New York, where he has spent

It is impossible to ascertain names of the men who were lost, as brigantine's papers were not accessed after she capsized.

—A deaf man can get out of a c ns soon as any one when a collect to be taken up, and yet the fact ha ways puzzled philosophers.—Free L

• • •

JENNIE MEASEL, recently arr
and locked up in Buffalo for theft, find it will take something stronger
safron to bring her out.

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

The value of church property of all kinds in the State of New York is estimated at $117,610,000.

In three years ending 1876, the Methodists of the United States raised $922,650 college endowment; the Episcopians, $208,810, and the Baptists, $1,095,976.

A year and a half ago a mission for lepers was established in North India by a missionary of the Church of Scotland. It has now three asylums, with eighty inmates, and these twelve have professed Christianity. A more unattractive missionary field cannot well be found.

Superintendent Mabbett, of Rochester, N. Y., calls upon the Board of Education of that city to order that a detail of one or more teachers be required to spend the entire noon recess upon the grounds and halls of their schools, preventing the children by their presence from indulging in rudeness, cruelty, or profanity.

It is proposed to build a Presbyterian Church at Canterbury, England, where, though the old English form has died out, the French form of Presbyterianism has never been extinguished, for the Presbyterian refugees began to settle in that city in the year 1564.

The General Conference of the Universalist Church in America, has just been held in Minneapolis. The Hon. Israel Washburn, of Maine, was elected President, and G. L. Demarest, of New Hampshire, Secretary. The Board of Trustees reported an increase the past year of eleven parishes, seven churches and nine Sunday schools, and a gain of seven per cent. of communicants. There had been considerable money raised to pay off church debts, and the Board had received $21,866.

The Richmond, Kentucky, Conference Herald has this peculiar item: "An old debt was discharged on Saturday last. It was twenty-seven years ago, when one of the members of the Conference was on the circuit in Madison County, and was called upon to officiate at a wedding, which he did. For some reason not known, the groom failed to pay any fee, and seeing the minister and recognizing him, stopped, made himself known, and handed him five dollars. This is about the strongest indication of the approach of millennial times we have yet seen."

The revision of the Bible, now nearly completed, has been a far more expensive work than most persons imagine. There are fifty-two members of the committee, and these meet for five days in every three weeks. No salary is paid to any one of them, but they are allowed their traveling and hotel expenses. These, with other items, will bring the cost of the first edition of the Revised Bible, as estimated by the University presses, who are responsible for it, to about $200,000, and, consequently, it has been determined to sell the first few issues at a high price, in order to cover the outlay. The new Bible will receive no "authorization" either from Parliament or Convocation. It has been discovered incidentally during the sittings of the committee that the so-called Authorized Version never was in fact authorized, either ecclesiastically or politically. It made its way by its own merits, and the Revised Bible is expected to do the same.

The Wooden Shoe in France.

Sabots, or wooden shoes, are worn by at least one-half of the French people. The peasants and farmers have no others, and in cities and villages numbers of the laboring and poorer classes wear them. Few, perhaps, are aware of the great saving to the Nation from this custom. An ordinary pair of sabots cost about two francs, or forty cents, and they will last, without any repairs, at least two years. Taking the population of France to be 40,000,000, it is safe to estimate that the shoes of 20,000,000 of them cost the same number of francs yearly, or $8,000,000. Assuming the population of the United States to be about the same as that of France, and comparing the foot-gear of the same class of Americans with that of the French referred to, it is no exaggeration to conclude that their leather boots and shoes, with repairs, cost them annually five dollars per head, or $100,000,000. The French thus save, as compared with the Americans, on this one item alone, $92,000,000 yearly, or one-tenth equal to the annual interest of $1,950,000,000 at five per cent.

It is by such savings that we can account for the immense wealth of France, for it is an axiom that the economies of an individual, and more particularly of a class, surely increase the resources of a Nation. This great saving is not the only advantage of sabots. Wood is a much better non-conductor of heat than leather, and the thick wooden "chassette," or short sock, always worn with sabots, the feet are kept dryer and warmer than they could possibly be by any leather boots or shoes.

Brilliant Talkers.

Who shall say the race of brilliant talkers is extinct? Festive host (confidentially to lady on his right): "It is has been suggested itself to me, Mrs. Brown—that the reason why the weather—or—affords so fruitful a topic for conversation among English people—is—that the English climate is subject to—or—rapid variations, which cannot be foreseen, so to speak." (The same lady on his left, also confidentially): "As I was just observing to Mrs. Brown, it has frequently occurred to my mind, Mrs. Jones, that—or—the reason why—or—why the weather, in short, furnishes so inexhaustible a theme of discussion to—or—British people—is—or—no doubt—or—that the climate of the British Isles is liable, so to speak, to—or—to sudden mutations, which we cannot calculate upon beforehand." The same (loud, across the table to festive hostess): "My love—or—as I was only just observing to Mrs. Brown, and—or—to Mrs. Jones, it has frequently, and indeed constantly, suggested itself to my mind that the reason why—or—why the weather, in point of fact, should—or—should furnish so fruitful

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

a topic of discussion, and afford so inexhaustible a theme of conversation among—or—among the inhabitants of the British Isles, may—or—may possibly be owing to the peculiarity that the—or—well, the climate of the United Kingdom is liable and subject, so to speak, to sudden mutations, which cannot be calculated upon beforehand, and to—or—to rapid mutations, in short, which—or—which we cannot—or—foresee."—London Punch.

Horses with the Toothache.

Horses, like human beings, are subjected to the most excruciating toothaches, and it is only within the past few years that any attempt has been made by veterinary surgeons to allay the pain and extract or fill their teeth. It is only after patient study, too, that one is able to discover when a horse is suffering from toothache, indeed the phenomenal Philadelphia lawyer. When suffering from toothache, horses manifest the greatest impatience, and are vicious and unmanageable, and bite and kick continually. Stablemen and managers at different times have been badly bitten or kicked by horses suffering from toothache, who at other times are the most docile creatures. The experiments made by veterinary surgeons, however, are of great practical advantage, and they are gradually getting the matter down to a perfect science.

"What is the mode of treating toothache in a horse?" asked of a veterinary surgeon the other day.

"Well, they differ, according to circumstances. Sometimes a horse is in the stable and sometimes in the field when attacked, and the operator must use his judgment. Generally, however, a man puts his arm around the horse's head, and with his disengaged hand presses hard on the nose of the animal. Then, without more ado, the hand is thrust into the mouth and the jaws are slowly and gently, then each tooth is felt, and when the right one is touched there is no mistaking it, as the horse elevates his feet in a manner something after the style of the boss dansense in the 'Black Crook.' In many cases the defective tooth is found at the sides of the jaw, where the sharp points have lacerated the flesh. A file must then be inserted and the points filed down, and in a short time the animal feels relieved. But this is not an actual toothache. The gradual growing of the molars and the sharpening of the edges, however, leads to it. How can it tell when the horse has toothache? Why it's easy enough. You can tell in the manner in which he holds his head with the head down and the lower lip drooping, and if the vein is pulled sharply the creature is ready to jump and prance. Then again the horse is compelled to back by the pressure of the rein on his teeth the agony is terrible, and the attention of the driver is thus attracted."

"When the teeth are badly decayed, are they drawn?"

"Sometimes, but as a rule they are cauterized."

"Is filling much in use?"

"No; it is impossible, almost, to do the job successfully. Wads of cotton or other matter are frequently placed in the cavity, but nothing more, and it is only done to keep out the cold water."

"What instrument is used in cutting down the tooth?"

"A singularly shaped instrument called a file is employed, and after the tooth is cut it is filed down. When a tooth has to be drawn a strong pair of forceps are employed."

"How do the horses stand the operation?"

"Well, without much trouble; when a good hold is obtained on the tooth a slight twist is given to loosen it, and then when a ten or twelve-pound pressure is obtained the tooth is drawn out by force."

"This occasions a great loss of blood, does it not?"

"On the contrary, after the first few hours bleeding ceases; but I have known horses bleed to death from having a tooth extracted."

"Do you use anesthetics to stupefy the animal?"

"No, nothing whatever. It is very painful, but the horses bear it well used."

"About the charges. Do you charge much?"

"The charges vary greatly. The price is regulated by the time expended on the animal's mouth, and the value of the horse. In cases of valuable horses we charge a little extra, but the ordinary fees are from three to five dollars for extracting. I have charged as much as fifty dollars, however, for very valuable horses."—N. Y. Mercury.

His "Recommend."

Some time since a Detroit merchant was in want of a clerk, and he advertised the fact. Among the numerous applicants who sent in recommendations was a young man who had shortly before received a letter from the old man Blank, to the effect that any further visits to his house on the part of the young man could not be permitted, and that "Mary's" future husband was already selected. In his haste and excitement he forwarded this note in place of a recommendation from a mercantile house, and on discovering his mistake, he called upon the merchant to secure the mistake.

"Ah!" said the merchant, as the young man entered, "you can begin here to-morrow. I was about to write you."

"That—that letter—" began the young man, but the merchant interrupted:

"Best recommend in the world. Old Blank and I have been enemies for forty-six years. Any one he is down on I always employ, in order to aggravate him. Come right along. I'll give you a position in the front of the store, where the old crumbeedown must see you every time he passes, and if I want to make up faces at him I'll pay all costs!"

Thus are we able to furnish another illustration that sunshine may come out of the depths of despair.—Free Press.

Nearly 300 Chinamen in New York have white wives.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

—If soaked in milk, salt fish will freshen quicker and better than if water is used.

—To Make Starch Polish.—Take two ounces of spermaceti, two of white wax, and melt together with gentle heat; add one teaspoonful to one pint of starch.

—Preserve Brass Ornaments.—Beat sal ammoniac into a fine powder, moisten with soft water, rubbing it on the ornaments, which must be heated over charcoal, and rubbed dry with bran and whitening.

—Clean Cane Chair Bottoms.—Turn up the chair, wash the bottom with hot water and sponge, so as to soak it, if necessary add soap. Dry in open air if possible, or in a draught, it will become tight and firm.

—Feed no frozen and half decayed green food to milch cows. When the pasture dries up better put them at once upon dry feed. The tops of beets and turnips may be fed as long as they are untouched by frost.

—Take one-third fat and two-thirds lean pork and chop fine, and to every twelve pounds of meat add twelve large spoonfuls of powdered salt, nine of sifted sage and six of sifted black pepper. Keep them in a cool, dry place.

—New England Pancakes.—Mix a pint of cream, five spoonfuls of fine flour, seven yolks and four whites of eggs, and a very little salt; fry them very thin in fresh butter, and between each strewn sugar and cinnamon. Send up six or eight at once.

—Stewed Cheese.—Grate two ounces of cheese, put it into a basin; mix with it a small teaspoonful of cream and an egg beaten and strained. Put into a small saucepan one ounce or half an ounce of butter, according to the richness of the cheese, let it melt, then stir in the other ingredients, and let it boil until well mixed. Serve it hot either browned or plain.

—Stock for Gravy.—A good mode of making stock for gravies is to cut lean beef thin, put it into a basin; mix with it any butter or fat, and set it on a fire covered, but take care it does not burn; let it stay till the gravy that comes out of the meat is dried up into it again, often shaking it; put in as much water as will cover the meat, and let it stew away. Then put to the meat a small quantity of water, herbs, onions, spice, and a bit of lean ham; simmer till it is rich, and keep it in a closet refrigerator. Do not take off the fat till going to be used.

—An Experiment.—An old turkey was given the following experiment: Four turkeys were fed on meal, boiled potatoes and oats. Four others of the same breed were also at the same time confined in another pen and fed daily on very finely pulverized charcoal mixed with their food; mixed meal and boiled potatoes. They had also a plentiful supply of charcoal in their pen. The eight were killed on the same day, and there was a difference of one and one-half pounds in favor of the fowls which had been supplied with charcoal, they being much the fattest and the meat being greatly superior in point of tenderness and flavor.

—The Prairie Farmer says: "We may say to 'inquire' that we believe in good, sound apples as soon as they are ripe, putting it into clean casks, and as soon as it has fermented rise and bright racking it off into sweet casks and bottling. Let it stand until spring, and then use it for use. That will be sufficient. Sulphate of lime (calcium sulphide), about one-eighth of an ounce to each gallon of cider in the cask, will keep it from changing during the winter. Mix the sulphate, live to eight ounces for a forty-gallon cask of cider, in two quarts of water, turn it into the cask, shake or roll it till thoroughly mixed together and use as directed. In mixing all together and use as directed. In mixing all together and use as directed. In mixing all together and use as directed."

It is a curious fact that in New York, with a population of 2,500 Chinamen, there are only two Chinese women. Nearly 300 of these Chinamen are married, but their wives are used almost everywhere. Mix the sulphate, live to eight ounces for a forty-gallon cask of cider, in two quarts of water, turn it into the cask, shake or roll it till thoroughly mixed together and use as directed. In mixing all together and use as directed. In mixing all together and use as directed."

SOMEONE suggests that one of the leading topics touched upon in Thanksgiving sermons this year will be that the next great walking match is to take place in England.

Do a Clever Thing for your wife. She does many for you—bakes, cooks, sews, and mends. Her work is never done. Get from your grocer a packet of Gilt-Edge Butter Maker for twenty-five cents. She can churn in half the time, and she will be proud of the valuable help. Write to Butter-Makers, "I'm given you all storekeepers."

NOVA POST-OFFICE, Ashland, O., Ohio, May 25th, 1879.

BETTER IMPROVEMENT CO.:
Gentlemen:—My attention was called by your advertisement of Elvira, Mr. Brown, to Gilt-Edge Butter Maker, and I wish to give it a trial. We churned one gallon of cream according to your directions in your letter to Mr. Brown, with the following result: Of churning twelve minutes, produced 3½ lbs. of butter, good and quality far better than anything that I have tried previously. I have been engaged in the dairy business more or less for the last fifteen years. Also took of the same cream, the same time, and from the same milk, omitting your powder, as per directions, and the result was, three pounds, quality inferior, short of what is required in our market. I would further say, I made a second trial with the same result. Truly yours,
C. S. VAN AMAN.

THOMAS'S SPEAK. VEGETINE is acknowledged and recommended by physicians and apothecaries to be the best purifier and cleanser of the blood, and it has been restored to health.

No COFFEE has given such universal satisfaction as the Orient, made by Smith & Currier, Cleveland, O. The best make. See your grocer.

CHIEF Jackson's Best Sweet Navy Tobacco.

GRAEFENBERG
Vegetable
PILLS

Are the mildest ever known, they cure HEADACHE, BILIOUSNESS, LIVER COMPLAINT AND INDIGESTION, Nausea, Vomiting, Stomachic, These

Tone up the system and restore health to those suffering from general debility and nervousness. Sold by all Druggists, 25c. per box.

GRAEFENBERG
Vegetable
PILLS
Tone up the system and restore health to those suffering from general debility and nervousness. Sold by all Druggists, 25c. per box.

GRAEFENBERG
Vegetable
PILLS
Tone up the system and restore health to those suffering from general debility and nervousness. Sold by all Druggists, 25c. per box.

GRAEFENBERG
Vegetable
PILLS
Tone up the system and restore health to those suffering from general debility and nervousness. Sold by all Druggists, 25c. per box.

GRAEFENBERG
Vegetable
PILLS
Tone up the system and restore health to those suffering from general debility and nervousness. Sold by all Druggists, 25c. per box.

GRAEFENBERG
Vegetable
PILLS
Tone up the system and restore health to those suffering from general debility and nervousness. Sold by all Druggists, 25c. per box.

GRAEFENBERG
Vegetable
PILLS
Tone up the system and restore health to those suffering from general debility and nervousness. Sold by all Druggists, 25c. per box.

GRAEFENBERG
Vegetable
PILLS
Tone up the system and restore health to those suffering from general debility and nervousness. Sold by all Druggists, 25c. per box.

GRAEFENBERG
Vegetable
PILLS
Tone up the system and restore health to those suffering from general debility and nervousness. Sold by all Druggists, 25c. per box.

GRAEFENBERG
Vegetable
PILLS
Tone up the system and restore health to those suffering from general debility and nervousness. Sold by all Druggists, 25c. per box.

GRAEFENBERG
Vegetable
PILLS
Tone up the system and restore health to those suffering from general debility and nervousness. Sold by all Druggists, 25c. per box.

GRAEFENBERG
Vegetable
PILLS
Tone up the system and restore health to those suffering from general debility and nervousness. Sold by all Druggists, 25c. per box.

GRAEFENBERG
Vegetable
PILLS
Tone up the system and restore health to those suffering from general debility and nervousness. Sold by all Druggists, 25c. per box.

GRAEFENBERG
Vegetable
PILLS
Tone up the system and restore health to those suffering from general debility and nervousness. Sold by all Druggists, 25c. per box.

VEGETINE

Chills, Shakes, FEVER AND AGUE.

DR. H. R. STEVENS.
Dear Sir: I feel very grateful for what your valuable medicine, Vegetine, has done in my family. I want to express my thanks for the information you of the wonderful cure of my son, who, I am glad to say, is now well and happy. My son was sick with malarial fever, and I had tried all the remedies, but he would not move without vomiting. I read your advertisement in the "Lancet" and I bought a bottle of Vegetine. I used one bottle, and he was cured. I have since used it in all cases of malarial fever, and it has cured them all. I have a younger son, fifteen years of age, who is suffering with malarial fever, and I have bought a bottle of Vegetine. I have used it, and he is now well and happy. I have since used it in all cases of malarial fever, and it has cured them all. I have a younger son, fifteen years of age, who is suffering with malarial fever, and I have bought a bottle of Vegetine. I have used it, and he is now well and happy. I have since used it in all cases of malarial fever, and it has cured them all.

VEGETINE.—When the blood becomes thick and stagnant, either from change of weather or of climate, or from excessive drinking, or from any other cause, the VEGETINE will remove the blood, and the patient, cleansed of the malarial fever, will be able to enjoy a full and healthy life.

VEGETINE.
Druggists' Testimony.
DR. H. R. STEVENS.
Dear Sir: I feel very grateful for what your valuable medicine, Vegetine, has done in my family. I want to express my thanks for the information you of the wonderful cure of my son, who, I am glad to say, is now well and happy. My son was sick with malarial fever, and I had tried all the remedies, but he would not move without vomiting. I read your advertisement in the "Lancet" and I bought a bottle of Vegetine. I used one bottle, and he was cured. I have since used it in all cases of malarial fever, and it has cured them all. I have a younger son, fifteen years of age, who is suffering with malarial fever, and I have bought a bottle of Vegetine. I have used it, and he is now well and happy. I have since used it in all cases of malarial fever, and it has cured them all.

VEGETINE.
Druggists' Testimony.
DR. H. R. STEVENS, Boston, Mass.
Vegetine is Sold by All Druggists.

Bells of Corneville
A handsome and complete edition of the "Bells of Corneville" is now published. It is a collection of the most beautiful and interesting stories of the time, and is a valuable addition to any library. It is published by the Boston Book Co., Boston, Mass.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.
J. E. DITSON & CO., 222 Chestnut St., Phila.
DR. C. O. BENTON'S NERVE TONIC.

DR. C. O. BENTON'S NERVE TONIC.
This is a discovery in the annals of medical science. It is a powerful nerve tonic, and it is a valuable addition to any library. It is published by the Boston Book Co., Boston, Mass.

DO YOU WANT A FARM OR HOME IN ST. LOUIS, IRON MOUNTAIN & SO. RY.
The IRON MOUNTAIN & SO. RY. is now offering for sale a large tract of land in St. Louis, Mo. It is a valuable addition to any library. It is published by the Boston Book Co., Boston, Mass.

BEAUTIFUL NEW STYLE ORGAN.
A beautiful new style organ is now on hand. It is a valuable addition to any library. It is published by the Boston Book Co., Boston, Mass.

WANTED AGENTS FOR THE FOLLOWING:
A large number of agents are wanted for the following products. It is a valuable addition to any library. It is published by the Boston Book Co., Boston, Mass.

AGENTS, READ THIS.
We will pay Agents a Salary of $100 per month, and a large commission on all sales. It is a valuable addition to any library. It is published by the Boston Book Co., Boston, Mass.

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS,
please send your name and address. It is a valuable addition to any library. It is published by the Boston Book Co., Boston, Mass.

GILT-EDGE BUTTER-MAKER.
This powder makes "Gilt-Edge" Butter the year round. It is a valuable addition to any library. It is published by the Boston Book Co., Boston, Mass.

CHILLS AND FEVER CURED.
CHILLS AND FEVER CURED. It is a valuable addition to any library. It is published by the Boston Book Co., Boston, Mass.

Never Fails to Cure.
Never Fails to Cure. It is a valuable addition to any library. It is published by the Boston Book Co., Boston, Mass.

DR. CLARK'S

JOHNSON'S

Indian Blood Syrup.

LABORATORY,
77 W. 3d St., New York City.

DR. CLARK'S
JOHNSON'S
Indian Blood Syrup.
LABORATORY,
77 W. 3d St., New York City.

DR. CLARK'S
JOHNSON'S
Indian Blood Syrup.
LABORATORY,
77 W. 3d St., New York City.

DR. CLARK'S
JOHNSON'S
Indian Blood Syrup.
LABORATORY,
77 W. 3d St., New York City.

DR. CLARK'S
JOHNSON'S
Indian Blood Syrup.
LABORATORY,
77 W. 3d St., New York City.

DR. CLARK'S
JOHNSON'S
Indian Blood Syrup.
LABORATORY,
77 W. 3d St., New York City.

DR. CLARK'S
JOHNSON'S
Indian Blood Syrup.
LABORATORY,
77 W. 3d St., New York City.

DR. CLARK'S
JOHNSON'S
Indian Blood Syrup.
LABORATORY,
77 W. 3d St., New York City.

DR. CLARK'S
JOHNSON'S
Indian Blood Syrup.
LABORATORY,
77 W. 3d St., New York City.

DR. CLARK'S
JOHNSON'S
Indian Blood Syrup.
LABORATORY,
77 W. 3d St., New York City.

DR. CLARK'S
JOHNSON'S
Indian Blood Syrup.
LABORATORY,
77 W. 3d St., New York City.

DR. CLARK'S
JOHNSON'S
Indian Blood Syrup.
LABORATORY,
77 W. 3d St., New York City.

DR. CLARK'S
JOHNSON'S
Indian Blood Syrup.
LABORATORY,
77 W. 3d St., New York City.

DR. CLARK'S
JOHNSON'S
Indian Blood Syrup.
LABORATORY,
77 W. 3d St., New York City.

DR. CLARK'S
JOHNSON'S
Indian Blood Syrup.
LABORATORY,
77 W. 3d St., New York City.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 1879.

NUMBER 40.

VOLUME 3.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, &c.

D. E. OFFUTT,

GENERAL MERCHANDISE,

General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jew-

elry, &c.

G. W. LEAGUE,

GENERAL MERCHANDISE,

Cor. Second & Oak sts.

D. H. LOAR,

ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,

General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jew-

elry, &c.

L. W. STALNAKER,

Grocery and Provision Store,

Corner Third and Oak streets.

L. BUSH & SON,

GENERAL MERCHANDISE,

Cor. Third and Oak sts.

J. A. GRANT,

Dry Goods, Groceries & Groceries,

SPECIAL LINE OF TOBACCO.

DAVIS & TOWNSEND,

GENERAL MERCHANDISE,

Agents Agricultural Machinery,

Opposite Bailey's Park.

C. C. MICHAEL,

GENERAL MERCHANDISE,

Nations, Clocks, Confectionery, &c.,

Next to Coddington's Hotel.

RICHARDSON BROS.,

GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,

Cor. Third and Oak sts.

JAS. A. ENLOW,

Dealer in

General Merchandise and Country Produce,

McCormick Building, Oakland, Md.

HOTELS.

CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,

W. M. CODDINGTON, Proprietor,

Main St., Opposite Jackson's Billiard Saloon.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN,

Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

A. A. SHIRER,

Oak Street, near Second.

A general line of Stoves and Tinware.

PHYSICIANS.

DR. J. LEE MCCOMBS,

Office on Main Street.

DR. E. H. PARSONS,

Offers his professional services

to the people of Oakland and vicinity. Office in the old Offutt building,

38 3/4.

PLASTERER.

JAMES ARNOLD,

Residence on Fourth Street.

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.

W. M. WAGNER,

Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.

GEO. F. LOUGHRIDGE,

Leave orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.

J. B. BRANT,

Surveyor, Auctioneer and

Conveyancer,

Oakland, Garrett county, Md.

JOHN HARNED,

Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.

A. B. WOODCOCK,

In Wm. Smouse's Building,

Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY

GOODS.

MRS. M. E. DAVIS,

Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,

Millinery, Gents' Furnishing

Goods, and Shoes.

Main Street, Opposite Dr. McCombs's

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

GEO. C. STURGIS,

Drugs, Medicines,

Stationery, Stationery,

Tobacco and Cigars.

PAINTING & PAPER HANG-

ING.

E. J. FRINGER,

House and Sign Painter,

And Paper Hanger.

Leave orders at Bush's Store.

S. V. B. WARD,

HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER

Shop near Davis House.

BLACKSMITHS.

CHAS. SINCELL,

Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS

JOHN M. JARBOE,

Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,

Residence on Liberty St., nearly opp. Depot.

P. A. CHISHOLM,

Carpenter, Contractor,

And Builder.

Residence on Centre street.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,

Residence opp. School house.

JOSEPH M. CRIM,

Residence on Alder Street.

A. C. BROOKE,

Res. near Republican office.

CABINETMAKERS AND UN-

DERTAKERS.

A. C. BROOKE,

Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SHATZEL,

Shop on Second Street.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FALL & WINTER GOODS.

GOODS FRESH & NEW

and Cheap as the Cheapest.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

Has on hand a full stock of New

Ready Made Clothing,

which he will sell very cheap for cash.

Gents Furnishing Goods,

in great variety, and at prices to suit the

times.

Suits Made to Order

In the most fashionable manner. Orders by

mail promptly attended to.

Also Agent for the Celebrated

"Pearl Shirt."

A Large Assortment of

BOYS' CLOTHING

Kept always on hand.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,

Oakland, Md.

MEAT MARKET.

H. E. WOLFE,

Formerly of Cumberland, Md.

Butcher Business

in a first-class manner.

FRESH BEEF, (salted), MUTTON, PORK,

BOLTON'S SALT-CURED, POKE SALT-

SAGE, &c., at all times.

Shop near the Post Office.

Customers can get what they want without leaving and at my best of the day.

Your patronage is respectfully solicited.

H. E. WOLFE.

PATENTS.

To Inventors and Manufacturers.

ESTABLISHED 1865.

GILMORE SMITH & CO.

Solicitors of Patents & Attorneys at Law.

American & Foreign Patents.

No fees in advance, nor until a Pat-

ent is allowed. No fees for making preliminary examinations.

Special attention given to Inter-

ference Cases before the Patent Office.

Infringement Suits in the different

States, and all litigation appertain-

ing to Patents or Inventions.

Sent Stamp for Pamphlet of Sixty

Pages.

GILMORE & CO.,

629 F. Street, N. W.,

Washington, D. C.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

THO. J. PEDDIE, A. B. GONDER,

PEABODY & GONDER,

ATTORNEYS AT LAW

AND

SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY.

OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and

Allegheny Counties, the adjoining Counties of

West Virginia, and in the Court of Appeals

of Maryland.

Jan. 2nd.

S. A. COX,

H. WHEELER COMBS,

ATTORNEYS AT LAW

AND

SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY.

Office, Alder Street, Oakland, Garrett county,

Maryland.

Will practice in all the Courts of Maryland

and adjoining counties of West Virginia, and

the United States Circuit Courts.

Jan. 2nd.

GILMORE S. HAMILL,

ATTORNEY AT LAW

AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.

OFFICE IN OFFUTT'S BUILDING,

Lower Floor.

Particular attention given to examining and prosecuting land titles and collections of money. Terms negotiated.

Jan. 2nd.

J. W. VEITCH,

ATTORNEY AT LAW

SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.

OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett County

and the adjoining Counties of West Virginia,

and in the Court of Appeals of Maryland.

Jan. 2nd.

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG

Late Resident Surgeon, New York

Eye and Ear Infirmary,

Has located permanently in the

City of Cumberland, Md., for the EX-

CLUSIVE treatment of all diseases of the External Ear, including those of the Nose and

Throat.

Office, No. 25 South Centre Street.

ap1211

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LESSONS.

SUNDAY, NOV. 30, 1879.

THE MESSAGE TO THE CHURCHES.

GENERAL STATEMENT.

On the western portion of the peninsula of Asia Minor, seven churches were prominent

at the close of the apostolic age, each representing a distinct type in the Christian life.

From the glorified Christ through the angel apostle John, two of these seven messages are given in our lesson. Sardis, with her outward seeming, has lost its spiritual life, and received a sharp rebuke for its back-

slidden condition, with a promise of abundant honor to "him that overcometh." Philadelphia is commended for its faithfulness. It is the only church, under the apostrophe of the Jewish adversaries, and is assured of a glorious reward at the coming of the Master.

Rev. 3: 1-13.

Memory Verses, 1-5.

1. And unto the angel of the church in Sardis write: These things saith he that is the Holy

One, I know thy works, and thou hast a name

that thou livest and art dead.

2. Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die: for I have not found thy works perfect before God.

3. Remember therefore how thou hast received and hast lost, and repent, and do the things which thou hast to do, and thou shalt not lose thy name. I will come unto thee, and thou shalt not know when I will come.

4. Thou hast a few names, even in Sardis, which have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me in white: for they are worthy.

5. He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white garments, and I will not blot his name out of the book of life, but I will witness his name before my Father, and before his angels.

6. He that is an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

7. And to the angel of the church in Philadelphia write: These things saith he that is the Holy One, he that is true, he that hath the key of David, he that openeth and no man shut-

ted, and he that shutteth and no man openeth.

8. I know thy works: behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut

it: for thou hast a few names which keep the word, and they shall not come into temptation.

9. Behold, I will come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give every one as he deserveth.

10. I, the Alpha and the Omega, the first and the last, the beginning and the end.

11. He that is thirsty, let him come, and take of the water of life freely.

12. He that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go

out, and he shall come in, and he shall go

out, and he shall come in, and he shall go

out, and he shall come in, and he shall go

out, and he shall come in, and he shall go

out, and he shall come in, and he shall go

out, and he shall come in, and he shall go

out, and he shall come in, and he shall go

out, and he shall come in, and he shall go

out, and he shall come in, and he shall go

out, and he shall come in, and he shall go

out, and he shall come in, and he shall go

out, and he shall come in, and he shall go

out, and he shall come in, and he shall go

out, and he shall come in, and he shall go

out, and he shall come in, and he shall go

out, and he shall come in, and he shall go

out, and he shall come in, and he shall go

out, and he shall come in, and he shall go

The Republican.

JAN. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRITT CO., MD.

A COUNTRY THANKSGIVING.

At, goodman, close the great barn door;
The mellow larceny time is o'er.

The earth has given her treasures moist;
Of golden corn and harvest wheat.

You and your neighbors well have wrought,
And of the summer's bounty caught;

Won from her smiles and from her tears
Much goods, perhaps, for many years.

You come a tribute now to pay—
The bells proclaim Thanksgiving day.

Well have you sown, well have you reaped;
And of the riches you have heaped.

You think, perhaps, that you will give
A part, that others, too, may live.

But if each argument you use,
Your sacred bounty I receive.

Naughts you on the altar lay,
In say some are given away.

Lo! ring from Heaven a voice abroad:
"Who helps God's poor doth lend the Lord."

What is your wealth? He'd have you know
To have it, you must let it go.

Think you the hand by Heaven struck cold
Will yet have power to clutch its gold?

Shreds have no pockets, do they say?
Behold! I show you then away.

Wait not till death shall shut the door,
But send your carcases on before.

Lo! he that giveth of his heart
To help God's poor doth lend the Lord.

To-day, my brethren—do not wait;
Just under stands the angels' gate.

And would you build a mansion fair
In Heaven, send your lumber there.

Each stick that on your wood-pile lies
May raise a dome beyond the skies;

You stop the rents within her walls,
And yonder rise your marble halls;

For every pane that stops the wind
There shines one from the Jasper lined;

Your wealth is gone, your form lies cold,
But in the city saved with gold.

Your heart is held in hands Divine;
It bears a name that marks it thine.

Behold the bargain ye have made,
With usury the debt is paid.

No moth doth eat, no thieves do steal,
No suffering least doth e'er feel.

Ring out the words, Who of his heart
Doth help God's poor doth lend the Lord!

Go get your carcases under way;
The bells ring out Thanksgiving day!

A THANKSGIVING QUER.

"GREAT land o' Goshen!" said old Joe Comstock, "what I want to know is, what's the use o' Thanksgiving when there ain't nothin' to be thankful for? And where's the good o' raisin' arter an' unsanitary? A rollin' stone gathers no moss."

"And a gangin' foot is aye gettin'," said Si Pettigill, the country storekeeper. "Not but that he agreed with his old friend Joe in deploring the wickedness and willfulness of his only son's leaving the homestead and going out West. Si Pettigill hated to see an extra wrinkle in his neighbor's face, and old Joe, who was only known as old Joe because there was a young Joe grown to manhood. It was only a week before Thanksgiving, and a queer time for extra wrinkles, but Si couldn't afford to lose an opportunity for proving his knowledge of proverbs, and combating the oracular prophecy of one by that of another. The country store was the high center of argument. No subject was too solemn or too frivolous, too high or too low, too light or too profound, for discussion. The summer was done, and the harvest was ended, and although the weather was too warm to admit of a fire in the big cylinder of sheet-iron that stood in the year round, the rallying-point for the controversies of the country, it began to be noticeable that more tobacco was bought and used in that vicinity than for many a month back, and the arm-chairs and barrel heads began to be occupied.

"They do say," said Monk, the miller, "that the left and richness o' grain out there is most amazin', and the side that soft you can put your arm clean down to yer elbow in it. If I was a young 's Joe—" And here the miller paused, for his friend the farmer brought his hand down heavily on an adjacent box of soap.

"And ain't his own land rich enough? Look at that ten-acre field o' corn, and look at them punkins! Though, for that matter, where's the use o' corn for turkeys, or turkeys for Thanksgiving, if a man's own flesh and blood dies in the face o' Providence like my Joe?"

"He ain't goin' before Thank'givin', surely!"

"He calculates to start to-morrow night," said the farmer, dolefully.

Then the group about the store ex-perted with mournful precision, and shook their heads, and hoped he wouldn't regret such a precipitate abandonment of this world's blessings. Old Joe Comstock untied his fine pair of mules, and went jolting away to the Comstock farm, followed by the sympathizing remarks of his neighbors. And as the dust rolled away, another vehicle was seen approaching, a high-sheeled jaunty affair with yellow wheels, drawn by a long, clean-limbed creature that was out of sight before his points could be well discussed and criticised. In truth, the good folks upon the porch of the country store were more interested in the couple that were seated fashionably aloft upon the gray box of the wagon. A fleeting vision of laughing blue eyes, and yellow curls wantoning with the November wind, and the pale dark face of a stranger in close proximity to those charms, caused the wise heads upon the porch to wag again with melancholy union.

"Tain't the natur' of the sile that young Joe complains of," said one.

"Nor yet the corn, nor the punkins," said another; "it's that he ain't got the stomach for 'em he used to hev before that city fellow broke his wagon in front of the widow Benson's door, and took a notion to Kitty."

"And I sware to man of the widow ain't that set up about it she's hev'n black Sam to do her fall whitewashin'."

"She'd better not count her chickens before they're hatched. That fellow don't mean to marry Kitty Benson, she'll fall between two stools, that's what Kitty'll do. She'll get shet of Joe, and lose this city chap, after all. Joe was in dead earnest, poor fellow, but this chap's only foolin'."

Which was not altogether true. The "city chap" had begun perhaps in rather a trifling mood. He considered the remarkable interest which he took in this little rustic was all due to his artistic perceptions. About six weeks before, in passing through the village, his horse stumbled upon a big bowlder in front of the widow's door, and one of the yellow wheels had come to grief. It was the most natural thing in the world for Mr. Morton to knock at the nearest door, and equally natural that the widow should ask him in. Kitty lay sound asleep, with her curly head on the kitchen table, all the yellow tangle of it tumbled carelessly about the exquisite line of her brow and curve of her rounded cheek. Her brown lashes just merged into the flesh upon her face, and her red lips were parted, showing the white even teeth within. Mr. Morton was suddenly seized with a colorist's enthusiasm. The low-ceiled room, with its wooden rafters smoke-faded richly, the quaint, primitive furniture about him, the ruddy face and rustic attire of the widow as she held the candle so that it shone full upon the sleeping girl—all these impressed Mr. Morton's mind, entirely as he believed from a clutch of gold.

He wished an artist friend of his might be there at the moment; he might make a pretty little penny by the inspiration; the whole thing was one of those happy little effects that a Greuze could make a masterpiece of.

"Laws a mercy!" said the widow, with kindly curiosity, "there ain't nobody but I, hope?"

"Only the wagon wheel," said Mr. Morton.

Now, I reckon Joe Comstock must be up and about yet. I saw a light at the farm a bit ago. If Joe's up, he'll take you down to the railroad."

"Does everybody go to bed here at night-fall?" said Mr. Morton, taking out his watch, but finding it hard to withdraw his eyes long enough from that picture in the candle-light to look at the time. "It can't be eight o'clock."

"Well, you see, the young folks went chestnutting to-day, and they're about tuckered out; but if you'll wait a minute, I'll get a lantern, so's you can pick up your way down the back lane."

"A short-cut to the Comstock farm; and if Joe's up he'll take you down reasonable. He can't be done his chores yet."

"I hope he'll bungle long enough about his chores to be up when I get there," said Mr. Morton.

He had slipped away and vanished up a dark little staircase, and suddenly all the charm went out of the picture.

"The central figure taken away," said Mr. Morton to himself, as he picked his way to the Comstock farm. "Of course the whole effect is marred; but it was a fine interior—very fine."

The "central figure" followed Mr. Morton to the farm, and all the way down to the railroad. He found Joe Comstock up and ready to receive him, and had a cold comoch with Kitty, who was no bungler; there was a quick capacity about the sturdy hands that handled the reins, and a natural grace and vigor in all his movements.

The little that he said was terse and to the point, but Mr. Morton found him taciturn and reserved after the first mile or two. He had ventured to speak of the inmates of the cottage.

"I think it probable the young girl was one of the nutting party to-day," said Mr. Morton.

"More'n likely," said Joe.

"Isn't her name Benson?—Kitty Benson?"

"I shouldn't wonder if 'twas!" said Joe, and relapsed into gruff monosyllables.

The road was rough and dark, and the drive was exceedingly disagreeable. Mr. Morton was glad to fall back upon his memory and imagination for amusement. The bit of interior he could recall to vividness, and he thought of his friend Sydney that night, if he should happen to meet him at the reception. There was every shade of brown in the sketch, from the ochre in the rafters to the lighter tints in the girl's hair.

Three hours at least, and Joe Comstock was dreaming of her under his patchwork quilt, when Mr. Morton reached the city. It was long after midnight when he got to the reception, and at least one young heart there had lost all zest in the entertainment—two hearts, for an old one in the vicinity had grown exceedingly heavy as the hours wore away.

"It's strange Mr. Morton don't come, Madeline," Mrs. Van Vleet said to her daughter.

"Yes, mamma," said poor Madeline.

"Didn't he say he would be here, Madeline?"

"O yes, mamma; please don't say any more about it," and then the elder lady walked majestically away, the feathers upon her head nodding in mournful unison with her thoughts.

And at that moment Mr. Morton entered, making his way to a group of exquisitely dressed and beautiful women, who received him with enthusiasm; there really were so very few available parties that season, and Mr. Morton, who had been asleep for three hours, and had shown some decided inclination to "range himself," and make somebody comfortable in their mind about the wretchedly uncertain and procrastinating future.

He was still in the market, though his attentions had been rather pronounced of late to Miss Van Vleet; but she was cold and reserved, and must take her chance—the tournament was open to all; so all these beautiful women fluttered their fans, and in their softly modulated mused voices said charming things to the tardy arrival. But Mr. Morton, with many a winning smile and whispered compliment, went listlessly by. His face wore that vacuous and bored expression which is considered in society an evidence of cultivation, but in truth it was only that he was still absorbed in artistic reflections. He went on to the further end of the room, where in feverish, haughty, uncompromising but agonizing reserve sat Miss Van Vleet. Her mother had nudged and frowned and beckoned, all to no purpose, when Mr. Morton entered the room.

"You can at least allow yourself to be seen," said her mother, acrimoniously.

"If he wants me, he can find me," said Madeline, with a sharp pang of fear and distrust, which deepened when at last he reached her side, and said, in the most commonplace way in the world.

"Did you save that waltz for me?" And when she looked up in his face with a thrill of delight, and found no response there, only that vague, listless, dreamy expression, her own beautiful face grew almost haggard with the intensity of her emotion; it was all she could do to keep the hot wretched tears out of her eyes.

"Why are you so absent to-night?" she said at last.

"What is it you are thinking of?" And then, as they were whirling—no, not whirling, but languidly stepping about—in the waltz, he told her of his accident, and described to her minutely the bit of interior which he had so charmed him.

"The queer, quaint old room," he went on to say, "with its smoke-colored rafters, and the country-woman holding the lamp over the beautiful sleeper; that matter of pure art should so occupy and divert my mind under the vexatious circumstances. And there is Sydney now—you'll excuse me, won't you, if I go over to him?"

Certainly she would excuse him. You see that word "spoken" to him. Mr. Morton led Madeline to her mother, and that ponderous female eagerly whispered: "Has he spoken, Madeline—only tell me dear, has he spoken?"

"Of course not, mamma; how could he, in the waltz?"

"He was talking so earnestly. I never saw him quite so earnest before. I thought perhaps he had spoken."

You see that word "spoken" was so much—so vexatiously much! A man could talk the core of a woman's heart out, and yet at the end of it all not have "spoken."

He is talking just as earnestly with Mr. Sydney now, mamma; he is interested in art just now. The bitterness in the voice of her daughter tinged acridly the thoughts of poor Mrs. Van Vleet.

"I shall not accept the Colonel's invitation for Thanksgiving," she said, dolefully. In the meanwhile Mr. Morton was endeavoring generously to give his friend Sydney the subject for a sketch, and the artist was listening for that, quizzical, amused air that was characteristic of him.

"See here, Morton," said Sydney at last, "a horseshoe is a sign of good luck, and your steel shed one, it appears, at the door of this rustic place. Don't talk to me o' Thank'givin'; when one's own flesh and blood turns again and win, old fellow, and then send for me to paint her portrait. I'm net much given to interiors."

Shortly after that Mr. Morton took leave of his acquaintance in general, and of Sydney in particular, and was soon tossing in his luxurious bed, dreaming in unison with the simple rustic under the patchwork quilt at the farm. It was not the dark eyes or carefully maintained locks of Miss Van Vleet, but the flitted through the dreams of Mr. Morton; half-opened eyes of blue, and disheveled curly locks, colored and arranged by the wind and the sun, haunted him as they did poor Joe.

Joe awoke the next morning, and reviewed once for all to make an end to these wretchedies that half maddened as they gladdened him. He would pluck up courage and settle the matter, so that his dreams might be savored with sober certainty. He knew that no great success was in his way. His folks were willing, and so were hers; there was nobody to say him nay but Kitty herself, and he wasn't much afraid of that. It was only the pesky bookishness of the city, and what was the use of it, anyway? His people knew, and hers did, and Kitty must know—she couldn't help it; now where was the good of keeping a fellow on a hot gridiron? The very thoughts of coming right out with it made him hot all over, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and the blue sky with its light diaphanous clouds that dipped lazily down, and the yellow ears of corn that peeped at him from their snug nests in the cones of leaves, and the yellow pumpkins that gathered about his feet, and the far twist to the last green binding, and he guessed he'd wait a day or two. There was the ten-acre field to stave, and by that time Joe was wild to see Kitty; and thinking it all over that tober day as he gave an extra pull and twist to the last green binding, and found the whole sweet October after-noon before him, and looking about him with a big throb of tenderness that embraced the brown rich earth, and

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, CALIF., FRIDAY, MAY 1, 1903.

SEED-TIME AND HARVEST.

Beneath the dark November sky,
With the cold rain falling cheerily,
And the black wind moaning and shrieking long,
The seed of the land is cast.
In the gravelly furrows the grain doth lie
Till the weary months are past.

In curling mist and frosty air,
And weeping skies, it lethargy
Or lurched in the snows of fate
To every wind that blows.
And night's deep darkness, like despair,
Hangs o'er it while it grows.

It grows in spite of cloud and blast
And sullen rain, descending fast.
And snowdrifts thickly over it cast,
And thund'ring, darkling skies,
And every tempest, raining past,
Strengthens it as it lies.

And, a kinder season shines—
Warmth and light—the spring's soft signs,
With many a blossom, sweet and true,
The forest of its death;
And the grain, in delicate, emerald lines
Springs up, a tiny thing.

Then sunny months, in swift career,
Bring up the busy ripened ear;
And the golden harvest draws near
And the reaper whistles his merry
Till on the day, the rich golden sheaves,
Their clasp on the landscape lie.

Now in the dark, cold, desolate days—
Reaped in the sunshine's mellow haze—
Till in the dusk, when the world shows desolation,
Of fate, are the deeds of men—
Sorrow and trial, that soften the grain,
Like storms, that soften the rain.

Must test the heart's aspiring claim;
But every just and noble aim
Shall pass the ordeal of blame;
And in the appointed hour,
Bring forth its fruit of glory or shame,
Of knowledge, wisdom, power.

In the winds of scorn, the storms of hate,
In the darkness of gloom, deferred fate,
Through days when the world shows desolation,
Must sleep the good deeds that last done,
Patiently, patiently wait,
Till the harvest is gathered in.

That which was sown in the wintry air,
Shall blossom and ripen when skies are fair;
Though there should be many an anxious care,
For the harvest is gathered in;
Be stout to toil, and steady to bear,
The heart that is true and win.

ZEPH PARKER'S STRATEGY.

"Sleepy, baby-faced set of people? Air they? Baby-faced enough, and all that, but I tell you, sir, they're 'bout horn with all their teeth cut in their celestial jaws; and yew've got to get up airy, sir, if you want to take in a Chinaman."

The speaker was a baby-faced, hollow-jawed gentleman, in a glossy black suit, which fitted him very badly, and the remark was made in the smoking-room of the "Continental." There he was to be seen daily, and he was supposed to have given the spectators his "line" in other words, he was believed to have made a fortune in petroleum. At all events he had plenty of money, and was very generous in the spending of it.

The conversation had turned on the vexed Chinese question, and he had struck into the discussion. "I reckon," he said, "there was Zeph Parker. He was a deep 'un, was more up to 'snooze, just 'bout the time of the silver scare. The boys had been washing for gold; honest-like, neow gittin' it out of pockets, neow out the stream; and when they'd done another claim, Mister Washee Washes Chinese would come and go over the dirt after them, and be satisfied with what he got. Then come the silver scare. All on goes off and loses all 'em'd made in gold, gets no silver, and comes back disappointed to try after the gold again."

"Guess we might try and try again, but no gold could we get; and all 'em was them sneaky, pig-tailed Chinamen, gittin' on prosperous and contented."

"I tell yew," said Zeph, "I shall go and murder one of them smilin' teapots. I can't stand it much longer."

"This here was a dirt, and a few, where we were trying to make ourselves happy, playin' poker on credit and keepin' no account."

"What for?" I sez.

"What for?" sez Zeph. "Dewey think that I, an enlightened sinner of a free country, am gwine to set down and be robbed 'o my mess 'o golden potage by a pack 'o smilin' washer-woman-faced opium smokin' celestials? No, sirree, this dog's gwine to bite."

"But I don't kinder see what this dog's gwine to bite fur," I sez. "Teapot ain't done nothin' to you."

"Mateys," sez Zeph, getting on the barrel as has been his seat, "things has come to a party stand pass with us, haven't they?"

"Right, old hoss," sez some one, hammerin' the chest lid as had been our table.

"Huz any man here got any tobacco?" sez Zeph.

"Huz any man here got any old Bourbon whiskey?"

"No!"

"Huz any man got any dust?"

"No!"

"Any flour, or pork, or boots, or new blankets?"

"No, no, no, no!"

"Then them Chinases has, continued Zeph; 'and what I sez is this—as it is a sin and a shame to let a pack of heathenish cusses like them teapots, as never goes to churches nor listens to parsons—"

"I say, Zeph," sez some one, "when did you go to meetin' last?"

"Never you mind," sez Zeph, "and don't interrupt a man as wants to give you suitin' to eat. A set 'o cusses, I sez, as never goes to no meetin' and believes in nuthin' but joss-houses. I say it's a sin to let 'em be gittin' fat on our land, while we're as thin and starved-lookin' as—as—"

"As ole Zeph Parker himself," sez Tom Paggins.

"Well, ez this ez I am, if you like," sez Zeph.

ez deep ez a two-cent plate. Give me the means and I'll sell the lot and put a good pocketful o' dollars or dust in every man's pocket—six on us!"

"But what means d'yer want?" I sez.

"One handfull o' dust," sez Zeph.

"And where are we to get it?" sez Tom Paggins.

"This how," says Zeph. "Morrow mornin', every man hyar's got to go round the camp and cadge. Tell the boys we're hard up, but we've got a good thing on. They'll subscribe a little all around. Yew see if they don't."

"Well, we'll try," sez we; and went to sleep hungry and got up ravenous.

"There was nothin' for it but to go to work, and off we went, getting back to our tent about eleven o'clock, when five out of the six had got a little gold dust. I was the unlucky one, being a bad beggar, and had got nothin'."

"Now then," sez Tom Paggins, "about a big spoonful of glitterin' stuff; 'let's go up to the store and get a drink."

"That you jest won't," sez Zeph, grinnin'.

"I'm kinder gwine to throw all this here dust away—I'm gwine to sow it, boys, for a crop to come up."

We all grumbled, for we were all mighty hungry; but we all had a kind of trust in Zeph, and gave way.

"Looksee hyar lads," he sez; "it's jest twelve o'clock now, so let's go round and git a mouthful where we can."

"Let's go up to Billy Bolly's store, and ask him to give us a square meal, and stick it up," I sez. "He'll trust us."

"Think he would?" sez Zeph.

"Sartin," I sez, "if you show him that gold, and tell him there's somethin' good on."

"And so it was; Bill, on seeing that gold and hearing as we'd got somethin' good on, gave us a right square meal, and a taste round 'o Bourbon, and with the cheerful remark, 'I shall take it out of some o' you if this here ain't squared up.'"

"That didn't make a nice dessert, for Bill was a wonderful clever fellow, and would think nuthin' 'o pluggin' a man; so we kinder sneaked out that store, feelin' uncomfortable."

"It's all right," sez Zeph, laughin'. "Come on, boys, and get yeww tools."

"We took our tools then and went off up the gulch to where a strong company of Chinamen was at work, and they watched us cautiously as we began prospectin' about, washin' a bit 'o dirt here and a bit there, and always goin' off discontented and sour like, till we came to one place close up to the rocks, where we dug about four or five feet; and after working with our picks a bit, we began to wash the soil in a pan, gatherin' round it afterwards, and 'knowin' all the time that one or other of the teapots had an eye on us."

"Then we washed a bit more earth—gravelly, quartz stuff it was—and collected again; and then we grew excited, and began to dig faster, and to wash more, and examine what we had done each time after pickin' over the pan, 'throwin' out the rubbish; and when this fell, yew could see a few specks 'o gold dust glitterin' in the sun, while what we got went into a leather bag as Tom Paggins held."

"We marks out this here claim as our'n," sez Zeph out loud; and takin' a shovel, he chops out a bit of a rough trench, just to show the extent we meant to levy; and as he did so first one pigtail and then another comes up to the specks 'o gold in amongst the refuses we had thrown over the side beyond our claim."

"No goodsee, washes washes, Melican man!" sez one round-faced, smilin' cuss. "No goodsee, no goodsee!"

"O, no; none at all, Mister Teapot," sez Zeph. "Jest yew keep a bit further off, or—"

"He touched his six-shooter, and the Chinamen scurried back a little ways, and we began to wash another shovel-ful of earth."

"It paws out fine!" sez Tom Paggins out loud, as we all gathered round, with once more, and the top redde, with specks 'o gold in, was thrown away again."

"We kept on at that for two hours, and with Zeph to manage, we washed out that little lot 'o gold we had been lookin' for, but it was a good deal less at the last than when we started, for some one it was sprinkled in each 'o the holes we made, and balfa teaspoonful 'o dust was lyin' to waste in the refuse."

All this time the Chinamen were comin' up from their bit of a camp, about a hundred yards away, Zeph was awfully jealous, an' kep' drivin' 'em away—not as we were skeart of 'em for they're a quiet sheepish lot, but to keep up the play."

"Then half on us went down below, and got our tents and odds and ends, and set up as if we meant to stay; while the others went on washin' and pickin' steadily, gettin' four Chinamen to fetch water and to do a few rough jobs in mornin' quartz blocks outer the way."

"Somehow or other, there were a few specks 'o gold under each 'o those blocks that the Chinamen carried off; and when that was done, Zeph gave the smilin' chaps a bit 'o gold each, and sent one of 'em with some dust to buy tobacco."

"It's a workin'!" sez Zeph to me.

"Think so?" I sez.

"Wait a bit, old hoss, and yew'll see."

"That night, after we'd been a bit nasty and threatenin' to the teapots, who kept leavin' their work, we could hear a deal 'o chatterin' goin' on; and bime-by a kinder deputation of six or seven comes up, headed by a smilin' cuss who looked like a big fat boy."

"Neow, then," sez Zeph, "tell you what; if yew don't make yeww reserves skeerce, I'll be holes threw some on yew!"

"Poor Chinaman!" sez the big fat fellow; and he puts his head on one side and smiles his head half off. Then 'couter five says, in a sorter 'o whinin' sing-song chorus, "Poor Chinaman!" and all half-smiled their heads off."

"Don't want any to-day," sez Zeph. "Hook it!"

"We all sat smokin' and lookin' on, and every man with his hand on revolver and bowie, as ef we was suspicious.

"Poor Chinaman!" whines the big 'un again.

"Don't want any, I tell yew again!" roars Zeph savagely, and the deputation only holds their heads on one side and smiles.

"Air yew gwine to cut!" sez Zeph, seizin' number one by the tail, and others the same, rubbin' their chests, and waggin' their heads from side to side.

"Why don't you speak out?" sez Zeph.

"Melican man let poor Chinaman washes washes!" sez the fat fellow, 'pintin' to the heap 'o rubbish.

"You want to wash that dirt over again?" sez Zeph.

"The whole party began to nod their heads fast."

"O, no," sez Zeph; "we don't want yew here—oh, lads?"

"No, no!" we all growled.

"Send 'em off!" sez Tom Paggins. "But they wouldn't go, only smilin' and at last Zeph seemed to be struck with a notion; and the long and short of it was that, if we'd allow 'em to wash our refuse over again, the Chinese 'd make a bit of a stream to lead water up to our claim."

"Well, that's no good, Zeph," I sez, as soon as they were gone.

"Wait a bit, lad, and yew'll see," sez Zeph, with a wink; and we sat there in the pleasant evening, smokin', while there was evidently a mighty commotion in the Chinese camp, and before long the deputation came back.

"Poor Chinaman!" sez the fat chap again.

"O, yes; we know all 'bout that," sez Zeph. "No, what is it?"

"Melican man selles claim two hundred dollars?" sez the fat-headed chap, and all the others nodded their heads.

"Will we sell you this claim for $200?" sez Zeph.

"The 'all addled till yew'd ha' thought their heads'd come off."

"Cut!" sez Zeph, catchin' hold of the fat 'un by his tail and kickin' him.

"Yew mayn't believe, gents, but them same chaps came back twice before we'd a hundred dollars each time, and we swore at 'em, and said we wouldn't sell, and if they wasn't up to time in the mornin' to see us, we wouldn't be allowed to wash the dirt."

"First thing next mornin' them six fellers were up again, just as we had got a good painful 'o stuff in course 'o workin', and I saw their eyes twinkl' as they caught sight 'o the gold."

"Then they offered $500, and we killed thirteen persons. The Navajos have broken out, and the troops are surroundin' them. The stock, includin' mail mules."

"The history of this station is a singular one, and is related to us by an old army friend, in whose mind the old narrative revive memories of the war."

The country borders on the west bank of the Rio Grande river, bounded on the north by Fort McKee, on the south by Mesilla, and on the east by the Organ mountains, and its passage is known as the journey of death. The region is over sixty miles in length, unvalleyed, without life, uninhabited, save at Aleman, and as destitute of moisture as the desert of Sahara. All travel between southern New Mexico and the Santa Fe portion of the territory has, however, to be across this terrible sand waste, and its dangers are evinced by the bones of draft animals frequently seen bleaching in the sand. Every traveler trends the passage of the Jornada, (pronounced Hornada) because all know that the journey is frequently one of death. When Gen. John Pope was a Lieutenant of Topographical Engineers, he was sent to be a cartographer of the Santa Fe portion of the territory for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles will drink two barrels in twelve hours. While Lieutenant Pope was engaged in boring a route to the south, he was bored by a view to finding water. This was for the benefit of Government trains and army people in general. The passage of the Jornada then required and now takes two days, involving the necessity of hauling water for animals and human beings. Water weighs about six and one-half pounds per gallon. Six miles

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1 50
Six months, $1 00
Three months, $0 50
IN ADVANCE.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, $1 per square of 10 lines;
Subsequent insertions, 50 cents per square;
Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, NOV. 29, 1879.

County Commissioners.

The newly elected Board of County Commissioners, having received their commissions and taken the oath of office, met in their office on the 25th inst., and organized by electing Judge D. H. Friend, President, and Mr. F. A. Thayer, Clerk. They appointed Messrs. T. J. Peddicord and H. Wheeler Combs their counsel for the ensuing year. This is a step in the right direction and gives assurance that the new Board intend to take counsel and conform to the law in all matters. By the appointment of Messrs. Peddicord and Combs the Board are sure of having, at the salary of one counsel, either one or the other of their counsel at every meeting. We regard the Board, as it is organized, as one of the best that the county ever had, and congratulate the people of Garrett county upon the wisdom of their choice. We predict that everything done by the new Board will be according to the strict letter of the law; that there will be no extra compensations or doubtful proceedings; that there will be no pensioners upon the office, and that wherever possible the taxes will be reduced.

Meeting of Congress.

Congress will meet next Monday, and as usual with sessions just preceding a Presidential election, it will be given up almost wholly to Presidential making. There will not only be an interchange of views among members, but each political division will be watching for an advantage in all political legislation. The great leaders of both parties, who are aspirants for Presidential honors, will each make the "greatest effort of his life," in a speech calculated to catch the ear of his own party. There will be no lull in politics until after the 4th of March, 1881. The excitement through which the people have just passed will be steadily maintained through the next session of Congress, which will be the long one, and then will come the Presidential election, and the counting of the electoral vote.

The Thomas statue, unveiled at Washington Wednesday of last week is a fitting testimonial of the nation to the services of one of the heroes of the war. The vast throng that participated in the ceremony, the imposing demonstrations which added to its dignity, the eloquent tribute to the memory of the grand old soldier, were an appropriate recognition of his steadfastness of courage and loyalty of purpose. The achievements of other generals have been more brilliant, but none in higher degree manifested that stern, indomitable, puritan firmness, none rendered the country more opportune service than did George H. Thomas at Stone River and Chickamauga. It is well that such men be remembered. It is well his heroic loyalty be commemorated for future generations.

It is impossible to "draw" Gen. Grant on the Southern question. Mr. Sharp, an octogenarian survivor of the war of 1812, tried it at Chicago the other day, and when he got through expatiating upon the deplorable condition of affairs in the solid South, all the General remarked was, "Oh, we'll get along all right down there when a new generation springs up, and when we begin to have a little prosperity in the South," and then he changed the subject.

It appears that Mr. Hewitt is not the only Democratic politician who spent money for Mr. Tilden and never got it back. Mr. Dorsheimer committed the same error at the St. Louis Convention. Both of these gentlemen are convinced that in lending money to Mr. Tilden without security they made a mistake, of which the sage himself would never have been guilty.

If "the old Democratic party is dead," as has been suggested, there would seem to be a fitness in preserving "the remains" in alcohol. A genuine, true blue Democrat, if capable of feeling, would doubtless find himself a "blue" in the color of a barrel of the genuine article.

Report of Secretary of War.

The Secretary of War, in his report for this year, gives in detail the strength of the several branches of the military service, with the expenditures, appropriations and estimates. The force in the aggregate, as exhibited in the latest returns, consists of 2,187 officers, 24,262 men, exclusive of 388 retired officers. A portion of this force being necessarily employed in detached or special service, such as the signal corps, ordnance sergeants, commissary sergeants, West Point detachment, prison guards at Fort Leavenworth, and recruiting detachments, amounts to 2,163 enlisted men, and consequently constitutes no part of the force available for active service in the field. Secretary McCrary fully coincides with Gen. Sherman that the effective force of the line of the army should be raised to 25,000 men, exclusive of these detachments. He also expresses a belief that all the disasters attending Indian hostilities on our frontier are the result of inadequacy of force on our part to protect the settlers, guard and preserve private property and military stores and keep the wily Indian in check.

The neglect of such precautions has caused since the close of the war of the Rebellion the loss of fifty-five officers in Indian warfare, including such valuable officers as Canby, Custer and Thornburgh, and a corresponding number wounded, beside a proportionate amount of men killed or wounded. The recent hostility of the Utes in Colorado and the Apaches in New Mexico has dispelled the hope that the Indian troubles are amicably adjusted. It now asserts the soothing system as a remedial measure should be abandoned and that the Government should make itself feared and respected by avenging the massacre of Agent Meeker and the others at White river agency and inflicting summary punishment upon the guilty parties.

The Good Fruit of President Hayes' Course.

From the Richmond (Va.) State Item.

President Hayes has made a good President throughout, and has done more than appears upon the surface to restore the country to the old methods, and revive among us a feeling of a common nationality. His course, it appears to us, has been steadily in this direction from the first and the only cause of regret with us now is that his time is too short to complete the work. It is a broad-breasted liberal man like him that the country needs now. If we would but second the efforts of the President for peace in this section, by a proper enforcement of the laws made for the protection of the rights of all, even to the lowest in the land, and endeavor to secure perfect freedom of action and speech, as guaranteed to every American citizen by the Constitution, we should at once disarm this Northern faction, which grows and fattens upon the food we supply it, and gain thousands upon thousands of friends there, who would unite eagerly with us in driving this party of the war, which still lives upon its funeral-baked meats into the grave through the sure process of starvation. Common sense would seem to teach that this is the proper course for us to pursue here, and when will we arrive at that calm condition of mind where reason and the dictates of our best interests shall resume their sway, and be sufficiently powerful to control our unbridled impulses which lead us into the commission of these excesses on the slightest and most unprovoked and unnecessary occasions. We must put a stop to this evil system, which has not only brought reproach upon us, and is leading to our political and material as well as moral ruin. We can not afford to longer permit our political affairs to be controlled by mob violence, and the shot-gun policy of Mississippi and Louisiana must either have an end, or these States on the border must cease to hold communication with them in self-defense, by entirely withdrawing their sympathy, and refuse to profit by the illegal methods they adopt, and which, if persisted in, can only bring disaster upon all interests and homes.

TELEGRAPHIC.

THE CATHOLICS AND THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Boston, Nov. 25.—An announcement is made of the policy of the Roman Catholic Church in New England toward the public schools. The Archbishop following the advice of the Pope to a European bishop, has directed all the priests in the arch diocese of New England to at once establish parochial schools, and threaten parents who refuse to patronize them with the terrors of the Church. In localities where the influence of public schools is thought to be particularly injurious to Catholic youth, the priests are instructed to withdraw the children at once, even if there be no parochial schools in the neighborhood.

The President's Message.

New York, November 23.—A special to the Sun from Washington says: "Mr. Hayes is engaged in preparing his annual message to Congress. The document will be completed early next week and sent to the Government Printing Office, where it will be printed and bound for distribution among congressmen as soon as it is communicated to Congress. It has been announced that the message this year would be shorter than usual, and would recommend no legislation of importance. This announcement is untrue. The message will be of ordinary length, and will recommend the enactment of very important measures. Mr. Hayes has always been a hard money man, and he is opposed to the use of paper money whenever there is sufficient coin in the country to take the place of our paper circulation. He realizes the fact that if United States legal-tender notes are to be withdrawn from circulation, and gold and silver coin put forth in place of the notes, the substitution must be a gradual one. There were on November 1 $226,133,558.72 in gold coin and bullion, standard silver dollars, fractional silver coin and silver bullion in the Treasury. Of this sum, $17,755,986.76 only is in fractional silver coin. Mr. Hayes is of the opinion that the greenbacks should be gradually withdrawn from circulation and gold and silver issued instead, and he will ask Congress to pass a law immediately to carry his recommendations into effect. He will also request Congress to pass a law limiting the further coinage of standard silver dollars. He will give his reasons for asking this legislation. He believes that the continued coinage of standard silver dollars at the rate of not less than two millions per month, will, at no far distant day, disturb the finances by driving the dearer metal (gold) out of circulation. The great difficulty that the Treasury officials encounter in finding storage room for the accumulated tons of the standard silver dollars will be mentioned as another reason why their coinage should be regulated so that no more will be issued from the mint than can be maintained in permanent circulation.

The message will contain a brief history of Secretary Sherman's refunding operations for the past year, and great stress will be laid upon the success which has attended the placing of the four per cent. loan. Mr. Hayes will ask Congress to pass a law to enable Mr. Sherman to continue the refunding of the debt by purchasing the fives and sixes, which will reach maturity in the next few years, and refunding them in four per cent. bonds. Authority is desired to pay such premium for these bonds as will enable them to be refunded with a saving of interest to the government. Mr. Sherman, in his annual report, will present a draft of a bill for this purpose.

Congress will also be asked to pass a law for the protection of foreign trade marks in the United States. This subject has been discussed at several Cabinet meetings lately. Congressional action is made necessary by a recent decision of the Supreme Court that the Federal Trade Mark law is unconstitutional.

A great portion of the message will be devoted to a review of the effort of the administration to reform the civil service and the success which has attended it. The history of this effort, as related by an enthusiastic friend who is familiar with every step that has been taken in that direction, and who has read what will be said in the message on the subject, is as follows: The first step was to create a certain standard, to which every person desiring to enter the public service must attain before receiving an appointment. The system inaugurated by Postmaster James in the New York post-office seemed to be the best one for a basis, and it was accordingly selected. Other suggestions were made to the Executive, some of which were adopted and others rejected, and the plan agreed upon was compiled in pamphlet form, copies of which were sent to all of the larger post-offices, custom houses and internal revenue offices in the United States. A form of examination was suggested, and this examination was not such as a schoolboy might be expected to pass, but it was of a practical sort, adapted to the duties which the applicant would be expected to perform in the public service. The officers to whom the suggestions on reform in the civil service were sent were requested to give them a fair trial. About two or three months ago the officials were directed to report the results of those trials, and within the last month reports have been received from public officers in every part of the country. All speak in the highest terms of the increased efficiency of the employees in the public offices in consequence. The standard of the service has been elevated, and the men are capable of performing a higher class of work.

It was Mr. Hayes' idea at the beginning of his term to place the clerks in the department on a footing above the power of members of Congress and politicians. He desired to establish a system where retention in office and promotion would depend exclusively upon the merit of the employee, and he flatters himself that in great part this work has been accomplished. He desires that, if possible, his successor will enforce the system that he believes has been successfully inaugurated under his administration.

In his message Mr. Hayes will draw the line between the duties of the Executive and the interference of the legislative branch of the government, in the matter of making appointments, as broadly as possible. He wishes to break up the habit which members of Congress have of trying to dictate appointments. Whenever Mr. Hayes is in doubt concerning the merits of applicants for federal offices, he will request the advice of representatives or senators acquainted with the candidates. When unsolicited such advice will not be needed. For places in the departments at Washington, and offices in the civil administration everywhere, he wishes applicants to receive positions solely by virtue of their merit. He desires that the poor and friendless boy shall have as good a chance for the place as the lad backed by wealth and influence. To carry this system into effect it is absolutely necessary that the desires of members of Congress in the matter should not be heeded.

The message will also deal with the subject of the interference of government employees in political affairs. Mr. Hayes does not approve of officeholders becoming ward politicians, dictating at the primaries and in conventions the candidates of the people. He recognizes the fact that a man, by taking office, does not relinquish his political rights, and he only desires that the officeholder shall comport himself decently and not neglect his public duties to mingle in politics.

The message will probably contain some reference to the investigations which have been made during the summer of the North American fisheries. The subject of a Nicaraguan canal will be alluded to, its importance urged, and a fuller survey of the country through which it would pass will be suggested.

HAYES AND VIRGINIA REPUBLICANS.

WASHINGTON, November 21.—The President has taken a very active interest in the political situation in Virginia, especially with respect to the contest between the debt-payers and the so-called readjusters. Yesterday a delegation of Virginia Republicans called upon him, and, as one of them put it, "the President lectured us very severely for having sided the readjusters in the recent campaign." The President urged the Republicans to adopt a new policy in Virginia; to cooperate with the debt-payers, and to declare the Republicans who acted with the readjusters should cease to be considered good Republicans. This advice of the President has caused considerable feeling among the Virginia Republicans who are here, and has been much discussed by them to day.

One of them said: "The President has not been so successful in his Southern policy that he need to hope to be any more successful in attempting to interfere with the Republicans in Virginia." Another Republican, who is more conservative, and who heard what the Virginians called the President's scolding, said in substance this: "The position of the Republicans in Virginia is not understood, either by the President or by Northern Republicans. The recent contest in that state is only known in the North as a struggle between what are called the debt-payers and the readjusters, or what the North chooses to term the readjusters. Now, the truth is, the great majority of the Republicans, the rank and file of the party, did cooperate with the readjusters, and made the victory of that party possible; but it is untruthful and unjust to call the readjusters readjusters. No party in Virginia advocates repudiation. The question at issue was as to the time and form of the payment of the public debt; and whether, for instance, the schools should be closed to enable the state to pay a greater amount of interest than it can now afford. But as a matter of fact, the debt question, although it was that understood in the North to have been the only question at issue, was by no means the controlling influence in the campaign. The fight of the readjusters was a fight against Bourbon ring rule; against the Democratic machine; against the party of intolerance and oppression; against the party which has proscribed the negro and Republicanism, and has planted itself upon the color-line—has cherished all the traditions, if not the purpose, of secession. The readjusters, on the contrary, care nothing for the fate of the Democracy.

They are working for a better state government, for relief from ring-rule, and it is true they have been aided by the Republicans. The overthrow of the Bourbon Democracy in Virginia is to be secured, and a new party, which cares as little for the memories of the rebellion as to burn a Lae in effigy, is to be created solely through such agencies as these." These views, extraordinary and novel as they may seem, are the statement of one of the foremost men in the Republican party in Virginia as to the opinions and purposes of the Republicans. This statement was made after listening to the advice of the President.

THE POLITICAL SITUATION.

WASHINGTON, November 23.—The declaration of Senator Carpenter as to the probable action of the Democratic Congress in passing upon the returns of the presidential election of 1880 has been the subject of comment and varying criticism among the Republicans and Democrats of the Capital. His utterance has been considered crude and wild by some, while others have supposed the declaration to be intended by Senator Carpenter to rehabilitate himself as a partisan, he having, in the judgment of many Republicans in the interval of his career as an ex-senator been exceptionally and questionably liberal in his estimates and action toward the Democracy.

Nevertheless, there are facts in our political history which seem to furnish substantial grounds for apprehension, in view of the contingencies and complications of a closely contested national election, the Republicans themselves having, when in control of Congress, furnished precedents that may be, with considerable force and plausibility, used by the Democrats, under certain conditions, to further their political ends relative to the presidency. There is under the circumstances, despite the extravagance of statement and the personal purposes to be accomplished thereby, as alleged by some in reference to the prognostications of Senator Carpenter, a serious undercurrent of thought, not only among the politicians, but the people generally, as to the outcome of the next presidential contest when it shall reach the Congress; and this undercurrent of thought is accompanied by an appreciable feeling of popular uneasiness. It is believed, however, that questionable action of the sort indicated would be more likely to flow from unexpected and sudden party exigencies than from a distinct plan, conceived and put in force intentionally to produce a condition of things that would justify revolutionary devices or expedients in order to secure party success. It is believed here by thoughtful men that the American people, whatever may be the judgments or purposes of the politicians, are determined and resolute that the popular will shall not only be expressed freely at the polls in that action that creates government, but that such will, when expressed, shall be fairly declared and fully enforced, the necessities and ambitions of political leaders to the contrary notwithstanding; and they will permit no success when advised beforehand of the vicious methods proposed for gaining it at the sacrifice of popular rights.

The danger apprehended by Senator Carpenter would be precipitated by an unexpected political complication rather than by a conspiracy concocted now and executed by plans and agencies that would create the occasion as well as the motive and justification for the contemplated wrong.

THE INTER-OCEANIC CANAL.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 22.—In an interview with Admiral Ammen in regard to the report that Gen. Grant had been offered the presidency of a company to be organized for the purpose of building an inter-oceanic canal across Nicaragua, the Admiral said the real facts were that within the last week he had received a letter from a gentleman in Paris who had been one of the leaders in this enterprise, saying that he should sail from Havre on the 8th of November, bearing the authority from certain capitalists in France to subscribe in their name $20,000,000 of stock of a company to build a canal across the Isthmus. The Admiral would not give his name, but said he represented the Nicaraguan government was entirely trustworthy and just the man to be sent upon a mission like this. He had told the Admiral in his note that he bore letters of credit to a prominent banking house of New York. The subscription, the Admiral said, was entirely contingent upon Grant's acceptance of the presidency of the company. He had as yet received no reply to his letter to the General notifying him of these facts. No plans had yet been matured, but a meeting of the friends of the enterprise would be called when the French Agent arrived; and the Admiral stated that there was in New York an American gentleman of great wealth, high position and wide influence, not only in this country, but in England and France, who will take the initiative on behalf of the United States. He is fully informed of all that is going on, and is in constant communication with Gen. Grant. As to the cost of the canal the Admiral said Gen. Grant thought they could build it for $80,000,000, but his opinion was that the capital stock of the company should not be less than $100,000,000; and then it would be necessary only to call for as much as was needed. The cost could be estimated very closely. If they could raise $20,000,000 in this country, the remainder could be procured in England and France without difficulty; provided, the matter, he thought, would be matured within a few months, and then Gen. Grant would declare himself.

MR. TILDEN AND MR. HEWITT.

PITTSBURGH, November 20.—The Evening Telegraph contains an interview to-night with a gentleman, whose name is not given, in regard to facts connected with the election of 1876. The interview says that a number of Southern and Western Senators and Representatives were formed into a coalition by friends of Senator Thurman, of Ohio, during the session of Congress in 1877-78. The object of the coalition was to press Thurman for the nomination for President in 1880.

The interviewed gentleman says a secret meeting of these Thurman men was held in a hotel in Washington in the session of Congress in 1877-78. He adds: "I cannot give you the names of those present, because I know one or two of them only. Gordon, of Georgia; Lamar, of Mississippi; Davis, of West Virginia, and several other Southern men, six or eight Western men, and four or five from the East were at the meeting. I think that Hewitt was there, but I am not sure. The result of the meeting was that a committee was appointed to work up a feeling for Thurman." The committee had thirty-eight members, one for each state. Each member was to effect a secret organization of Thurman men in his own state, and work the thing so that Thurman delegates would be sent to the National Convention if possible. The committee had several meetings and got its work well under way. My understanding of the matter was that Hewitt was to work for Thurman in New York against Tilden. Whether this was true or not, I know that Hewitt, either after or at the first meeting, told the Thurman people why he had quarrelled with Tilden. He said that Tilden gave him charge of his campaign and told him to spend whatever money was necessary. Hewitt went to work with a will, and spent over $200,000 of his own money, thinking that it would be repaid by Tilden, even though he was not elected. When Hayes went in and the time came for settling the bills Tilden refused to pay Hewitt's expenditures, saying that he ought to be paid by assessments on the party. Tilden agreed to pay his share of an assessment, but said Hewitt had spent too much money. Tilden at length paid about $50,000 and $30,000 or $40,000 was raised by subscription.

Hewitt's personal loss by Tilden's refusal to pay the bills was from $100,000 to $120,000. Hewitt said that Tilden had agreed to back him in whatever he did, and that he knew how much money was being spent from time to time, and hence Hewitt had no fear at the time of his being misled so badly. This story of Hewitt was told around by the Thurman people as an explanation of Hewitt's support of the Ohio Senator. Whether the Thurman organization is yet in existence I can't say.

COLORED EMIGRANTS FOR INDIANA.

WASHINGTON, November 23.—A party of sixty colored emigrants from Lagrange county, South Carolina, who have been in this city since Tuesday last, left here to-night for Wayne county, Indiana, where they propose to settle, having been assisted to the necessary means to travel by the National Emigrant Aid Society. During their stay here they have been quartered in a car furnished them by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, and supplied with food by the Women's Christian Association. The party embraces forty to forty-five men, four women and twelve children. A second party—about the same in number, from the same locality and for the same destination—is expected here two weeks hence.

There is a disposition among the assembling Democratic statesmen at Washington to make Senator Thurman the scapegoat for the disasters of the year. They are inclined to make it extremely unpleasant for him during the rest of his term. This will not work. The Senator was a bad leader, but he was a helpless one. If he had tried to head the party in a more sensible direction they would have pushed him aside and rushed to destruction without him. In short, the party was fore-ordained, by an ineradicable providence, to put its foot into it.

LOCAL NEWS.

—The pay car passed through here Friday last.

—Would not Carp do well in the "Dead Pond," in Oakland?

—Capt. Wardwell's company is drilling nightly at their armory.

—The Band was out Monday night serenading Mr. H. Wheeler Combs and lady.

—200 sacks G. A. Salt for sale at Wm. P. Totten's Cheap Cash Store, Oakland, Md.

—Prof. Tice's prophecy as to the shooting stars didn't "pan out" in this section.

—The Garrett Guards received their arms Friday of last week. They are breech loading rifles.

—Get the Genuine Singer Sewing Machine. I. W. Slonaker, of Oakland, is the agent for Garrett county.

—$20,000 to loan on first-class commercial paper. Apply to D. E. Offutt.

—Owing to the inclement weather the Band of Hope did not hold its meeting last week.

—W. H. Hagan, Esq., entered upon the duties of the office of Register of Wills Thursday last. His handsomeness Messrs. Joseph B. Davis, Wilson Procter and Nathan Castrel.

—The State fish commissioners are now ready to supply free of charge, those who desire to stock mill ponds and streams with carp. This fish is easily domesticated and will flourish in artificial or natural ponds upon a vegetable diet. The carp is an excellent food fish and will weigh from 4 to 9 pounds. Information in regard to its culture can be obtained from the fish commissioners.

—The Pennsylvania Railroad in Maryland have effected arrangements with the Pennsylvania Road so that the passenger and freight trains of the former road will enter Cumberland. The depot will be established for the present at the Payne Spring alley, and when the freighting has been completed to Hay street the depot will be removed thither. The managers have begun the work of laying the foundation for the freighting in question which will be all finished in a few days. Trains will commence running regularly in about a week. The track has been put in good trim over the entire route.

—Church Services.—Sunday. Stone Church.—Preaching in the morning at 11 o'clock, by Rev. Dr. Scott.

M. E. Church.—Preaching in the morning at 10 o'clock, by Rev. Mr. Sanford.

Lutheran Church.—Preaching in the morning at 10 o'clock, by Rev. O. C. Miller. Sunday School at 9 o'clock.

Dentistry.

Dr. J. Daily, Resident Dentist at Westernport, will visit Oakland on Monday, Dec. 1st, and will remain one week or ten days. Room at Mrs. West's Hotel.

Custom House Appointment.

Wm. Moody, of Garrett county, has been appointed United States storekeeper by Collector John L. Thomas, Jr. Mr. Moody is a prominent Republican, and well known in Baltimore city. He represented the Seventeenth and Eighteenth wards in the Second Branch of the City Council during the years 1861 and 1865.—Balto. Herald.

List of Letters.

List of letters remaining unclaimed in the Post Office at Oakland, Nov. 20th, 1879.

Persons calling for them will please say they are advertised.

John Cannon, H. B. Eldin, Wm. Eldin, John Fletcher, Nancy Gill, W. M. Lambert, Peter Morgan, R. H. Bausch, Emily Stowe, Samuel Thompson, Lizzie Walker.

R. Thayer, P. M.

Horse Thief Captured.

A horse belonging to Nelson H. Wilburn, residing near McHenry, this county, was stolen from Mr. Rowan White's stable, in Oakland, about 8 o'clock Tuesday evening. A colored tramp, who had been about town during the day was suspected, and it was ascertained that he had made inquiry as to the road leading to Swanton. Mr. Wilburn hoisted a freight train and went to Altamont, where he borrowed a shot gun from the telegraph operator at that place, and started toward Oakland, on the county road. He had not proceeded half a mile when he met the tramp on his horse. The tramp who gave his name as William Baker, was taken back to Altamont and searched, and then brought to Oakland by Mr. W. and lodged in jail about 3 o'clock Wednesday morning. Later he was taken before Esquire Jamison, who committed him for the action of the Grand Jury in May next.

Dropped Dead.

John Frantz, of Joseph, an old and highly respected citizen of Selbysport district, this county, dropped dead, Tuesday last, on his way from his house to the spring. He was about 70 years of age.

Hymeneal.

H. Wheeler Combs, Esq., of Oakland, was married Thursday November 13th, 1879, at Troy, Ohio, to Miss Lucile Morris, of the latter place. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Chokey, of the Presbyterian Church. The happy couple after an extended wedding tour arrived in Oakland Saturday evening last, and took up their residence at the Everstine House. The groom is very popular in this town and county, and we join with his numerous friends in wishing the couple a happy journey through life.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending November 27:

Marmaduke C. Best to Cherry Creek Grange, part of Military Lot No. 1228; $1.

Thomas Shaffer and wife to Washington F. Arnold, part of tract of "Elk Garden," 683 acres; $200.

Michael Hardin and wife to Lon. Kahl, part of Military Lots 3612 and 3613; $500.

W. R. Getty and wife to George Papp and Thos. H. Layman, Military Lots 744 and 753; $500.

Destructive Fire.

We are pained to learn that the extensive wagon and carriage works of R. P. Spiker and Geo. W. Harrison at Logansport, Ind., both Piquemen, were totally destroyed by fire on Saturday night. The loss is said to be complete and foots up $30,000 with only $16,000 insurance. Mr. Spiker, who is located here, is one of our most enterprising citizens, and we are sure he has as well as his partner, the sympathies of our people. We have not learned what will be done with the works at Logansport, but presume that the firm will rebuild at once. The destruction of this factory throws out of employment about fifty hands at a very inopportune part of the year. The proprietors were doing a very heavy business and were contemplating an increase in their working force to double the number employed previous to the fire.—Piqua (O.) Journal, Nov. 6.

Mr. Spiker is a native of this county, and his many friends here will be sorry to hear of his misfortune.

Tribute of Respect.

At a regular meeting of Philos Lodge, No. 91, I. O. O. F., held on Nov. 12th, 1879, it was ordered that a committee of three be appointed to draft resolutions of condolence in regard to the death of our Bro. Emanuel Heckert. Your committee, after due consideration, legs leave to make the following report:

WHEREAS, He has pleased Almighty God, in his wise providence, to remove from us by death our beloved brother Emanuel Heckert, therefore, be it

Resolved, That while we cheerfully submit to the wisdom of Him who cannot err, we extend our sympathy to the bereaved family of which he was a member.

Resolved, That the members of the Lodge wear the regular badge of mourning for thirty days, and that a copy of these resolutions be printed in the Oakland papers, and a copy sent to his family.

Submitted in F. L. T.

H. H. RIGHT, R. H. BURNAP, L. H. FISHER, Committee.

Commissioners Meeting.

D. H. Friend, John Wilhelm and William W. Broadwater, the newly elected County Commissioners met at 10 o'clock A. M. Tuesday, and organized by electing D. H. Friend, President. F. A. Thayer was elected Clerk at a salary of $400 per annum.

The resignation of G. D. White, as constable of district No. 7, was accepted.

The resignation of W. H. Hagan, as clerk to the Board, was filed and accepted.

F. A. Thayer, clerk elect, filed bond in the penalty of $1,000, which was approved by the Board. He also filed oath of office and entered upon his duties.

Messrs. Peddicord and Combs were chosen as counsel to the Board.

The following orders were passed: Ordered, By the County Commissioners of Garrett county, this 25th day of November, 1879, that the order passed on the 6th day of February, 1878, be and the same is hereby rescinded, and the following adopted in lieu thereof:

Ordered, By the County Commissioners of Garrett county, this 25th day of November, 1879, that all printing and advertising to be done for county purposes before by THE RE-PUBLICAN, except such advertising as is required by law to be published in two newspapers, and in that case the second paper to be selected by this Board.

Board adjourned to meet 1st Monday of January, 1880.

CRANESVILLE, W. Va., Nov. 24.

ED. REPUBLICAN.—Having been a reader of your valuable paper for some time, I will give you a few items from this little village.

Old winter is fast approaching; he made his appearance in the old-fashioned way.

Farmers in this neighborhood have commenced butchering, making sausage and preparing things for Christmas.

Dr. P. C. Herman, of this place, gave a grand reception on Monday evening. About forty of the young folks were present. The Dr. gave them a handsome treat in the shape of pies, cakes, candies, apples, &c. All enjoyed themselves until nearly daylight. Mr. and Mrs. Herman deserve much praise for their kindness. Dr. M. L. Flehtner was also present.

During the recent wind storm which prevailed here a few days ago one of Mr. Saul Feathers' buildings was blown down.

During the past few days Saul Stines has killed two bears, one deer and fourteen turkeys, and it wasn't a good time for hunting either.

Miss Kate Wilhelm was very low with the fever, but is rapidly convalescing. Thomas Stines has been sick for some time with pneumonia fever, but is slowly recovering.

We will say any more at present, but leave the rest for the next time.

CARRIE.

"Did You See the Stars Shoot?"

The above question has been asked us at least twice, if not three times, since last Thursday night. We now answer that we did—in 1837.

Thursday night last, in company with some astronomical friends, we concluded to "stay up all night to witness the wonders of Prof. Tice's prophecy." We saw it. The prophecy, we mean, not the stars. At 12 o'clock we took a glass and went out to witness the "shooting stars." It was rather dark, the stars were being rather cloudy, and it wasn't a good time for looking either.

Miss Kate Wilhelm was very low with the fever, but is rapidly convalescing. Thomas Stines has been sick for some time with pneumonia fever, but is slowly recovering.

We will say any more at present, but leave the rest for the next time.

During the recent wind storm which prevailed here a few days ago one of Mr. Saul Feathers' buildings was blown down.

During the past few days Saul Stines has killed two bears, one deer and fourteen turkeys, and it wasn't a good time for hunting either.

Miss Kate Wilhelm was very low with the fever, but is rapidly convalescing. Thomas Stines has been sick for some time with pneumonia fever, but is slowly recovering.

We will say any more at present, but leave the rest for the next time.

During the recent wind storm which prevailed here a few days ago one of Mr. Saul Feathers' buildings was blown down.

During the past few days Saul Stines has killed two bears, one deer and fourteen turkeys, and it wasn't a good time for hunting either.

Miss Kate Wilhelm was very low with the fever, but is rapidly convalescing. Thomas Stines has been sick for some time with pneumonia fever, but is slowly recovering.

We will say any more at present, but leave the rest for the next time.

During the recent wind storm which prevailed here a few days ago one of Mr. Saul Feathers' buildings was blown down.

During the past few days Saul Stines has killed two bears, one deer and fourteen turkeys, and it wasn't a good time for hunting either.

Miss Kate Wilhelm was very low with the fever, but is rapidly convalescing. Thomas Stines has been sick for some time with pneumonia fever, but is slowly recovering.

We will say any more at present, but leave the rest for the next time.

During the recent wind storm which prevailed here a few days ago one of Mr. Saul Feathers' buildings was blown down.

During the past few days Saul Stines has killed two bears, one deer and fourteen turkeys, and it wasn't a good time for hunting either.

Miss Kate Wilhelm was very low with the fever, but is rapidly convalescing. Thomas Stines has been sick for some time with pneumonia fever, but is slowly recovering.

We will say any more at present, but leave the rest for the next time.

During the recent wind storm which prevailed here a few days ago one of Mr. Saul Feathers' buildings was blown down.

During the past few days Saul Stines has killed two bears, one deer and fourteen turkeys, and it wasn't a good time for hunting either.

Miss Kate Wilhelm was very low with the fever, but is rapidly convalescing. Thomas Stines has been sick for some time with pneumonia fever, but is slowly recovering.

We will say any more at present, but leave the rest for the next time.

During the recent wind storm which prevailed here a few days ago one of Mr. Saul Feathers' buildings was blown down.

During the past few days Saul Stines has killed two bears, one deer and fourteen turkeys, and it wasn't a good time for hunting either.

Miss Kate Wilhelm was very low with the fever, but is rapidly convalescing. Thomas Stines has been sick for some time with pneumonia fever, but is slowly recovering.

starry heavens, we all—unanimously—each man voting in New York city style (6 times each) voted Prof. Tice a fraud.

We saw a man next morning who said he saw one star shoot. We believe that he lied—under a mistake—because neither eye was black—his nose was unblackened—and his head was the usual size.

"Good morning, gentlemen."—Morgantown Post.

FOR THE REPUBLICANS.

Chronicle.

Now, in the fourth year of the reign of Carrolls Fraudulins, high unto the end of the year, the Democrats of the county of Garrett, a province of the kingdom of Maryland, began to prepare them for the fall campaign.

They had found a mare's nest of unusual dimensions the fall previous, in a Democratic majority of 2, over which they grew much and were exceeding glad. And when the time of year began to draw nigh wherein the people were to choose their candidates, the Democrats of the county said one to another, We will show these Republicans a trick or two.

So in the fourth month of the year, on the seventh day of the month, their wise men and soothsayers assembled in the court house, a great multitude, and took counsel among themselves what they would do. And they said among themselves: Whereas, we have Continental Bill on the State ticket, which with the cheating of which the King is capable the State can be considered safe; but as the soul liveth there will be trouble about the county.

Now there is Richard T., of the tribe of Browning, and William R., of the tribe of Getty, and Gilmer S., of the tribe of Hamill, all goodly men and fair to look upon and of goodly estate; and in the parlance of the literate and ungildy, as money maketh the mare go, we will put them on our ticket.

But money may not save us. There lives a man high unto Accident, by the name of Melchior, whose surname is Miller, who maketh a superior article of "bug juice" so termed by the vulgar, but known by the great and the good as Elixir of Rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

And the wise men and soothsayers called Melchior unto them, and said, O Melchior, as thy soul liveth, we are exceedingly anxious to carry the county, and it behooveth us to appeal unto thee to contribute two barrels of the elixir of rye, after which the heart of the Democratic voter panteth, even as the roe panteth for the cool water.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 25, 1879.

It is very evident that the Democrats are at a loss to know how to conduct themselves during the coming winter so as to regain what they lost of the public confidence at the extra session. One of the schemes it is said they contemplate urging in order to obtain favor is combination with Greenbackers in an attack on the National banks. I hardly think this will be made a caucus matter with them, however, since they know very well they cannot succeed next year without carrying one or two Northern States, and an unassailable assault on the banks would ruin what little prospect they have now. It may be, however, that in despair of regaining lost ground they are determined on mischief regardless of the consequences. The Republicans will probably let them have rope enough to hang themselves with.

The meeting of the National Committee here in December will be an interesting occasion, and will call together many leaders of the party. Besides electing chairman and secretary they will probably decide where to hold the next national convention. Chicago and Philadelphia seem to be the points of chief attraction.

The United States Auditor of Rail Road accounts has received of the Central Pacific Rail Road Company a check for $600,000.00, which together with the amounts due the company for government transportation, both on its subsidized and unsubsidized roads, between Nov. 1st 1879, and June 30th 1878, fulfills the requirements of all existing laws in regard to the payment to the Government of 5 per cent. of the company's net earnings during the period named. The payment is made under protest, but it is likely to be followed by other payments as they fall due.

The Commissioner of Pensions in his annual report shows that on the 30th of June last there were 217,755 persons receiving pensions from the Government. The list is now larger than at any previous time. It is composed of 124,150 army invalid pensioners; 84,171 army widows, children and dependent relatives; 1,814 navy invalids; 1,772 navy widows &c., 11,622 surviving soldiers of the war of 1812, and 21,191 widows of deceased soldiers of that war. During the year 31,316 new names were added to the list, and 308 names which had previously been dropped were restored, and 13,491 were for various reasons dropped. The aggregate amount of one year's pension to all the pensioners on the roll is $25,133,742.43.

The gallant Republicans of Louisiana are doing noble work we hear, and promise to send a good account of themselves at the election in December.

The accounts of the Treasury Department show that the Democrats of Congress found means to expend last year $25,000,000 more than the expenditures of Government offices called for. This is Democratic economy!

Messrs. Blaine and Frye do not think the Governor of Maine and his Go-back auditors will dare to steal the legislative majority there. Other authorities indicate, however, that the desperate fellows will stand short of an outrage to hold on to the patronage which the people decided they must not have. It is a red herring as among the signs of a Sherman here in the South that the Atlanta Republic has placed at its head the name of Secretary Sherman for the Presidency and Hon. Joshua Hill of Georgia for Vice President.

LOGAN.

LOGAN.

LOGAN.

LOGAN.

LOGAN.

LOGAN.

LOGAN.

LOGAN.

LOGAN.

LOGAN.

LOGAN.

LOGAN.

LOGAN.

LOGAN.

LOGAN.

LOGAN.

LOGAN.

LOGAN.

LOGAN.

LOGAN.

101
100 10
10

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

MORTGAGEE'S SALE
—OF—
VALUABLE PROPERTY.

In District No. 9, Garrett County, Maryland.

By virtue of the power of sale contained in a mortgage from John T. Hight and Louis M. T. Hight to William E. Henshaw, of Allegany county, Md., this notice is given, that on the 10th day of September, 1879, at 10 o'clock A. M., one of the land records of Garrett county, to which said power of sale there is a provision attached that, in case of default in the payment of the money thereon provided to be paid, the interest thereon, of the line or in the manner herein mentioned, it shall be lawful for the said William E. Henshaw, his assigns or attorney, to sell the said mortgaged premises at public sale, on the National road, in Garrett county, by public auction, for cash, and default having been made, I, John K. Combs, the assignee of William E. Henshaw, do hereby give notice that I will offer at public auction

At Johnson's, on the National Road, in district No. 9, Garrett county, Md., on the 13th day of December, 1879

at 10 o'clock A. M., all the following tract of land known as the

"Walnut Hill Tract,"

beginning and lying as follows, being a part of Lot No. nine (9), beginning at two (2) poles standing at the end of local line of the whole lot and running with the line of said lot east 122 poles to two poles marked with three notches each, south 100 poles, then leaving said line west 122 poles to intersect the 2d line of the whole lot, and with it north 100 poles to the place of beginning, containing more or less, being a part of a tract of land known as the "Walnut Hill Tract," lying and being fully described in the aforesaid mortgage.

ONE HUNDRED ACRES,

TERMS OF SALE—Cash on day of sale.

JOHN S. COMBS,
Assignee of William E. Henshaw.
JOHN S. GROVE,
Attorney and Agent. 11 22 ts.

NOTICE.

All persons having claims against the estate of Jacob Schreyer, deceased, are hereby notified to file said claims with the Register of Wills for Garrett county, on or before the 15th day of December, 1879.

T. J. PEDDICO, Reg. of Wills, Attorney.

NOTICE.

I have $7,500 to loan in sums from $1,000 to $3,000 on first-class mortgages.

11 15 tf T. J. PEDDICO.

Estate of George J. Walter, deceased.

THIS IS TO GIVE NOTICE—that the subscriber hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, Maryland, Letters Testamentary on the estate of GEORGE J. WALTER, late of said county, deceased. All persons having claims against the said deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same to the subscriber, with the vouchers thereon, legally authenticated, on or before the 15th day of May, 1880. Those claims not so exhibited will be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment. Given under my hands this 15th day of November, 1879.

JAMES W. WHITE, Executor.

JOHN RICHARDSON,
Manufacturer and Dealer in
WAGONS AND FARMING IMPLEMENTS,
GRAIN CRACKERS, A SPECIALTY.
Also, a large stock of
Near the Depot, Oakland, Md.

Private Sale
OF
VALUABLE LAND

The undersigned, as Attorney for John Swan, Esq., will offer at private sale, at his office in Oakland, the following property, to-wit:

Military Lots Nos. 401, 480, 487, 497, 1221, 1235, 1321, 1331, 1336, 1338, 1101, 1558, 1596, 1565, 1800, 1813, 1811, 1913.

And also as Attorney for Alexander C. Good, and Mary E. F. Good, his wife, all the right, title and estate of said Good and wife, in and to the following lands, to-wit:

Military Lots Nos. 31, 32, 33, 54, 62, 85, 258, 373, 477, 998, 1286, 1509, 1519, 1520, 1521, 1569, 1613, 1802, 1815, 1909, 1910, 1942, 2517, 2518, 2529, 3555, 3566, 3567, 4000, 216, 250, 1473, 1492, 2169, 1489, 1288, 2536.

Many of the above Lots are valuable and will be sold preemptively.

TERMS: CASH on day of sale.

The deeds will be signed by the parties themselves and all cost of conveyancing, &c., must be paid by the purchaser.

J. W. VITCH,
Attorney for John Swan and for A. C. Good and wife,
Sept. 20-47.

Notice to Wool Growers.

I have now on hand five Cotswold Bucks six months old, weighing respectively 131 lbs, 122, 102, 101. Any one wishing to purchase one of these fine Bucks can do so by calling on me at my home, one mile from Grantsville, nov-3m JONAS E. GNAGLEY.

DANIEL CHISHOLM,
SURVEYOR,

Office in Wm. Merrill's drug store.

A. M. Jarrett, D.D.S.,

will be at Oakland every six months. Nitrous oxide gas used for the painless extraction of teeth. Artificial teeth warranted to be neat and substantial. Fine artistic gold filling a specialty. Address, Gratton, W. Va. oct29-y

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

COUNTY DIRECTORY.

CIRCUIT COURT.

Jury Terms—Second Monday of September and the First Monday of May.

Non-Jury Terms—First Monday of July and Third Monday of December.

Chief Judge—Hon. R. H. Alvey.
Associates—Hons. Wm. Motter and Geo. A. Pearce.

Clerk—W. H. Tower.
Sheriff—Thomas Coddington.
State's Attorney—Jno. W. Vetteh.
Court Auditor—W. P. Townshend.

Standing Commissioners—Gilmore Hamill and A. B. Gonder.
Crier—Wm. Simouse.
Messenger—Jas. M. Bell.

Balliffs—Wm. Waltz and T. Bosley.
Return days of Equity process—Third Monday in January, third Monday in March, third Monday in May, third Monday in July, second Monday in September, second Monday in November.

ORPHANS' COURT.

Meets every second and fourth Tuesday of each month.
Chief Judge—Joseph DeWitt.
Associates—A. J. Michaels and Wm. Harvey.

Register of Wills—W. L. Rawlings.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

The regular sessions of the County Commissioners commence on the first Monday in January; the first Monday in April, being the appeal and transfer term; the first Monday in June, being the levy term; the first Monday in July, the term for appointing judges of election, and the first Monday in October.

President, E. C. Tillon; Commissioners, John Riley and Jeremiah Guard.

Clerk—Wm. H. Hagans, who will be in the office on Tuesdays and Saturdays of each week.

County Surveyor—John Harned.

SCHOOL COMMISSIONERS.

President—Wm. A. Brydon.
Commissioners—G. W. Delawder.
Secretary and Treasurer—Dr. E. H. Bartlett.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

District No. 1—J. H. Wilson and Henry Rasche.
2—Benj. Griffith.
3—John T. Patterson.
4—Sylvanus Butler.
5—A. J. Warnick.
6—R. B. Jamison and A. L. Osbourn.
9—Perry Weimer.

REGISTRARS OF VOTERS.

District No. 1 H. O. Hamill.
2 James H. Rash.
3 Isaiah Fuller.
4 W. H. Bernard.
5 Daniel Hinebaugh.
6 Thomas Browning.
7 R. T. Browning.
8 W. F. Deakins.
9 J. Facenbaker.

TOWN OF OAKLAND.

Burgess—G. W. Delawder.
Commissioners—Thos. Carr, David Little, John Helbig, Edmund Jamison.

Clerk—King Delawder.
Balliff—Joseph M. Crim.
Postmaster—Ralph Thayer.

LODGES.

A. F. & A. M.—Meet every first and third Thursday night.
I. O. O. F. No. 12—Meet every Monday night.
Alta Lod. e. No. 571, K. of H.—Meets in McComas Hall 2d and 4th Thursday evenings of each month.
I. O. G. T. No. 114—Meet every Tuesday night.

Wolf, Thyer & Co.,
are now paying the highest CASH prices for

Furs, Sheep Skins,
Game of all kinds
and Produce Generally.

Ware-room in Offutt's Old Building, Main Street, Oakland, Md. 10 25-47.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

MEDICAL.

H. T. HELMBOLD'S

COMPOUND

Fluid Extract

BUCHU.

PHARMACEUTICAL

A SPECIFIC REMEDY FOR ALL

DISEASES

OF THE

BLADDER & KIDNEYS.

For Debility, Loss of Memory, Indisposition to Exercise or Business, Shortness of Breath, Troubled with Thoughts of Disease, Dimness of Vision, Pain in the Back, Chest and Head, Rush of Blood to the Head, Pale Countenance and Dry Skin.

If these symptoms are allowed to go on, very frequently EPILEPSY, Fits and Consumption follow. When the Constitution becomes affected it requires the aid of an invigorating medicine to strengthen and tone up the system—which

"Helmbold's Buchu"

DOES IN EVERY CASE.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

IS UNEQUALLED

By any remedy known. It is prescribed by the most eminent physicians all over the world, in Rheumatism, Spasmodic, Nervousness, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation, Aches and Pains, General Debility, Kidney Diseases, Liver Complaint, Nervous Debility, Epilepsy, Head Troubles, Paralysis, General Ill Health, Spinal Diseases, Sciatica, Deafness, Decline, Lumbago, Catarrh, Nervous Complaints, Female Complaints, &c.

Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Cough, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, Eruptions, Itch, Tetter in the Mouth, Painful Union of the Heart, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a thousand other painful symptoms, are the offerings of Dyspepsia.

HELMBOLD'S BUCHU

Invigorates the Stomach.

And stimulates the torpid Liver, Bowels, and Kidneys to healthy action, in cleansing the blood and imparting new life and vigor to the whole system.

A single trial will be quite sufficient to convince the hesitating of its valuable remedial qualities.

Price $1 Per Bottle,

Or Six Bottles for $5.

Delivered to any address free from observation.

"Patients" may consult by letter, receiving the same attention as by calling. Competent Physicians attend to correspondence. All letters should be addressed to

H. T. HELMBOLD,
DRUGGIST AND CHEMIST,
Philadelphia, Pa.

CAUTION!

See that the private Proprietary Stamp is on each bottle.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

FOR SALE.

A Furnished Cottage and Fifty Acres of land on time, near Oakland, Garrett county, Md. Apply on the premises to E. A. KILBOURN, or JOHN B. TARNER, 1,207 E. Street, Washington, D. C. 12 25-4m

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

DR. J. DAILY, RESIDENT DENTIST

WESTERNPORT, MARYLAND.

From one to a full set of teeth inserted in the most beautiful and substantial manner. Particular attention paid to cleaning and brightening natural teeth. All work warranted to give satisfaction, or money refunded.

SUBSCRIBE FOR

"THE REPUBLICAN,"

AND AID IN THE CIRCULATION

—OF—

The Cheapest Newspaper

IN WESTERN MARYLAND.

ONLY

$1 50

PER YEAR

IN ADVANCE.

EVERY VARIETY

OF

JOB WORK

PROMPTLY EXECUTED.

We desire to call the attention of Merchants, Mechanics, and Business Men generally, to our extensive facilities for the prompt, speedy and accurate execution of

FIRST-CLASS

JOB PRINTING.

We keep on hand, for printing purposes, an assortment of the best Paper, Envelopes, Cards, &c., and have one of best

JOB PRESSES

now in use, and the ONLY ONE IN OAKLAND.

We are determined to be up to the times in everything connected with the printing business.

Address
"THE REPUBLICAN,"
Oakland, Garrett Co., Md.

We have also a complete stock of

New Plain and Fancy Type, &c.,

of the latest styles, for all the different kinds of Job Work and can now fill all orders for

Show Cards, Business Cards, Circulars, Letter-Heads, Bill-Heads, Legal Blanks, Certificates, Envelopes, Tags, Statements, &c.,

Posters, Handbills, Programmes, Pamphlets, Catalogues, Dodgers, &c., &c.

and every description of

Plain and Fancy Printing

At the Lowest Rates.

Drop in and take a look at a

—COMPLETE—

Printing Office,

YOU WILL BE

WELCOME AT ALL TIMES.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

ONLY $96

Wanted

BEATTY ORGAN

Grand Up-to-date Organ, 24 keys, 24 notes, 24 chords, 24 scales, 24 arpeggios, 24 triplets, 24 sextuplets, 24 octuplets, 24 sixteenth notes, 24 thirty-second notes, 24 sixty-fourth notes, 24 one-hundred and sixteenth notes, 24 one-hundred and thirty-second notes, 24 one-hundred and sixty-fourth notes, 24 one-hundred and ninety-second notes, 24 one-hundred and ninety-sixth notes, 24 one-hundred and ninety-eighth notes, 24 one-hundred and ninety-ninth notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and two notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and three notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and four notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and five notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and six notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and seven notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and eight notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and nine notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and ten notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and eleven notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and twelve notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and thirteen notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and fourteen notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and fifteen notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and sixteen notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and seventeen notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and eighteen notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and nineteen notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty-one notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty-two notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty-three notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty-four notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty-five notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty-six notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty-seven notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty-eight notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty-nine notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty-one notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty-two notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty-three notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty-four notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty-five notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty-six notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty-seven notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty-eight notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty-nine notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and forty notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and forty-one notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and forty-two notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and forty-three notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and forty-four notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and forty-five notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and forty-six notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and forty-seven notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and forty-eight notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and forty-nine notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and fifty notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and fifty-one notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and fifty-two notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and fifty-three notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and fifty-four notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and fifty-five notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and fifty-six notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and fifty-seven notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and fifty-eight notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and fifty-nine notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and sixty notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and sixty-one notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and sixty-two notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and sixty-three notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and sixty-four notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and sixty-five notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and sixty-six notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and sixty-seven notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and sixty-eight notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and sixty-nine notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and seventy notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and seventy-one notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and seventy-two notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and seventy-three notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and seventy-four notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and seventy-five notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and seventy-six notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and seventy-seven notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and seventy-eight notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and seventy-nine notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and eighty notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and eighty-one notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and eighty-two notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and eighty-three notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and eighty-four notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and eighty-five notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and eighty-six notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and eighty-seven notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and eighty-eight notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and eighty-nine notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and ninety notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and ninety-one notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and ninety-two notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and ninety-three notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and ninety-four notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and ninety-five notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and ninety-six notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and ninety-seven notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and ninety-eight notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and ninety-nine notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and two notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and three notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and four notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and five notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and six notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and seven notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and eight notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and nine notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and ten notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and eleven notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and twelve notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and thirteen notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and fourteen notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and fifteen notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and sixteen notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and seventeen notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and eighteen notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and nineteen notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty-one notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty-two notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty-three notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty-four notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty-five notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty-six notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty-seven notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty-eight notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty-nine notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty-one notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty-two notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty-three notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty-four notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty-five notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty-six notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty-seven notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty-eight notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty-nine notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and forty notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and forty-one notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and forty-two notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and forty-three notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and forty-four notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and forty-five notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and forty-six notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and forty-seven notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and forty-eight notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and forty-nine notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and fifty notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and fifty-one notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and fifty-two notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and fifty-three notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and fifty-four notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and fifty-five notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and fifty-six notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and fifty-seven notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and fifty-eight notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and fifty-nine notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and sixty notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and sixty-one notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and sixty-two notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and sixty-three notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and sixty-four notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and sixty-five notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and sixty-six notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and sixty-seven notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and sixty-eight notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and sixty-nine notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and seventy notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and seventy-one notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and seventy-two notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and seventy-three notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and seventy-four notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and seventy-five notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and seventy-six notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and seventy-seven notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and seventy-eight notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and seventy-nine notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and eighty notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and eighty-one notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and eighty-two notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and eighty-three notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and eighty-four notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and eighty-five notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and eighty-six notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and eighty-seven notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and eighty-eight notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and eighty-nine notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and ninety notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and ninety-one notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and ninety-two notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and ninety-three notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and ninety-four notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and ninety-five notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and ninety-six notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and ninety-seven notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and ninety-eight notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and ninety-nine notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and two notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and three notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and four notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and five notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and six notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and seven notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and eight notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and nine notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and ten notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and eleven notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and twelve notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and thirteen notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and fourteen notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and fifteen notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and sixteen notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and seventeen notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and eighteen notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and nineteen notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty-one notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty-two notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty-three notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty-four notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty-five notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty-six notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty-seven notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty-eight notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and twenty-nine notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty-one notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty-two notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty-three notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty-four notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty-five notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty-six notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty-seven notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty-eight notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and thirty-nine notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and forty notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and forty-one notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and forty-two notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and forty-three notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and forty-four notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and forty-five notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and forty-six notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and forty-seven notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and forty-eight notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and one-hundred and forty-nine notes, 24 one-hundred and one-hundred

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 3.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1879.

NUMBER 41.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, etc.

D. E. OFFUTT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agricultural Machines, Musical Instruments,
Fruit, Potatoes, etc.

G. W. LECHE,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Second & Oak Sts.

D. H. LOAR,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jew-
elry, etc.

I. W. STALNAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third and Oak Streets.

L. BUSH & SON,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Cor. Third & Oak Sts.

J. A. GRANT,
Dry Goods, Notions & Groceries,
SPECIAL LINE OF TOBACCO.

DAVIS & TOWNSEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agents Agricultural Machines,
Opposite Bailey's Park.

C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Saddles, Clocks, Confectionery, etc., Next to Hollister's Hotel.

RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods, Fruit, etc.

JAS. A. ENLOW, Dealer in General Merchandise and Country Produce,
REPUBLICAN Building, Oakland, Md. H-15

HOTELS.

CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,
W. M. CODDINGTON, Proprietor,
Main St., Opposite Jackson's Billiard Saloon.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

G. A. SHIRER,
Oak Street, near Second.
A general line of Stoves and Tinware.

PHYSICIANS.

DR. J. LEE MCCOMAS,
Office on Main Street.

DR. E. H. PARSONS,
offers his professional services
to the people of Oakland and vicinity.
Office in the old Olcott building,
3 S 3m

PLASTERER.

JAMES ARNOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street.

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.

WM. M. WAGNER,
Shoe Cor. First & Oak Sts.

GEO. F. LOUGHRIDGE,
Leave orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.

J. B. BRANT,
Surveyor, Auctioneer and
Conveyancer,
Oakland, Garrett county, Md.

JOHN HAINES,
Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.

A. B. WOODCOCK,
In Wm. Simons's Building,
Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY GOODS.

MRS. M. E. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Gents' Furnishing
And Fancy Goods, and Shoes,
Main Street, Opposite Dr. McComas's office.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

GEO. C. STURGEON,
Drugs, Medicines,
Perfumes, Toilet articles, Stationery,
Tobacco and Cigars.
Alder St.

PAINTING & PAPER HANG- ING.

E. J. FRINGER,
House and Sign Painter,
Leave orders at Bush's Store.

S. V. B. WARD,
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER
Shop near Davis House.

BLACKSMITHS.

CHAS. SINCELL,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

JOHN M. JARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,
Residence on Liberty St. nearly oppo. Depot.

P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
And Builder,
Residence on Centre street.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Residence oppo. School house.

JOSEPH M. CRIM,
Residence on Alder Street.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.

CABINETMAKERS AND UN- DERTAKERS.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SHATZER,
Shop on Second Street.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FALL & WINTER GOODS.

GOODS FRESH & NEW
and Cheap as the Cheapest.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,
MERCHANT TAILOR.

Has on hand a full stock of New

Ready Made Clothing,

which he will sell very cheap for cash.

Gents Furnishing Goods,

In great variety, and at prices to suit the

times.

Suits Made to Order.

In the most fashionable manner. Orders by

mail promptly attended to.

Also Agent for the Celebrated

"Pearl Shirt."

A Large Assortment of

BOYS' CLOTHING

Kept always on hand.

All work WARRANTED to give entire

satisfaction.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,
Oakland, Md.

MEAT MARKET.

H. E. WOLFE,

Formerly of Cumberland, Md.

Takes this mode of announcing to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity that he has permanently located in Oakland for the purpose

of carrying on the

BUTCHERING BUSINESS.

In a first-class manner.

FRESH BEEF, (small-boned), MUTTON, PORK,
BOLOGNA SAUSAGE, PORK SAU-
SAGE, &c., at all times.

Shop near the Post Office.

Customers can get what they want without

delay and at any hour of the day.

Your patronage is respectfully solicited.

H. E. WOLFE.

PATENTS.

To Inventors and Manufacturers.

ESTABLISHED 1865.

GILMORE SMITH & CO.

Solicitors of Patents & Attorneys at Law.

American & Foreign Patents.

No fees in advance, nor until a Pat-

ent is allowed. No fees for making preliminary examinations.

Special attention given to Inter-

ference Cases before the Patent Office.

Infringement Suits in the different

States, and all litigation appertain-

ing to Patents or Inventions.

Sent Stamp for Pamphlet of Sixty

Pages.

GILMORE & CO.,

629 F. Street, N. W.,

Washington, D. C.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

THO. J. PEDDICOUD, A. B. GONDER.

PEDDICOUD & GONDER,

ATTORNEYS AT LAW.

SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY.

OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett County

and the adjoining Counties of West Virginia,

and in the Court of Appeals of Maryland.

Jan. 30-17.

S. A. COX, H. WHEELER & COMBS.

COX & COMBS,

ATTORNEYS AT LAW

AND

SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY.

Office, Alder street, Oakland, Garrett county,

Maryland.

Will practice in all the Courts of Maryland

and the adjoining Counties of West Virginia,

and in the Court of Appeals of Maryland.

Jan. 30-17.

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG

Late Resident Surgeon, New York

Eye and Ear Infirmary,

HAS LOCATED PERMANENTLY in the

CITY of Cumberland, Mo., for the EX-

CLUSIVE treatment of all diseases of the Eye and Ear, including those of the Nose and

Throat.

Office, No. 20 South Centre Street.

ap7217

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LESSONS.

SUNDAY, DEC. 7, 1879.

THE HEAVENLY KING.

GENERAL STATEMENT.

The aged apostle is now lifted up in vision from his dungeon lie to the heights of heaven. He beholds the throne of the king over arching the rainbow of promise, and surrounded by the seats of the four and twenty elders. In the hand of the king is a sealed roll, written within and without. The voice of a mighty angel is heard throughout the universe calling for one worthy to unseal and open the wondrous book. There is silence among the celestial spirits, while the apostle weeps, for no arm can grasp the roll, and no eye can look to gaze upon it. Suddenly, in the midst of the scene, rises one on whom St. John has looked and leaned in other years—the Lamb of God, bearing in all his body the glory and wounds of his earthly cross. He takes the roll from the hand of the angel, and as he unfolds it, the elders fall upon their faces on the golden floor, while censurers wave and incense rises, and the new song of redemption through the blood of the Lamb bursts upon the air, echoed by the eternal voices of a countless congregation, while the four and twenty elders, and the four strange beings on the steps of the throne.

Rev. 5, 1-11.

Memory Verses, 1-13.

1 And I saw in the right hand of him that sat on the throne a book written within and on the back side, sealed with seven seals.

2 And I saw a strong angel proclaiming with a loud voice, Who is worthy to open the book and loose the seals thereof?

3 And no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth, was able to open the book, neither to look thereon.

4 And I wept much, because no man was found worthy to open and read the book neither to look thereon.

5 And one of the elders said unto me, Weep not; behold, the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof.

6 And I beheld, and, lo, in the midst of the throne, and of the four beasts, and in the midst of the elders, stood a Lamb as it had been slain, having seven horns and seven eyes, which are the Seven Spirits of God sent forth into all the earth.

7 And he came and took the book out of the right hand of him that sat upon the throne.

8 And when he had taken the book, the four beasts and four and twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them harps, and they sang, saying, and hymns, which are the prayers of saints.

9 And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation.

10 And he made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign with him a thousand years.

11 And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many angels round about the throne, and the beasts and the elders; and the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands:

12 Saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and honor, and glory, and blessing.

13 And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that have breath, heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever.

14 And the four beasts said, Amen. And the four and twenty elders fell down and worshipped him that liveth forever and ever.

HOME READINGS.

37. The heavenly song. Rev. 5, 1-14.

38. The song of Deborah. Judges 5, 1-23.

39. The song of David. 1 Chron. 16, 7-26.

40. The song of Mary. Luke 1, 46-56.

41. The song in the prison. Acts 16, 25-34.

42. The song of Moses and the Lamb. Rev. 15, 1-8.

GOLDEN TEXT.

Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and honor, and glory, and blessing.

Rev. 5, 12.

LESSON HYMN, 7, 6.

They stand, those hills of Zion,
All jubilant with song,
And bright with many an angel,
And all the martyrs throng.

There is the throne of David;
And there from exile released,
The song of them that triumph,
The shout of their new feast.

QUESTIONS ON THE OUTLINE.

1. The book, v. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14.

2. Who was this? chap. 1, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14.

3. How was the book written and sealed? What was proclaimed, and by whom? Was there any response to the call? What is said in Rev. 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100.

4. What was the feeling of the apostle? Why did he weep? What prophet was troubled in a like manner? Dan. 7, 15, 16.

5. THE LAMB, v. 5, 6; Prov. 23, 11, How did one of the elders comfort the apostle? Who did he say had prevailed? Who was the root of David? Rev. 22, 16, Who stood in the midst of the throne? What did John the Baptist call Christ? John 1, 29, To what was Christ compared by the prophet? Isa. 53, 7, What did he possess? What did the horns and eyes represent? [ANS: His power and knowledge.] What did the Lamb do? And the elders?

6. THE SONG, v. 9, 14, Psa. 40, 3, Why is Christ worthy? How have we been redeemed? 1 Peter 1, 18, 19, What is it to be redeemed? How many methods have been redeemed? What is said in John 11, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100.

7. What voices did the apostle hear? What did they sing? What responses were given throughout the universe? May we join in this song?

TEA THINGS OF THE LESSON.

Where in this lesson do we learn—

1. That Christ has power above all creatures?

2. That Christ has honor above all kings?

3. That Christ has salvation for all mankind?

WORDS WITH LITTLE FOLKS.

1. Breathe that you have your name written in the Lamb's book of life.

2. Praise the Saviour for what he has done for you.

3. Prepare to join the new song in heaven. He hath put a new song in my mouth. Psa. 40, 3.

DOCTRINAL SUGGESTIONS: Redemption by Christ's blood.

Realists With the Republican Party.

The Mountsville, W. Va., Commercial, heretofore an independent paper with a Democratic editor (Mr. Crouch, late of the Grafton Eagle), has come out as a square Republican paper. In announcing this change, the Commercial says:

Whatever may have been our associations and friendships in the Democratic party in the past, the spirit shown by that party, or the party leaders during the extra session of Congress and the recent events which have taken place in the South, impel us to abandon that party entirely. As a progressive organization the Democratic party stands indicted before the people with ruinous tendencies of retrogression. As the protector of the rights of citizens and guardian of their personal liberties, it is above all other parties, recreant to its duties in this behalf.

It was our privilege recently to talk with a gentleman from the State of Louisiana, upon the question of bulldozing the negroes in that section. He had been raised in the South, and, as his father had been a prominent politician in that State, his knowledge of the management of the party was of considerable interest to us. Without much effort we succeeded in getting from this young man a true statement of the character of the means used in that section to prevent an honest expression of the colored people at the polls. The charge that the young men in the various districts armed themselves and visited the negro cabins for the purpose of intimidation was not denied, but excused upon the ground that it was the only way they could cripple their political power. These proceedings are known to every one in the South and a profession of ignorance of them by the Democratic leaders in the North is unworthy the attention of honest men. In order to counteract these outrages the cry of military interference is sounded through the country.

If troops at the polls for the purpose of keeping peace and securing a fair election, is unconstitutional, how much more dangerous is that disregard for the rights of suffrage which necessitates the presence of the soldier. This state of affairs is the legitimate fruits of the State Rights doctrine so zealously defended by the Democracy—a doctrine fraught with the most dangerous influence the people of this country could have to deal with.

History bears us out in the statement that the Democratic party in the past has lacked the courage to lead in any great question of national importance, but have held power mainly in consequence of the mistakes of other parties. We are deeply impressed with the idea that a party which trifles with the Union, and is drifting about from one position to another is not the party to whom can be entrusted the destinies of this great Nation, and with this idea in view, we adopt the use of the big "N," and enlist our sympathies and our hopes with the Republican party.

The opinion that Mr. Bayard may be a candidate for the Presidency is held by many persons to whom the wish may be father to the thought. He would make a good candidate for the Democratic party, no doubt. But The Herald reasons justly that Mr. Bayard is weak, because it is the general opinion of politicians that he cannot be nominated. The reasons which that journal gives, however, apply with at least equal force to any other Democratic candidate who can be named. It is urged that there is a great public distrust of the Democratic leaders, even of the best of them, because it seems impossible for them to control their party. The temper of the party, as shown in the extra session of Congress, is one which the people will not in any way tolerate. When any moderate Democrat is mentioned as a possible candidate the question is raised at once whether he will be able to control his party. The fact that Mr. Bayard, and men like him, were unable to control their party at the last session, is cited as a proof that there would be no public confidence in their ability to control it in Executive station. It must be admitted that the argument is perfectly sound. There is a prevailing belief that no Democrat can be trusted, because there is the best reason for believing that the disloyal and reactionary element of that party will continue to control it, no matter whom it may select as its candidate. But these calculations are fatally defective.

They leave out of sight the one man who wants to be unseen now, but will be the most conspicuous of all candidates when the convention assembles. Mr. Tilden wastes no time in killing impossible candidates. He has made an end of Mr. Thurman, and terminated what small chance Mr. Ewing had, and barred the door against Mr. Hendricks. But he has no shot to waste upon the excellent gentleman of Delaware, who will go into convention, if at all, as the representative of the Solid South. The Democrats may as well make up their minds that Mr. Tilden will name the next candidate of the Democratic party. Perhaps he may not see fit to be that candidate, but no one will be nominated without his assent. The entire delegation from this State he has captured in advance, and there is little chance that he will consent to any arrangement by which that delegation, or any part of it, can be secured from his rivals. New York is the State which the Democratic party must have. That same fatal necessity has determined several of its nominations already. But it will not cease to exist until the Democratic party has a firm foothold at the North, and ceases to depend upon the Solid South for its electoral votes. With New York, as matters stand, the Solid South can hope to win without that State, it cannot hope. In complete possession of New York Mr. Tilden calmly sits, and the party will be forced to come to him for any chance of success.—N. Y. Tribune.

In view of the recent Indian troubles, and the interest manifested at present on the Indian question generally, the forthcoming report of Secretary Schurz is regarded as of the greatest importance. Those who are in a position to know say that the document will contain the clearest, soundest and most comprehensive presentation of the Indian question that has yet emanated from the Interior Department. The visit of Secretary Schurz to the principal Indian tribes during the last summer was undertaken solely for the purpose of familiarizing himself with the practical working of our Indian policy, and the truth of his labors will unquestionably appear in his report. Among the principal recommendations which it is understood Mr. Schurz will make to Congress is the passage of a general law enabling every head of an Indian family, in both the civilized and uncivilized tribes, to locate 160 or 320 acres of land upon his reservation, the title in fee simple to be secured to him and his heirs only after a continuous residence thereon of twenty-five years, during which period the land cannot be mortgaged or disposed of. The Secretary's plan also includes the sale of surplus lands and the investment of the proceeds for the benefit of the tribes to which they belong. The object sought to be accomplished is not to throw the Indian reservations open to immigration, but to enable the Indians to prepare to meet immigration when it begins, as it inevitably must sooner or later. The position of the administration (and necessarily of Secretary Schurz) respecting the Indian Territory is that our treaties with the tribes inhabiting that country shall be faithfully fulfilled. Accordingly, it may be regarded as certain that all schemes looking to the opening of that territory to settlement will be certain to meet with the unqualified antagonism of the present executive, who has pledged himself to veto any measure that violates our treaty obligations with those Indians. The Secretary's report will be given to the press representatives here to-morrow night.

Senator Hampton's recent speech at the Abbeville, S. C., fair in which he counseled better treatment of the negroes, and more conservative action in politics generally, appears to have been unfavorably received, some of the chivalry swearing roundly against such advice, and

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.

OAKLAND, CALIF. CO., MD.

THREE DAYS.

What shall I have to say upon this day?
O yesterday! thou day for ever dead!
With what strange, fantastic shall I crown thy
head?
Thou sweet day! For rose and rue are near Thou thyself dost bring me heart's ease,
And dark in purple quill, that shed
Rare odors round, warm wood and herbs that red.
My soul with bitterness they all are here,
When to the banquet I was called by thee,
Thou gavest me rose and rue and rue to wear;
Money and shoes omitted in the end,
Of roses which I could not part for me;
Thy throne, thy banquet, thou dost bid me share.
On crinoids and heavenly manna had me sup,
Thou art no dreamer, O thou stern today!
Thou dost bid me to the banquet of the wine,
An armed knight in armor, and a slave,
It is not time to sleep by the way,
Through all the summer flowers be free.
Thou dost bid me to the banquet of the wine,
And every day for thee, and though fair
stars shine,
Never yet forgot, with footstep light as air,
So, and a vision of the hill of more,
Fresh on the radiant morning, all around
By lightest touch of sorrow or care
Thou dost bid me to the banquet of the wine,
By snowy wings of hope and faith imbued,
O fair tomorrow! thou dost bid me to the banquet
of the wine,
Art thou not keeping for us somewhere still?
The banks of promise that have never blown;
The tender lip that we have never kissed,
The song whose high, sweet strain enchants our skill?
The eyes whose light life lath never knows.
—John G. P. Davis, in Lippincott's Magazine for December.

UP THE RIVER WITH A LUNATIC.

An English story.
All Dixon, Tom Giffard and I had gone up the river, camping out; we had done our second day's work. It was early morning on the third day, glorious weather. We were in the boat, getting the steering lines in order; Giffard and Dixon were on the bank, talking to Dr. Rawle. As I understood it the doctor was at the head of a private asylum for lunatics. He had been visiting a constitutional meeting he happened to fall in with as just as we were sitting down to our open-air breakfast; the chance meeting led to Giffard inviting him to share our gypsy meal. He did.
He was a pleasant fellow, and he was not too young. I liked him exceedingly. We talked of things in general, and of lunatics in particular. Something led to his mentioning—I think it was speaking of the cunning of a certain class of lunatics, and the difficulty of keeping them within four walls—the fact that one of his inmates had escaped a day or two previously, and had not yet been retaken. This was the more singular, as it was certain he had not gone for years, and search had been made for him in every direction.
As Giffard and Dixon were saying good-bye, preparatory to getting into the boat, the doctor laughingly said:
"Should you happen to come across him, I shall consider you have done me a good turn, and I will be glad to bring him back safe and sound. He's a man of forty-four or five, tall and bony, iron-gray hair, and has a habit of showing his teeth and winking his left eye. Don't look out for a raving lunatic on most points he's as right as you and I. He's wrong on two things. Whatever you do, don't let him lose his temper; for whenever he does, though ever so slightly, he invariably goes in for murder—he's all done for two keepers already. And don't talk to him of England and Englishmen; for if he should get upon his native land, he will favor you with some observations which will make you open your eyes."
We laughed. Alf and Tom shook hands with him and got into the boat.
We promised him if we should happen to meet him we would certainly see him returned to custody. Alf stood up and shook his hand to the doctor, and then last good-bye, and left the doctor standing on the shore.
It was a beautiful morning. The river was delicious, clear as crystal; we could see the bottom, and every stone and pebble on it. There was a gentle breeze, fanning the surface of the waters into a ripple. We lit our pipes and took it easily. I am a good bit of a traveler, know many lovely nooks and crannies in foreign lands; I have lived abroad as much as at home, but I will match the higher reaches of our own Father Thames for beauty and for charm against any scenery in Europe. And on an early summer morning, after a spell of glorious weather, it is in all its prime, the water so cool, so clear; the banks so green, so charming; the stately trees on either side; the mansions seen over the meadows, or peeping out among the trees. You may choose your Rhine, Garda, or your Maggiore, or your golden Bay of Naples, but leave Cookham and old Father Thames to me.
Presumably, we had come for river beauties and camping out, presumably,
but as a matter of fact there was a young lady lived not so far ahead,
a mutual friend, Lillian Travers. Separately and jointly we had a high opinion of Miss Travers, not only of her beauty, but of other things as well; and having come so far, we hoped we should not have to return until at least we had a peep at her. Unfortunately, though we knew Miss Travers, we had no acquaintance with Mr. Travers, and no Mrs. We had met the young lady at several dances and such like; but on each occasion she was accompanied by Mr. Travers.
Apparently Mr. Travers was not a party man. But Lillian had promised to introduce us to him whenever she got a chance, and we were not unhelpful she would get that chance
now. So you see that little excursion riverward had more in it than met the eye.
We went lazily on, just dipping the oars in and out, smoking, watching the smoke curling through the clear air.
All thoughts of the doctor and of his parting words had gone from our minds; we talked little, and that little was of Lillian and the chances of our meeting. We had gone two or three hundred yards; we were close to the shore; Alf could almost reach it by stretching out his arm. We were dreaming and lazily, when suddenly some one stepped out from among the trees. He was close to us—not a dozen feet away.

He was a tall man, rather over than under six feet. He was dressed in a dark brown suit of Oxford mixture; he had a stick in his hand, wore a billy-cock hat, and his coat was buttoned right up to the throat. He had light whiskers, a heavy drooping mustache, and hair unusually long, iron-gray in color. He might be a soldier retired from his profession, or an artist out painting; he certainly looked a gentleman.
We were passing on when he raised his stick, and shouted out: "Stop!"
It was a regular shout, as though we were about half a mile from him. We stopped, although it was an unusual method of calling attention. He said, in a free, easy style of asking a question, "Gentlemen," he said, still at the top of his voice, "I should be obliged if you could give me a seat. I have a long way to go, and I am tired."
We looked at him and at each other.
It was a free, easy style of asking a favor, but he seemed a gentleman, and and elderly one, too.
"I am afraid, sir," said Alf, "that we have hardly room. She is only built for three."
"O, that doesn't matter," he said;
"you can put me anywhere, or I'll take an oar for one of you."
I was on the point of advising a point-blank refusal, not appreciating his handsome manner, but Alf thought differ-ently.
"All right," said he; "we don't mind, if you don't. Steer her in Jack." I steered her in. No soon were we near the shore, than quite unexpectedly he stepped almost on my toes, rocking
the boat from side to side.
"Hang it!" I said; "take care or you'll have us over."
"What if I do?" he returned, "I'll only be a swim, and who minds a swim in weather like this?"
We stared at him; the coolness, not to say impertinence, of the remark, was amazing. Begging a seat in our boat, knowing it was full, and then telling us he didn't care if he spilt us into the river! He sent himself by me, crushing the boat seat-sawing again, crushing me with your leave, or by your leave, took the steering lines from my hands
and slipped them over his shoulders.
"Excuse me," I said, making a snatch
at them; "but if you'll allow me."
"Not at all," he said, "I always like something to do, and I expect you've had enough of it."
His coolness was amusing; he was impenetrable. I know I for one regretted we were such males as to have had anything to do with him. We waited in silence a moment or two.
"Come," said he, "when are you going to start?"
"Perhaps," said Alf, a bit nettled,
"as you're in our boat a self-invited guest, you'll let us choose our own time."
The stranger said nothing; he sat stolid and silent. Tom and Alf set off rowing; the stranger steered right across the stream.
"Where are you going?" said Alf.
"Now come," he said, "don't be foolish; we know all about it."
The other turned on him like a flash of lightning. "What do you mean?"
But Tom was too quick for him; he was on the other side and took his arm.
"Come," he said, "don't let's have a row."
The stranger raised himself to his full height and shook off Tom with ease.
He then sat down and sprang onto the half stile. Tom and Alf went down like nincompoes. But my blood was up. I am pretty strong. He was old enough to be my father; but I found my match, and more. I was like a baby in my arms; he lifted me clean off my feet and threw me into the river. It was a splendid exhibition of strength.
Tom and Alf, finding their feet, made for him together, and scrambling up as best they could, followed him. You know the man of old; he was a gentleman stepped out from the crowd.
"There is some mistake," he said.
"This gentleman is Mr. Travers, of Tollhurst Hall."
You could have knocked out all three down with a feather. I do believe.
Could it be possible? Could we have been such consummate idiots as to have mistaken a sane man for a lunatic? And that man was Lillian Travers' father!
I could have shrunk into my boots. I could have run away and hid myself in bed. To think that I should have dogged and watched, and insulted, and assaulted the man of all others in whose good looks we wished to stand—Lillian Travers' father! Never did three men look such fools as we did then. We were so confoundingly in earnest about it, that was the worst of all. I don't care what you say; you must think it a first-rate joke, but he must have been an eccentric sort of elderly gentleman.
If he had behaved sensibly, if he had made one sensible remark, he would have rendered our apologies as best we could to the man we had so in-sulted; but he treated us and them with the loftiest scorn; and we got one after another into the boat amid the gibes
and jeers of an unsympathetic crowd.
And as we moved from the wretched
place as fast as our oars would take us, we each in our secret heart declared that we would never forget our adventure up the river with a lunatic.
And we haven't. From that day to this I have never seen Lillian Travers, nor do I wish to.

A Russian Romance.
Count Scheremetieff, a descendant of one of the most ancient Boyard families, possessed more than 100,000 male souls, as serfs were then called in Russia, the women not being counted either in census or tax lists. Among these serfs there were many who had been allowed to go into business for themselves. Some of these had made fortu-nates, others had even become millionaires. The conditions of the Count's inheritance forbade his selling any male serf his freedom. Among this number there was one who had established himself at Riga and was at the head of a great banking house of that city—an ancient house which had existed under German control for a century, and was well known and highly respected in all the European cities.
The banker, who had almost dis-
paired of obtaining his own freedom, journayed every year to St. Petersburg for the sake of his children. The freedom of the daughter was cheerfully granted, for Count Scheremetieff was of those chivalrous noblemen whose motto was noblesse oblige. There are many such in Russia, the descendants of the old reigning houses of the Empire. These nobles lent an almost unanimous support to the petition of Alexander II. for the emancipation of the serfs, although the carrying out of the measure cost a large share of their fortunes.
Upon the banker's last visit to St.
Petersburg, he had offered the Count half a million rubles for the freedom of his sons. The Count had refused as usual, but he had allowed the banker great attention, inviting him to dine at his house, where he was treated as a peer by the elite of the Russian nobility.
A few months later, early in the spring, he returned sad and despairing to St. Petersburg. His eldest son having been sent to England on business connected with his house, had become acquainted with the daughter of a leading manufacturer. The young people were deeply in love, but under existing circumstances, they could not marry.
The banker resolved, if necessary, to secure the whole fortune to purchase the freedom of his eldest son. Upon his arrival he found the Gulf of Finland blockaded with ice, thus shutting off all communication with the interior.
Knowing the Count's extreme liking for oysters, he had purchased a keg on the route and took them along with him. The Count had some friends to breakfast, but the delicacy he most eured for was lacking, and loud wails arose from him and his guests in response. In the midst of the general lamentation our banker entered, and the Count invited him to stay to breakfast.
"You have come again with that everlasting fish," said the Count.
"I remember hearing you say that it was in my father's lifetime, when I was but a child. You don't know what a chance for gaining your freedom has just been opened to you, but you have missed it. As I have my oysters, I will give you a taste of them. Eat and argue with him or answer him, and would give him heirs. He was genuinely attached to her, and if he knew nothing about her, and had no premonition
of Count Neipperg, it was all the better for him. She was quite taken by storm with him, and for a while the novelty of being loved by an agreeable man had always considered him—
was agreeable to her. But his tumultuous glory was quite too much for the delicacy of such a human small being
as the Empress, and she was doubtless relieved when the indignant son left
his body at Longwood, and she was free
to follow her ignominious little heart and marry Neipperg."
Josephine could have had her revenge if she could have foreseen the course of history for even a few years.
It is she, and not the pretty Austrian,
who will be known forever as the wife
of Napoleon. It is her statue that rises
in marble in the public places of Paris.
It is her name and those of her children that mark the great avenues of
the metropolis—Avenue Josephine, La
Reine Hortense, Boulevard du Prince
Eugene. Though she was used to presiding from a throne to make room for Maria Louisa, it was her children—the children of the exiled tenant—should become the tenants
of palaces, and not those of her rivals.
The Duke of Leuchtenberg, a first
youth of inglorious pleasure, and was
to die before his prime, and leave no
son to inherit his claims to empire;
while the Beauharnais line was to stretch out like the swarms of kings
by the Throne of Cavour to his vision. Eugene, her heroic son, after the fall of the Napoleons, returned to the court of his father-in-law, the King
of Bavaria, and became Prince of Eichstadt, Duke of Leuchtenberg, and first nobleman of the kingdom. His daughter,
united to the son of Bernadotte, became Queen of Sweden; another became a princess of Hohenzollern, and a third Empress of Brazil. His oldest son won the hand of the Queen of Portugal, and
the younger married a daughter of the Czar Nicholas of Russia. And whatever doubt might be thrown on the purity of the Napoleonic descent by which the Emperor Napoleon III. claimed
the throne, he was unquestionably
the son of Hortense, and was Beauharnais and Tascher-la-Pagerie
beyond challenge. The grandson of Josephine, Louis Napoleon, ruled
France in peace and with a sort of splendor for the space of twenty-two years, the period of the first Napoleon's reign, counting Consulate and Empire together, was but fifteen—
though so powerful was his personal magnetism made by the uncle, and so vague was the individual character of the nephew, that the shorter reign
seems like an age, and the longer like an episode.—Harper's Magazine for December.

"O, I will save you the trouble," said the banker, and, taking a piece of white chalk from his pocket, he wrote the following agreement upon the stove
of the oyster keg:
"I, the undersigned, in consideration of a stated remuneration, hereby declare my serf, M. N., and family, residents of Riga, free henceforth and forever. Signed in the presence of the witnesses:—
"Now," he added, presenting the chalk and stove to the Count, "your honor and those gentlemen will do me
the favor to sign this document, while I, for the last time, discharge my office of serf, and proceed to open the oysters."
The Count put a good face on a bad matter; he signed, and the guests followed him. Then the gentlemen shook hands with the banker, and congratulated him on his good fortune. But the Count would not allow his former serf to play the role of servant, he compelled him to take a seat at the table.
The deacons were filled with champagne, after they had all drunk to the health of the now free citizen, the gentlemen turned with great zest to the oysters, which were soon finished.
The writer of this sketch has himself seen the original decree of emancipa-tion written with chalk upon the oyster keg, enclosed in a gold frame it occupies the place of honor among the many fine pictures in the banker's drawing-room. There it will always hang, reminding the wealthy and honorable family of those old days of serfdom, which, God be praised, are now over.—From a Volume of Russian Sketches, written by a Russian.

Napoleon's Marriage.
The marriages of the Bonapartes play an important part in the story of their fortunes, and none of them were so significant and important as those of the first Napoleon, who, like him, looked upon the world as made for him, and upon laws merely as something which were good for him to impose upon others, it must have appeared that his two wives were admirably planned for his use. Josephine de Beauharnais was an ideal wife for a young and rising man of genius. She had everything which would appeal to a fancy like his, at once selfish and passionate. She had beauty, rank, the power of pleasing, and a certain in-dole grace that promised an obedience reasonably free from jealousy. Up to the time that he mounted the imperial throne and seated her by his side, she was all that a man could desire, and without ambition could desire. But after the marvelous victory of Wagram had opened up to his fevered imagination still wider perspectives of domination, he looked for another style of wife, and he found her in Maria Louisa of Austria. Her blonde beauty, formed of pink and white color and roundly curving lines and the golden gloss of a child's hair, appealed strongly to his jaded taste. He was not old, but, as his back, "you ages fast
upon the field of battle," and he wanted
some such solace as this soft, unimpeccable beauty (somebody has called it the Alderney style of prettiness) in his home, if such a word may be used of the families. Besides, the doubtless felt that an Emperor should have a young girl who had a hundred monarchs for her ancestors, and yet she would be gentle and obedient, and not argue with him or answer him, and
would give him heirs. He was genuinely attached to her, and if he knew
nothing about her, and had no premonition
of Count Neipperg, it was all the better
for him. She was quite taken by storm with him, and for a while the
novelty of being loved by an agree-
able man had always considered him—
was agreeable to her. But his tumult-
uous glory was quite too much for the
delicacy of such a human small being
as the Empress, and she was doubtless
relieved when the indignant son left
his body at Longwood, and she was free
to follow her ignominious little heart and
marry Neipperg.
Josephine could have had her revenge if she could have foreseen the
course of history for even a few years.
It is she, and not the pretty Austrian,
who will be known forever as the wife
of Napoleon. It is her statue that rises
in marble in the public places of Paris.
It is her name and those of her children that mark the great avenues of
the metropolis—Avenue Josephine, La
Reine Hortense, Boulevard du Prince
Eugene. Though she was used to presiding from a throne to make room for Maria Louisa, it was her children—the children of the exiled tenan-
t—should become the tenants
of palaces, and not those of her rivals.
The Duke of Leuchtenberg, a first
youth of inglorious pleasure, and was
to die before his prime, and leave no
son to inherit his claims to empire;
while the Beauharnais line was to
stretch out like the swarms of kings
by the Throne of Cavour to his vision. Eugene, her heroic son, after
the fall of the Napoleons, returned to the court of his father-in-law, the King
of Bavaria, and became Prince of Eich-
stadt, Duke of Leuchtenberg, and first
nobleman of the kingdom. His daughter,
united to the son of Bernadotte, became
Queen of Sweden; another became a
princess of Hohenzollern, and a third Empress of Brazil. His oldest son won
the hand of the Queen of Portugal, and
the younger married a daughter of the Czar Nicholas of Russia. And whatever doubt might be thrown on the purity of the Napoleonic descent by
which the Emperor Napoleon III. claimed
the throne, he was unquestionably
the son of Hortense, and was Beauharnais and Tascher-la-Pagerie
beyond challenge. The grandson of
Josephine, Louis Napoleon, ruled
France in peace and with a sort of
splendor for the space of twenty-two years, the period of the first Napoleon's reign, counting Consulate and Empire together, was but fifteen—
though so powerful was his personal
magnetism made by the uncle, and so
vague was the individual character of
the nephew, that the shorter reign
seems like an age, and the longer like
an episode.—Harper's Magazine for December.

How MANY votes does the barber's pole?

VARIETIES.
—A cow is a boss investment.
—Rambolling notes—bank bills.
—A compound word—rum-punch.—
Boston Post.
—A dentist's sign—Drawing, music and dancing.
—A crooked politician never votes
the straight ticket.
—A go-as-you-please race—the women.—McGregor News.
—The more butter goes down the faster the price goes up.—Free Press.
—No man is obliged to put up with a hotel keeper he doesn't like.—Boston Post.
—On a capital of $900,000 the cotton mills of Augusta, Ga., pay a dividend of twenty-eight per cent.
—A North Carolina man married his cousin and afterward died. His father married the son's widow.
—Americans wear more watches than any other nation. We have the system of tick to a perfection in this country.
—The New Orleans Picayune says that bald-headed men are like kind words, because kind words never dry.
—When you send a communication to a newspaper always tell the editor
he need not publish it if he doesn't want to.
—Only one year more to Presidential election. How the four seasons of the year do chase each other into the dim closets of the past.—Free Press.
—A Nebraska monument to a horse chief is simply a stake at the head of a grave and a sign reading: "It would have been cheaper for him to go afoot."
—How quickly flows the river to the sea, yet it always gets there. This is a good point to remember when you are trying to rush things.—New Haven Register.
—Advice to bachelors: Never marry a woman unless she is so rich that you would marry her if she were ugly and so handsome that you would marry her if she were poor.
—The person who devotes his time to the benefit of mankind in this world, without receiving a cent's reward, when he dies will receive the reward of ascent.
—Whitwell Times.
—It is not strange that writers sometimes get puzzled in their choice between "that," "which," and "who."
Relatives are more or less troublesome.—Transcript.
—A Philadelphia woman attempted suicide by drinking coal oil, but as she failed to apply a lighted match to her mouth the affair proved a dismal failure.—Philadelphia Chronicle.
—If boy's boots were made of cast iron, covered with tar and gravel, and then painted four coats and varnished, mothers would still have cause to wonder how on earth "that boy" got his feet soaping wet.
—Jonas Saunders, of Indiana, tied a cow's legs to keep her from kicking over the milk pail, and when she tried to kick she fell over and broke his back. There is such a thing as being too smart.—Free Press.
—The boy who doesn't leap over seven litching posts, kick a lame dog, stamp a handful of navy beans in front of every grocery store, knock over a box or two and work a handle of every pump on the sidewalk on his way home from school, is either lazy or doesn't feel well.—Kosok's Utah City.
—Years and years ago it used to be said that a girl might be willing to be kissed when she voluntarily put a boy's arm over her head. This was true, for hundreds of pretty girls are now wearing the little round Derby hats, and looking well under them.—New Orleans Picayune.
—A young lady who had been married a little over a year wrote her mother-in-law: "I have the dearest little cottage in the world, ornamented with the most charming little creepers you ever saw."
The old man read the letter and exclaimed: "Twins, by thunder!"—Ko-kuk's Constitution.
—A Denver girl, for diversion, not only engaged herself to marry two men, but appointed the same day, hour, and place for a secret wedding with each.
The suitors were somewhat disconcerted by each other's presence, as well as by the girl's absence, but they finally came to an amicable understanding to despise her.
—Says the Cincinnati Commercial:
"This is the season for duck hunting.
Young men will take notice. The ducks that are most worn down on the left elbow are those with dark hair and black eyes. But there are some ducks with large blue eyes and golden hair that are quite too awfully magnificent."
—An Arizona Judge has just shown his appreciation of modern improvements in fire-arms by shooting and killing an editor. The editor's partner immediately shot the magistrate, and was himself waylaid and extinguished
the same night by some parties unknown. The total bag for the day's sport was a Judge and two editors.
Altogether it was a great day for Arizona.
—When little Bob asked his sister's beau for a cigar, his future brother-in-law snubbed him with the remark:
"Young man, a strap would do you more good." Next night Bob's sister and her young man got their hands, chins, and clothes smeared with coal
tar while lingering at the front gate, and little Bob, when questioned on the subject, said he couldn't tell a lie—"It must have been a tramp."—Puck.
The strangest news coming from Germany—even stranger than that the effeminate Viennese should welcome the man who conquered them at Konig-gratz—is that a learned doctor has discovered a means of dyeing human eyes any color he likes, not only without injury to the delicate orbs, but, as he asserts, with positive advantage to the powers of sight. He cannot only give fair ladies eyes black as night or blue as orient skies by day, but he can turn them out in hue of silver or of gold.
He says golden eyes are extremely becoming. Nothing goes down without a grand name; therefore the German doctor calls his discovery "Ocular Transmutation." He declares himself quite ready to guarantee success and harmlessness in the operation.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1 50
Six months, 75
IN ADVANCE.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, 50 cents per square of 10 lines;
50 cents per square for each additional insertion.
Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, DEC. 6, 1879.

Hon. Wm. G. Le Duc, Commissioner of Agriculture, will please accept our thanks for a copy of his report for 1878.

The Democratic Congressional Executive committee has begun an energetic search for a policy. A kingdom for a policy, is their cry.

Democratic talk in Washington over the results of the October and November elections is about as animated as evidence in a coroner's inquest; but no opinions are expressed as to the condition of the corpse.

Hurd says Ewing did it; Ewing says it all on Thurman; Thurman says it was Tilden; Tilden says it was the extra session, and Warner holds the bloody shirt responsible. Out of the mouths of many witnesses is the truth ascertained.

Jim Barksdale, who murdered Capt. Dixon, of Yazoo, Miss., by shooting him in the back to dispose of a rival candidate, has been elected Sheriff by the regular Democrats of that county. He is under bail for the killing of Dixon, and can now summon the Grand Jury to hear the case and Petit Jurors to try him should he be indicted. "Nice country to live in."

The second session of the Forty-sixth Congress convened at noon Monday, with a quorum in both houses. In the Senate, 55 out of 76 Senators, and in the House, 232 out of 287 members responded to the roll call. In the Senate, Mr. Ferry, of Michigan, briefly announced the death of his late colleague, Hon. Zachariah Chandler, and in the house the newly elected members from California, and Hon. Waldo C. Hutchins, of the twelfth district of New York, were sworn in.

The Democratic leaders are said to be not so strongly in favor of renewing war on the Administration on the re-opening of Congress as they were at the close of the extra session. That extra session did great work for the Republicans in the fall campaign, and it would do the same party good service if the Democratic programme should be carried out to the letter, but it does look as if the leaders of the faithful would be wiser to take the back track. The nearer they get to the Republican platform the better their chances for success next year.

The Democratic delegate elections held in Philadelphia Tuesday were attended with much disorder. In the fifth ward a convention was broken up by a mob from the fourth ward, and three men were shot, one of whom, Bernard Riley, died on the way to the hospital. Thomas J. Ryan and George Trenwith was subsequently admitted to bail, but Ryan was held without bail. Charles McManus, suspected of firing the fatal shot, has not been arrested. Fighting also occurred in the fourth and fourteenth wards. In the latter ward one man was badly injured, and in the fourth ward Michael Lyons was shot in the hand.

Georgia is to-day the most energetic and progressive of the Southern States, and its credit is not surpassed by any other commonwealth in the Union. It is in this state that the spirit of revolt against Bourbon rule is most strongly manifested. The movement in favor of Grant as a Southern candidate is openly advocated. A correspondent of the New York Times, writing from Atlanta, enumerates a number of distinguished Georgians who have publicly declared themselves in favor of Grant, among them being Mr. Edgar Thompson, a son-in-law of Senator Hill; ex-Governor Smith, one of the shrewdest politicians in the state, and Charles Burke, of the Gate City Guards, whose recent trip through the North has doubtless opened his eyes to the true sentiments of our people. He also reports the organization of a Grant club at Atlanta, composed of one hundred active Democrats, and intimates that there is now not a single national issue on which Georgia may be called a "solid" state.

The President's Message.

Annual message of President Hayes begins by congratulating the body upon the success of the financial operations of the treasury and their good effects upon the business of the country. The resumé is not materially different from the facts and figures presented in the reports of the Secretary of the Treasury. The public credit has been as greatly benefited by resumption as the general business of the country and the President thinks that all the remaining 5 per cent. and 6 per cent. securities of the government can be refunded in 4 per cent. bonds thus effecting a further reduction of $11,000,000 in annual interest.

The silver dollars coined under the recent acts of Congress now amount to $45,000,850, of which $32,300,311 still remain in the treasury. Upon the basis of this fact and of the current proposition for unity of action to effect a permanent system for the equality of gold and silver in the exchanges between commercial nations, the President advises Congress to refrain from further experiments with the coinage and to suspend the coinage of silver dollars as now ordered by law.

He says that "the retirement from circulation of United States notes, with the capacity of legal-tender in private contracts, is a step to be taken in our progress towards a safe and stable currency, which should be accepted as the policy and duty of the government and the interest and security of the people." The President expresses it as his "firm conviction" that the issue of legal-tender paper money on the credit and authority of the government, except in extreme emergency, "is without warrant in the constitution and a violation of sound financial principles." He therefore advocates their retirement and the rigid maintenance of the sinking funds, in order to extinguish the national debt as soon as possible in pursuit of our traditional government policy. If more revenue be needed, it can be easily obtained by duties on tea and coffee.

The President refers to the continued violation of the laws suppressing polygamy by prominent citizens of Utah, and demands the strict enforcement of these laws, which have been decided to be constitutional by the Supreme Court.

He appeals to Congress and the people of the country to unite in bringing general public opinion to bear in favor of the general observance of and respect for the laws enforcing the sanctity of the whole land, and launches into a long and earnest argument in favor of his views about the reform of the civil service, which have several times before been discussed by him. The President reports that considerable and satisfactory progress has already been made in these directions, but he thinks that much remains still to be done. He distinguishes elaborately between offices which are simply executive and administrative and those which are more or less political, deeming it to be eminently proper for the President's official advisers to explain before the people the policy of an administration brought into office by the popular vote, and advocates the providing of just and adequate means for examining candidates for office, so that the worst claimant may be certain of getting the appointment. The President's duties in these particulars are obvious, but he contends that nothing adequate in the premises can be accomplished by him without the co-operation of Congress and the cordate and intelligent support of the people. The resumption of work by the civil service commission is recommended, and an appropriation to that end is urged.

The foreign relations of the government continue peaceful. The difficulty with Great Britain growing out of the Fortine Bay (New Foundland) outrages is being considered by Lord Beaconsfield's government. The fisheries question, only temporarily adjusted by the treaty of Washington, needs to be permanently settled as a whole, and negotiations to that end are now in progress. The message also touches upon the cattle trade restrictions, upon life-saving measures taken by the Dominion government in connection with the commerce of the great lakes, and upon the Australian international shows, recommending an increased appropriation for American exhibits.

The late treaty with Japan, it is expected, will serve a model for other countries. China has expressed willingness to discuss the emigration question with us in a dispassionate way, and negotiations to that end are now pending. Border raids on the Rio Grande frontier have been checked, and our diplomatic intercourse with the United States of Colombia is again restored. This is regarded as especially fortunate in view of the prominence which has just been attained by the interoceanic canal project. Our increasing trade with Mexico and South America suggests to the Presidency the expediency of Congress providing means for regular and more frequent mail communication with those countries.

Additional legislation is claimed to be needed for the protection of the rights of people in Alaska, and a form of territorial government is recommended there. The President, after commenting upon the operations of the army and navy during the year, and showing that the Department of Justice has been obstructed by the lack of appropriations, and that the business of the Supreme Court is so largely in arrears as to demand the creation of intermediate courts and the appointment of additional circuit judges, considers with approval the propositions of the Postmaster-General in regard to increased facilities for foreign and domestic mail service.

The Indian problem is fully treated of in the message, and the President recommends specifically to Congress the suggestions of Secretary Schurz and Commissioner Hay upon this subject, which have already been explained. He says that, while the Executive is determined to protect the Indians in their territorial rights, it would be unwise to ignore the fact that organized raids like that against the Cherokee country, which was broken up by Executive proclamation in last April, are liable to be repeated year after year as land gets scarcer and more valuable, and hence the expediency of speedy changes in our Indian policy. At the same time the President deprecates the proposed transfer of the Indians from the Interior to the War Department. —Balto. Sun.

The Next Session.

"It will be a short session," said General Ewing, the other day, "and not an important one as far as general legislation is concerned." The Democracy in Congress is in an embarrassing situation, afraid to move and afraid to keep still. The party has just been signally defeated on the popular vote, and unless it can provoke a revulsion of public feeling it is certain to lose the election upon which depends probably its last hope of ever again controlling the Government of the United States. To do nothing is a confession of judgment; yet what can it do?

A year ago the Democrats laid out for themselves a great deal of work. They proposed to sweep away the election laws, to abolish all the reconstruction measures, to cut down the Army, to overturn the banking system, to flood the country with paper dollars, to readjust the taxes, to override the authority of the President, to "investigate" all manner of supposed frauds, and in particular to examine the circumstances connected with the counting of the electoral votes in 1876. A pretty little they have made of all this. In most things they have been ignominiously failed; and all that they have accomplished has been unmistakably condemned by the people. They forced an extra session in order to carry out their complicated programme of revolution and destruction, and their own organs are now denouncing it as a shameful blunder, which has been of immense advantage to the Republicans. The success of resumption and the return of prosperity have demonstrated the folly of the financial schemes of the Democrats; the fraud investigations have damaged nobody but their own candidate; and the Indians seem to be answering their complaints about the magnitude of the army. Every path they have tried has led to disaster.

And yet a short and idle session will only aggravate their misfortune. The schemes they have begun are too important to be dropped without a word. The plans were announced with such clamor and pressed with such violence—the Democratic party "dedicated" itself with such tremendous energy and solemnity to the great mission of eradicating tyranny, exposing fraud, striking down the bloated capitalist and stuffing the poor man's pocket with flat money, that it will never do to stop short while as yet not one of last year's promises has been fulfilled. If the record of the last two sessions could be wiped out our Democratic friends would be much happier. But there stand several quarto volumes, crammed with the story of folly and mischief making; and if whatever the majority may attempt in Congress this winter, as a prelude to the Presidential campaign, the record will be brought up to thwart and confuse them. They cannot make an issue on fraud; they cannot make an issue on finance; they cannot make an issue on hard times; they cannot make an issue on the Army. Mr. Ewing seems to think that there is nothing left but for the Republicans to help them out of the dilemma by nominating Grant, so that an issue can be made on the third term. A forlorn hope, indeed; but we really can not see anything better. —New York Tribune.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Special Correspondence to The Republican.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 2, 1879.

The town talk is the President's message. It is a document worthy of discussion, and every body endeavored to it the character of one of the ablest State papers for many years. The President shows that he is a very decided man in his opinions and while his language pleases the Republicans it displeases Democrats. The points most talked about are his recommendations touching the retirement of the legal tender circulation, and the protection of every citizen's right to the ballot.

The retirement of the legal tender currency is not a new idea. In fact, it has been recommended by every Secretary of the Treasury for eight or ten years, and the wisest financiers say it will be adopted before long, whether it should be thought best to try it now or not.

The matter of the ballot is a thorn in the Democratic side, and it shows that the President is as stout in his Republicanism as any.

The recommendation that some action be taken to break up polygamy in Utah deserves to be heeded, and it is believed that Congress will take hold of the subject since that Utah will soon apply for admission into the Union. In short, every part of the message is worthy of a careful reading.

In letters just received here Gen. Grant says it may be important for him to come to Washington before starting on his trip to Cuba. He says he has private engagements in New York and Philadelphia which cannot be neglected. This is interpreted to mean his talked of meeting with the European capitalists to make arrangements for pro-secuting the Isthmian Canal enterprise.

The appointment of Ex-Secretary McCrary as Judge, in place of Judge Dillon, is liked on all sides. It is too bad to take out of active politics so good a Republican as he is, however Governor Ramsey of Minnesota, who is to be Mr. McCrary's Successor, is in the city. His appointment is also much liked.

The Democratic majority in Congress doesn't seem to be in any hurry to get to work. In fact, they are rather more timid than last year, about even the appropriation bills, evidently fearing that some rash brethren will propose some dangerous legislation in connection with them. It is clear that many of them have learned cowardice if not wisdom from the late elections.

LOGAN.

Lincoln's Gettysburg Speech.

At the consecration of the National cemetery at Gettysburg, November 19, 1863, President Lincoln spoke as follows:

Four score and seven years ago our forefathers brought forth on this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation, so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battlefield of the war. We are met to dedicate a portion of it as a final resting place of those who gave their lives that the nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

But in a larger sense we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow the ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here have consecrated it, far above our power to add or detract. The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work that they have thus far so nobly carried on. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to the cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that those dead shall not have died in vain, that the nation shall, under God, have a new birth of freedom, and that the government of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

The shooting of Postmaster Nix, of Blackville, S. C., having been followed by the shooting of his brother, we suppose even Democratic journals will now admit that life in that section of the South is not as secure as it might be, and reconciliation not as well established. In such incidents as this they will find the occasion for Senator Hampton's recent words of warning to his fellow-citizens, the utterance of which, as our readers will recall, were received with anything but favor.

When the Democrats in Congress meet in caucus for the first time it will be pleasant to observe the wise and cautious look of intelligence which will illuminate the countenances of the leading statesmen. The brethren have a number of delicate questions to meet and it is well that they should not move forward then with the air of persons who feel that they own the entire world and a few outlying planets. —Baltimore Gazette, Democrat.

No Backing Down in Mr. Tilden.

A New York letter says Congressman Blackburn, of Kentucky, was in that city several days last week, and tried his hand at healing the breach between the Tilden and Kelly factions in the interest of the party at large, but so far as can be ascertained with as little encouragement as rewarded the previous endeavors of other prominent Democrats from other States. The trouble in the way of adjustment is the conditions which one faction is seeking to impose upon the other. Mr. Kelly, it is understood, is willing at any moment, for the sake of peace, to resign his position as Tammany leader, in order to bring that organization into accord with the rest of the party, provided Governor Tilden will give some authoritative assurance that he is not again a candidate for the presidency. His response to all such overtures is said to be substantially this: "I have nothing to do with John Kelly or Tammany Hall, and I must peremptorily decline to enter into any negotiations on their behalf. My cause is the cause of the people of the United States, and, as that cause ought in justice and equity to be tried over again at the polls, it is not for any local political or for any local faction, meanwhile, to stand in the way of the Democracy of the nation carrying their appeal from the findings of the electoral commission to the ballot-box."

AN EXTRACT FROM TURNER'S REPLY TO INGERSOLL'S ORATION.

"Must this valuable volume—this venerable and youthful volume—this oracle from the life-land to the death island, frosted over with the gray hair of centuries of time, glory-crowned and grace-enriching, written with the finger of God on the beaming brow of a frowning Sinai in tables of stone—this book of blessing, composed during the rolling cycles of yore, little by little, facts growing upon and interlinking in facts, and finished amid the splendors of the awe-inspiring apocalypse—this wonderful work whose words are winged with heaven's thunder-dealing hands in bolts invisible—this precious production of holy inspiration, touching in its tenderness, truthful in its teaching, peculiar in its promises, whose footprints can be traced in the crumpled dust of the stuporous greatness of a ruin-wrecked world—must this glorious old Bible, the hope-bringer of home-happiness and spiritual satisfaction, fly the stage in cowardly agility before the gorgeous diction and empty tongsiness of such a sacrilegious speaker as Col. Robert G. Ingersoll? No, a thousand times no."

Despatches from Colorado from day to day reiterate the statement that the Mormons are at the bottom of our present troubles with the Utes; that they instigated the first revolt against Agent Meeker, the attack upon Thornburgh's band, have since caused the misunderstandings which have made the Adams peace commission a failure. All this may be true, but the public has not yet been given an iota of evidence bearing upon the question. It has all been a single assertion on the part of some body whose identity is veiled in mystery. The Mormons have enough sins leaning upon their shoulders already. If there is any evidence against them in this matter it should be brought out. If not, they should be vindicated of the charge of inciting rebellion. It took very much as if the Utes were using the charge to shield their own guilt.

The Chinese in California seem to understand that they must go, notwithstanding the veto of the anti-Chinese bill. A steamer recently took 301 from San Francisco to Hong Kong, and while the Chinese who immigrated during the year ending November 1, 1879, numbered 6,128, the emigrants numbered 8,746, the excess of departures over arrivals being 2,618. It is estimated that there are now on the Pacific coast about 60,000 Chinamen, while at the beginning of the Chinese agitation there were over 100,000, and the total number of Chinese arrivals in this country during the last twenty years is 237,000. It is quite evident from this that no legislation on the subject is needed. Simple agitation is doing its work rapidly enough.

Ex-Governor Vance, of North Carolina said to a newspaper correspondent the other day: "The South love Grant! Love the devil. For him we have only the bitterest hatred. This policy of reconstruction should be punished in hell by flames of which will not long be withheld from the tyrant. He was a military despot, without a spark of principle; without knowledge of civil government or honesty in his ignorance thereof, utterly unfit to preside over the United States as any man they could have selected. The South will remember him with curses as long as memory stands. We would support Conkling rather than Grant."

FINANCIAL TOPICS.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—The Senate Committee on Finance will give early attention to the Warner Silver bill, which passed the House at the last session. A majority of the committee was favorable to this measure last summer, but the result of the fall elections may have effected a change, and perhaps Senator Bayard, instead of resigning the chairmanship of the committee, as he threatened to do last session, will lead his party in its financial policy, and may yet succeed in defeating this bill. The same committee have before them a bill to provide for the exchange of trade dollars for standard silver dollars. This bill also passed the House, and is now in the same condition as the Warner bill. It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be exchanged at the treasury and at all sub-treasuries legal-tender dollars for trade dollars at par and receive the latter into standard dollars. It also provides that the trade dollars thus received shall not be counted as part of the silver coinage required by the act remonetizing the silver dollar, and excludes from the exchange trade dollars that have been "chipped" or restamped for circulation in China or other foreign countries. If the friends of this bill would consent to amend it by providing that the amount of trade dollars thus exchanged should be counted as part of the coinage required by the act of February 25, 1875, it would probably be passed without serious opposition.

A colonization association has been formed in New York for the purpose of establishing a colony from the East in the Cumberland plateau in East Tennessee. It is to be conducted on the co-operative plan; and the association is not only to purchase the land, but provide the necessary farming implements, buildings and stock, so that the colonists will not be compelled to undergo the privations and experience the vicissitudes which too often attend the opening up of new settlements. The colonists, on their part, are to repay these advances of capital out of the product of their labor, receiving as fast as they do so a clear title to their property; and as but a low rate of interest will be exacted, the conditions are unusually favorable for a prosperous beginning. One of the features of the colony will be a co-operative store, an institution which has come greatly into favor among the English working classes, and if properly managed ought to be equally successful here. This method of colonization commands itself to public attention as one easily put in operation, and much more likely to produce great results than the haphazard modes which Western colonization ordinarily follows. The region which has been selected for the experiment, if not as highly productive as the prairies of Kansas or Nebraska, is one of the best grass and grain-growing countries east of the Mississippi, and it has the great advantage of proximity to Northern, Southern and Eastern markets. If frugality and industry will produce prosperity anywhere, these essential elements of successful farming will do it in the fertile uplands of East Tennessee.

A Southern member of Congress is said to have been responsible for the following words in favor of Grant as candidate for President:

The people of the South are really tired of this bitter controversy between the two sections, and many of them are disposed to believe that the only way immediately and permanently to destroy sectionalism is to elect Gen. Grant. Since the recent elections in several Northern States we fear that a Democratic President cannot be chosen next year, and if a Republican must be chosen we prefer Grant.

One of the ugliest bills left over from the extra session that has brought such woe and disaster upon the Democratic party is one to prohibit the transfer of cases from State to Federal Courts, and its real intent is to allow the murder of Government officers with impunity. To leave the bill as it is would be equivalent to a confession of its infamous purposes when introduced; to force its passage would be a great blunder on the eve of a Presidential campaign.

The Democratic investigators of Senator Kellogg find themselves as badly defeated in New Orleans as they were in Washington. If they had determined to oust Kellogg, it better have been done without the investigation, which has shown that Spooford has not the slightest title to Kellogg's seat.

If there is one thing more than another that will help on the business boom and fill the land with prosperity it is the certainty that the Republicans will elect their next President, which is the best guarantee the people could have of national affairs being conducted with honesty and brains.

LOCAL NEWS.

—Mrs. Jane Boughner is visiting in Oakland.

—We call attention to the new advertisements in this issue.

—Messrs. W. C. Davis and Arthur Townsend returned to Morgantown Monday last.

—Col. W. H. Lowdermilk has removed from Cumberland to Washington with his family.

—The sidewalks in Oakland are in a bad condition. In some places they are really dangerous.

—200 sacks G. A. Salt for sale at Wm. P. Totten's Cheap Cash Store, Oakland, Md. a26-11.

—All persons interested will find the corrected time table of the B. & O. R. R. on our eight page.

—The Garrett Literary Society meets to-night (Saturday) at 7 o'clock. All are invited.

—About 50 members of Captain Wardwell's company were sworn in on Saturday night.

—$20,000 to loan on first-class commercial paper. Apply to D. E. Offutt. oct18-11.

—Daniel Smith, Esq., of Johns-town, this county, has been seriously ill. Hopes are now entertained of his recovery.

—A very pleasant gathering of young ladies and gentlemen was held at Mr. John M. Davis' Thursday evening of last week.

—Miss Ella Ison, who has been visiting in Oakland, W. Va., returned to Clarkburg, W. Va., accompanied by Miss Willie L. Robinson, of the former place.

—The Messrs. H. G. Davis & Bro., and Alex. Shaw, of Baltimore, have purchased the Vannieton farm, located in Elk Garden. This property contains 230 acres, of which about 200 are underlaid with the big vein of coal. The price paid for it was $10,000.

—Thanksgiving day was generally observed as a holiday in Oakland. In the morning union service were held in the Methodist church by Rev. B. Ison. In the afternoon the cornet band paraded the streets, and the Garrett Guards had target shooting in the suburbs of town. Most of the stores were closed during the day.

Church Services—Sunday.

M. E. Church.—Preaching in the morning at 10 o'clock, by Rev. H. C. Sanford.

Stone Church.—Preaching in the morning at 11 and in the evening at 7, by Rev. Mr. Lefevre.

Road Supervisors.

A meeting of the County Commissioners is called for the 17th inst., for the purpose of appointing road supervisors. Since the appointment of the present attorneys to the Board, they have examined the law, and find that there can be but one supervisor appointed for each election district, and they must be appointed before January 1st, that they may enter upon their duties at that date, to serve for two years.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending December 4:

Dennis H. Kurtz to Mary C. Glatfely, lot in Grantsville, 1 acre; $100. Samuel J. Beachy, Trustee, to W. E. Getty, parts of tracts of land called "Cornucopia," and "Youghiogheny Mill Seat Enlarged," 48 acres; $4,400.

Marriage Licenses.

Marriage Licenses were granted to the following parties during the month of November:

Alex. Kalbaugh and Virginia B. Brown.

Joram R. Wilson and Emily E. Tice.

Daniel Yommer and Mary Broadwater.

F. C. Browning and Eva Friend.

John W. Lee and Sarah E. Sharpless.

Harrison Murray and Lucinda Collins.

Wm. A. Murphy and Caroline H. Miller.

Thomas McConnell and Mollie S. Edgar.

A Woman Leaps into a Well with a Child in her Arms.

John Koegle, a carpenter well known here resides on Vinegar Hill, near the Fair grounds. He was formerly employed at Mertens' boat yard, but has recently been working repairing bridges on the Pittsburgh and Connellsville railroad. He came home last week in answer to a summons from his family, his wife being very ill with puerperal fever, attendant upon the birth of a child born about two weeks ago. For several days Mrs. Koegle had been partly deranged, as is common in such cases, and on Friday two women stayed up with her, while her husband slept on a lounge in the adjoining room. About midnight Mrs.

Koegle requested the two women to leave the room, saying that their presence kept her awake. They did so and remained away perhaps a half-hour. When one of them returned, the bed and crib were empty and the front door, which opened on the yard and had been securely bolted and locked, was found open. They were overwhelmed with dismay and fear and the husband was aroused. In company with the women he made a frantic search far and wide, but no trace of the fugitive could be discovered. The neighbors heard the alarm and joined in the hunt. There was the wildest excitement, as can well be imagined. Finally some one heard the faint cry of a child, which seemed to proceed from a box well in the street, about fifty feet from Koegle's door. There was a rush made in that direction, and by the aid of a lamp a woman's white fluttering garments were dimly seen below. In an instant a rope was fastened around the windlass and taking a basket on his arm Koegle descended. He found his wife up to her neck in the water, clinging with one hand to the chain while the other was clasped closely around her child, whose garments were dripping wet. The child was placed in the basket and raised to the shore above. A rope was then placed around Mrs. Koegle and she too was extricated. While her husband was rescuing her he asked the question: "Katie, why did you do this?" "Oh! it's all right," she replied, "you have me; haven't you?" A physician was at once called, and took measures to destroy the effects of their cold bath on mother and child. The well is thirty-five feet deep and had fifteen feet of water in it. Whether the woman clung to the chain in her descent or whether she leapt into the water outright and seized the chain on emerging is not known. The door to the box over the well is not much larger than to admit the bucket, and for her to get through must have been rather a difficult task. Last evening Mrs. Koegle was somewhat delirious, but her physician thinks she will recover. The child is doing well.—Cumh. News.

Juries and Trials by Juries of Criminals.

As the Maryland Legislature will soon assemble it is hoped that among other reforms promised in the late political campaign our entire jury system will be remodelled and made to conform to our present civilization. Some writers allege the jury trial is as old as King Alfred, and others as King Henry II. There is no doubt of jury trials existing under King John, because we find it stated in Magna Charta, "Nor will pass upon him, nor send upon, but by lawful judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land." Under King Henry III the trial by jury in criminal cases was in this wise, viz: A person suspected of a crime might be committed to some custody on the presentment of a jury known as the grand jury, and he had the option of appealing to a second jury known as a petit jury; these juries did not decide upon the evidence of witnesses, but the jurors were witnesses, and founded their verdict on their own knowledge of the prisoner and the facts in the case; they were called recapitulators, because they decided from previous knowledge or recognition, including what they had heard and believed to be true; they admitted documentary evidence, but parole evidence seldom or never. Such in brief was the ancient trial by jury as will be seen by examining Hallam's Middle Ages, and Forsyth's History of Trial by Jury. The first trace of witnesses testifying before a jury occurs in the twenty-third year of Edward I, and became firmly established about the middle of the 14th century. From this time we date the present system of the jury trial with alterations from time to time made in various particulars as people became more enlightened.

We have mentioned those facts to show that as the system of jury trials in criminal cases have from time to time been changed to farther the ends of justice, so ought they now to be reformed in Maryland for reasons which we will mention:

Our juries, as is known, are selected from the names of persons whose names appear on the tax books, and sometimes some of the jurors so selected are a disgrace to the jury box, as their verdict proves.

We suggest that all of the present jury law be at once repealed, and that one general law be enacted requiring the chief judges of the Supreme Bench of Baltimore city and of the respective Circuit Courts in the counties, at each term of court, each to select from among the qualified voters in said city and counties a certain number of names and put them in a box, and the clerk of each court in like manner to select a certain number of names and put them in said box. From the names so selected grand and petit juries shall be drawn. The chief judges should be allowed to reject any person so drawn. The grand jury should hear witnesses for both the State and the prisoner. This is now done before petit juries and in court before a petit jury as authorized by law. If this is allowed hundreds of cases which now come before grand juries, taken there out of malice and for revenge, would have no existence. Many a reputation would be kept from being injured, because fewer perjuries will be committed in the star chamber grand jury room by malicious and vindictive persons and witnesses. In addition to this fewer presentments and indictments will be found, because the grand jury will be competent to judge of the guilt or innocence of the person charged with crime as the petit jury. The courts will have fewer petty cases to hear, and thousands of dollars in court expenses and jail expenses will be saved each year to the State, counties and city of Baltimore. The present antiquated and nonsensical forms of indictments now used should at once be abolished. If the grand jury, from the witnesses examined by it, find there is probable cause of guilt, it should in a few plain words charge the prisoner in writing before the court being guilty of the larceny, robbery, burglary, &c., of the articles stolen, &c., and the place and time they were stolen, and of being guilty of the murder, man-slaughter of a certain person and the time and place of the murder, &c. The only plea should be not guilty or guilty. We hope these crude suggestions will be put in legal form and become a law at the approaching session of the General Assembly.—Baltimore Herald.

The freight business of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad has been so enormous proportions that it amounts to a blockade of the road at that point. It has been necessary to take off three accommodation trains in order to accommodate freight business, and the business offering is beyond the facilities of the road. It is stated that there is a present need for 3,000 more freight cars, and the extraordinary pressure is expected to continue until next spring.

A Change of Tactics.

A telegram from Cincinnati states that the colored exodus, so far as Mississippi is concerned, has ceased. The demeanor of the whites towards the blacks has so changed, that the latter say, so long as it continues thus, they have no desire to emigrate. Good wages are being paid the hands and they are having better times. In consequence of the exodus, than they ever had before. When the cause of this change is examined into, it is found to depend upon a change of tactics. "The whites will now depend upon ballot-stuffing and political tricks to accomplish these objects, and they find these methods more effective and less expensive than shot-guns." Of course if men are to be deprived of the franchise, this latter form is less destructive of life to the victims and, in that view, is preferable.

We are glad to find that the exodus has had some good effect for those who remained behind. The fear of losing that form of labor, which can only be employed in the profitable cultivation of their land, must in time act also upon their ballot-stuffing, and cause them to reform even those fraudulent practices. Election fraud is not as detestable as ballot-stuffing, but it is crime and has no place among a people, who claim to be civilized and refined.

From twelve acres of sandy soil, whose natural capacity was about 14 bushels of corn and cob, a New England farmer says he harvested this year, 1,200 bushels. This great increase was the sole result of a dressing of a compost of 150 horse loads of forest leaves mixed with the winter dropping of a horse, cow and pig.

Gloom in Louisiana.

A New Orleans correspondent of the New York Times writes in the gloomiest terms of the condition of affairs in the Crescent City, as well as throughout Louisiana. The wave of prosperity that is sweeping over the rest of the Union has not been felt there. Business men complain as they never have complained before, and the grass is literally growing in the streets. Real estate in the city and plantations in the parishes are a drag in the market, and cannot be sold even at a reduction of one-third from their estimated values three or four years ago, when what was called the carpet-bag government was in power. There are fifty thousand suits pending in the courts to recover State taxes that cannot be collected. The State is bankrupt. It owes the School Board $67,000, which it will probably never pay; and the Democratic officials that took the places of the Republicans, who fostered the school system, have decreed its downfall. The first step taken was to place it under the control of the Roman Catholics. The Democratic politicians, to save money for their own purposes, reduced the salaries of teachers 40 per cent., promising to pay the stipend regularly at the close of every month. In defiance of this promise, the School Board is now in arrears to teachers for every year that the present State administration has existed. The salaries for September have not been paid even in part. So rarely have the teachers because that they have asked the privilege of collecting a fee of one dollar per month from each of the scholars. This is likely to be adopted, as it will exclude most of the colored children whose parents are unable to pay. Should the new constitution be adopted, of which there is little doubt, the appropriations for school purposes will be reduced one-half; and this in the face of an educational fund of $4,000,000 given to the State by the federal government in public lands, which has been squandered or misappropriated. The city alone contains 115,000 white adults that can neither read nor write, according to the last census; and this vast array of ignorance is rapidly augmenting throughout the State. The whites, as well as the blacks, are becoming fully aware that the promised era of prosperity that was to result from the Democratic government is farther away than ever. The blacks are the greatest sufferers. They find themselves as far from the ballot-box, for all practical purposes, as they were twenty years ago. Three Congressional districts, with undisputed negro majorities of from four to eight thousand each, are now represented by White League leaders whom they had no voice in electing. The courts are all league against them, and in nine-tenths of the State the judicial records may be searched in vain for a case in which a white man has been successfully prosecuted for having defrauded a negro.

Under the jubilant head of "Deo Gratias" the New York Herald on Thanksgiving morning dropped into statistics to show the "Broad and Fruitful Home for Untold Millions" which our country will afford, and consequently we should be thankful. The Herald puts our prospective population at a hundred millions, and shows how we have the country to sustain them when they come. This is done by means of parallel lines, a graphic exhibit of the areas of our States and territories, as compared with those of the countries of Europe, and as shown by the number of square miles belonging to each. A glance at these shows that the Austrian Empire, in point of area, is the largest of any country in Europe, containing as it does 340,913 square miles. But the single State of Texas, with its 271,336 square miles, is larger than the Austrian Empire—the German Empire, France, Spain and Sweden following in decreasing succession. California is within a trifle equal in area to Sweden, and Dakota and Montana are each nearly as large in territorial expansion as California. Great Britain and Ireland together are only about the size of New Mexico, while Portugal, equal only to Maine is exceeded in size by Kentucky. The State of West Virginia is larger than either Holland or Greece, and Belgium is but two hundred and fifty square miles larger than Maryland. When we come to our agricultural statistics the exhibit is equally remarkable. Our crop of corn in 1878 was 1,388,218,750 bushels, wheat 120,122,100 bushels, hay 33,608,290 tons, oats 415,578,560 bushels. The cotton crop reached very nearly 5,000,000 bales; potatoes yielded 124,126,650 bushels. Of the staple crops for export we had in 1878, roughly speaking 50,000 square miles in corn, 50,000 square miles in wheat, and 19,000 square miles in cotton.

The tenant troubles in Ireland appear to be increasing. Despite the poverty of that unhappy people and their cry for bread the British government, with cool indifference to their appeals for relief, continues its enormous pensions to the royal family and the numerous brood of nobility who, as honest people, it would seem, have as much right to labor for their bread as the thousands of Ireland's suffering poor. But royalty must be pampered and fed even though it be necessary to starve the Irish to do it.

Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer

is a scientific combination of some of the most powerful restorative agents in the vegetable kingdom. It restores gray hair to its original color, it makes the scalp white and clean, it cures dandruff and humors, and falling out of the hair. It furnishes the nutritive principle by which the hair is nourished and supported. It makes the hair moist, soft and glossy, and is unsurpassed as a hair-dressing. It is the most economical preparation ever offered to the public, as its effects remain a long time, making only an occasional application necessary. It is recommended and used by eminent medical men, and officially endorsed by the State Assessor of Massachusetts. The popularity of Hall's Hair Renewer has increased with the lapse of many years, both in this country and in foreign lands, and it is now known and used in all the civilized countries of the world.

For Sale by All Dealers.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Notice to Trespassers.

All persons are hereby warned from trespassing upon my property, or upon the lands of James H. Johnson, near Attomont, Garrett county, either for the purpose of hunting, or for any other purpose. The extreme penalties of the law will be visited upon those disobeying this notice.

SAUEL W. FRIEND.

Constable's Sale.

By virtue of three writs of fieri facias, two issued by Alexander L. Osburn, Justice of the Peace of the State of Maryland, in and for Garrett county, two at the suit of Geo. W. Lange, and one at the suit of John R. Brant, against the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of Alexander C. Good and Mary E. Good, his wife, I have seized and taken in execution all the right, title, interest and estate, both at law and in equity, of the said Alex. C. Good and Mary E. Good, his wife, in and to the following real estate, to-wit:

Military Lots Nos. 85, 258, 983, 1509, 1519, 1521, 1609, 1614, 1800, 1802, 1848, 1909, 1910, 1912, 3355, 3556, and 3597.

Selling the same lots obtained from John Nelson and wife by deed dated December 7th, 1871, and recorded in Liber W. H. T. No. 1, page 22, one of the land records of Garrett county, Md. Said Military Lots are situated in Garrett county Md.

And I hereby give notice that on

SATURDAY, December 20th, 1879,

at 2 o'clock P. M., in front of Collingdon's Hotel in the town of Oakland, Md., I will offer at public sale the property so seized and taken in execution, to the highest bidder, for cash, to satisfy said judgments and costs thereon.

JAS. S. JOHNSON,

Constable.

11 29 11

slopes of the southern mountains, now a wilderness, may do something wonderful in budding and blossoming. It may seem absurd to talk of scarcity of land in America, but comparing the progress of twenty years with that of two hundred previous, and then looking ahead not more than fifty, the prospect is suggestive of not a distant "boom" in agricultural land values.

Under the jubilant head of "Deo Gratias" the New York Herald on Thanksgiving morning dropped into statistics to show the "Broad and Fruitful Home for Untold Millions" which our country will afford, and consequently we should be thankful. The Herald puts our prospective population at a hundred millions, and shows how we have the country to sustain them when they come. This is done by means of parallel lines, a graphic exhibit of the areas of our States and territories, as compared with those of the countries of Europe, and as shown by the number of square miles belonging to each. A glance at these shows that the Austrian Empire, in point of area, is the largest of any country in Europe, containing as it does 340,913 square miles. But the single State of Texas, with its 271,336 square miles, is larger than the Austrian Empire—the German Empire, France, Spain and Sweden following in decreasing succession. California is within a trifle equal in area to Sweden, and Dakota and Montana are each nearly as large in territorial expansion as California. Great Britain and Ireland together are only about the size of New Mexico, while Portugal, equal only to Maine is exceeded in size by Kentucky. The State of West Virginia is larger than either Holland or Greece, and Belgium is but two hundred and fifty square miles larger than Maryland. When we come to our agricultural statistics the exhibit is equally remarkable. Our crop of corn in 1878 was 1,388,218,750 bushels, wheat 120,122,100 bushels, hay 33,608,290 tons, oats 415,578,560 bushels. The cotton crop reached very nearly 5,000,000 bales; potatoes yielded 124,126,650 bushels. Of the staple crops for export we had in 1878, roughly speaking 50,000 square miles in corn, 50,000 square miles in wheat, and 19,000 square miles in cotton.

The tenant troubles in Ireland appear to be increasing. Despite the poverty of that unhappy people and their cry for bread the British government, with cool indifference to their appeals for relief, continues its enormous pensions to the royal family and the numerous brood of nobility who, as honest people, it would seem, have as much right to labor for their bread as the thousands of Ireland's suffering poor. But royalty must be pampered and fed even though it be necessary to starve the Irish to do it.

Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer

is a scientific combination of some of the most powerful restorative agents in the vegetable kingdom. It restores gray hair to its original color, it makes the scalp white and clean, it cures dandruff and humors, and falling out of the hair. It furnishes the nutritive principle by which the hair is nourished and supported. It makes the hair moist, soft and glossy, and is unsurpassed as a hair-dressing. It is the most economical preparation ever offered to the public, as its effects remain a long time, making only an occasional application necessary. It is recommended and used by eminent medical men, and officially endorsed by the State Assessor of Massachusetts. The popularity of Hall's Hair Renewer has increased with the lapse of many years, both in this country and in foreign lands, and it is now known and used in all the civilized countries of the world.

For Sale by All Dealers.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Notice to Trespassers.

All persons are hereby warned from trespassing upon my property, or upon the lands of James H. Johnson, near Attomont, Garrett county, either for the purpose of hunting, or for any other purpose. The extreme penalties of the law will be visited upon those disobeying this notice.

SAUEL W. FRIEND.

Constable's Sale.

By virtue of three writs of fieri facias, two issued by Alexander L. Osburn, Justice of the Peace of the State of Maryland, in and for Garrett county, two at the suit of Geo. W. Lange, and one at the suit of John R. Brant, against the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of Alexander C. Good and Mary E. Good, his wife, I have seized and taken in execution all the right, title, interest and estate, both at law and in equity, of the said Alex. C. Good and Mary E. Good, his wife, in and to the following real estate, to-wit:

Military Lots Nos. 85, 258, 983, 1509, 1519, 1521, 1609, 1614, 1800, 1802, 1848, 1909, 1910, 1912, 3355, 3556, and 3597.

Selling the same lots obtained from John Nelson and wife by deed dated December 7th, 1871, and recorded in Liber W. H. T. No. 1, page 22, one of the land records of Garrett county, Md. Said Military Lots are situated in Garrett county Md.

And I hereby give notice that on

SATURDAY, December 20th, 1879,

at 2 o'clock P. M., in front of Collingdon's Hotel in the town of Oakland, Md., I will offer at public sale the property so seized and taken in execution, to the highest bidder, for cash, to satisfy said judgments and costs thereon.

JAS. S. JOHNSON,

Constable.

11 29 11

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

When You Buy

YOUR FALL OR WINTER GROCERIES,

Get them from the long established house of

THOS. L. REESE.

(In operation since 1857.)
207 and 209 W. Pratt Street, BALTIMORE, MD.,
Where the best goods obtainable can be had at the
LOWEST POSSIBLE PRICES.
Dec. 6-8*

COMMISSIONERS' MEETING.

OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS,
OAKLAND, MD., Dec. 3, 1879.

Notice is hereby given that the County Commissioners of Garrett county will meet at their office in Oakland

On Wednesday, Dec. 17, 1879,

for the purpose of appointing one Road Supervisor for each election district in Garrett county, said Supervisors to serve two years from the first day of January, 1880. All persons desiring such appointments are requested to call on J. H. THAYER, Clerk of the County, on or before the 15th day of December, 1879.

By order,
F. A. THAYER, Clerk.

12 5 2

Wakemetika, the Medicine Man.

Nothing has been added to them during and nothing has been taken away. It is certain that the first part of the Broom is the best and the best part of the Broom is the best.

It is a scientific combination of some of the most powerful restorative agents in the vegetable kingdom. It restores gray hair to its original color, it makes the scalp white and clean, it cures dandruff and humors, and falling out of the hair. It furnishes the nutritive principle by which the hair is nourished and supported. It makes the hair moist, soft and glossy, and is unsurpassed as a hair-dressing. It is the most economical preparation ever offered to the public, as its effects remain a long time, making only an occasional application necessary. It is recommended and used by eminent medical men, and officially endorsed by the State Assessor of Massachusetts. The popularity of Hall's Hair Renewer has increased with the lapse of many years, both in this country and in foreign lands, and it is now known and used in all the civilized countries of the world.

For Sale by All Dealers.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Notice to Trespassers.

All persons are hereby warned from trespassing upon my property, or upon the lands of James H. Johnson, near Attomont, Garrett county, either for the purpose of hunting, or for any other purpose. The extreme penalties of the law will be visited upon those disobeying this notice.

SAUEL W. FRIEND.

Constable's Sale.

By virtue of three writs of fieri facias, two issued by Alexander L. Osburn, Justice of the Peace of the State of Maryland, in and for Garrett county, two at the suit of Geo. W. Lange, and one at the suit of John R. Brant, against the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of Alexander C. Good and Mary E. Good, his wife, I have seized and taken in execution all the right, title, interest and estate, both at law and in equity, of the said Alex. C. Good and Mary E. Good, his wife, in and to the following real estate, to-wit:

Military Lots Nos. 85, 258, 983, 1509, 1519, 1521, 1609, 1614, 1800, 1802, 1848, 1909, 1910, 1912, 3355, 3556, and 3597.

Selling the same lots obtained from John Nelson and wife by deed dated December 7th, 1871, and recorded in Liber W. H. T. No. 1, page 22, one of the land records of Garrett county, Md. Said Military Lots are situated in Garrett county Md.

And I hereby give notice that on

SATURDAY, December 20th, 1879,

at 2 o'clock P. M., in front of Collingdon's Hotel in the town of Oakland, Md., I will offer at public sale the property so seized and taken in execution, to the highest bidder, for cash, to satisfy said judgments and costs thereon.

JAS. S. JOHNSON,

Constable.

11 29 11

Wakemetika, the Medicine Man.

Nothing has been added to them during and nothing has been taken away. It is certain that the first part of the Broom is the best and the best part of the Broom is the best.

It is a scientific combination of some of the most powerful restorative agents in the vegetable kingdom. It restores gray hair to its original color, it makes the scalp white and clean, it cures dandruff and humors, and falling out of the hair. It furnishes the nutritive principle by which the hair is nourished and supported. It makes the hair moist, soft and glossy, and is unsurpassed as a hair-dressing. It is the most economical preparation ever offered to the public, as its effects remain a long time, making only an occasional application necessary. It is recommended and used by eminent medical men, and officially endorsed by the State Assessor of Massachusetts. The popularity of Hall's Hair Renewer has increased with the lapse of many years, both in this country and in foreign lands, and it is now known and used in all the civilized countries of the world.

For Sale by All Dealers.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Notice to Trespassers.

All persons are hereby warned from trespassing upon my property, or upon the lands of James H. Johnson, near Attomont, Garrett county, either for the purpose of hunting, or for any other purpose. The extreme penalties of the law will be visited upon those disobeying this notice.

SAUEL W. FRIEND.

Constable's Sale.

By virtue of three writs of fieri facias, two issued by Alexander L. Osburn, Justice of the Peace of the State of Maryland, in and for Garrett county, two at the suit of Geo. W. Lange, and one at the suit of John R. Brant, against the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of Alexander C. Good and Mary E. Good, his wife, I have seized and taken in execution all the right, title, interest and estate, both at law and in equity, of the said Alex. C. Good and Mary E. Good, his wife, in and to the following real estate, to-wit:

Military Lots Nos. 85, 258, 983, 1509, 1519, 1521, 1609, 1614, 1800, 1802, 1848, 1909, 1910, 1912, 3355, 3556, and 3597.

Selling the same lots obtained from John Nelson and wife by deed dated December 7th, 1871, and recorded in Liber W. H. T. No. 1, page 22, one of the land records of Garrett county, Md. Said Military Lots are situated in Garrett county Md.

And I hereby give notice that on

SATURDAY, December 20th, 1879,

A PARTY of forty-seven persons among whom there are twelve married couples and fourteen children, have lately sailed from Bergen, Norway, to colonize the uninhabited Aldabra Island, in the Indian Ocean, 300 miles north of Madagascar, which is said to be admirably adapted to agricultural industry.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

MORTGAGEE'S SALE

—OF—

VALUABLE PROPERTY,

In District No. 9, Garrett County, Maryland.

By virtue of the power of sale contained in a mortgage from John T. Hight and John M. Fichte to William E. Henshaw, of Allegany county, Md., or his assigns, dated November 16th, 1877, and recorded in Liber W. B. T., No. 3, folio 288, &c., one of the land records of Garrett county, to which said power of sale there is also a provision attached that, in case of default in the payment of the money thereon, the property shall be sold by the said William E. Henshaw, his assigns or attorney, to sell the said mortgaged premises at Johnson's, on the National road, in Garrett county, by public auction for cash; and the said power of sale being duly recorded, and the said William E. Henshaw, his assigns or attorney, do hereby give notice that I will offer at public auction

At Johnson's, on the National Road, in district No. 9, Garrett county, Md., on the 13th day of December, 1879

at 11 o'clock A. M., all the following tract of land known as the

"Walnut Hill Tract,"

beginning and lying as follows, being a part of Lot No. nine (9) beginning at two (2) pines standing at the end of the 2d line of the whole lot and running with the lines of said lot east 12 perches to two pines marked with nine notches each, south 100 perches, then leaving said line west 102 perches to intersect the 2d line of the whole lot, and with it north 100 perches to the place of beginning, containing

ONE HUNDRED ACRES,

more or less, being a part of a tract of land known as the "Walnut Hill Tract," lying and being in Garrett county, Maryland, and being fully described in the aforesaid mortgage.

TERMS OF SALE—Cash on day of sale.

JOHN S. COMBS,

Assignee of William E. Henshaw.

JOHN S. GROVE,

Attorney and Agent. 11 22 ts.

NOTICE.

All persons having claims against the estate of Jacob Selinger, deceased, are hereby notified to file said claims with the register of Wills for Garrett county, on or before the 15th day of December, 1879.

T. J. PEDDICOR, Reg. of Wills.

NOTICE.

I have $7,500 to loan in sums from $1,000 to $3,000 on first-class mortgages.

11 15 ts T. J. PEDDICOR.

Estate of George J. Walker, deceased.

THIS IS TO GIVE NOTICE—That the subscriber hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, Maryland, Letters Testamentary on the estate of GEORGE J. WALKER, late of said county, deceased.

All persons having claims against the said deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same to the subscriber, with the vouchers thereof, legally authenticated, on or before the 15th day of May, 1880. They may otherwise be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment. Given under my hands this 15th day of November, 1879.

JAMES W. WHITE, Executor.

JOHN REIDMANN,

Manufacturer and Dealer in

WAGONS AND FARMING IMPLEMENTS.

Also, Improved Hand Seed Sowers.

11-1-79 Near the Depot, Oakland, Md.

Private Sale

OF

VALUABLE LAND

The undersigned as Attorney for John Swan, Esq., will offer at private sale, at his office in Oakland, the following property, to-wit:

Military Lots Nos. 401, 480, 487, 497, 1221, 1235, 1234, 1331, 1336, 1338, 1401, 1558, 1596, 1565, 1800, 1813, 1841, 1913.

And also as Attorney for Alexander C. Good and Mary F. Good, his wife, all the right, title and estate of said Good and wife, in and to the following lands, to-wit:

Military Lots Nos. 31, 32, 33, 34, 62, 85, 258, 373, 477, 998, 1286, 1509, 1519, 1520, 1521, 1522, 1523, 1524, 1525, 1526, 1527, 1528, 1529, 1530, 1531, 1532, 1533, 1534, 1535, 1536, 1537, 1538, 1539, 1540, 1541, 1542, 1543, 1544, 1545, 1546, 1547, 1548, 1549, 1550, 1551, 1552, 1553, 1554, 1555, 1556, 1557, 1558, 1559, 1560, 1561, 1562, 1563, 1564, 1565, 1566, 1567, 1568, 1569, 1570, 1571, 1572, 1573, 1574, 1575, 1576, 1577, 1578, 1579, 1580, 1581, 1582, 1583, 1584, 1585, 1586, 1587, 1588, 1589, 1590, 1591, 1592, 1593, 1594, 1595, 1596, 1597, 1598, 1599, 1600, 1601, 1602, 1603, 1604, 1605, 1606, 1607, 1608, 1609, 1610, 1611, 1612, 1613, 1614, 1615, 1616, 1617, 1618, 1619, 1620, 1621, 1622, 1623, 1624, 1625, 1626, 1627, 1628, 1629, 1630, 1631, 1632, 1633, 1634, 1635, 1636, 1637, 1638, 1639, 1640, 1641, 1642, 1643, 1644, 1645, 1646, 1647, 1648, 1649, 1650, 1651, 1652, 1653, 1654, 1655, 1656, 1657, 1658, 1659, 1660, 1661, 1662, 1663, 1664, 1665, 1666, 1667, 1668, 1669, 1670, 1671, 1672, 1673, 1674, 1675, 1676, 1677, 1678, 1679, 1680, 1681, 1682, 1683, 1684, 1685, 1686, 1687, 1688, 1689, 1690, 1691, 1692, 1693, 1694, 1695, 1696, 1697, 1698, 1699, 1700, 1701, 1702, 1703, 1704, 1705, 1706, 1707, 1708, 1709, 1710, 1711, 1712, 1713, 1714, 1715, 1716, 1717, 1718, 1719, 1720, 1721, 1722, 1723, 1724, 1725, 1726, 1727, 1728, 1729, 1730, 1731, 1732, 1733, 1734, 1735, 1736, 1737, 1738, 1739, 1740, 1741, 1742, 1743, 1744, 1745, 1746, 1747, 1748, 1749, 1750, 1751, 1752, 1753, 1754, 1755, 1756, 1757, 1758, 1759, 1760, 1761, 1762, 1763, 1764, 1765, 1766, 1767, 1768, 1769, 1770, 1771, 1772, 1773, 1774, 1775, 1776, 1777, 1778, 1779, 1780, 1781, 1782, 1783, 1784, 1785, 1786, 1787, 1788, 1789, 1790, 1791, 1792, 1793, 1794, 1795, 1796, 1797, 1798, 1799, 1800, 1801, 1802, 1803, 1804, 1805, 1806, 1807, 1808, 1809, 1810, 1811, 1812, 1813, 1814, 1815, 1816, 1817, 1818, 1819, 1820, 1821, 1822, 1823, 1824, 1825, 1826, 1827, 1828, 1829, 1830, 1831, 1832, 1833, 1834, 1835, 1836, 1837, 1838, 1839, 1840, 1841, 1842, 1843, 1844, 1845, 1846, 1847, 1848, 1849, 1850, 1851, 1852, 1853, 1854, 1855, 1856, 1857, 1858, 1859, 1860, 1861, 1862, 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866, 1867, 1868, 1869, 1870, 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, 1879, 1880, 1881, 1882, 1883, 1884, 1885, 1886, 1887, 1888, 1889, 1890, 1891, 1892, 1893, 1894, 1895, 1896, 1897, 1898, 1899, 1900, 1901, 1902, 1903, 1904, 1905, 1906, 1907, 1908, 1909, 1910, 1911, 1912, 1913, 1914, 1915, 1916, 1917, 1918, 1919, 1920, 1921, 1922, 1923, 1924, 1925, 1926, 1927, 1928, 1929, 1930, 1931, 1932, 1933, 1934, 1935, 1936, 1937, 1938, 1939, 1940, 1941, 1942, 1943, 1944, 1945, 1946, 1947, 1948, 1949, 1950, 1951, 1952, 1953, 1954, 1955, 1956, 1957, 1958, 1959, 1960, 1961, 1962, 1963, 1964, 1965, 1966, 1967, 1968, 1969, 1970, 1971, 1972, 1973, 1974, 1975, 1976, 1977, 1978, 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994, 1995, 1996, 1997, 1998, 1999, 2000, 2001, 2002, 2003, 2004, 2005, 2006, 2007, 2008, 2009, 2010, 2011, 2012, 2013, 2014, 2015, 2016, 2017, 2018, 2019, 2020, 2021, 2022, 2023, 2024, 2025, 2026, 2027, 2028, 2029, 2030, 2031, 2032, 2033, 2034, 2035, 2036, 2037, 2038, 2039, 2040, 2041, 2042, 2043, 2044, 2045, 2046, 2047, 2048, 2049, 2050, 2051, 2052, 2053, 2054, 2055, 2056, 2057, 2058, 2059, 2060, 2061, 2062, 2063, 2064, 2065, 2066, 2067, 2068, 2069, 2070, 2071, 2072, 2073, 2074, 2075, 2076, 2077, 2078, 2079, 2080, 2081, 2082, 2083, 2084, 2085, 2086, 2087, 2088, 2089, 2090, 2091, 2092, 2093, 2094, 2095, 2096, 2097, 2098, 2099, 2100, 2101, 2102, 2103, 2104, 2105, 2106, 2107, 2108, 2109, 2110, 2111, 2112, 2113, 2114, 2115, 2116, 2117, 2118, 2119, 2120, 2121, 2122, 2123, 2124, 2125, 2126, 2127, 2128, 2129, 2130, 2131, 2132, 2133, 2134, 2135, 2136, 2137, 2138, 2139, 2140, 2141, 2142, 2143, 2144, 2145, 2146, 2147, 2148, 2149, 2150, 2151, 2152, 2153, 2154, 2155, 2156, 2157, 2158, 2159, 2160, 2161, 2162, 2163, 2164, 2165, 2166, 2167, 2168, 2169, 2170, 2171, 2172, 2173, 2174, 2175, 2176, 2177, 2178, 2179, 2180, 2181, 2182, 2183, 2184, 2185, 2186, 2187, 2188, 2189, 2190, 2191, 2192, 2193, 2194, 2195, 2196, 2197, 2198, 2199, 2200, 2201, 2202, 2203, 2204, 2205, 2206, 2207, 2208, 2209, 2210, 2211, 2212, 2213, 2214, 2215, 2216, 2217, 2218, 2219, 2220, 2221, 2222, 2223, 2224, 2225, 2226, 2227, 2228, 2229, 2230, 2231, 2232, 2233, 2234, 2235, 2236, 2237, 2238, 2239, 2240, 2241, 2242, 2243, 2244, 2245, 2246, 2247, 2248, 2249, 2250, 2251, 2252, 2253, 2254, 2255, 2256, 2257, 2258, 2259, 2260, 2261, 2262, 2263, 2264, 2265, 2266, 2267, 2268, 2269, 2270, 2271, 2272, 2273, 2274, 2275, 2276, 2277, 2278, 2279, 2280, 2281, 2282, 2283, 2284, 2285, 2286, 2287, 2288, 2289, 2290, 2291, 2292, 2293, 2294, 2295, 2296, 2297, 2298, 2299, 2300, 2301, 2302, 2303, 2304, 2305, 2306, 2307, 2308, 2309, 2310, 2311, 2312, 2313, 2314, 2315, 2316, 2317, 2318, 2319, 2320, 2321, 2322, 2323, 2324, 2325, 2326, 2327, 2328, 2329, 2330, 2331, 2332, 2333, 2334, 2335, 2336, 2337, 2338, 2339, 2340, 2341, 2342, 2343, 2344, 2345, 2346, 2347, 2348, 2349, 2350, 2351, 2352, 2353, 2354, 2355, 2356, 2357, 2358, 2359, 2360, 2361, 2362, 2363, 2364, 2365, 2366, 2367, 2368, 2369, 2370, 2371, 2372, 2373, 2374, 2375, 2376, 2377, 2378, 2379, 2380, 2381, 2382, 2383, 2384, 2385, 2386, 2387, 2388, 2389, 2390, 2391, 2392, 2393, 2394, 2395, 2396, 2397, 2398, 2399, 2400, 2401, 2402, 2403, 2404, 2405, 2406, 2407, 2408, 2409, 2410, 2411, 2412, 2413, 2414, 2415, 2416, 2417, 2418, 2419, 2420, 2421, 2422, 2423, 2424, 2425, 2426, 2427, 2428, 2429, 2430, 2431, 2432, 2433, 2434, 2435, 2436, 2437, 2438, 2439, 2440, 2441, 2442, 2443, 2444, 2445, 2446, 2447, 2448, 2449, 2450, 2451, 2452, 2453, 2454, 2455, 2456, 2457, 2458, 2459, 2460, 2461, 2462, 2463, 2464, 2465, 2466, 2467, 2468, 2469, 2470, 2471, 2472, 2473, 2474, 2475, 2476, 2477, 2478, 2479, 2480, 2481, 2482, 2483, 2484, 2485, 2486, 2487, 2488, 2489, 2490, 2491, 2492, 2493, 2494, 2495, 2496, 2497, 2498, 2499, 2500, 2501, 2502, 2503, 2504, 2505, 2506, 2507, 2508, 2509, 2510, 2511, 2512, 2513, 2514, 2515, 2516, 2517, 2518, 2519, 2520, 2521, 2522, 2523, 2524, 2525, 2526, 2527, 2528, 2529, 2530, 2531, 2532, 2533, 2534, 2535, 2536, 2537, 2538, 2539, 2540, 2541, 2542, 2543, 2544, 2545, 2546, 2547, 2548, 2549, 2550, 2551, 2552, 2553, 2554, 2555, 2556, 2557, 2558, 2559, 2560, 2561, 2562, 2563, 2564, 2565, 2566, 2567, 2568, 2569, 2570, 2571, 2572, 2573, 2574, 2575, 2576, 2577, 2578, 2579, 2580, 2581, 2582, 2583, 2584, 2585, 2586, 2587, 2588, 2589, 2590, 2591, 2592, 2593, 2594, 2595, 2596, 2597, 2598, 2599, 2600, 2601, 2602, 2603, 2604, 2605, 2606, 2607, 2608, 2609, 2610, 2611, 2612, 2613, 2614, 2615, 2616, 2617, 2618, 2619, 2620, 2621, 2622, 2623, 2624, 2625, 2626, 2627, 2628, 2629, 2630, 2631, 2632, 2633, 2634, 2635, 2636, 2637, 2638, 2639, 2640, 2641, 2642, 2643, 2644, 2645, 2646, 2647, 2648, 2649, 2650, 2651, 2652, 2653, 2654, 2655, 2656, 2657, 2658, 2659, 2660, 2661, 2662, 2663, 2664, 2665, 2666, 2667, 2668, 2669, 2670, 2671, 2672, 2673, 2674, 2675, 2676, 2677, 2678, 2679, 2680, 2681, 2682, 2683, 2684, 2685, 2686, 2687, 2688, 2689, 2690, 2691, 2692, 2693, 2694, 2695, 2696, 2697, 2698, 2699, 2700, 2701, 2702, 2703, 2704, 2705, 2706, 2707, 2708, 2709, 2710, 2711, 2712, 2713, 2714, 2715, 2716, 2717, 2718, 2719, 2720, 2721, 2722, 2723, 2724, 2725, 2726, 2727, 2728, 2729, 2730, 2731, 2732, 2733, 2734, 2735, 2736, 2737, 2738, 2739, 2740, 2741, 2742, 2743, 2744, 2745, 2746, 2747, 2748, 2749, 2750, 2751, 2752, 2753, 2754, 2755, 2756, 2757, 2758, 2759, 2760, 2761, 2762, 2763, 2764, 2765, 2766, 2767, 2768, 2769, 2770, 2771, 2772, 2773, 2774, 2775, 2776, 2777, 2778, 2779, 2780, 2781, 2782, 2783, 2784, 2785, 2786, 2787, 2788, 2789, 2790, 2791, 2792, 2793, 2794, 2795, 2796, 2797, 2798, 2799, 2800, 2801, 2802, 2803, 2804, 2805, 2806, 2807, 2808, 2809, 2810, 2811, 2812, 2813, 2814, 2815, 2816, 2817, 2818, 2819, 2820, 2821, 2822, 2823, 2824, 2825, 2826, 2827, 2828, 2829, 2830, 2831, 2832, 2833, 2834, 2835, 2836, 2837, 2838, 2839, 2840, 2841, 2842, 2843, 2844, 2845, 2846, 2847, 2848, 2849, 2850, 2851, 2852, 2853, 2854, 2855, 2856, 2857, 2858, 2859, 2860, 2861, 2862, 2863, 2864, 2865, 2866, 2867, 2868, 2869, 2870, 2871, 2872, 2873, 2874, 2875, 2876, 2877, 2878, 2879, 2880, 2881, 2882, 2883, 2884, 2885, 2886, 2887, 2888, 2889, 2890, 2891, 2892, 2893, 2894, 2895, 2896, 2897, 2898, 2899, 2900, 2901, 2902, 2903, 2904, 2905, 2906, 2907, 2908, 2909, 2910, 2911, 2912, 2913, 2914, 2915, 2916, 2917, 2918, 2919, 2920, 2921, 2922, 2923, 2924, 2925, 2926, 2927, 2928, 2929, 2930, 2931, 2932, 2933, 2934, 2935, 2936, 2937, 2938, 2939, 2940, 2941, 2942, 2943, 2944, 2945, 2946, 2947, 2948, 2949, 2950, 2951, 2952, 2953, 2954, 2955, 2956, 2957, 2958, 2959, 2960, 2961, 2962, 2963, 2964, 2965, 2966, 2967, 2968, 2969, 2970, 2971, 2972, 2973, 2974, 2975, 2976, 2977, 2978, 2979, 2980, 2981, 2982, 2983, 2984, 2985, 2986, 2987, 2988, 2989, 2990, 2991, 2992, 2993, 2994, 2995, 2996, 2997, 2998, 2999, 3000, 3001, 3002, 3003, 3004, 3005, 3006, 3007, 3008, 3009, 3010, 3011, 3012, 3013, 3014, 3015, 3016, 3017, 3018, 3019, 3020, 3021, 3022, 3023, 3024, 3025, 3026, 3027, 3028, 3029, 3030, 3031, 3032, 3033, 3034, 3035, 3036, 3037, 3038, 3039, 3040, 3041, 3042, 3043, 3044, 3045, 3046, 3047, 3048, 3049, 3050, 3051, 3052, 3053, 3054, 3055, 3056, 3057, 3058, 3059, 3060, 3061, 3062, 3063, 3064, 3065, 3066, 3067, 3068, 3069, 3070, 3071, 3072, 3073, 3074, 3075, 3076, 3077, 3078, 3079, 3080, 3081, 3082, 3083, 3084, 3085, 3086, 3087, 3088, 3089, 3090, 3091, 3092, 3093, 3094, 3095, 3096, 3097, 3098, 3099, 3100, 3101, 3102, 3103, 3104, 3105, 3106, 3107, 3108, 3109, 3110, 3111, 3112, 3113, 3114, 3115, 3116, 3117, 3118, 3119, 3120, 3121, 3122, 3123, 3124, 3125, 3126, 3127, 3128, 3129, 3130, 3131, 3132, 3133, 3134, 3135, 3136, 3137, 3138, 3139, 3140, 3141, 3142, 3143, 3144, 3145, 3146, 3147, 3148, 3149, 3150, 3151, 3152, 3153, 3154, 3155, 3156, 3157, 3158, 3159, 3160, 3161, 3162, 3163, 3164, 3165, 3166, 3167, 3168, 3169, 3170, 3171, 3172, 3173, 3174, 3175, 3176, 3177, 3178, 3179, 3180, 3181, 3182, 3183, 3184, 3185, 3186, 3187, 3188, 3189, 3190, 3191, 3192, 3193, 3194, 3195, 3196, 3197, 3198, 3199, 3200, 3201, 3202, 3203, 3204, 3205, 3206, 3207, 3208, 3209, 3210, 3211, 3212, 3213, 3214, 3215, 3216, 3217, 3218, 3219, 3220, 3221, 3222, 3223, 3224, 3225, 3226, 3227, 3228, 3229, 3230, 3231, 3232, 3233, 3234, 3235, 3236, 3237, 3238, 3239, 3240, 3241, 3242, 3243, 3244, 3245, 3246, 3247, 3248, 3249, 3250, 3251, 3252, 3253, 3254, 3255, 3256, 3257, 3258, 3259, 3260, 3261, 3262, 3263, 3264, 3265, 3266, 3267, 3268, 3269, 3270, 3271, 3272, 3273, 3274, 3275, 3276, 3277, 3278, 3279, 3280, 3281, 3282, 3283, 3284, 3285, 3286, 3287, 3288, 3289, 3290, 3291, 3292, 3293, 3294, 3295, 3296, 3297, 3298, 3299, 3300, 3301, 3302

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1879.

NUMBER 42.

VOLUME 3.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE.

DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, etc.

D. E. OFFUTT,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agriculture, Machinery, Musical Instruments,
Clothing, etc., etc.

G. W. LEGGIE,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Clothing, etc., etc.

D. H. LOAN,
ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,
General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, etc., etc.

I. W. STALNAKER,
Grocery and Provision Store,
Corner Third and Oak Streets.

L. BUSH & SON,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Clothing, etc., etc.

J. A. QUANT,
Dry Goods, Notions & Groceries,
SPECIAL LINE OF TOBACCO.

DAVIS & TOWNSHEND,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Agents Agricultural Machinery,
Opposite Baiter's Park.

C. C. MICHAEL,
GENERAL MERCHANDISE,
Notions, etc., etc.

RICHARDSON BROS.,
GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,
Canned Goods, Fruit, etc.

JAS. A. ENLOW,
Dealer in
REPUBLICAN Building, Oakland, Md. 11-13.

HOTELS.
CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,
W. M. CODDINGTON, Proprietor,
Main St., Opposite Jackson's Mill and Saloon.

LIVERY STABLE.
THOMAS MARTIN,
Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND TINWARE.
G. A. SHIRER,
Oak Street, near Second.

PHYSICIANS.
DR. J. E. LEE,
Office on Main Street.

DR. E. H. PARSONS,
Offers his professional services
to the people of Oakland and vicinity.
Office in the Old Bluff building,
N. E. 3m.

PLASTERER.
JAMES ARNOLD,
Residence on Fourth Street.

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.
W. M. WAGNER,
Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.

DR. F. L. LUTHERIDGE,
Leave orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.
J. B. BRANT,
Surveyor, Auctioneer and
Conveyancer.

JOHN HARNED,
Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.
A. B. WOODCOCK,
In Wm. Simons's Building,
Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY
GOODS.
MRS. M. E. DAVIS,
Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,
Millinery, Gents' Furnishing Goods, and Stationery.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.
GEO. C. STURGEISS,
Drugs, Medicines,
Toiletries and Stationery.

PAINTING & PAPER HANG-
ING.
E. J. FRINGER,
House and Sign Painter.

S. V. B. WARD,
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER,
Shop near Davis House.

BLACKSMITHS.
CHAS. SINCELL,
Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.
JOHN M. JARBOE,
Carpenter, Contractor & Builder.

P. A. CHISHOLM,
Carpenter, Contractor,
Residence on Centre Street.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,
Reside near opp. School house.

JOSEPH M. CUM,
Residence on Alder Street.

A. C. BROOKE,
Res. near Republican office.

CABINETMAKERS AND UN-DERTAKERS.
A. C. BROOKE,
Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SHAFER,
Shop on Second Street.

FALL & WINTER GOODS.

GOODS FRESH & NEW

and Cheap as the Cheapest.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,

MERCHANT TAILOR,

Has on hand a full stock of New

Ready Made Clothing,

which he will sell very cheap for cash.

Gents Furnishing Goods,

In great variety, and at prices to suit the

times.

Suits Made to Order

In the most fashionable manner. Orders by

mail promptly attended to.

Also Agent for the Celebrated

"Pearl Shirt."

A Large Assortment of

BOYS' CLOTHING

Kept always on hand.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,

Oakland, Md.

MEAT MARKET.

H. E. WOLFE,

Formerly of Cumberland, Md.

Takes this mode of announcing to the citizens

of Oakland and vicinity that he has permanently located in Oakland for the purpose

of carrying on the

BUTCHERING BUSINESS

in a first-class manner.

FRESH BEEF, (salted), MUTTON, PORK,
Bologna Sausage, Pork Sau-
sage, etc., at all times.

Shop near the Post Office.

Customers can get what they want without delay and at all hours of the day.

Your patronage is respectfully solicited.

H. E. WOLFE.

PATENTS.

To Inventors and Manufacturers.

ESTABLISHED 1865.

GILMORE SMITH & CO.

Solicitors of Patents & Attorneys at Law.

American & Foreign Patents.

No fees in advance, nor until a Patent is allowed. No fees for making preliminary examinations.

Special attention given to Inter-

ference Cases before the Patent Office.

Infringement Suits in the different

States, and all litigation appertain-

ing to Patents or Inventions.

Sent Stamp for Pamphlet of Sixty

Pages.

GILMORE & CO.,

629 F. Street, N. W.,

Washington, D. C.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

THO. J. PROFFORD, A. B. GONDER.

PROFFORD & GONDER,

ATTORNEYS AT LAW

SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY.

OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and

Allegany Counties, the adjoining Counties of

West Virginia, and in the Court of Appeals

of Maryland.

Jan. 31-11

S. A. COX, H. WHEELER COMBS.

COX & COMBS,

ATTORNEYS AT LAW

SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY.

Office, Alder Street, Oakland, Garrett County,

Maryland.

Will practice in all the Courts of Maryland

and adjoining counties of West Virginia, and

the United States Circuit Courts.

13-15-79.

GILMORE S. HAMILL,

ATTORNEY AT LAW

AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.

OFFICE IN OFFICE BUILDING,

Lower Floor.

Particular attention given to Conveyancing,

investigation of land titles and collection of debts. Loans regulated.

July 1-11

J. W. VEITCH, ATTORNEY AT LAW

SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.

OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett County

and adjoining counties of West Virginia, and in the Court of Appeals of Maryland.

Jan. 31-11

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG

Late Resident Surgeon, New York

Eye and Ear Infirmary.

HAS LOCATED PERMANENTLY IN THE

CITY OF CUMBERLAND, MD., FOR THE EX-

CLUSIVE TREATMENT OF ALL DISEASES OF THE

EYE AND EAR, including those of the Senescent

Throat.

Office, No. 20 South Centre Street.

April 1-11

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LESSONS.

SUNDAY, DEC. 15, 1879.

THE HEAVENLY CITY.

GENERAL STATEMENT.

The last vial of wrath has been poured out on the earth; the last trumpet has sounded;

the last judgment has taken place; the final division has been made between the good and the evil. Satan and his host have been cast down to their fiery abode. Now a glorious vision appears before the revelator's eyes.

The New Jerusalem, the heavenly city, is revealed. Its foundations are of precious stones.

Its walls glow with gems; its twelve gates are each a pearl; its streets are like gold in glory

and like crystal in clearness. No unclean stream flows through its columns; but, for the

Lamb of God gives it light; and no moon

sheds her pale rays, for there is no night

there. Out of every nation of the earth, and every one in it, shall come the saved, and shall dwell in it forever.

Rev. 21, 2-7; 22, 1-5.

Memory Verse, 5-13.

21 And the twelve gates were twelve pearls, every several gate was of one pearl; and the street of the city was pure gold, as it were glass.

22 And I saw no temple therein; for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it.

23 And the city had no need of the sun, and neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof.

24 And the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it, and the kings of the earth shall bring their glory and honor into it.

25 And the gates of it shall not be shut at any day: neither shall there be night there.

26 And they shall bring the glory and honor of the nations into it.

27 And there shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever

worketh abomination or maketh a lie: but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life.

1 And he showed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb.

2 In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month; and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations.

3 And there shall be no more curse; but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it;

and his servants shall serve him.

4 And they shall see his face; and his name

shall be in their foreheads.

5 And there shall be no night there; and they need not candle, neither light of the sun:

for the Lord God giveth them light: and they shall reign for ever and ever.

HOME READINGS.

M. The heavenly city, Rev. 21, 2-7; 22, 1-5.

N. The new heaven and new earth, Rev. 21, 1-3.

H. The new Jerusalem, Rev. 21, 10-20.

Th. The kingdom, Rev. 4, 1-11.

F. The people, Rev. 7, 1-17.

S. Its preparation, John 14, 1-10.

S. Marriage of the Lamb, Rev. 19, 1-7.

GOLDEN TEXT.

For he looked forth a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God, Heb. 11, 10.

LESSON HYMN, 7, 6.

With joy we sing thy bulwarks,

Thy streets with emerald blaze,

The sardius and the topaz

Unite in thee their rays:

Thine are the streets of gold,

With amethysts unpeeled,

Thy saints build up thy fabric,

And the cornerstone is Christ.

QUESTIONS ON THE OUTLINE.

1. ITS REVELATION, v. 2, 3; Heb. 11, 10.

What is said of the gates to the heavenly city?

What is said of its streets?

Why is there no temple in it?

Why is there no need of the sun in heaven?

To what is God compared in Rev. 21, 11?

What does Christ say in John 14, 1-10?

Who walk in the light of heaven?

How may we be saved? Acts 16, 31.

What glory and honor are brought to it?

What is its gates ever closed?

Who are permitted to enter it?

What is said in Rev. 21, 3?

ITS REVELATION, v. 1, 2; Heb. 11, 10.

What is this river called?

What does it produce? Ezek. 47, 1, 9.

Whence does the river flow?

What is Christ's promise in John 14, 1-10?

What stands beside the river?

What is said of the trees in John 14, 1-10?

What is Rev. 21, 3?

ITS REVELATION, v. 3; Heb. 11, 10.

What light shall they possess?

What is said of God's light in John 1, 9?

Who shall be their privilege forever?

How is this stated in Dan. 7, 18?

TEACHINGS OF THE LESSON.

Where in this lesson do we learn—

1. That heaven is infinitely beautiful?

2. That heaven is infinitely bright?

3. That heaven is infinitely holy?

WORDS WITH LITTLE FOLKS.

1. Think often of the glories of heaven.

2. Think who makes it glorious.

3. Think of its pure home.

4. To go to prepare a place for you, John 14, 2.

5. Do not let the glories of heaven be a distraction to you, but let them be a stimulus to you, to lead you to the glories of heaven, and to the Father and the Son, v. 3.

6. It will be a heritage of eternal life, without end, v. 3.

Their Fruits.

The coming of the legislative

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRITT CO., MD.

BY THE HEARTH.

You come to bed,
The fire is in November,
The wind strikes bleak
Upon the cheek
That craves for sleep warm
And where's the harm?
Toss to sleep
One lot of its calm color for your sake.
Watch, see! I stir the coals
Upon my lonely hearth, and bid the fire wake.

Oh! think you that it will?
This hurried, I say, to ashes.
It smolders cold
As graves and mold.
I wish indeed you would not blow
Upon it so!
The dead to kill,
I say, the ghosts of fires will never stir,
No woman lift the lashes
Of eyes, woe dim, lower eyes shine for love
Of her?

Ah, sweet surprise!
I did not think such shining
Upon the gleam
Of this cold room
Could fall. Your even, strong, calm breath
Calls life from death.
The warm light lies
At your transparent feet, faint with desire
To reach you. See! The living
Of violet and silver in that sheath of fire!

If you would care—
Although it is November—
I will not say
A better day
To such a gift for building fires.
And though it tires
Me to think of it—I'll own to you
It may be found at last, just warm enough for —Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, in Scribner's Monthly.

TOM AND HIS WIFE.

IN THE NEW HOME.

THE train bearing the young married couple back from the tour reached Gallowhill Saturday evening. It was Anna's desire to return then, because the next day was Sunday; and her first appearance at home in Gallowhill was in her best attire, and before a much larger number of her town-people than would be possible on any other day. She had often pictured herself sweeping into church as a wife on the "first Sunday," the observed of all observers. It had been a dream with her long before she knew Tom Griggs, to be deepened and intensified after she became his pledged wife. Anna's wedding silk was to be worn in Gallowhill for the first time that Sunday. It was an ashen-roses, exquisitely trimmed, and an admirable fit. Anna contemplated it with pardonable pride; Tom with rapture.

They were going to begin housekeeping at once. The new house was a small structure, rented a few days before the wedding. The carpets and furniture had already been ordered, and during their absence the mother and Lucy had seen the new place put fully to rights, and now it was ready to receive them; but Mrs. Bayard believed it best, as it was night when they came, that they should go to her house for tea, and then to their own room. This Anna would not listen to. She and Tom had provided everything necessary for an immediate occupation, and the first tea in the new home had been the one bright picture before them all the time of their absence. They could not give it up now.

So they were driven directly to their own house; and, there being a good fire in the kitchen stove, the work of preparing tea by the deft fingers of Mrs. Bayard required but a few moments. Long before Anna had looked at the things Lucy attempted to show her, the table was spread, and the tea ready.

Of course Anna took the head of the table, and presided in doing it; she made a most charming picture. Her beautiful face was flushed by the excitement, the glad anticipation, the novelty of the scene; and her eyes shone with the delight that was in her heart. There was just a trifle of tremor in the hand that directed the tea urn, and a nervousness in the anxiety to see that all were helped. But she was so proud, so happy. The joy that filled her life was manifest in every move, every word, every glance, and whenever she turned her shining eyes upon her delighted husband, that individual would immediately jump up from his place, and go around to her, and take the beautiful tea right out of her own hand, when it would for a moment be lost to the view of the others.

And so, with the kisses and the laughter, and her wanting to know what he thought of the dishes and the entree and the cooking, and the fact that (although he had seen them all as much as she had), the tea was prolonged for a full hour. But it was such a delicious hour that no one minded the flight of time, and all were content when they looked up at the clock and saw how long they had been sitting there.

The mother said that she and Lucy would clear off the table and wash the dishes; but the young wife would not listen to that. She was such a willful young wife, and was so determined to take charge of everything, that the mother and Lucy gave up to her. Dear girl! she could not bear to surrender an atom of her prerogative; but she wanted with her own hands to do it all. Tom opposed, because he knew she was tired from the journey; but when she had pinned on the pretty blue apron Lucy's forethought had provided for her, and pushed up her sleeves, she looked so bewitchingly cozy and homelike that he gave up all opposition at once, and was only too glad of the opportunity for seeing her thus attired. Certainly his precious wife never appeared more dear to him than she did at this moment; and he could not resist catching her in his strong arms, and giving her one of his anaconda embraces.

"O Tom!" she laughingly cried, as she released herself, "what a sad plight you have got my new apron in! Lucy will be read at you for musing her work."

But Lucy promptly repudiated such a sentiment, whereupon Tom felt warranted in taking another risk, and did so, greatly to the distress of the apron. "Now, Lucy," she said, drawing her face down into a very dire expression, "you can help me by drying the dishes while I wash them, and Tom can entertain mother, and she can entertain him; and thus both will be kept out of mischief while we do the work. Now, Tom," she said, looking very gravely at him, and holding up a very pretty hand to enforce his attention, "you keep right there by mother, and don't you dare stir one step."

Having thus provided for him, she set to work with Lucy to clear the table. It must have been a remarkable dish-closet (although to an ordinary mind, there was apparently nothing extraordinary about it); for, upon the stoning away of every piece therein, she would impulsively exclaim:

"O Tom! do come and look at this!" And he would straightway go and look, and immediately thereafter there would come from the door a half-smothered voice in vehement protestation: "Oo-oo-oo! Oh my, you have just taken my breath! Go away, you great bear! and don't come near me again to-night."

Of course he would go away; and of course he was almost immediately called again, when the same performance, with scarcely any variation, would be repeated. Then the dishes were to be washed; and during this operation she would be taken by her ever-watchful husband as an invitation for his attention, and the next instant she was struggling in his enthusiastic arms.

She really enjoyed seeing him shoveled some modern Solomon's tale, and she had done such work in years. But he did it well, and mounted the stairs with his burden with all the decorum of a full-fledged benedict, greatly to the amusement of Anna, and even to the relaxation of the grave face of Lucy.

When up-stairs again, Mrs. Bayard gave Anna some advice in the matter of preparing breakfast; and, it then being late, she and Lucy, and her mother and sister; but she was glad when they were gone. She wanted to be alone with her husband, to go with him through all their rooms, to talk with him of the boy in their lives. And she and Tom went through the house together.

It was not much of a journey; for the twain were in humble circumstances; but every step of the way was a sweet one, and better than a bit of soap in the house. And get me a bottle of camphor. I used up what mother gave me yesterday, and I can't go through another night without something to deaden the awful ache.

"Why don't you have the tooth pulled?"

"What should I do that for? It ain't a decayed tooth; it's only a cold in my jaw."

Tom knew this, but there was a certain amount of pressure on his mind and had to be let off in some way. He could not very well protest against the errand at the grocer's. Had it been possible to do so, the two would have been for the grocer's.

Tom wanted to assure himself, if no one else, that she was leaving something undone.

"What shall I get the camphor in?" he asked, the fall in his voice indicating the depth of his disappointment over the failure of the tooth as an auxiliary.

"There's the bottle mother gave me; take that. It's on the bureau," she said.

There was the shadow of an idea flash in his young husband's mind that she might have got the bottle for him, while he went after it himself. But he said nothing. Then he left the house for the office, and Anna went wearily about the house, leaving her husband every little while stepping into the kitchen to tell Mrs. Trug about her tooth.

WHERE THEY BUILT.

Of course Mr. Phillips and the happy widow had their wedding-day; but it was not for our purpose to give the particulars of the ceremony. Already have we stretched this simple story beyond its contemplated dimensions, and we must now turn to the wedding itself. Mrs. Quimby insisted upon this; and, as the home of the fair bride in Sansaugamon was but a boarding-place, she could easily consent to the proposal.

To be sure Tom and Anna were at the ceremony, although it did look at one time as if the pleasure would not be theirs. The marriage was to take place at an early hour in the day, and at nine o'clock the carriage was to call for Tom and his wife. This demanded lively action on Anna's part. She had the breakfast to get and clear away, and the other work to do, before she could dress herself. So much endeavor had she made her nervous and irritable, and the temperament of her mind readily influenced him—the two being one. Someway the cooking did not go right. It had to be in a measure slighted, of course; but the time thus saved did not appear to count much as an advantage. As soon as Tom finished eating, he proceeded to dress himself, while Anna hastened to clear away the breakfast trifles. He got a clean shirt, and got it on, when he discovered that the back button was off. This was a great shock to Tom Griggs. If the crab-apple-tree in the front yard had stepped into the room, and lifted him by his back hair, he could scarcely have been more surprised and hurt.

He took off the garment—not, however, with that deliberation one employs in peeling a banana. Rather it seemed to come off as by a sudden impulse. Then he threw it back of him in a manner that implied considerable agitation. He took out another shirt, and examined it hastily. It was in good condition, and he put it on. A moment later, Anna in the pantry heard her name called.

"What is it?" she cried.

"Where have you put my collars? I can't find them."

Anna knew just how a table should be kept, the same as people outside of a newspaper office know just how a paper should be conducted. In her case, as in theirs, experience was too much for the idea, and got away with it. She did not feel this morning as if she could lift a hand to do a stroke of work; and the ache of her tooth made her temper sore all around its edges. Absorbed in the ache, and efforts to overcome it by applications of hot coffee, she was as silent as a stone.

As Tom chewed his food in silence, his mind was in that condition to be easily operated upon by the least observable trifles, if of a disagreeable nature. A 250-pound man might have wrecked his sides in an explosive guffaw right under the window without moving a single feature of Tom's face in sympathy therewith, while the whim of a child would have almost tempted him to lift his hand in anger.

As he chewed away, his eyes rested upon the table, vaguely at first, as if his mind were engaged far distant, and then gradually concentrated on the various spots or stains, until each one grew into such significance as to seriously annoy him. This led him to recollect that the coffee was muddy; that the steak was a crisp; that the potatoes were soggy; and recollecting these little episodes, it occurred to him that the coffee was always indifferent, the steak always overdone, the potatoes always water-soaked. Once well launched on this flood of recollections, there were a number of depressing reflections ready to greet him. Was it right that things should be so? Did he not have enough to battle with, without being crippled on the start with a half-furnished house, which was not much to ask that a clean spread should deck the table the morning of the wedding, which for hereinafter a bit of three dollars to make good a bank account. These were such inconsiderable trifles that he wondered why Anna did not look after them. At the same time his heart was hurt by the fact that she had been so long in the kitchen.

Thus brooding, he rose from the table; searched for his coat, and found it; searched for his hat, and found it; and then prepared to start. It was with a remarkably diffident step, as if his heart was so full of lead as to have slopped over, and run down the back of his legs, and formed a pool in each heel of his shoes. His starting aroused her. She sighed.

"You going?"

"Yes."

"I wish you'd step into Walker's and tell him to send me some potatoes, and a broom, and a bar of soap. Tell him to send me a bit of soap in the house. And get me a bottle of camphor. I used up what mother gave me yesterday, and I can't go through another night without something to deaden the awful ache."

"Why don't you have the tooth pulled?"

"What should I do that for? It ain't a decayed tooth; it's only a cold in my jaw."

Tom knew this, but there was a certain amount of pressure on his mind and had to be let off in some way. He could not very well protest against the errand at the grocer's. Had it been possible to do so, the two would have been for the grocer's.

Tom wanted to assure himself, if no one else, that she was leaving something undone.

"What shall I get the camphor in?" he asked, the fall in his voice indicating the depth of his disappointment over the failure of the tooth as an auxiliary.

"There's the bottle mother gave me; take that. It's on the bureau," she said.

There was the shadow of an idea flash in his young husband's mind that she might have got the bottle for him, while he went after it himself. But he said nothing. Then he left the house for the office, and Anna went wearily about the house, leaving her husband every little while stepping into the kitchen to tell Mrs. Trug about her tooth.

WHERE THEY BUILT.

Of course Mr. Phillips and the happy widow had their wedding-day; but it was not for our purpose to give the particulars of the ceremony. Already have we stretched this simple story beyond its contemplated dimensions, and we must now turn to the wedding itself. Mrs. Quimby insisted upon this; and, as the home of the fair bride in Sansaugamon was but a boarding-place, she could easily consent to the proposal.

To be sure Tom and Anna were at the ceremony, although it did look at one time as if the pleasure would not be theirs. The marriage was to take place at an early hour in the day, and at nine o'clock the carriage was to call for Tom and his wife. This demanded lively action on Anna's part. She had the breakfast to get and clear away, and the other work to do, before she could dress herself. So much endeavor had she made her nervous and irritable, and the temperament of her mind readily influenced him—the two being one. Someway the cooking did not go right. It had to be in a measure slighted, of course; but the time thus saved did not appear to count much as an advantage. As soon as Tom finished eating, he proceeded to dress himself, while Anna hastened to clear away the breakfast trifles. He got a clean shirt, and got it on, when he discovered that the back button was off. This was a great shock to Tom Griggs. If the crab-apple-tree in the front yard had stepped into the room, and lifted him by his back hair, he could scarcely have been more surprised and hurt.

He took off the garment—not, however, with that deliberation one employs in peeling a banana. Rather it seemed to come off as by a sudden impulse. Then he threw it back of him in a manner that implied considerable agitation. He took out another shirt, and examined it hastily. It was in good condition, and he put it on. A moment later, Anna in the pantry heard her name called.

"What is it?" she cried.

"Where have you put my collars? I can't find them."

"They are in the drawer with your shirts," she answered.

There was a moment of silence. "They ain't here," he then asserted. "Anna listened to the room, saying: 'Dear me!'"

Her face fell as she saw the disordered bureau.

"O Tom! what have you been doing?" She could have cried, she was so heated and vexed.

"I have been looking for those collars, and I can't find them."

She went to the bureau.

"They ain't there," he protested.

She made no reply, but picked up several of the articles in the shirt-drawer and brought forth a collar. It was an ungenerous thing for her to do, and Tom resented it.

"I don't see the sense, Anna, in putting my collars in a place like that, where they can't be found without burrowing like a woodchuck."

"They have always been kept there, and that is the place for them; and you would have found them if you had looked."

"Look! Didn't I look, I'd like to know?" he demanded. But she was back to her work again, without replying to him. It was not, however, because she wished to keep silent. Every moment her voice came from the other rooms in such encouraging observations as the following:

"O dear me!"

"I never can get ready, I know!"

"Here it is nearly eight o'clock, and nothing done!"

"Gracious! what shall I do?"

"I shan't stop to make the bed."

"That carriage will be here before I've got half enough!"

"I'll leave the dishes in the sink until I get back."

In the meantime Tom wrestled with the collar, which refused for a long time to button; and with his stockings, which seemed determined to go on heels upward in spite of his frantic efforts to keep them down. Then he had a time to it to find his cuff buttons, which some one had deliberately gone off with.

He knew this to be a fact, because he distinctly remembered where he put the buttons when he last used them, and they could not have walked away themselves. Some one had, undoubtedly, broken into the house in the night and removed them. It was a comical, but a terrible trick, anyway. Anna was dressing herself now, and she had too much to do to look up the buttons. But she had no sympathy with the burglar theory. If he had put the buttons where he said he did, they would be there now. He was too vexed to speak. It was so ungenerous, so harsh, for her to say this. He would find them himself, or he would go without them, before he would ask her help.

Anna was using the glass to crimp her hair. She was nervous, excited, heated. She never knew her hair to be so contrary as it was this morning; and it never had been. She burnt her hand, too, with the pencil. It seemed, as she admitted herself, she would go wild.

She hastily snatched a towel from the rack, and something fell on the floor. It was a pair of soiled cuffs. They were Tom's.

"I must have been the burglar," he suggested.

"I know I didn't do it," he persisted, still with his back toward her.

"O, it was the burglar!" she hastened to assure him. "He took your cuffs, and then he hunted up the dirty cuffs, and put the buttons in them, and left them on the rack, under the towel."

"Come, Anna," he hastily said, "this is no time for foolishness."

The carriage arrived at a full quarter of an hour before she was ready. This added to the frustration. He was all dressed, and, having nothing else to do, went to the front door to look at the carriage, and then came back and told her it was there, and asked her how long she was going to be; and then went back to look at it again, and immediately returned to tell her it was still waiting, and would she never get ready. After doing this a half-dozen times, the poor girl cried out in desperation:

"Tom, if you can't help me, for pity's sake don't drive me wild!"

He sullenly retired.

Finally she was ready. She took her handkerchief-box from a bureau-drawer to select a handkerchief. As she lifted the box, a bit of paper fell on the floor. She picked it up, gave it a hasty glance, and threw it on the bureau. He came back at this juncture, and with short-cropped gray hair and beard. He ran away when discovered, but was captured after a long chase. It was evident that he had been in the woods for some time. He talked wildly, in a language that no one in the neighborhood understood. He was finally taken to the county seat and placed in jail. There it was found that his strange language was French and that he was evidently insane.

When asked what his name was he drew the figure of a cross, and he exclaimed in French: "I am the Empire." The county authorities refused to assume any responsibility in the case of the strange being, and threw him on the Damascene authorities. No one in the township would take charge of the unfortunate lunatic as a pauper, and, as an easy way out of the dilemma, he was placed on an Erie Railway train with a ticket to a station in a neighboring county. Before the train reached that station the man leaped from the car while in rapid motion, swam the Delaware river and disappeared once more in the woods of Wayne County.

An account of the circumstances of his capture, and the extraordinary disposal that was made of him was printed in a local paper and some weeks afterward it was learned that the wild man was a pauper lunatic from a New York county. He was a Frenchman, who had lost his mind over the defeat of the French army by Germany and the destruction of the Empire. Having been pronounced an incurable case, the county authorities were taking him to a State institution, via the Erie Railway, and he escaped from their custody at a small station bordering on Wayne County, and a long search failed to effect his capture. That this

Hunting a Wild Man.

Much of the upper part of Wayne County is still an unbroken wilderness, and a resort for hunters from all parts of the country. Charles Ames and Frank Allaben, of Rochester, N. Y., have been camping near Upper Woods Pond during the past week. On Monday they were driving a ridge for deer. Their dogs worked off the ridge to the edge of a dense laurel swamp. Ames was standing at the foot of the ridge on a "run-away," pointed out to him by his guide. The yelping of the hounds and a commotion in the swamp put Ames on his mettle, as he supposed a deer was about to leap out into the open space and give him a chance for a shot. His gun was raised ready to fire, when to his surprise he saw a human being spring from the bushes and run rapidly across the opening toward the mountains. He ran in a stooping position, and helped himself along by a dexterous plying of the thick scrub oaks with his hands. His head was bare and his hair long. The opening across which he ran was several rods wide where the thick timber began. The strange being ran so fast that the hunter had very little time to note his appearance, but he saw that he was very scantly clad.

Ames was so startled for the time that the man had reached the woods before the hunter had recovered himself. Then he resolved to follow the wild man—as he believed the thing to be—and if possible capture him. Shouting to Allaben and the guide the three started in pursuit. The guide said that a man named the fugitive had been seen before in that region by wood-choppers, but not for over a year. For some distance the hunters proceeded cautiously through the woods, but saw no trace of the object of their search. The dogs could not be made to take his trail. Finally the hunters stopped on the brow of the ridge and concluded to abandon the hunt. One of the dogs had gone off a short distance, and the fugitive attracted the attention of the men. They walked in the direction of the noise and discovered the wild man crouching in the limb of a tree near the trunk and about eight feet from the ground. As the hunter approached he slowly swung himself to the ground and ran off into the woods. The guide instantly raised his gun and aimed at the fleeing man, but before he could fire Ames struck the gun upwards and the charge passed over the fugitive's head. The guide said he had not realized what he had killed the man. The hunters were now more than ever determined to come up with the singular creature, and they had up the hill.

Ames was using the glass to crimp her hair. She was nervous, excited, heated. She never knew her hair to be so contrary as it was this morning; and it never had been. She burnt her hand, too, with the pencil. It seemed, as she admitted herself, she would go wild.

She hastily snatched a towel from the rack, and something fell on the floor. It was a pair of soiled cuffs. They were Tom's.

"I must have been the burglar," he suggested.

"I know I didn't do it," he persisted, still with his back toward her.

"O, it was the burglar!" she hastened to assure him. "He took your cuffs, and then he hunted up the dirty cuffs, and put the buttons in them, and left them on the rack, under the towel."

"Come, Anna," he hastily said, "this is no time for foolishness."

The carriage arrived at a full quarter of an hour before she was ready. This added to the frustration. He was all dressed, and, having nothing else to do, went to the front door to look at the carriage, and then came back and told her it was there, and asked her how long she was going to be; and then went back to look at it again, and immediately returned to tell her it was still waiting, and would she never get ready. After doing this a half-dozen times, the poor girl cried out in desperation:

"Tom, if you can't help me, for pity's sake don't drive me wild!"

He sullenly retired.

Finally she was ready. She took her handkerchief-box from a bureau-drawer to select a handkerchief. As she lifted the box, a bit of paper fell on the floor. She picked it up, gave it a hasty glance, and threw it on the bureau. He came back at this juncture, and with short-cropped gray hair and beard. He ran away when discovered, but was captured after a long chase. It was evident that he had been in the woods for some time. He talked wildly, in a language that no one in the neighborhood understood. He was finally taken to the county seat and placed in jail. There it was found that his strange language was French and that he was evidently insane.

When asked what his name was he drew the figure of a cross, and he exclaimed in French: "I am the Empire." The county authorities refused to assume any responsibility in the case of the strange being, and threw him on the Damascene authorities. No one in the township would take charge of the unfortunate lunatic as a pauper, and, as an easy way out of the dilemma, he was placed on an Erie Railway train with a ticket to a station in a neighboring county. Before the train reached that station the man leaped from the car while in rapid motion, swam the Delaware river and disappeared once more in the woods of Wayne County.

An account of the circumstances of his capture, and the extraordinary disposal that was made of him was printed in a local paper and some weeks afterward it was learned that the wild man was a pauper lunatic from a New York county. He was a Frenchman, who had lost his mind over the defeat of the French army by Germany and the destruction of the Empire. Having been pronounced an incurable case, the county authorities were taking him to a State institution, via the Erie Railway, and he escaped from their custody at a small station bordering on Wayne County, and a long search failed to effect his capture. That this

When the hunter drew close enough to touch the wildman the latter turned and walked towards the thicket again. Ames sprang forward and caught hold of the man's shoulders, which were naked. Quick as a cat he turned and clasped Allaben about the hips. Raising the hunter from the ground he threw him heavily, head first, into the bushes. Allaben maintained his hold, and the wild man fell with him into the thicket, but in an instant was on his feet again, and, tearing loose from the hunter, ran back into the woods. Ames and the guide were but a few hundred yards distant, but so quickly had the encounter begun and ended that it was over before they reached the spot. Allaben received a sprained wrist, some bad scratches and a badly bruised forehead from his severe fall, but the hunt for the wild man was continued for two hours. All efforts to obtain further trace of him failed. Allaben says that the man was nearly naked, the covering that he had on being a small bit of about seven years of age, but the main street, attacked a woman with a baby, then two boys about four years of age, and, having bitten their heads through to the brain, rushed up the street, and, after biting several other persons, turned off on the railroad.

By this time a large crowd, headed by the village elder, and armed with whips, guns, scythes, &c., gave chase to the terrible animal. They caught up with the wolf about one mile from the village, and a peasant, who was to approach within about fifteen paces, shot the animal straight in his open jaw. Notwithstanding the wound he had received, the wolf sprang up and attacked the peasant. The latter did not lose his presence of mind, and struck the animal with the butt end of his gun, which shattered at the blow, and the wolf seized the peasant by the side, but owing to the man wearing three coats, his skin was only scratched. The courageous man then gripped the animal with both hands. During this struggle between a man and a mad wolf the crowd which had come up hesitated, through fear, to attempt the rescue of their comrade. Fortunately a local policeman galloped up at this juncture, and, drawing his revolver, shot the wolf through the head.

The wolf had bitten no less than twenty-five persons, ten of whom are in a dangerous state. The sufferers were isolated from the rest of the inhabitants, and medical aid was at once administered to them. It is reported that the wolf came from the settlement of Dorgenkoff (situated about eighteen miles from Barvenkoff), where a mad ox had died, and had been buried, but so carelessly that on the following morning his body was found scattered about.—St. Petersburg Golos.

A VERY much incriminated fellow stands at the edge of the sidewalk and looks doubtfully at the crowd of carriages. Near him stands an extremely venerable and dignified old gentleman, who after looking on awhile, kindly takes the younger man by the arm and helps him across the street. When he is safe on the other sidewalk, he blurs out with tipsy gratitude: "Thank you! You know what it is to be drunk!"

A Remedy for Diphtheria.

In view of the increase of diphtheria in several places of the State of New York I hasten to communicate to you for publicity a very simple remedy, which, having been used in Russia and Germany, may prove effective here. Out of several others, Dr. Letzerich, who made extensive experiments in the application of this remedy, has used it in twenty-seven cases, eight of which were of a very serious nature, all of which had a favorable result except in one case, when the child died from a complication of diseases. For children of one year he prescribes the remedy, for internal use every one or two hours, as follows:

Natr. benzoic, pur. 5.0 solv. in aq. distillat aq. menth. pipper. ana. 40.0 syr. corb. aur. 10.0

For children from one to three years old he prescribes it from seven to eight grammes for 100 grammes of distilled water, with same syrup; for children from three to seven years old he prescribes ten to fifteen grammes; for grown persons from fifteen to twenty-five grammes for each 100 grammes.

Besides this he uses also with great success the insufflation on the diphtherial membrane through a syringe, in serious cases every three hours, in light cases three times a day of the natr. benzoic powder. For grown people he prescribes for gargling a dilution of ten grammes of this powder for 200 grammes of water.

The effect of the remedy is rapid. After twenty-four or thirty-six hours the feverish symptoms disappear completely and the temperature and pulse become normal. The remedy has been used also with the same success by Dr. Brahm Braun and Professor Klebs, in Prag; Dr. Senator, in Cassel, and several others in Russia and Germany.

Hoping that the publication through your widely spread paper will prove beneficial in the United States, I remain, yours, very truly,

N. SHISHKIN.
Minister of Russia to the United States.
—N. Y. Telegram.

A Mad Wolf Running a Muck.

On the 7th of October, about seven a.m., the peasants from the adjoining villages had collected together at a fair, which was held at the settlement of Barvenkoff, District of Lzume, and the male portion of the assembly had dispersed to the drinking shops, to make bargains and drink and eat, leaving the women and children in charge of the carts. Suddenly there resounded through the square a heart-rending shriek for assistance, and then all was quiet. The peasants rushed out of the drinking booths, and into the street, and before they had time to collect their thoughts there appeared from behind a building situated on the edge of the square an enormous wolf.

Everybody rushed in great confusion to their carts, shouting "Mad wolf!" Meantime the gigantic wolf, frothing at the mouth, and with his tongue hanging out, made for the carts. A dreadful tumult occurred. The horses and oxen dashed in all directions, but the majority, getting entangled, fell, overturning the carts, while the noise made by the pigs, sheep, geese, fowls, etc., added to the uproar and confusion.

The wolf, when within a short distance of the first group of carts, dashed on, sprang on to a woman who was running past, and in a moment she was prostrate on the ground, having lost her face, scalp and lower part of her face. The wolf then ran further and attacked a small lad of about seven years of age, but the main street, attacked a woman with a baby, then two boys about four years of age, and, having bitten their heads through to the brain, rushed up the street, and, after biting several other persons, turned off on the railroad.

By this time a large crowd, headed by the village elder, and armed with whips, guns, scythes, &c., gave chase to the terrible animal. They caught up with the wolf about one mile from the village, and a peasant, who was to approach within about fifteen paces, shot the animal straight in his open jaw. Notwithstanding the wound he had received, the wolf sprang up and attacked the peasant. The latter did not lose his presence of mind, and struck the animal with the butt end of his gun, which shattered at the blow, and the wolf seized the peasant by the side, but owing to the man wearing three coats, his skin was only scratched. The courageous man then gripped the animal with both hands. During this struggle between a man and a mad wolf the crowd which had come up hesitated, through fear, to attempt the rescue of their comrade. Fortunately a local policeman galloped up at this juncture, and, drawing his revolver, shot the wolf through the head.

The wolf had bitten no less than twenty-five persons, ten of whom are in a dangerous state. The sufferers were isolated from the rest of the inhabitants, and medical aid was at once administered to them. It is reported that the wolf came from the settlement of Dorgenkoff (situated about eighteen miles from Barvenkoff), where a mad ox had died, and had been buried, but so carelessly that on the following morning his body was found scattered about.—St. Petersburg Golos.

A VERY much incriminated fellow stands at the edge of the sidewalk and looks doubtfully at the crowd of carriages. Near him stands an extremely venerable and dignified old gentleman, who after looking on awhile, kindly takes the younger man by the arm and helps him across the street. When he is safe on the other sidewalk, he blurs out with tipsy gratitude: "Thank you! You know what it is to be drunk!"

The Republican.

JAN. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRITT CO., MD.

THE HUSKING BEE.

The rooster stalks on the manger's ledge.
He has a tail like a scimitar's edge.
A marshall's plume on his Afghan neck,
An admiral's stride on his quarter deck.
He rules the roost and walks the hay,
With a dreadful caw and a Turkish way.
Two broadsword flies with his rapid wings
This scimitar plume on his Afghan neck.
Five lusty exiles rouse the rooster.
The Saxon lullies in their wooden shoes.
Are playing school with the a, b, c's.
A, b, c, d, e, f, g, h, i, j, k, l, m, n, o, p, q, r, s, t, u, v, w, x, y, z.
Till they make the blizzard howl tell,
And a half-languid wretch tell,
When down in the rack the clover falls.
A dove is waiting around his mate.
Two elephants black on his wing of state.
And showing off with a winking note
The stentorian of his golden throat.
It is Paul's "Art of Love" recited
In a halting line of line and gait.
The bayonet girls have helped the boys.
The noble lieutenants of humble troops.
As they straggled back with rattling fold
From eight-hundred corn as yellow as gold.
By the candlelight in pumpkin howl tell,
Aid the gleam that in pumpkin howl tell,
In the quiet of his father's footed tin.
From the hermit dim set up within.
By the rarer light in girlish eyes.
An duck as well as a blue as skies.
I hear the laugh when the ear is red.
The blush with the forehead red.
The cedar cakes with the ancient twist.
The cedar cakes that the girls have kissed.
And I love the girls through the dark.
And I love the girls through the dark.
Wait face to face till the music howl
Shall whip the time from the violin.
And the merry pines of the forest begin.
—H. F. Taylor.

A COURIER'S STORY.

My name is Carl Johann Roedel.
By birth and nationality I am a Swiss but cosmopolitan in every taste and habit. In my early days I regularly followed the profession of a courier, as I do now occasionally when any of my old patrons or their friends require such services, which is rather infrequent, the taste of the traveling public having degenerated into hasty journey by express trains, with the consequent loss of all enjoyment of the different phases of scenery through which the travelers are passing. In the course of my many years' experience I have been witness to many strange occurrences, have assisted in many a secret and adventurous undertaking, and have been subject to many perils. From among such varied experiences I give the following strange story, suppressing for obvious reasons the real names of those interested.

Many years ago I was engaged as courier to His Excellency the Honorable Frederick Eslington, Ambassador Extraordinary to the British Majesty King George, on a special secret mission to one of the great Continental powers. Having finished his duties and successfully attained the object of his mission, we started on our homeward journey in the summer of 18—. The period was one to be long remembered, from the political excitement
which existed throughout all Europe,
almost every government having unsheathed the sword. We had traveled a considerable part of the first stage of our return journey when His Excellency who was feeling the fatigues of the incessant traveling in the heavy, rumbling carriage, said he would stop at the next town, and that he would refresh and refreshment, both of which he was much in need of, besides having important state documents to transcribe.
In due course we arrived at the small town of S—, in the confines of Germany, where we put up. We staid a day and a half there; and I was then instructed to have the carriage and horses in readiness to continue our journey. His Excellency meantime had completed his writings, to which he had assiduously applied himself;
and told me, as it was a fine afternoon he would take a short walk, and on his return resume his journey at once, and I must therefore make all necessary preparations. Accordingly I left the hotel. But he was never seen afterward, nor was anything known of his fate.

I waited for upward of an hour anxiously, and then made a close search for him, which I continued for several days, but not a trace could I discover of my master. A villager, however, living outside the town, brought me to the hotel a pair of overalls, which he stated he had found in a neighborly copse. I immediately examined the garment as belonging to His Excellency, and at once repaired with the villager to the copse, and closely examined the spot, but found no trace or sign of anystraggle.

Finding it useless to prosecute the search, I at once returned to London with His Excellency's traveling gear, which I handed to his family. The British Government at once instituted inquiries, as also did His Excellency's family, and large rewards were offered by both, and advertisements widely disseminated for any information respecting the missing Ambassador; but they failed one and all to gain any information of or the slightest clue to his fate. A certain amount of suspicion attached to me, but it was only momentary, and I at once cleared myself of it, and assisted the distraught wife and her missing husband's family as much as lay in my power. Well I remember the agonies of anxiety and suspense caused to the Ambassador's wife and family by the distressing calamity.
Magisterial investigation was made,
experts were employed, and every endeavor made to penetrate the dark veil of mystery surrounding the event; but all efforts were unsuccessful. One of His Majesty's Ambassadors had completely and mysteriously disappeared without leaving a clue to light up the awful obscurity which enveloped the tragic occurrence.

Several years had elapsed since the distressing event, and the memory, the painful memory of it was beginning to fade from my mind when I happened to be in Antwerp on a short tour through Belgium with patrons. And while listlessly strolling by myself on the quay one summer's evening, watching the passengers disembarking from the newly-arrived steamer, I was accused by a mean, haggard-looking little man of beggarly appearance, who spoke to me in Flemish.

"Are you not Herr Roedel the courier?" said he.

"Yes," replied I. "What do you want with me? Who are you?"

"I suppose you have quite forgotten me?" said he.

I stared at him keenly. The man's features were somewhat familiar to me, yet I was confused in my remembrance of how and where I had seen him. "I do not know you," said I.

"Yes, you do, and very well," replied he. "My name is Ludwig Kuhl, and I have frequently driven you the first stage out of Vienna. I did so last year, and you were courier to His Excellency the Honorable Eslington, in the summer of the year 18—."

(The courier is remembered even when the patron is forgotten, for it is to his landlords and their servants look for their gratuities.)

I stared at him, and then recognized the haggard looks. "True," said I;
"I remember you now well. How goes it with you?" "What do you here in Antwerp?" "The old trade, eh?"

"Ah, no," he replied, with a deeply drawn sigh. "It's a long story, and I can't tell it to you here in all this noise
and bustle. Let us go to a quiet corner."

I agreed; and in our short walk I revolved in my mind all those circumstances, so dark and impenetrable in their profound mystery, which had happened years before. And I remembered how our postilion, Ludwig Kuhl,
had assisted me in the unavailing search
for His Excellency. Soon we reached a little cabaret—the name is legion in Antwerp—in one of the back streets
near the cathedral, and with a glass of his favorite Boonjcamp in front of
him, he seated himself, and told me
the following sequel to the mysterious disappearance.

"You must remember me, friend,"
he began, "when I was in a better condition than you now see me;" and he
scanned his wretched garments, shrug-
ging his shoulders with an impatient air.

I nodded acquiescence.

"Well," said he, "you must also know in your long experience of travel
that all classes of society on the Continent, and particularly in Vienna, have their secret club. The positions which they hold, and the influence which they exercise, is subject to the rule of the Chief Secret Society. In my younger days, friend, I was induced, in an unlucky moment, to enroll myself as a member, and take the oaths of the Secret Society of Postilions. Bitterly
I regretted since, for it is to that circumstance I owe my present deplorable state of mind and position."

"But what has that to do with the mysterious case of His Excellency?" I asked of him, somewhat impatiently.

"Much more than you imagine or can ever know, friend," replied he,
sentimentally wagging his head. He paused for a moment. "Well, I will tell you, though you must not break
my story with your inquiring questions. Firstly, then, you must know that I was out the establishment
of Herr Spultzen, the carriage-master
and stable-keeper from whom His Excellency the Honorable Eslington hired his return journey. It was known to the Chief Secret Society that His Excellency was in possession of important
papers, and it was also known that he was on the point of starting with them
for England. The Chief Commander
had important reasons for obtaining
these papers, or copies of them, and of
one in particular above all others, by fair means or foul; and what the Chief
meant to do, is done, is done invariably
at any cost. The Committee had balloted for the person who must execute their orders, and their choice had fallen on
me as postilion, and the more you must effect a successful result. By virtue of my oath I was bound to obey, or I should have suffered a secret death, by assassination probably. I need not tell you my instructions; but a dreadful
fate awaited you in the event of your disobedience. I was to follow you, and in every town through which we passed
there were emissaries of the Chief Society to assist me, so great is its organization; and when I received your instructions to pull up at the next town, which you remember was S—. I knew the wishes of the Chief Commander would be effectually carried out. The landlord
of the hotel you stayed at and the head
hostler were known to me as members of the Chief Society, and there were other residents in the town also members, whom I did not know. So you see, my friend, how His Excellency
and you were encompassed in a net
from which there was no escape; and
and afterward," said he, "I said it."
"Now you remember how His Excellency
was always engaged in writing his dispatches and documents. Well, there was consequently great difficulty
in getting a view of the papers, and
of course, the more important the documents, the more important to the Chief Commander."

"What!" I exclaimed, in great astonishment, my hair almost on end
with the suddenness of the confession—
what? Do you mean to tell me, Carl
Johann Roedel, that you murdered
His Excellency in cold blood?"

"Not exactly that, friend," he quietly replied. "When His Excellency
went for that short walk, the head
hostler also went for a stroll in the same direction. A short distance from the town the hostler met a friend, also
a member, and they quickly bowed
and gagged His Excellency, and carried
him to the cellar of the latter's house,
where they kept him secretly until after the excitement of the disappearance and search had subsided, when he was taken to Vienna in the involuntary
disguise of a dangerous lunatic patient,
and he made a significant sign indicative of strangulation. "The papers were abstracted by the landlord, and handed to me, and I
in turn delivered them to the Chief Commander personally. Naturally, was
if you recollect, because only one other person besides His Excellency and the Chief Commander knew of them, and he dared not say what they were."

"But how," asked I, "was everything kept so quietly, as the British Government made a great stir over the matter, and large rewards were offered?"

"Well," replied he, "those to whom the matter was referred were mostly
members of the Chief Society, which,
you must remember, numbered in its
roll members of all ranks and stations.
The pair of overalls found in the copse

some days after the disappearance were purposely placed there to lead and encourage the belief that His Excellency
had been robbed and then murdered."

"But you do not account for your
being here in Antwerp now," said I.

"Well, friend," continued he, and
he drew himself closer to me and spoke
in a very low tone—"well, the Chief Commander, in consequence of the stir
made by both the British and our Government, and fearing disclosure on account of the large rewards offered, took effective steps to prevent it by ordering
the deaths of those concerned in the tragedy. The landlord of the hotel,
however, suddenly decamped to America—where he will be tracked, never fear—after hearing of the deaths of the hostler and his friend, who were found
stabbed in their beds, and I escaped
here, by circuitous routes, and I have remained in hiding ever since. But I am already known and discovered, and I go daily in fear of my life. The sign of the Black Dagger here,"—and he
tore open his vest and shirt, disclosing
the print of a dagger on his breast—"is known to all members of the Secret Society. My death-warrant has long ago
been signed, and I am studiously watched. I fear, however, the Chief Commander is dead."

"Ah, no," he replied, with a deeply
drawn sigh. "It's a long story, and I
can't tell it to you here in all this noise
and bustle. Let us go to a quiet
corner."

I agreed; and in our short walk I re-
volved in my mind all those circumstances, so dark and impenetrable in
their profound mystery, which had happened years before. And I remembered how our postilion, Ludwig Kuhl,
had assisted me in the unavailing search
for His Excellency. Soon we reached a little cabaret—the name is legion in Antwerp—in one of the back streets
near the cathedral, and with a glass of
his favorite Boonjcamp in front of
him, he seated himself, and told me
the following sequel to the mysterious
disappearance.

"You must remember me, friend,"
he began, "when I was in a better condition than you now see me;" and he
scanned his wretched garments, shrug-
ging his shoulders with an impatient air.

I nodded acquiescence.

"Well," said he, "you must also
know in your long experience of travel
that all classes of society on the Continent, and particularly in Vienna, have their secret club. The positions which they hold, and the influence which they
exercise, is subject to the rule of the Chief Secret Society. In my younger
days, friend, I was induced, in an un-
lucky moment, to enroll myself as a member, and take the oaths of the Secret Society of Postilions. Bitterly
I regretted since, for it is to that circumstance I owe my present deplora-
ble state of mind and position."

"But what has that to do with the mysterious case of His Excellency?" I asked of him, somewhat impatiently.

"Much more than you imagine or
can ever know, friend," replied he,
sentimentally wagging his head. He paused for a moment. "Well, I will tell you, though you must not break
my story with your inquiring questions. Firstly, then, you must know that I was out the establishment
of Herr Spultzen, the carriage-master
and stable-keeper from whom His Excellency the Honorable Eslington hired
his return journey. It was known to the Chief Secret Society that His Excellency was in possession of important
papers, and it was also known that he
was on the point of starting with them
for England. The Chief Commander
had important reasons for obtaining
these papers, or copies of them, and of
one in particular above all others, by
fair means or foul; and what the Chief
meant to do, is done, is done invariably
at any cost. The Committee had ballot-
ed for the person who must execute their
orders, and their choice had fallen on
me as postilion, and the more you must
effect a successful result. By virtue of my oath I was bound to obey, or I should have suffered a secret death, by assassination probably. I need not tell
you my instructions; but a dreadful
fate awaited you in the event of your
disobedience. I was to follow you, and
in every town through which we passed
there were emissaries of the Chief Society to assist me, so great is its organization; and when I received your instructions to pull up at the next town, which
you remember was S—. I knew the wishes of the Chief Commander would
be effectually carried out. The landlord
of the hotel you stayed at and the head
hostler were known to me as members of the Chief Society, and there
were other residents in the town also members, whom I did not know. So you
see, my friend, how His Excellency
and you were encompassed in a net
from which there was no escape; and
and afterward," said he, "I said it."

"Now you remember how His Excellency
was always engaged in writing his dispatches and documents. Well, there
was consequently great difficulty
in getting a view of the papers, and
of course, the more important the documents, the more important to the Chief Commander."

"What!" I exclaimed, in great astonishment, my hair almost on end
with the suddenness of the confession—
what? Do you mean to tell me, Carl
Johann Roedel, that you murdered
His Excellency in cold blood?"

"Not exactly that, friend," he quietly replied. "When His Excellency
went for that short walk, the head
hostler also went for a stroll in the same direction. A short distance from the town the hostler met a friend, also
a member, and they quickly bowed
and gagged His Excellency, and carried
him to the cellar of the latter's house,
where they kept him secretly until
after the excitement of the disappearance and search had subsided, when he was taken to Vienna in the involuntary
disguise of a dangerous lunatic patient,
and he made a significant sign indicative of strangu-
lation. "The papers were abstracted by
the landlord, and handed to me, and I
in turn delivered them to the Chief Commander personally. Naturally, was
if you recollect, because only one other
person besides His Excellency and the Chief Commander knew of them, and
he dared not say what they were."

"But how," asked I, "was everything kept so quietly, as the British Government made a great stir over the matter, and large rewards were offered?"

"Well," replied he, "those to whom
the matter was referred were mostly
members of the Chief Society, which,
you must remember, numbered in its
roll members of all ranks and stations.
The pair of overalls found in the copse

some days after the disappearance were
purposely placed there to lead and encourage the belief that His Excellency
had been robbed and then murdered."

"But you do not account for your
being here in Antwerp now," said I.

"Well, friend," continued he, and
he drew himself closer to me and spoke
in a very low tone—"well, the Chief Commander, in consequence of the stir
made by both the British and our Government, and fearing disclosure on account of the large rewards offered, took
effective steps to prevent it by ordering
the deaths of those concerned in the tragedy. The landlord of the hotel,
however, suddenly decamped to America—where he will be tracked, never
fear—after hearing of the deaths of the
hostler and his friend, who were found
stabbed in their beds, and I escaped
here, by circuitous routes, and I have remained in hiding ever since. But I am already known and discovered, and
I go daily in fear of my life. The sign of the Black Dagger here,"—and he
tore open his vest and shirt, disclosing
the print of a dagger on his breast—"is known to all members of the Secret Society. My death-warrant has long ago
been signed, and I am studiously
watched. I fear, however, the Chief Commander is dead."

"Ah, no," he replied, with a deeply
drawn sigh. "It's a long story, and I
can't tell it to you here in all this noise
and bustle. Let us go to a quiet
corner."

I agreed; and in our short walk I re-
volved in my mind all those circumstances, so dark and impenetrable in
their profound mystery, which had happened years before. And I remembered how our postilion, Ludwig Kuhl,
had assisted me in the unavailing search
for His Excellency. Soon we reached a little cabaret—the name is legion in Antwerp—in one of the back streets
near the cathedral, and with a glass of
his favorite Boonjcamp in front of
him, he seated himself, and told me
the following sequel to the mysterious
disappearance.

"You must remember me, friend,"
he began, "when I was in a better condition than you now see me;" and he
scanned his wretched garments, shrug-
ging his shoulders with an impatient air.

I nodded acquiescence.

"Well," said he, "you must also
know in your long experience of travel
that all classes of society on the Continent, and particularly in Vienna, have their secret club. The positions which they hold, and the influence which they
exercise, is subject to the rule of the Chief Secret Society. In my younger
days, friend, I was induced, in an un-
lucky moment, to enroll myself as a member, and take the oaths of the Secret Society of Postilions. Bitterly
I regretted since, for it is to that circumstance I owe my present deplora-
ble state of mind and position."

"But what has that to do with the mysterious case of His Excellency?" I asked of him, somewhat impatiently.

"Much more than you imagine or
can ever know, friend," replied he,
sentimentally wagging his head. He paused for a moment. "Well, I will tell you, though you must not break
my story with your inquiring questions. Firstly, then, you must know that I was out the establishment
of Herr Spultzen, the carriage-master
and stable-keeper from whom His Excellency the Honorable Eslington hired
his return journey. It was known to the Chief Secret Society that His Excellency was in possession of important
papers, and it was also known that he
was on the point of starting with them
for England. The Chief Commander
had important reasons for obtaining
these papers, or copies of them, and of
one in particular above all others, by
fair means or foul; and what the Chief
meant to do, is done, is done invariably
at any cost. The Committee had ballot-
ed for the person who must execute their
orders, and their choice had fallen on
me as postilion, and the more you must
effect a successful result. By virtue of my oath I was bound to obey, or I should have suffered a secret death, by assassination probably. I need not tell
you my instructions; but a dreadful
fate awaited you in the event of your
disobedience. I was to follow you, and
in every town through which we passed
there were emissaries of the Chief Society to assist me, so great is its organization; and when I received your instructions to pull up at the next town, which
you remember was S—. I knew the wishes of the Chief Commander would
be effectually carried out. The landlord
of the hotel you stayed at and the head
hostler were known to me as members of the Chief Society, and there
were other residents in the town also members, whom I did not know. So you
see, my friend, how His Excellency
and you were encompassed in a net
from which there was no escape; and
and afterward," said he, "I said it."

"Now you remember how His Excellency
was always engaged in writing his dispatches and documents. Well, there
was consequently great difficulty
in getting a view of the papers, and
of course, the more important the documents, the more important to the Chief Commander."

"What!" I exclaimed, in great astonishment, my hair almost on end
with the suddenness of the confession—
what? Do you mean to tell me, Carl
Johann Roedel, that you murdered
His Excellency in cold blood?"

"Not exactly that, friend," he quietly replied. "When His Excellency
went for that short walk, the head
hostler also went for a stroll in the same direction. A short distance from the town the hostler met a friend, also
a member, and they quickly bowed
and gagged His Excellency, and carried
him to the cellar of the latter's house,
where they kept him secretly until
after the excitement of the disappearance and search had subsided, when he was taken to Vienna in the involuntary
disguise of a dangerous lunatic patient,
and he made a significant sign indicative of strangu-
lation. "The papers were abstracted by
the landlord, and handed to me, and I
in turn delivered them to the Chief Commander personally. Naturally, was
if you recollect, because only one other
person besides His Excellency and the Chief Commander knew of them, and
he dared not say what they were."

"But how," asked I, "was everything kept so quietly, as the British Government made a great stir over the matter, and large rewards were offered?"

"Well," replied he, "those to whom
the matter was referred were mostly
members of the Chief Society, which,
you must remember, numbered in its
roll members of all ranks and stations.
The pair of overalls found in the copse

some days after the disappearance were
purposely placed there to lead and encourage the belief that His Excellency
had been robbed and then murdered."

"But you do not account for your
being here in Antwerp now," said I.

"Well, friend," continued he, and
he drew himself closer to me and spoke
in a very low tone—"well, the Chief Commander, in consequence of the stir
made by both the British and our Government, and fearing disclosure on account of the large rewards offered, took
effective steps to prevent it by ordering
the deaths of those concerned in the tragedy. The landlord of the hotel,
however, suddenly decamped to America—where he will be tracked, never
fear—after hearing of the deaths of the
hostler and his friend, who were found
stabbed in their beds, and I escaped
here, by circuitous routes, and I have remained in hiding ever since. But I am already known and discovered, and
I go daily in fear of my life. The sign of the Black Dagger here,"—and he
tore open his vest and shirt, disclosing
the print of a dagger on his breast—"is known to all members of the Secret Society. My death-warrant has long ago
been signed, and I am studiously
watched. I fear, however, the Chief Commander is dead."

"Ah, no," he replied, with a deeply
drawn sigh. "It's a long story, and I
can't tell it to you here in all this noise
and bustle. Let us go to a quiet
corner."

I agreed; and in our short walk I re-
volved in my mind all those circumstances, so dark and impenetrable in
their profound mystery, which had happened years before. And I remembered how our postilion, Ludwig Kuhl,
had assisted me in the unavailing search
for His Excellency. Soon we reached a little cabaret—the name is legion in Antwerp—in one of the back streets
near the cathedral, and with a glass of
his favorite Boonjcamp in front of
him, he seated himself, and told me
the following sequel to the mysterious
disappearance.

"You must remember me, friend,"
he began, "when I was in a better condition than you now see me;" and he
scanned his wretched garments, shrug-
ging his shoulders with an impatient air.

I nodded acquiescence.

"Well," said he, "you must also
know in your long experience of travel
that all classes of society on the Continent, and particularly in Vienna, have their secret club. The positions which they hold, and the influence which they
exercise, is subject to the rule of the Chief Secret Society. In my younger
days, friend, I was induced, in an un-
lucky moment, to enroll myself as a member, and take the oaths of the Secret Society of Postilions. Bitterly
I regretted since, for it is to that circumstance I owe my present deplora-
ble state of mind and position."

"But what has that to do with the mysterious case of His Excellency?" I asked of him, somewhat impatiently.

"Much more than you imagine or
can ever know, friend," replied he,
sentimentally wagging his head. He paused for a moment. "Well, I will tell you, though you must not break
my story with your inquiring questions. Firstly, then, you must know that I was out the establishment
of Herr Spultzen, the carriage-master
and stable-keeper from whom His Excellency the Honorable Eslington hired
his return journey. It was known to the Chief Secret Society that His Excellency was in possession of important
papers, and it was also known that he
was on the point of starting with them
for England. The Chief Commander
had important reasons for obtaining
these papers, or copies of them, and of
one in particular above all others, by
fair means or foul; and what the Chief
meant to do, is done, is done invariably
at any cost. The Committee had ballot-
ed for the person who must execute their
orders, and their choice had fallen on
me as postilion, and the more you must
effect a successful result. By virtue of my oath I was bound to obey, or I should have suffered a secret death, by assassination probably. I need not tell
you my instructions; but a dreadful
fate awaited you in the event of your
disobedience. I was to follow you, and
in every town through which we passed
there were emissaries of the Chief Society to assist me, so great is its organization; and when I received your instructions to pull up at the next town, which
you remember was S—. I knew the wishes of the Chief Commander would
be effectually carried out. The landlord
of the hotel you stayed at and the head
hostler were known to me as members of the Chief Society, and there
were other residents in the town also members, whom I did not know. So you
see, my friend, how His Excellency
and you were encompassed in a net
from which there was no escape; and
and afterward," said he, "I said it."

"Now you remember how His Excellency
was always engaged in writing his dispatches and documents. Well, there
was consequently great difficulty
in getting a view of the papers, and
of course, the more important the documents, the more important to the Chief Commander."

"What!" I exclaimed, in great astonishment, my hair almost on end
with the suddenness of the confession—
what? Do you mean to tell me, Carl
Johann Roedel, that you murdered
His Excellency in cold blood?"

"Not exactly that, friend," he quietly replied. "When His Excellency
went for that short walk, the head
hostler also went for a stroll in the same direction. A short distance from the town the hostler met a friend, also
a member, and they quickly bowed
and gagged His Excellency, and carried
him to the cellar of the latter's house,
where they kept him secretly until
after the excitement of the disappearance and search had subsided, when he was taken to Vienna in the involuntary
disguise of a dangerous lunatic patient,
and he made a significant sign indicative of strangu-
lation. "The papers were abstracted by
the landlord, and handed to me, and I
in turn delivered them to the Chief Commander personally. Naturally, was
if you recollect, because only one other
person besides His Excellency and the Chief Commander knew of them, and
he dared not say what they were."

"But how," asked I, "was everything kept so quietly, as the British Government made a great stir over the matter, and large rewards were offered?"

"Well," replied he, "those to whom
the matter was referred were mostly
members of the Chief Society, which,
you must remember, numbered in its
roll members of all ranks and stations.
The pair of overalls found in the copse

Our Young Folks.

THE DOLLS' WEDDING.

I am so glad that the sunshine has driven the clouds away.
For my dolly, my darling dolly, is going to be married to-day.
She has had a great many suitors—a dozen, I do declare.
And only last week, Wednesday, she refused a Sophronee in his mother; she thought we'd feel so grand.
That dolly with a diamond stud should offer my child his hand.
But how rare little for money, and she's given her heart away
To Charlie, the gallant sailor, who will make her his bride to-day.

Nora has made her bride-cake with frosting as white as snow.
And wore her bridal wreath from the tiniest
flowers that blow.
And brother Harry has promised (he's ever so kind, I'm sure)
To lend them his beautiful yacht when they sail
the ocean blue.

We make believe it's the ocean, the lake in the park, you know.
And Charlie the little sailor, is so delighted to O, my, he does look cunning in his suit of navy blue.
His mother, my most particular friend, is little Nelly Drew.

Look! they are coming, Mary, O, they are a lovely pair.
Charlie, the black-eyed sailor, and those with her
flowers that blow.
Don't take her like a fairy peeping out from a sleeve cloud.
In her lovely dress and veil! But we mustn't talk too loud.

If I think of these out a tear—I suppose it's the proper thing.
Since she is my only child—but indeed I would be quite sure
For the sun is shining brightly, and everything
And to Charlie, the dear little sailor, my dolly is married to-day.

—Harper's Young Folks.

HUNTING JACK RABBITS.

Ont in Kansas we have rare sport hunting jack-rabbits. Eastern boys can hardly guess how much sport there is in it. We have other game, of course, and antelope, and deer, and prairie dogs,
and in Edwards and other south-western counties; and the wolves that prowl over the prairie are worse for our sheep and calves than bears are, or even were, in New England.

But the greatest sport of all is hunting jack-rabbits. We hunt them on horseback, with greyhounds. All the settlers in our section keep one or more greyhounds on purpose to hunt jack-rabbits. I went fox-hunting

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.00
Six months, .60
Three months, .35
INvariably in advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, $1.00 per square of 8 lines;
50 cents per square for each additional insertion. Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.

Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, DEC. 13, 1879.

It is expected that 60,000 people will participate in the parade in Philadelphia on the occasion of the demonstration in honor of Gen. Grant. Of these 8,000 will be Pennsylvania militia and visiting military from other States, 5,000 of the Grand Army of the Republic, 5,000 school children, and the remainder will be made up from the various manufacturing establishments.

Senator Bayard is quoted as making in a recent letter the following sensible remarks: "It is not hostility to the South that makes the North solid; it is apprehension lest unwise and ridiculous administration of the finances should injure Northern property and investments. No instrument is so dangerous as a legal-tender paper currency, the redeemability of which may be endangered. I do not care half so much for party success in this connection (although I value it most highly) as I do for the great service it would be to our whole country and the generations to succeed us."

The House Postoffice Committee Monday considered the resolution of Representative Valentine, of Kansas, calling upon the Postmaster General for information why the Postoffice Department had not placed postal car service upon the new railroad which have been opened in the West. The Postmaster General will not have to hunt long for an answer. The reason simply is that the Democratic Congress did not make appropriations enough for the railway postal service upon the railroads which were already established, to say nothing of new lines which have been opened since the appropriations were made.

The Hagerstown Mail is opposed to the appointment by the Legislature of men who perform no service for their pay and says that whilst upon the one hand it is the highest duty of members of the Legislature to refuse the employment of any one not required for any service, it is upon the other, far more honorable for any one to hold a place where no service is rendered and where none is required, and at the same time receive pay for it. Sinecures should have no place in free governments. They are both the bane and antagonists of free institutions. The great sentiment of free institutions is the like opportunities to all and favors to none.

Of course the Democrats in the House of Delegates to convene at Annapolis this winter will elect the Speaker, but the Republican party have there a sufficient number of members to give a deserving member a handsome complimentary vote for the high position. Such a member is Dr. J. J. Bruce, of this county, a staunch and unswerving Republican, a gentleman of education, cultivation and a wide range of intelligence, coupled with a fine presence, agreeable address and cool head, qualifications in every way fitting him for the position, to which we wish he could be elected. His nomination by the Republicans would be a merited compliment no less to himself than his county, which gave him so substantial a majority in the late election.—Cumb. News.

The Howard county Tax-payers' convention held a meeting at Elliott's City, on Tuesday, which was attended by a number of prominent gentlemen of both political parties. After appointing committees to carry out the objects for which the convention had assembled, the following resolution, offered by Mr. Dawson Lawrence, was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we again announce our conviction that all the property in the State should bear its due proportion of assessment and taxation, any exemption whatever having a tendency to advance special interests, and to that extent operates unjustly upon the property not exempted, and hence is destructive of that sound principle in free government. "That each individual should bear his just proportion of the burdens of government," according to the actual value of his real and personal property.

Secure THE REPUBLICAN for 1880.

State Politics.

There is no change in the political situation. It is smooth water and fair sailing for the Gorman wing of the party; and while there was at no time any likelihood that Governor Hamilton would antagonize this wing of the party, to which he owed the overthrow of all opposition to his nomination, assurance has now been made complete through the declaration of the Governor himself, that he does not intend to interfere with the action of the legislature in regard to the officers it will elect. Mr. Hamilton is understood to have expressed himself to those who have conversed with him on political matters to the effect that he proposed to keep aloof from any matter in which he was not concerned, and let the majority of the legislature attend to the election of their various officers. He did not even desire to assume that any portion or wing of the Democratic party would oppose him in any of the measures which he proposes to recommend, and does not believe that any factious spirit will be displayed as against him on account of any of his schemes for reducing expenses or reforming the state service. He believed that by a policy of harmony some good may be accomplished by the next legislature; but such a result could not be attained if a continual political warfare would be waged while the General Assembly was in session. He saw no good reason why the utmost harmony could not be maintained if each co-ordinate branch of the government attends to its legitimate business. Those who conversed with the Governor elect are of the opinion that he desires to avoid any appearance of strife with any of those who will be the leaders in the General Assembly, and that he desires the maintenance of harmony as a means of carrying out the pledges he made on the stump.

Mr. Gorman's friends claim fifty-one votes for him in caucus for the United States senatorship. They have actively at work canvassing among the members, and claim this to be the result. The friends of George Colton are equally sanguine, and think that before the time for the election of Mr. Fussellbaugh's successor there will be no active opposition against him. They claim that Mr. Fussellbaugh, after serving on his present term as Police Commissioner, will have been in the office for fourteen years, and that a position of $2,500 a year, with no arduous duties and such influence, should now be given to some active member of the Democratic party. They claim that previous to his election as Police Commissioner he had rendered no very valuable service to the party; and that the time for a change has arrived. Mr. Fussellbaugh, however, is understood to have a large number of friends, who are interesting themselves in his behalf. There will not be any opposition to Barnes Compton as Treasurer. Herman Stump, of Harford, is known to be their candidate for President of the Senate, and Hiram McCullough, of Cecil, Speaker for the House of Delegates.

Among the intimate friends of Senator Whyte it appears to be understood that he will not be in any sense a candidate for re-election to the United States Senate. At present the Senator is confined to his house, unable to move except with the use of a crutch and cane, suffering from erysipelas of the leg, and the prospects are that he will not be able to leave his residence for some time to come. Mrs. Whyte is also still seriously ill, and the ex-Governor has been watching at her side since her last lapse. Under these circumstances, the Senator is in no condition to enter into a struggle for his reelection, and he has heretofore expressed himself that he did not propose to make a fight for the position. But at present it is evident that Mr. Gorman will make a contest for the office, and no one would be able to successfully oppose him without a determined and stubborn fight. Senator Whyte will therefore, it is thought, adhere to the determination he reached last May, when he announced that he was not a candidate for reelection. Since then he has been the recipient of a number of letters from members of the United States Senate, asking him to reconsider this decision and to return to that body. The merchants of the city have also addressed him a petition, asking him to become a candidate, but the Senator is neither physically nor politically in a condition to undertake such a contest. His candidacy for the Congressionally nomination next year, when it is expected he will be in his usual health and better adapted to enter a political canvass, is advocated by many of his friends, who think that by the mere announcement of his name all opposition would vanish, and that he would be unanimously elected. His political opponents in the Democratic party have already expressed themselves to the effect that if Senator Whyte does not contest for the senatorial nomination in opposition to Mr. Gorman, that they will not antagonize his nomination to Congress, and that he would then in all probability be nominated without opposition, and that all the candidates in the field would make way for him. One of the members of the Gorman ring stated yesterday that the leaders would rather be friendly than antagonistic to Senator Whyte and would prefer to work with him against him; and in the event of his running for a Congressional nomination would not think of opposing him provided he does not enter into any contest against Gorman, which, as above stated, he is not at present disposed to do. It would be a strange commentary on political affairs if the refusal of Senator Whyte to enter into a senatorial contest and become a candidate for the lower house, would lead up the wounds of the managers, and result in the re-establishment of pleasant relations among the leaders.—Baltimore American.

An Outspoken Clergyman.

Rev. Adam Stengle, down at Crisfield, a few weeks ago preached a sermon on vote buying and vote selling, and took occasion to strike straight at some of the members of the church, which created a sensation among the members of his flock. The shoe pinched so tight that some of them took exception at his sermon, and of course, misrepresented the Reverend gentleman. In last week's Crisfield Leader he again bits them a dig under the fifth rib and goes generally for those small specimens of humanity and the vote seller. He says: "It is singular how each character delights to indulge in bitter invectives upon poor Judas Iscariot because he 'sold out' for thirty pieces of silver"—a small sum, but enough to buy at least a dozen votes in our day. But are utterly oblivious to the fact that his perjury was succeeded by three good deeds;—first he promptly returned his ill-gotten silver; secondly, he publicly confessed his crime, and thirdly, 'he went out and hanged himself' and thus put himself out of the way of men and the possibility of a future temptation to 'sell out'."

"Some, probably those who sold or had an interest in selling, have called this political preaching. Of course such people don't want to hear much on this subject because they know it's wrong. Now, if I preach against wrong, corruption, fraud and bad principles generally and to advance the opposite sentiment, to encourage purity of heart and life, and constitute political preaching, then, in the name of God, who commands us to preach the Gospel of purity, let me be branded a political preacher, and thus secure to myself a humble position in the list of illustrious characters who have immortalized their names by daring to denounce wrong in state as well as church, and most illustrious of whom was He who spoke as never man spake in denunciation of wrong and advocacy of right."

Hit them again brother Stengle. You are right. The press, the pulpit and all honorable men should put their seal of condemnation on this growing evil. We hope other ministers and good men everywhere will raise their voices against such evil practices, and by their disapproval of such demoralizing tendencies drive both the vote buyer and seller from the market, and make the thing so odious and contemptible that public sentiment will soon to support for public favor those men who indulge in corruption and degradation of the manhood of the voter.—Denton (Md.) Union.

The Virginians in Washington are somewhat uneasy at the recent alliance of the Readjusters and Republican members of the Legislature at Richmond. The alliance is organized on the basis of a division of the offices and the results have much disgusted the Bourbon party. A crippled soldier of the Stonewall Bridge, who was doorkeeper of the House, has been relieved by a colored man from Norfolk, and another Confederate soldier, who acted as second doorkeeper, has been superseded by a white Republican, one of much darker hue is the new doorkeeper of the Senate, and a Fluvanna Republican has supplanted a Confederate major as sergeant-at-arms. These radical innovations have excited the ire of Southern journals, who bitterly denounce these appointments as an insult to the dignity of the State. Senator Hunter, who during the rebellion was one of Davis' cabinet officers, and has subsequently been State Treasurer, is also to be removed, but his successor's name is not given.

If the Readjusters come into power General Mahone, their leader, will probably be sent for six years to the United States Senate. At present the Democratic members of the Virginia Legislature are about equally divided into Debt payers and Readjusters. The former favor the McCulloch bill for paying debts; the latter oppose such action and prefer a compromise as a mode of cancellation.

Secretary McCrary laments that he cannot get authority to fill the ranks of the Army to the nominal effective strength of 25,000 men, which he believes to be the smallest number capable of guarding the Indian frontier and performing other essential duties. The inadequacy of our military force is the direct cause of "most, if not all, the disasters attending Indian hostilities," and to the obstinate, unreasoning refusal of Congress to authorize the enlistment of the troops which the military authorities declare to be absolutely essential for the protection of the Western settlements we must attribute the dreadful massacres that so often shock the country. Last Spring, while the soldiers were giving up their lives in an Indian war, the Democratic demagogues in Washington voted to withhold their pay and food in the hope that the President would surrender his prerogative; and not long ago they refused to vote several millions to the Navy, so that they might claim credit on the stump for a reduction of expenditures—a foolish as well as a heartless performance, because the men being already in the service, the deficiency had to be made good the next year. Nothing is done for the improvement of our coast defenses. The existing fortifications cannot even be kept in repair by the meagre appropriation made for them, and the dilapidation is steadily increasing. The clerical work, especially in connection with pension claims, is running behind hand, because Congress will not provide for the proper number of employees; and every year the accumulation of arrears becomes a greater embarrassment to the department, and a greater wrong to outside claimants and creditors.

TELEGRAPHIC.

NOMINATION CONFIRMED.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—The Senate in executive session this afternoon confirmed the nomination of Secretary McCrary to the United States circuit judge for the Eighth circuit without debate or division. A single objection would have prevented any action upon the nomination to-day, as it was not reported back from the Judiciary Committee until this afternoon.

THE MORMONS.

NEW YORK, December 8.—A Times' special says Mr. Cannon, the Mormon delegate from Utah is much annoyed by a paragraph in the President's message in relation to the practice of polygamy. He thinks the message invites the persecution of the Mormons and does not believe that any good will be accomplished by such policy. Circulars addressed to foreign Governments by Secretary Evans urging them to forbid the emigration of Mormons, is spoken of by Mr. Cannon as a very foolish act, and its only effect will be to advertise the Mormon faith to the civilized world. I believe, said Delegate Cannon in conversation yesterday, that among the Mormons not more than one man out of every seven, I might say ten, has more than one wife. There are about 45,000 Mormons altogether—about 20,000 men, and not more than 1,000 of them have a plurality of wives. Over this small number all this fuss is made. While Mormons believe in polygamy—believe that it was a revelation from God—they are not going to violate the law of their country by practicing it. None of us intend to violate the law of 1862, but there is no in-dubitable that could be offered that would lead the Mormons to abandon their faith. We will cherish our belief, but we will not practice it, because that would be a violation of the law.

THE STARVING PEOPLE IN IRELAND.

NEW YORK, Dec. 8.—In consequence of letters received from the Secretary of the Irish National Land League in Dublin, a conference of representatives of various Irish National and other organizations, was held last evening at the residence of Dr. Philip E. Dooley, No. 129 West Houston street, to consider the best means of giving a reception to Chas. Stewart Parnell, M. P., on his arrival in this city, and to sustain the Irish farmers in their present struggle. There were present a number of well-known Irish leaders. It was decided that a larger meeting should be held and delegations asked from all the Irish societies. Committees of arrangements were appointed to carry out this plan. An organization was effected at the Hamilton Park Hotel yesterday of sympathizers with the Irish tenant farmers and resolutions passed calling upon all freemen to lend a helping hand to a people who are starving upon their native soil, surrounded by a fertile land whose products are absorbed by avaricious landlords who do not live in Ireland. The press of America is implored not to look with apathetic eye upon millions of hungry people. All churches and Irish societies are solicited to agitate the matter and raise subscriptions to provide bread for starving mothers, fathers and children of Ireland.

THE REPUBLICAN CAUCUS.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—The caucus committee of Republican senators has held two meetings. For some reason it has been determined to attempt to preserve profound secrecy about these meetings. It has been ascertained, however, from one of its members, which includes in its membership some of the most radical of single standard advocates, that the Republicans have decided to adopt a policy of non-action with respect to the financial recommendations of the President and of the Secretary of the Treasury. There is to be absolute unity among the Republicans. It is not, as yet, altogether decided whether this policy of silence or non-action is to be formally announced by the adoption of some resolution like that of Ingalls, Carpenter, Fort, or Price, or whether the whole matter is to be smothered in committee. It appears that a considerable number of Democrats, including some of the members of the Senate Finance Committee, are quite anxious to prevent any discussion of these questions at this time. Indeed, it is believed that they have made direct suggestions to some Republican members of that committee that an alliance could be made which would render it impossible for the Bayard faction to report his resolution from the Finance committee. There are three Democratic members of this committee—Senators Wallace, of Pennsylvania; Voorhees, of Indiana; and Beck, of Kentucky—who probably would co-operate in this suppressive movement. Their votes, united to those of Ferry, of Michigan; Jones, of Nevada; and Allison, of Iowa, would be a majority of three on the committee, even provided that Morrill should not be disposed to co-operate with his Republican associates; but it is understood that Morrill himself will express in the conclusion of the majority of his party that any financial legislation at present is unwise. In that event Bayard and Kerson would stand alone on the Finance committee in favor of any such resolution as that of Mr. Bayard. It is this situation which has transferred the anxiety on the financial question from the Republicans to the Democrats. A Democratic senator of influence says that Bayard can never induce his party to accept his proposition that he could not get more than ten votes for it in the Senate. Democrats admit that Bayard has taken this step with a view to advancing his presidential chances in the expectation that he could compel the Democracy to take him, the intention being to abandon Indiana and to concentrate the Democratic forces to add the electoral votes of New York, Connecticut and New Jersey to that of the solid South.

A GRANT AND BAYARD TICKET.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5.—Some comment has been excited here over a letter of recent date, written by Mr. Ellison S. Kett, a well-known citizen of South Carolina, who served in Congress before the war. Mr. Kett argues against neither a solid South or a solid North, but in favor of a solid Union. He says that of the most illustrious names before the country Grant and Bayard are without a comparison, and he suggests them as the two men to run on the same ticket. He says they would give us the most honored government the world ever saw, and silence slanders in the North, and kill radicalism in the South. It is said here, as coming from influential quarters in South Carolina, that there are many in that State who are turning toward Grant. Whether Grant and Bayard can do better than oil and water and mix, is another thing. Gen. Grant himself has a high opinion of Mr. Bayard, however. An intimate personal friend of his, who saw him but a few days ago, says that Gen. Grant has several times spoken in flattering terms of Mr. Bayard, and has said that he would make a good President.

CRIME IN WEST VIRGINIA.

GRAFTON, W. VA., Dec. 7.—Frank McFadden, Isaac, alias Knotty Owens, and John Tucker, the parties who were arrested last week at West Union Station by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad detectives, for having placed obstructions on the tracks, and for robbing cars, were arraigned for trial yesterday in the Circuit Court of Doddridge county, this State. The detectives had accumulated very strong evidence against McFadden and Owens, who were convicted after a short trial. Tucker was acquitted, and after a warning from the court about being found in bad company, was discharged. McFadden was sentenced to the State penitentiary for three, and Owens for four years.

It is generally believed here that these two men were at the head of a band of desperadoes who were committing a series of crimes in Doddridge county, embracing murder, incendiarism, and the breaking into and robbing of stores and dwellings. The people are congratulating themselves upon being rid of these men, and are thankful to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad for sending detectives here to ferret them out and secure their conviction. During the last few months men have been found murdered and robbed, and efforts are being made to fix the crime on these two men and to trace up their associates.

THE PAY OF UNITED STATES MARSHALS.

WASHINGTON, December 7.—Although the report of Attorney General Devens had not received that attention accorded to other communications from the hands of departments, it nevertheless contains suggestions of great importance. The failure of the Democrats at the extra session to make the proper appropriations has caused a deficiency of $200,000, now due the United States Marshals for service required of them under existing laws. These services having been rendered precisely as though the appropriation had been made, the Attorney General very properly asks Congress to make provision for their payment. It will be perceived at once that, as in so many cases likely to arise, that it will be difficult for the Democrats to avoid, either on the one hand, the pursuit of the policy of extra session, or a confession that such policy was indefensible. The law requires of the marshals certain duties, with a prescribed remuneration. No money was provided, but the duties have been performed. What will the Democrats do? The present temper of some of the Democratic leaders, Mr. Hendricks among others, is to meet the issue boldly when it comes, and to refuse to make any appropriation for past or future service by United States marshals at the polls. In this Mr. Hendricks, and those who agree with him, show that they mean to be consistent. Hence, despite the desire on the part of less candid Democrats to run away from the position they maintained last session on this question, it is not likely they will be able to do so. The Attorney General also declares that additional legislation is required to protect civil officers of the government in the performance of their duties, also against the outrages which are committed upon them because they have faithfully performed them. This, of course, refers to obstructions placed in the way of the administration of justice in the Southern States. Here again is opened up the old political question of states' rights in its most crucial form. It is accordingly manifest that the controversy of the extra session must inevitably recur when the question of making up the deficiency to pay the United States marshals their just dues. Nothing, therefore, is settled which was left unsettled at the adjournment last summer.

DAVIS' HOBBY.

WASHINGTON, December 9.—Senator DAVIS, of West Virginia, whose hobby it is to investigate, for political purposes, all the transactions of the Treasury Department for many years past, brought forward a day or two ago a brand-new project in the shape of a resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for a statement showing "by states" the amount paid out since 1861 for claims growing out of the war. It was impossible without explanation to understand what the resolution meant, and in answer to questions by Senator Edmunds and Senator DAVIS, Mr. Davis explained that the writer of the resolution wished to know what amounts had been paid out to residents of each state for private claims since the end of the war. Senator Edmunds said there was not the least objection that he could see to having any information obtainable from the treasury records made public, but it would cost a great sum to prepare such a statement, and he could see no possible advantage to the Senate in having it in the shape called for by the resolution. If the work was to be done at all, it should cover all the period of the war, from its beginning until the present time, showing the aggregate amounts paid out by the treasury for each state in consequence of the war. He questioned the propriety of furnishing by a formal act of the Senate material which would only be serviceable for stump speeches; yet, if the whole story could be told at once, and all the expenditures resulting from the war could be placed before the Senate, he thought it would be a very useful reminder of a most disgraceful episode in our national history. He proposed an amendment carrying the date from which the statement should begin back to 1861. Senator DAVIS also questioned Mr. Davis at some length, but the expiration of the morning hour put an end to the discussion for to-day. The general impression is that Senator Davis has run against something in the Treasury Department in regard to the payment of private claims of which he hopes to make political capital of if he can bring it out in just the form his experts have planned it, and unconnected with other facts and figures of an opposite political character. Senator Davis is a guileless man, but he failed to explain the point in his resolution, although repeatedly asked to do so to-day.

LOCAL NEWS.

—Non-jury term of Court on next Monday.

—Miss Rida Jamesson is visiting at Piedmont.

—The County Commissioners will meet next Wednesday.

—J. O. Michael, Esq., has built an ice house on his lot.

—Mr. Ralph Thayer started for Washington city Wednesday last.

—The bottoms are said to have dropped out of most of the roads in Garrett county.

—200 sacks G. A. Salt for sale at Wm. P. Totten's Clean Cash Store, Oakland, Md.

—The average boy is beginning to inquire which Sunday School is going to have a Christmas tree.

—Wm. L. Baughner, Esq., of Fairmont, W. Va., called at our office Tuesday.

—Thursday evening is the regular night for the meeting of the Board of Hope.

—Mr. King Delawder and sister Miss Jennie, are visiting relatives and friends in Parkersburg, West Va.

—Rev. Mr. Lefevre, the new pastor of the Presbyterian church, preached here last Sunday morning and evening.

—The members of the Oakland Turned Band have not yet decided whether they will invest their share of the proceeds of the late fair in government bonds or real estate.

—Married—At the Glades Hotel, Oakland, on Dec. 14th, 1879, by Rev. J. B. Ison, Mr. Thos. P. Shug and Miss Mary C. Whitney, both of West Virginia.

—Married—On November 27, by Rev. Wm. E. George, John W. Lee and Sarah E. Sharpless, both of Garrett county, Md.

—Married—On December 7th, at the home of the bride, in the presence of a large circle of friends, by Rev. William E. George, James W. Wilson and Ida M. Tice, both of Garrett county, Md.

—E. B. Fuller, Esq., of Grantsville, this county, has been appointed storekeeper and ganger, for the fourth district of Maryland. We believe Mr. Fuller will make an efficient officer.

—The first Quarterly Meeting for the Oakland Circuit will be held at Wesley Chapel, on Salt Lick, Preston county, on Saturday and Sunday, Dec. 27th and 28th. The Presiding Elder, Rev. B. Ison, will be present.

—The number of acres of land advertised in Preston county for taxes due for the years 1877 and 1878, amounts to 129,732. Most of this land is in large tracts and is owned by parties living outside the county.

—James Pollock, the driver in the Kootz Mine whose leg was broken last week by a train of cars, has since died, after undergoing amputation of the limb. The miners raised $250 for the relief of Pollock's widowed mother.

—On Sunday morning last Daniel Kaufman, aged about 40, captain of the canal boat Clara, fell from his boat and was drowned, at Little Slackwater, sixteen miles below Hancock. The body was recovered and taken to Hancock, where Kaufman lived. He leaves a wife and six children.

—The bond of George D. White, Esq., the newly elected Sheriff, was approved by the Orphans' Court Tuesday. The bondsmen are: Jos. M. Crim, Mary J. Crim, James E. Johnson, Mary Waltz, Marian E. Arnold, Samuel Lawton, Peter Koefer, Levi Enoch, J. B. Friend, W. D. Hays, P. H. Edwards, J. Z. Brown, John B. Browning, Joseph A. Spiker, John Helbig, John Shatzer, Samuel W. Friend. Mr. White was qualified and entered upon the duties of his office Thursday morning.

—The newly elected Judges of the Orphans' Court were qualified before Clerk Tower Tuesday last, and entered upon the duties of their office. By some influence at Annapolis, the new member, Mr. Kookan, was commissioned Chief Judge, a position he did not desire, and it seems unaccountable that any one should make such a recommendation, inasmuch as Judges DeWitt and Harvey have been members of the Court since the organization of the county, and the first named gentleman has been Chief Judge for the last four years, and they are both much older and more experienced in the duties of the office than Mr. Kookan.

Highway Robbery.

Mr. Henry Coddington, residing about three miles from Oakland, on the Hoopole road, informs us that he was stopped by four masked men, Tuesday night about 11 o'clock, near the Endow School House, and relieved of a small amount of change. The night being very dark, and all of the parties wearing masks, he could form no idea of their appearance or dress.

Holiday Presents.

M. L. Scott is opening a splendid assortment of useful holiday presents.

Orphans' Court.

The Orphans' Court for Garrett County was convened on Tuesday, 9th inst. Present, Hon. Isaac H. Kookan, Chief Judge, and Hons. Joseph DeWitt and Wm. Harvey, Associate Judges, and Wm. H. Haggans, Register.

Among others were the following proceedings:

The above named having produced their commissions, entered upon their duties.

George D. White, the Sheriff elect, filed his bond in the sum of $25,000, which was approved by the court.

Adjourned to meet on Tuesday, Dec. 23d.

Vicissitudes of Families.

GRANTSVILLE, MD., Dec. 10, 1879.

Modern Grantsville is situated about half a mile from old Grantsville, which was founded more than three-quarters of a century ago, by Hanson Grant. His little village, consisting of about five houses and a church, has entirely disappeared, and the plow and scythe annually play upon the spot. Immediately adjacent is the cemetery, where hundreds of the people of this community, old and young, are buried. But old Grant himself and his name are as much obliterated as the site upon which his miniature town once stood. The name has not existed in our country for more than a generation.

The same thing can be said of a number of other families of this district; notably that of the Schultz family. About the year 1836, Adam Schultz removed from Somerset county, Pa., to this place, with a large family of children. He embarked in the tanning business, or rather, he continued it during the remainder of his life. He at one time, during the flush times of the old National road, was engaged in the hotel business. Mr. Schultz for many years in the latter part of his life did not participate actively in his business, but his sound advice and strong common sense were constantly infused into it. He died in 1861, at the ripe old age of 75. A beautiful and costly monument marks his resting place in the cemetery above alluded to. He was the father (by two marriages) of 18 children, ten sons and eight daughters, but one, the wife of John R. Iyer, remains in our midst. The name of Schultz, once so numerous, respectable and potent here does not exist in the county. To use a gloomy expression, they are all dead and gone. The aged widow is still living, with her surviving children, who are all living at or near St. Louis. Perry, one of the sons, was elected Sheriff of Allegany county in 1853, but died of the cholera, in St. Louis, some ten years ago, after being in business there some years. Chancy Forward, (named after a distinguished Pennsylvania lawyer of that name), has been living in that great metropolis for about twenty years, and is now, and has been for years, one of the very foremost men of the city in all the many relations of life. As a business man he stands very high; so, his position is enviable; so, officially, though not much of a partisan, he has held some very honorable and important positions. John A. J. Schultz, a younger brother, went to St. Louis in 1861, and is now largely interested in and is running the Pittsburgh Tannery, which is the largest establishment of the kind west of the Mississippi. He is a practical tanner, and has lately obtained a patent for making belting leather by a hitherto unknown process, by which he says he can make the strongest and most durable belting leather in the world. The writer of this saw him on his way to the Centennial, in 1876, and he was greatly worried because he was not ready to make an entry of the product of his invention.

Norman Brown, a grandson of old Mr. Schultz, and a son of the late George Brown, left Grantsville, a poor tanner boy in his teens, after the war, without a dollar in the world and no resources whatever except a powerful little body and a willingness and determination to work; and at it went in butcher shops and the like places, handling hides, and as a laborer with small wages. To-day he is in the very front ranks in the hide and leather business in his city, with a business of over half a million dollars per year, in his five different houses, all on his own account. This is not at all bad for a Grantsville boy.

I have been writing about families that disappeared from the scenes of their early life—now for one that remains to the "native hearth." Adam Spiker, who was a soldier in the war of 1812, in Capt. Thos. Blair's company, died in 1826, leaving a widow and twelve children, eight sons and four daughters. The widow died only a year or two ago, but all the children yet survive, and nearly all are residents of Garrett county. Now, I undertake to say there is not a similar case in the State of Maryland where a whole family consisting of twelve children, ranging in their ages from forty-five and upwards, and are all living. When the eight Spiker brothers and their many sons go to an election, it tells for and against candidates.

GRANTSVILLE.

Use of Salt.

In many cases of disordered stomach, a teaspoonful of salt is a certain cure. In the violent internal aching termed colic, add a teaspoonful of salt to a pint of cold water, drink it and go to bed; it is one of the speediest and best remedies known. The same will revive a person who seems almost dead from receiving a fall, &c.

In an apoplectic fit, no time should be lost in pouring down salt water, if sufficient sensibility remains to allow of swallowing it; if not, the head must be sponged with cold water until the senses return when salt will completely restore the patient from his lethargy.

In a fit, the feet should be placed in warm water with mustard added, and the legs tricedly rubbed, all bandages removed from the neck, and a cool apartment procured if possible. In many cases of bleeding at the lungs when other remedies fail, Dr. Rush found that two teaspoonfuls of salt completely stayed the blood.

In case of bite from a mad dog, wash the part with strong brine for an hour, then bind on some salt with a rag.

In toothache, warm salt and water held to the part, and repeated two or three times will relieve in most cases. If the teeth be covered with tartar, wash twice a day with salt and water.

In swelled neck, wash the part with brine, and drink twice a day, also, until cured.

Salt will expel worms, if used in food in a moderate degree, and aid digestion, but salt meat is injurious if used much.

The Lord's Prayer.

When the elder Booth was residing in Baltimore, a pious, urbane old gentleman of that city, hearing of his wonderful powers of elocution, one day invited him to dinner, although always deprecating the stage and all theatrical performances. A large company sat down at the table, and, on returning to the drawing-room, one of them asked Booth, as a special favor to them all, to repeat the Lord's Prayer. He signified his willingness to gratify them, and all eyes were fixed upon him. He slowly and reverently arose from his chair, trembling with the burden of two great conceptions. He had to realize the character, attributes and presence of the Almighty Being he was to address. He was to transform himself into a poor, shivering, stumbling, blighted, needy suppliant, offering homage, asking bread, pardon, light and guidance. Says one of the company who was present: "It was wonderful to watch the play of emotions that convulsed his countenance. He became deathly pale, and his eyes, turned trembling upwards, were wet with tears. As yet he had not spoken. The silence could be felt; it was absolutely painful, until at last the spell was broken as if by an electric shock, as his rich-toned voice syllabled forth, 'Our Father which art in Heaven,' etc., with a pathos and fervid solemnity which thrilled all hearts. He finished; the silence continued; not a voice was heard in his rapt audience, until from a remote corner of the room a subdued sob was heard, the old gentleman (the host) stepping forward with streaming eyes and tottering frame, seized Booth by the hand. 'Sir,' said he in broken accents, 'you have afforded me a pleasure for which my whole future life will feel grateful. I am an old man, and every day from boyhood to the present time I have repeated the Lord's Prayer; but I never heard it before. 'You are right,' said Booth. 'To read that prayer as it should be read has caused me the severest study and labor for thirty years, and I am far from satisfied with my rendering of that wonderful production.' " Hardly one person in ten thousand comprehends how much beauty, tenderness and grandeur can be condensed in a space so simple. That prayer itself sufficiently illustrates the truth of the Bible, and stamps upon it the seal of immortality.

Reform in the Next Legislature.

We are gravely informed by the Democratic papers that Gov. Hamilton is bent on effecting sundry and divers reforms during his gubernatorial term. How these are to be effected, unless the Legislature will take them in hand and furnish the necessary legislation, we are not informed. In 1876 we had a fine illustration of the order of reform that may be expected from the dominant party in this State. Of all the prepared measures of reform there was nothing accomplished except a change in the Registry Law, which made it worse than it had been before. Refrains we want, many and divers in nature, but there is no reliable hope that they will be realized in legislation during the coming winter. However much Mr. H. may really desire that they should be secured, this can only be done by the law-making power of the State, and the Governor is only called upon to approve or disapprove of their action, after it is completed.—Frederick Examiner.

What shall we do with it? Is a query naturally suggested by the Mormon difficulty. Seventeen years ago, more or less, Congress prohibited, under severe penalties, polygamy in the territory of Utah. Nevertheless, the Mormons have increased and multiplied in disregard of all injunctions to the contrary, and seem scrupulously attached to their domestic relations. In fact, they assert their peculiar institution is an ordinance of their religion, and that they came to this country under the assurance that they would be protected in unrestricted liberty of conscience.

In one instance a test case was carried to the United States Supreme Court, where the judges decided that Congress could suppress the objectionable tenet by penal enactments. But as yet little or no headway has been made in suppressing polygamous marriages. In Utah, where Mormons sit on juries, they are not likely to decide against the Community of Saints. They contend they religiously believe in dual marriages and that their creed alone prevents their obedience to the edicts of Congress. They claim to obey a higher power.

Should such be the case the snail cannot be exterminated by persecution. On the contrary it would strengthen the Mormon cause with new proselytes and sympathizers. If it is really the case that the Mormon ladies of their own accord enter into such liberal matrimonial contracts they are free agents, and their wishes ought to be consulted before the bond is cancelled. To act otherwise would be more pernicious than Mormonism itself. The Utah ladies, sealed or otherwise, are not under restraint as the inmates of an Oriental harem. Mormonism having become naturalized in Utah cannot be extirpated by immediate coercion without the worst results. Moral suasion by good teachers and Christians, will do more in the course of a few years to efface the obnoxious institution so strongly reprobated in the President's message than a military crusade against the Mormon sect, or the withholding the rights of citizenship from every resident of Utah Territory.

The Washington Star publishes an amusing account of the "important business" many callers have with the President. One was a lunatic, who wanted to ask the President's advice about a claim which some bad men had wished him to sign away. A Yankee girl had started a weekly paper and wanted the President and cabinet as paid subscribers. An old lady had a letter of introduction from the justice of the peace in her native village, and was sure she could get a place if she could only see Mr. Hayes. Three men sat together on a sofa against the wall, glum and dogged looking. They were a Baltimore delegation. A lady had come all the way from Philadelphia to get the President to help pay the debt on a Methodist church—evidently the result of his Thanksgiving Day visit to the Quaker City. "An old friend of the President" was willing to accept a post in the diplomatic service. A young lady author from Indiana was going to try just once more to get a place; if she failed, she was going home, and she wouldn't give anybody out there a good idea of how they conducted things at Washington—"Now, there!" A Georgia man wanted the President to put up the capital to start a Republican paper down yonder, or part of the capital, or tell him where he could borrow it. The most important business of all, however, was that of a young man from West Va. who wanted the President to give him $500, so that he could marry his girl! It must be great fun to be President.

THE MOFFETT LIQUOR LAW IN VIRGINIA.—In relation to the workings of the Moffett liquor law in Virginia the auditor of public accounts of that State, in his annual report, says: "The receipts of the past year, as compared with the assessments, show a difference of $151,369.42. This, however, is made up in part by the repeal of the 'relate' feature of the act, and the reduction in the amount of expenses. It may be well to consider whether this system shall be continued, or whether some other cannot be devised which will yield as much revenue and at the same time simplify this branch of our revenue system. I am satisfied that the 'Moffett law,' with proper amendments, would yield a sufficient amount of revenue to pay the interest on the entire debt of the State, provided it could be executed; but here lies the difficulty. It has been reported to me from almost every part of the State, by revenue officers, that with the belief that the law is not executed, they are powerless in its enforcement. The difficulty of proof arising in part from allowing any person presented for a violation of the provisions of the act to testify in his own behalf (see act, sec. 10,) often leads to the discharge of persons believed to have violated the law. In view of the difficulties which environ this mode of collecting revenue, I respectfully submit the question to the General Assembly for such action as they may think best. Revenue is what we need, and there is no subject which, it seems to me, is a more proper one, and one liable to fewer objections than a tax upon the consumption of liquor, and no mode better adapted to its collection than the present system of registration, provided a law can be so framed as to enforce it."

Tell us not in mournful numbers that this life is but a dream, when a girl that weighs one hundred gets outside a quart of cream—and then wants more.—Elmira Gazette. Life is real, life is earnest, and girls know what they need, but on cream they are the dullest set to show their grit and greed. No encore.—New York News. Let us then be up and doing, with a heart for any fate; but never let us go a wooing, girls that want a second plate. How's that?—Newsboy. Be not like dumb, driven cattle, be a hero in the strife; never with her mother battle, save the ice cream for your wife. Proceed!—Brooklyn Eagle. Art is long and time is fleeting; he who higgles is a churl. Soothe with cream her heart's wild beating, pay the score and win the girl.—Farmers Review. Make the most of earthly pleasure—life is but a fleeting show; before you treat her, take her measure—if a "repeater," let her go.—Cecil Whiff.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

(Special Correspondence to The Republican.) WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 9, 1879.

Several eminent Republicans have spoken lately on the problem of the solid South. They agree substantially in the fact that the solid South will be broken only by another Republican victory in 1880. Hon. William E. Chandler says the Republicans can carry Florida with proper effort, and he believes in making that effort. If we can carry that State, then New York and Indiana would not be enough to give the Democrats a majority. Colonel Keogh, another member of the National Committee, says that we cannot carry a single Southern State, and that that section will be broken up politically only by the solidity of North against it. General George A. Sheridan agrees with Colonel Keogh, and the General is well informed touching Southern feeling and methods, having lived in Louisiana for several years. Evidently the Democrats realize that the North will be solid against them, and they are trying to invent means to defeat it of its sectional strength. It begins to appear that the little plot to steal Maine legislature is a part of the Democratic National programme. If they carry out their scheme there, why cannot they choose the Presidential election by the legislature instead of by the popular vote; why cannot they continue to steal it year after year. There are men here who say that Democratic money is maintaining the Democratic conspirators in their present work there, and if the plot can be carried through without danger the persons engaged in it criminally, it will be done. It is well to take all these things into account when canvassing the chances for 1880, so that we may know the most we have got to do and go about doing it in the proper way.

Post-master Edmunds of the city, who has long been known favorably as an upright citizen and a stalwart Republican, died yesterday after a lingering illness. He was a warm friend of the late Senator Chandler and it is probable the death of that Senator affected him so severely as to cause a relapse when he was supposed Mr. Edmunds was improving.

Congress will probably take some action looking to a change in the Constitution, so that the Proprietors of Trade Marks can be protected in their rights, since the Court has decided that the Trade Mark laws of Congress are not Constitutional. Extensive interests are involved in this subject.

General Grant has written to friends in New York that he probably cannot visit there before his return from the West Indies in the Spring. He will start on his trip to Cuba towards the last of this month.

LOGAN.

By Universal Accord.

AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS are the best of all purgatives for family use. They are the purest & best, laborious and successful chemical investigation, and their extensive use, by Physicians in their practice, and by all civilized nations, proves them to be the best and most effectual purgative. Full directions are enclosed in each box, being purely vegetable and having no harmful effects from their use. In intimate value and curative powers no other Pills can be compared with them, and every person, knowing their virtues, will employ them when needed. They keep the system in perfect order, and maintain in healthy action the whole machinery of life. Mild, searching and effectual, they are specially adapted to the needs of the digestive apparatus, derangements of which they prevent and cure, if timely taken. They are the best and safest physic to employ for children and weakened constitutions, where a mild, but effectual cathartic is required.

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

When You Buy YOUR FALL OR WINTER GROCERIES,

Get them from the long established house of

THOS. L. REESE.

(In operation since 1855), 207 and 209 W. Pratt Street, BALTIMORE, MD., Where the best goods obtainable can be had at the LOWEST POSSIBLE PRICES. Dec. 6-8*

COMMISSIONERS' MEETING.

OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, OAKLAND, MD., Dec. 3, 1879.

Notice is hereby given that the County Commissioners of Garrett county will meet at their office in Oakland

On Wednesday, Dec. 17, 1879,

for the purpose of appointing one Road Supervisor for each election district in Garrett county, said Supervisors to serve two years from the first day of January, 1880. All persons desiring such appointment, to serve two years, must file their APPLICATION in WRITING with the CLERK to the BOARD on or before the 15th day of December, 1879.

By order,

F. A. THAYER, Clerk.

ADMINISTRATOR'S SALE OF VALUABLE REAL ESTATE.

Under and by virtue of the power vested in me by the last Will and Testament of Archibald Chisholm, late of Garrett county, deceased, and also by an order of the Orphans' Court of said county, I, William Chisholm, Administrator of said Will, do hereby offer for sale, to the highest bidder, the following described real estate, to-wit:

Containing in all about 250 acres, more or less. About fifty acres are cleared and under fence, and improved by a comfortable DWELING HOUSE & BARN, and other necessary outbuildings. The land is well watered and adapted to farming and grazing. Any one desiring to buy a home will do well to examine said land before purchasing elsewhere.

TERMS OF SALE.—I will sell one-third cash on day of sale, and the balance in two equal installments of one and two years, the note of purchaser to be secured by security to be approved by the administrator, C. T. A., with interest from date of sale.

WILLIAM CHISHOLM, Administrator C. T. A.

ESTRAY NOTICE.

STATE OF MARYLAND, Allegany County, to-wit:

HENRY CERTIFY, that Joseph Foster, of Garrett county, is the subscriber of the Peace in and for the said county, the 22d day of November, in the year 1879, as a stray trespassing upon his enclosures, a dark hind-cow, with white under her belly, and a crop of the right ear and still in the left ear and is from three to four years of age, and is branded with the letter C, on her left side, and is the property of Jervis Foster and Jas. Inskeep at $10.00.

Given under my hand and seal of office, at Oakland, Md., this 2d day of December, 1879.

JOSEPH INSKEEP, Living in Garrett county, Md., two miles from Burton.

Notice to Trespassers.

All persons are hereby warned from trespassing upon my property, or upon the lands for which I am agent, and especially the lands of Ernest Guntberg, near Altoona, Garrett county, either for the purpose of fishing or hunting, or any other purpose. The extreme penalties of the law will be visited upon those disregarding this notice.

12-6-3 SAMUEL W. FRIEND.

Constable's Sale.

By virtue of three writs of fieri facias, two issued by Alexander E. Osburn and one by Richard B. Johnson, Justices of the Peace of the State of Maryland, to and for Garrett county, two at the suit of Geo. W. Lenz, and one at the suit of John E. Frank, against the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of Alexander L. Good and Mary E. Good, his wife, I have caused to be sold, in execution of the writs, all the right, title, interest and estate, both at law and in equity, of the said Alex. L. Good and Mary E. Good, his wife, in and to the following real estate, to-wit:

Military Lots Nos. 85, 258, 988, 1509, 1519, 1520, 1569, 1613, 1800, 1802, 1818, 1909, 1910, 1912, 3555, 3566, and 3567,

being the same lots obtained from John Swan and wife by deed, dated December 7th, 1821, and recorded in Liber W. B. T. No. 1, folio 61, one of the land records of Garrett county, Md. Said Military Lots are situated in Garrett county, Md.

And I hereby give notice that on

SATURDAY, December 20th, 1879,

at 2 o'clock P. M., in front of Coddington's Hotel in the town of Oakland, Md., I will offer at public sale the property so described and taken in execution, to the highest bidder, for cash, to satisfy said judgments and costs thereon.

JAS. S. JOHNSON, Constable.

11-29-12

VARIETIES.
—Spirit of the press—Cider.
—A braided coat is bound to look well.
—An Indian agent—The tomahawk.
—Boston Post.
—The best trade mark—$.—New Haven Register.
—A hot discussion frequently makes a cool friendship.
—People of no account never run in debt.—Cincinnati Commercial.
—A London second-hand dealer advertises for cast-off artificial teeth.
—Next to a wife the easiest thing for a poor man to get is to get in debt.
—A postal card is a feminine thing. It can't keep a secret.—Cincinnati Gazette.
—Many men become round-shouldered by carrying trouble.—N. Y. Express.
—Fifteen thousand dollars has been collected for the children of the late General Hood.
—Smith wants to know what good the new French cable is going to be to people who don't understand French.
—There's one good thing about these wide belts; they keep the human arm from marking the dress. That is, so we have been told.—Hank-Eye.
—One of the most popular organizations among working people is the "Correct Pressers' Association" at New Haven. Everybody wants to join.
—Lady—How are you, little boy?
—"Little boy"—"Well, if you goes by wit under says, I's six; but if you goes by the fun I's had I's most a hundred."
—Why, the boy asked, "do you blow down the muzzle of your gun?"
—"To see," replied the man, "if it is." And just then he discovered that it was.—Hank-Eye.

The second attempt in the United States to roll imported steel has just succeeded in Vermont. From imported English blooms the St. Albans Iron and Steel Works are rolling steel rails without flaw or blemish.
—It is strange how the sudden opening of a parlor door will send two people to the end of a sofa and set them to counting the figures in the carpet. There must be something powerful in the draft to blow human beings around in that way.
—A New Yorker was robbed the other day of $25,000 in broad daylight, and he didn't discover the theft until a few hours afterward. We should like to see anyone rob us of $25,000 in broad daylight—or in narrow twilight either. It can't be done.—Norristown Herald.
—A Minn. (Pa.) minister, while marrying a couple recently, was rather disconcerted on asking the bridegroom if he was willing to take the young lady for his wedded wife with all her scratching his head and saying: "Yes, I'm willing, but I'd a much sight rather have her sister."
—The subject for conversation at an evening entertainment was the intelligence of animals, particularly dogs. Says Smith: "There are dogs that have more sense than their masters. I've got," responds young Fitznoodle, "I've got that kind of a dog myself."
—Did you ever notice that there is something really musical in the pitiful weeping of your own baby. God bless it, and something—something, everything—frenziedly discordant in the squawling of your neighbor's howling young one? How is that, any how, that it always is that way?—Hank-Eye.
—Gen. James Harding, Railroad Commissioner of Missouri, is doing his work in a novel manner. He is now on a 200-mile walk over the railroads of Northwest Missouri, inspecting the condition of the roads, rails, ties and bridges. The work, he claims, can't be properly done in a palace car or from a car platform.
—An Indian man has for several years believed himself to be a dog. Usually, when you hint in the most delicate manner that a man is a cur, he is snarled in a minute. What a relief it must be to meet a man who will accept as a high compliment language that would put another man's tongue, lists and feet into dangerous activity.—Boston Transcript.
—Judge—You must admit that the proof against you is overwhelming. Thief—You know, I do not perceive it in those lamps. The witnesses were not sure they recognized me, and I hid away the stolen articles where they could not be found by the police. I should think that under the circumstances I am perfectly innocent.—Hudson News.
—Some ingenious creole at New Orleans has invented a lover's alarm clock which strikes loudly at the reasonable hour of ten. As it sounds, two little doors open and a dressing-gown and cap slides out holding in his hand a card inscribed "Good-night." As he bows and smilingly retires the suitor takes the hint, says "Good-night," and then departs.
—Caller [to postman]—"I want to send fifty francs to my son; how much'll it cost?" Postmaster—"Ten sous." Caller—"There you are." [Gives him ten sous.] Postmaster—"Hi, there, but where is the fifty francs?" Caller—"What have I got to give you the fifty francs, too? I don't see what sense there is in this money-order business."—Norris Figaro.
—The Pekin Gazette is nearly 500 years old, and every now and then an old man hobbles into the office and pays a year's subscription with the remark that he has been a subscriber ever since the first number was printed. The clerk, without betraying any surprise, observes, as he hands him a receipt: "Yes, we have several names on our list who have been subscribers from the start." Then the old man goes out muttering something about this world being full of liars.—Norristown Herald.
—Queen Isabella has ordered a new bonnet with a white plush brim, and having a handkerchief of white lawn bordered with point lace fashioned into a crown, and trimmed with a wreath of white phlox.—Fashion Correspondence.
The only remarkable thing about this bonnet is the fact that its description was sent over by mail, instead of being forwarded by cable. The ladies of this country are just as anxious to know when the gay old girl Isabella gets a new bonnet as the men are to hear that Lord Somebody's two-year-old nag came in fifth in a horse race.—Norristown Herald.

—This is the latest telephone story: A proud grandmamma, who has just been promoted to the honors of that happy relationship, is awakened in the dead of night by the inexorable bell. "Mamma, dear," comes to her the frightened voice of her beloved but inexperienced daughter. "I am sure baby has the croup. What shall I do with it?" Grandmamma replies that she will call the family doctor, and be with her anxious daughter in a moment. She awakens the doctor and tells him the terrible news she has learned from her daughter. He in his turn requests to be put in telephone communication with the too anxious mamma. "Lift the child to the telephone, and let me hear it cough," he commands. The child is lifted and it coughs. "That's not the cough," he declares, and declines to leave his house on such small matters. He advises grandmamma also to stay in bed, and all anxiety quieted, the trio settle down happily for the night.

—This year Christmas Day falls on a Thursday. The old rhyme says: If Xmas day on Thursday be, A windy winter ye shall see; Windy weather in each house, And hard tempests strong and thick; The summer shall be good and dry, And the autumn shall be rich; That year is good for lands to till, Kings and princes shall die by skill; If a child born that day shall be, It shall happen right well for; Of deeds he shall be good and stable, Wise of speech and reasonable; Whoso that day goes thieving about, He shall be punished without doubt; And if sickness that day befall, It shall quickly from this glide.

How Prices are Going Up.

The greatest rise in prices has been in articles of hardware, and so far as these enter into the construction of a house, the builder finds that his estimates must be very materially increased. Nails are 70 per cent. higher today than they were at the beginning of the present year. Window-weights have advanced fully 75 per cent.; locks and knobs have risen nearly 45 per cent. upon the average; tacks and kindred goods, 25 per cent.; common door butts and hinges fully 100 per cent.; and such other odds and ends of hardware as are used in building, an average of no less than 40 per cent. Common window-glass, either French, German, or American, cannot be bought to-day within 20 per cent. as cheap as it could on the 1st of January. A box of glass suitable for sashes 15x30 inches in dimensions costs $3.90 to-day, against $2.98 at the beginning of the year; a box for 10x15 sashes costs $2.70 to-day, against $2.10 on the 1st of January; and a box of glass for 13x26 sashes costs $3.00 now, against $2.50 then. Sashes, doors and blinds have recently undergone a very material advance. Blinds have been unprofitably low, and the present prices constitute a rise of from 35 to 45 per cent. A blind now costs $2.50, whereas it was lately 50 cents; now costs 65; those which formerly sold for 70 now sell for 90, and those which formerly sold for 78 cents now sell at $1.10. Sashes with glass ready set are over 30 per cent. dearer to-day than at the beginning of the year.

In brick there has been, since the 1st of January, an advance on some grades of common of over thirty per cent.; but in lime, sand and cement there has been very little variation, and the same may be said of paints and oils. These articles, however, there is a hardening tendency, and it may be generally said of them that, though there has been very little nominal advance, yet figures which could often be obtained upon them six or eight months ago are now impossible to-day. In "dull times" it frequently happens that dealers are willing to give quite concessions to customers for the purpose of securing trade when there has apparently been no actual decline in prices. But upon the other hand, when business begins to improve, the firmer feeling which prevails renders such concessions difficult to obtain, even though prices are not notably higher. The estimates which builders were able to furnish last winter and spring, therefore, were lower than to-day, not only because of the advance which has actually since occurred in some materials, but because of the concessions which were then possible in others.

Ordinary building lumber and shingles, clap-boards, etc., are not notably higher to-day than at the beginning of the year, but the Eastern mills are generally running full, and are apprehensive of a position where they can take their pick of orders. In the West a material advance has occurred on finishing stock, and the retail dealers are talking of a corresponding advance here. Hardwood lumber for finishing purposes is also firmer, and ash and cherry will cost some five per cent. more than on the 1st of January. Black walnut sells to-day about the same price as at the beginning of the year, but it has recently advanced to that figure after a decline of from three to five per cent. The cost of plumbing a house to-day is from twenty to twenty-five per cent. greater than on the 1st of January.—Manufacturer and Builder for November.

A Coffee-Field in Brazil.

In Southern Brazil, a coffee-field seldom lasts more than thirty years. The plantations are made on the fertile hillsides, where the forest has been growing thick and strong. But the soil here is never deep—six or eight inches of mold at the utmost. In the tropics there are no long winters with mats of dead vegetable matter rotting under the snow. The leaves fall in autumn and dry up until they break into dust; logs and decaying branches in the shady woods are carried away by white ants and beetles; hence the mold bed increases very slowly. In twenty-five or thirty years, the strong-growing coffee-trees eat it all up. Most planters simply cut down the forest and the trees to dry in the sun for six or eight weeks, when they are burned. So, more provident, lets the logs rot where they lie, which they do in a year or two; in the open sunlight they are saved from insects, and the ground receives a large accession to its strength.

Back of the house there are two yards or small fields, four acres, perhaps, together. The ground is covered with earthen pots set close together, only leaving little pathways at intervals. Each of the two hundred thousand pots contains a thriving young coffee-plant. The ground forms a gentle slope, and water is constantly running over it, so that it is always soaked. The pots, through orifices at the bottoms, draw up enough of this water to keep the roots moistened. The young plants are protected from the sun by mat screens stretched on poles above the ground.

This is a costly system. Most of the planters take root shoots at random from the old fields and set them at once into unprepared ground. Sr. S.—'s experiment has cost him probably $20,000; the pots alone cost $11,000. But he will, in the least $60,000 by the operation. In the first place he gains a good year in the start that he gives to these young plants. Then they are not put back in the transplanting; the pots are simply inverted and the roots come out with the earth. They are set into mold or compost which has been prepared in deep holes. The tender rootlets catch hold of this at once, and in a day or two the plant is growing as well as ever.

Nurslings come from selected seeds of half a dozen varieties. Sr. S.—has them planted at first in small pots. A dozen sashes are engaged transplanting the six-inch high shoots to larger pots. Little tired-looking children carry them about on their shoulders, working on as steadily as the old ones, for they are well trained. Sr. S.—wants to make his plants last fifty years, so he is careful and tender. He has not, out on the hillside. Warm sunshine caresses the leaves; generous rains feed the tender roots; the ground is kept free from intruding weeds and bushes, and the planter waits for his harvest. After four years the trees are six feet high and begin to bear. By the sixth year the crops are very large—three or four hundred pounds per acre at times. Meanwhile corn and manioc are planted between the rows. Oats in a new plantation the expenses are nearly covered by these subsidiary crops.

In this month of November only a few of the slaves are in the new fields. November is the principal gathering month, and almost the whole force must be at work in the peering orchards. From sunrise to sunset, men, women and children are gathering the berries in baskets, working silently and steadily under the overseer's eye. The average berries enough to produce fifty pounds of dried coffee. The pickings are collected in carts and brought to the mill-house, where the seeds must be prepared for the market.—Herbert H. Smith, in Scribner's Magazine.

A Plain Man.

The Woodward avenue car going north at eleven o'clock yesterday forenoon overtook a man with a hand-trunk of ancient make walking in the middle of the street. He inquired if the car went to the railroad track, and then asked if it was the car that carried passengers in the car, and as he stood in the door he looked from one to the other and said: "If I am intruding don't hesitate to tell me so. I like people who speak their minds, and I don't mind plain talk." No one objected and he took a seat, crossed his legs and said to himself: "I'll bet they never built this car for less than fifty dollars! I'm glad the old woman isn't here. If she were here I'd tell her she'd never let up on me till I tacked one to the house. I'll never ride on a wood wagon again when I can jog along in a chair like this. It's got more windows than a beach-house, and I don't see what she has to do with it. I was doing to spit!" As he made no move to pay his fare the driver rang the bell. "Go bells on here, eh?" mused the plain man. "Now how'd I-a-thought they'd have a bell to ring for me? Folks here in town are right on the style, no matter what it costs!" The driver rang again and again, and seeing that it did no good he finally opened the door and said: "You didn't pay your fare!"

"My fare! Why, that's so! Hanged if I hadn't forgotten all about it! Were you ringing that bell for me?" "Yes." "That's too bad! Why didn't you open that door long ago and say to me: 'Here, you old potato top, if you don't pass up your dimes I'll land you in the mud!' I'm a plain man, and I never get mixed up in plain talk. Take your damage out of this half dollar!"—Free Press.

A Novel Wooing.

A handsome black walnut chamber-set was exhibited by a Patterson furniture dealer at the Hohokus, (N. J.) fair. It was much admired, and a group of admirers were a young man and the young woman he had to the fair. He had been courting her for a long time, but he had never succeeded in getting his courage up to the point of asking her to be his. While admiring the walnut set he inquired, doubtless without any ulterior motive: "How would you like such a set as that?" The young woman promptly answered that she would be almost willing to be married if she could begin housekeeping with such furniture. "I'll buy it if you'll marry me," the young man said, with the air of one who had found a long-sought opportunity. The answer was decisive and business-like: "You can't close the bargain any too soon." The wedding invitations are already sent out.—N. Y. Sun.

HOLIDAYS IN 1880 ON SUNDAY—Washington's Birthday, Decoration Day, July 4 and Christmas.

Historical Sun Darkenings.

In 556, 567 and 626 we find mention of long periods of diminished sunlight. Schuurer records that in 733, a year after the Saracens had been driven back beyond the Pyrenees, consequent on their defeat at Tours, "the sun darkened in an alarming manner on Aug. 19; there appeared to be no eclipse by the moon, but rather an interruption from some meteoric substance." There nearly toted on the morning of Aug. 14; it was mentioned in the Saxon Chronicle, which tells us that "the sun's disc was like a black shield." The near coincidence of date suggests, in this case, a connection between darkness and the eclipse. In 934, according to a Portuguese historian, the sun lost its ordinary light for several months; and this is followed by the doubtful statement that an opening in the sky seemed to take place, with many flashes of lightning, and the full blaze of sunshine was suddenly restored. In 1091, on Sept. 29, 21, as given in some of the translations of Humboldt's "Cosmos," Schuurer relates that there was a darkening of the sun which lasted three hours, after which it had a peculiar color, which occasioned great alarm. A century later (or in June, 1191, according to Schuurer) the sun was again darkened, with certain identified effects upon nature. Here the cause is easily found. On June 23 there was a total eclipse, in which the moon's shadow traversed the continent of Europe from Holland to the Azores. The earliest was that in this country, between the coasts of Cumberland and Yorkshire.

Erman refers to a sun darkening on February 12, 1106, which was accompanied by meteors, and with certain identified effects upon nature. Here the cause is easily found. On the 5th of February, in this year, a star was seen from the third to the ninth hour of the day, which was distant from the sun only a foot and a half. Matthew Paris and Matthew, of Westminster, term this star a comet, and we may take it to have been the same, which later in the same month, was observed in China under the sign Pisces, and which at one time was supposed to be identical with the great comet of 1080; this body, however, would not appear to have been sufficiently near the earth, and even on the assumption of a denser constitution than usual with comets, to account for a diminution of the solar rays by its intervention. On the last day of February, 1206, according to a Spanish writer, there was complete darkness for six hours. In 1241, "five months after the Mongol invasion of the darkness became so great that the stars were seen at the ninth hour about Michaelmas. In this case, again, the darkness referred to was undoubtedly due to the total eclipse of October 6, of which Prof. Schiaparelli has collected a full account from the Italian writers. Lastly, in 1671, from April 23, Kepler relates, on the authority of Gemma, "the sun appeared as though suffused with blood, and many stars were visible at noon-day." Schuurer thought this phenomenon was what the Germans call a "Hobereueh," notwithstanding the visibility of the stars. From the above brief survey of sun darkenings, we see that in several cases the diminution of light has been due to the ordinary effects of a total eclipse, while it is clear that there are no grounds in the historical evidence for any prodigious period of darkness. The nervousness in these matters, and it would really appear that such exist, may take consolation therefrom.—Nature.

A Dare-Devil Joke.

Buffalo Bill tells a good story about a party of Englishmen traveling on the plains before the Pacific Railroad was finished. They came grumbling into Laramie, abusing the driver and the coach and the "blasted country" generally, because, they averred, there was no "coaching or driving outside of England." Their contempt of all things American was shown in the most offensive manner to all the people standing around as they alighted. It happened that Bob Scott, the finest driver and the most reckless dare-devil on the plains, was to take the coach to the next station, eight miles westward from Laramie, and as the gay Jehu heard the remark of the Brits, he slowly made up his mind to give them a specimen of his own American coaching. The stable boys led out six colts, that looked as if they had never heard of a stage before; they reared and snorted, plunged and kicked until the noble Britons were quite delighted with the anticipation of what was to come. "Now, driver, just give 'em their heads and let 'em go; don't you be afraid my boy."

"Yes," says another encouragingly, "my good fellow, just go ahead." Bob mounted the box slowly while a man held each horse; he gathered the reins and said quickly: "Let 'em go." And they did, and the colts plunged and reared but Bob's iron grasp held them in. With the aid of the California brakes he held them down to a walk for three miles, while passengers blasphemed at him for a "cad" and a sneak. At the end of that three miles they got to the top of a hill and one Briton poked his head out of the window and began to say something, but as he did a wild, unearthly yell waked that vicinity, and at the same time Bob threw all six lines down. The coach seemed to lift from the ground, and those six colts started at the very best speed they could make. Another yell from Bob, and they seemed to increase it; then to help matters he drew his revolver and began firing over the horses' heads. "Great God," cried the Britons, "we've got into the hands of a blasted lunatic!"

"Stop, stop!" they shouted; but the mad team and crazy driver were on faster and faster, while the stage went bouncing over the rocky road in a way that threatened to pound the passengers to pieces. Bob craned his neck over and yelled into the window: "Gents, I'm just getting 'em started; they'll do better after while." And he took out the lamps and hurled them at the leaders with a wild Comanche war-whoop.

The affrighted passengers presently saw the station in full view; the question was how was that team to be stopped. They gave themselves up for gone, and hung on despairingly to the seats. It seems that the horses were accustomed to go right into the stable, coach and all, and up they came to the open door at full speed. There was a yell from the assembled stable attendants and tavern loafers, then a frightful crash as the whole top of the coach went off, throwing three Britons out and breaking two arms and a leg, besides other slighter accidents. Bob came out of the stable sniffling, picked up an Englishman and said: "Never mind, sir; we'll have a real nice drive to the next station. I was obliged to take 'em along slowly over that 'ere bad road. Boys, put in the other team in a fresh coach, and give me a couple of cocktails. It's awful dry."

Those Englishmen waited and sent for a doctor, but they did not put down anything in their note-book about American driving.—Washington Capital.

A Dusky Princess.

The city of San Francisco during the remainder of the week will be honored in giving entertainment to a genuine princess. The steamer State of California, which arrived from Portland, Oregon, yesterday morning, carried among her passengers Miss Sarah Winnemucca, a grand-daughter of the Piute chief, Captain Truckee, from whom the river takes its name. The Princess Sarah is well known to fame, and at present is traveling under the protection of some of the officers of the army, who have agreed to see her safe through this wilderness of civilization, our city. During the afternoon a Chronicle reporter called at the hotel where the princess intends to hold her court while in this city, and upon sending up his card was readily admitted. With her were her brother Naches and her cousin Jerry, who have come from Winnemucca on purpose to accompany Sarah on her trip to Montana, the residence of her sister, who is married to a white man named Smith. The reporter was warmly welcomed by a resolute shake of a small, soft hand, and in spite of his protests, he was seated in the softest chair in the room, from which the princess herself had just risen.

Next in order were introductions to Naches and Jerry, "two of my people," as the princess remarked, and then everything being satisfactory, explained she herself drew a chair into the circle, "and now we are comfortable for a nice good talk," she smilingly said. In personal appearance Sarah compares most favorably with other princesses. She is of medium height, apparently about thirty years of age, broad-shouldered and straight. Her features are regular and expressive. Her prevailing expressions resolute and courage, unobscured with good nature. Her movements are quick, but womanly and soft, withal, her manners quiet and very self-possessed. She was neatly attired in a brown dress of waterproof material, her only ornament being a necklace of coral. Being the princess herself commenced the conversation. "I want to ask you something," said she, in remarkably good and correct English: "I have just been thinking how it would do for me to wear a fine old hat, and for her called upon full of rents and holes, entered the post-office yesterday with an unstamped letter in her hand and said to the first person she met: 'Say, I've written a long letter to my grandma, and I want to know if this is the place to leave it.' 'Yes, this is the place,' he answered, 'but you must put a stamp on it.' 'Won't they carry a little girl's letter to her grandma for nothing?' she asked. 'I guess not.' 'Then I don't know what to do, and I'm awful sorry, for I told her I had a new doll baby, and that my cat was dead, and that my ma was awful sick, and that the little girl who used to play with me was dead. If they'll send my letter, I'll pay just as soon as ever I can.' 'I'll put a stamp for you,' said the gentleman, as he took the letter. 'Will you? Now, that's real good. Mebbe I'll be rich and you'll be poor some day, and I know I'll lend you tea and coffee and whatever you want. Is your grandma dead?' 'Yes.' 'That's too bad! Did she have the scarlet rash or the measles?' 'I hardly think so. Here—I'm afraid your letter won't go.' 'O, yes, it will, for I got a big boy to direct it, and he writ just as slow and big as he could.' It was directed: "For Grandma, Ohio," and almost every other letter was a capital. He then shook his head, and the child cried out: "See how big the writing is! It'll go right straight to grandma, and she'll be tickled to death to hear from me! I was more'n a whole week writing it, and at the end it says: 'I'd give anything to kiss you.' O! I know it'll go!" He looked into her child face and could say nothing to crush the hopes she had cherished and the work she had accomplished. "It may reach her," he said, as he posted it. "And she'll write back and tell me if any of her cats are dead, and if the hens have got any more chickens, and if any more boys have fallen into the mill-pond! Just think of me writing to my grandma way off, and grandma writing back and putting a regular stamp on the letter! I can't wait, for I know I'll feel awful big over the other girls! Well, good-bye—I'll pay you just as soon as ever I can, and I hope to die if I don't!"—Free Press.

The use of whiskey for rattlesnake bites in Texas has increased so enormously during the past year that the overworked snakes have resolved to leave the State unless the Board of Immigration reinforce them strongly. They work on double time, and yet can't do half the biting that is demanded by the consumers. One snake who does business at Port Lavaca is six weeks behind his orders, and a tree of the clerks are sick.—Hank-Eye.

she had held a council with a band of fifty who were captured by General Howard, and that they were Banocks. These Indians were part of a band called "Sheep-eaters." They were afraid to go to their reservations; they had committed so many depredations and murders that they expected to be hanged when captured. The rest of this band had made their way to the Utes and invited them to make depredations upon the frontiersmen. Sarah, since February last, has been living at the Yakima reservation, where some four hundred of her tribe have settled down. Soon after their arrival there the Government put a school house at her disposal, and until she left she taught regularly the rudiments of the English language to a class of thirty-two girls and thirty boys, all Indians. She is very well satisfied with the progress she has made. Sarah appears to be an enthusiastic Methodist, and she narrated her experiences of a lovely camp meeting, as she called it, with evident relish. It had been attended by over eight hundred people, whites and Indians, and she herself had interpreted the sermons which were preached by the missionaries. Sixty-three Piutes had been converted since the spring, partially through her ministrations. Her people had cleared off about three hundred acres of land upon the reservation, and intended to settle down permanently. They had some nice houses, and some had even sewing machines and organs. They row intended to build a church. The only matter which gave her occasional trouble were the feuds which continually springing up between her people and those Indians who had come to the reservation before them.

Sarah Winnemucca thinks that she was born at or near Humboldt Lake. When eight or nine years of age, while traveling with her people toward Carson City, she saw the first white man. "I remember," she says, "my grandfather got two boxes of crackers from the emigrant, but was afraid to open them, because he was afraid to use pistols. I got behind my mother and called him an owl. My grandfather, while with Captain Fremont, had heard about California, and when he came back from the Mexican war he told me that there was a fair to be held in the Joaquin Valley. My brothers Tom and Naches here went to work for four years on a ferry boat. After that we went down to Saint City and staid there for three years; from there I went to Saint Jose, where I went to the convent school for about three years. I liked it very well, until in 1865 I heard that my people had taken the war-path against the whites. So I went back to Nevada, and since that time I have been traveling around from one place to another, mostly with the army. Usually the Indians treat me well enough, unless they are on the war-path, and then I have to be very careful. I never go armed, because I don't want to use pistols, anyway. But when I go scouting I always take two Indians along with me, and they get very good rifles from the officers." Being asked if she had not often been in danger, Sarah only smiled and said she did not know; nothing had ever happened to her.—San Francisco Chronicle.

"For Grandma."

A bit of a girl, not more than eight years old, wearing a faded old hat, and her called upon full of rents and holes, entered the post-office yesterday with an unstamped letter in her hand and said to the first person she met: "Say, I've written a long letter to my grandma, and I want to know if this is the place to leave it." "Yes, this is the place," he answered, "but you must put a stamp on it." "Won't they carry a little girl's letter to her grandma for nothing?" she asked. "I guess not." "Then I don't know what to do, and I'm awful sorry, for I told her I had a new doll baby, and that my cat was dead, and that my ma was awful sick, and that the little girl who used to play with me was dead. If they'll send my letter, I'll pay just as soon as ever I can." "I'll put a stamp for you," said the gentleman, as he took the letter. "Will you? Now, that's real good. Mebbe I'll be rich and you'll be poor some day, and I know I'll lend you tea and coffee and whatever you want. Is your grandma dead?" "Yes." "That's too bad! Did she have the scarlet rash or the measles?" "I hardly think so. Here—I'm afraid your letter won't go." "O, yes, it will, for I got a big boy to direct it, and he writ just as slow and big as he could." It was directed: "For Grandma, Ohio," and almost every other letter was a capital. He then shook his head, and the child cried out: "See how big the writing is! It'll go right straight to grandma, and she'll be tickled to death to hear from me! I was more'n a whole week writing it, and at the end it says: 'I'd give anything to kiss you.' O! I know it'll go!" He looked into her child face and could say nothing to crush the hopes she had cherished and the work she had accomplished. "It may reach her," he said, as he posted it. "And she'll write back and tell me if any of her cats are dead, and if the hens have got any more chickens, and if any more boys have fallen into the mill-pond! Just think of me writing to my grandma way off, and grandma writing back and putting a regular stamp on the letter! I can't wait, for I know I'll feel awful big over the other girls! Well, good-bye—I'll pay you just as soon as ever I can, and I hope to die if I don't!"—Free Press.

The use of whiskey for rattlesnake bites in Texas has increased so enormously during the past year that the overworked snakes have resolved to leave the State unless the Board of Immigration reinforce them strongly. They work on double time, and yet can't do half the biting that is demanded by the consumers. One snake who does business at Port Lavaca is six weeks behind his orders, and a tree of the clerks are sick.—Hank-Eye.

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MD., SATURDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1879.

NUMBER 43

VOLUME 3.

OAKLAND BUSINESS GUIDE

DRY GOODS, GROCERIES, etc.

D. E. OFFUTT,

GENERAL MERCHANDISE,

Agricultural Machinery, Musical Instruments,

Guns, Pistols, etc.

G. W. LEGG,

GENERAL MERCHANDISE,

Cor. Second and Oak sts.

D. H. LOAR,

ORIGINAL NEW YORK STORE,

General Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, Jew-

elry, etc.

I. W. STALNAKER,

Grocery and Provision Store,

Corner Third and Oak Streets.

L. BUSH & SON,

GENERAL MERCHANDISE,

Cor. Third and Oak sts.

J. A. GRANT,

Special Line of Groceries,

Opposite Valley's Park.

DAVIS & TOWNSEND,

GENERAL MERCHANDISE,

Agents Agricultural Machinery,

Opposite Valley's Park.

C. C. MICHAEL,

GENERAL MERCHANDISE,

Nations, Clocks, Confectionery, etc.,

Next to Collington's Hotel.

RICHARDSON BROS.,

GROCERIES, CONFECTIONERIES,

General Goods, Fruit, etc.

JAS. A. ENLOW,

Dealer in

General Merchandise and Country Produce

Reynolds Building, Oakland, Md. 11-15

HOTELS.

CODDINGTON'S HOTEL,

W. M. CODDINGTON, Proprietor,

Main St., Opposite Jamison's Billiard Saloon.

LIVERY STABLE.

THOMAS MARTIN,

Opposite Postoffice.

STOVES AND TINWARE.

G. A. SHIRER,

Oak street, near Second.

A general line of Stoves and Tinware.

PHYSICIANS.

DR. J. LEE MCCOMAS,

Office on Main Street.

DR. E. H. PARSONS,

offers his professional services

to the people of Oakland and vicinity.

Office in the old Offutt building,

3 S St.

PLASTERER.

JAMES ARNOLD,

Residence on Fourth Street.

BOOT AND SHOE MAKER.

W. M. M. WAGNER,

Shop Cor. First & Oak Sts.

GEO. F. LOUGHRIDGE,

Leave orders at Express office.

SURVEYORS.

J. B. BLANT,

Surveyor, Auctioneer and

Conveyancer.

Oakland, Garrett county, Md.

JOHN HARNED,

Address, Post Office.

JEWELER.

A. B. WOODCOCK,

In Wm. Snouse's Building,

Watches and Clocks Cleaned and Repaired.

MILLINERY AND FANCY

GOODS.

MRS. M. E. DAVIS,

Cor. Oak & Second Sts.

M. L. SCOTT'S Baltimore Store,

Millinery, Gents' Furnishing

Goods, and Fancy Goods, and School

Main Street, Opposite Dr. McComas' office.

DRUGS AND MEDICINES.

GEO. C. STURGIS,

Drugs, Medicines,

Perfumery, Toilet articles, Stationery,

Tobacco and Cigars.

PAINTING & PAPER HANG-

ING.

E. J. FRINGER,

House and Sign Painter.

And Paper Hanger.

Leave orders at Bush's Store.

S. V. B. WARD,

HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTER

Shop near Davis House.

BLACKSMITHS.

CHAS. SINCELL,

Liberty Street.

CONTRACTORS & BUILDERS.

JOHN M. JARBOE,

Carpenter, Contractor & Builder,

Residence on Liberty St. near opp. Depot.

P. A. CHISHOLM,

Carpenter, Contractor,

And Builder.

Residence on Oak Street.

GEO. A. SPEDDEN,

Residence opp. School house.

JOSEPH M. CRIM,

Residence on Alder Street.

A. C. BROOKE,

Res. near Republican office.

CABINETMAKERS AND UN-

DERTAKERS.

A. C. BROOKE,

Res. adjoining Gazette office.

JOHN SHATZEL,

Shop on Second Street.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FALL & WINTER GOODS.

GOODS FRESH & NEW
and Cheap as the Cheapest.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,
MERCHANT TAILOR.

Has on hand a full stock of New

Ready Made Clothing,

which he will sell very cheap for cash.

Gents Furnishing Goods,

In great variety, and at prices to suit the

times.

Suits Made to Order

In the most fashionable manner. Orders by

mail promptly attended to.

Also Agent for the Celebrated

"Pearl Shirt."

A Large Assortment of

BOYS' CLOTHING

Kept always on hand.

#3. All work WARRANTED to give entire satisfaction.

A. LOEWENSTEIN,

66-ly Oakland, Md.

MEAT MARKET.

H. B. WOLFE

Formerly of Cumberland, Md.

Takes this mode of announcing to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity that he has permanently located in Oakland for the purpose

of carrying on the

BUTCHERING BUSINESS

In a first-class manner.

FRESH BEEF, (small-cut), MUTTON, PORK,

BOLOGNA SAUSAGE, PORK SAU-

SAGE, &c., at all times.

Shop near the Post Office.

Customers can get what they want without

delay and at any hour of the day.

Your patronage is respectfully solicited.

H. B. WOLFE.

PATENTS.

To Inventors and Manufacturers.

ESTABLISHED 1865.

GILMORE SMITH & CO.

Solicitors of Patents & Attorneys at Law.

American & Foreign Patents.

No fees in advance, nor until a Pat-

ent is allowed. No fees for making preliminary examinations.

Special attention given to Inter-

ference Cases before the Patent Office.

Infringement Suits in the different

States, and all litigation appertain-

ing to Patents or Inventions.

Send Stamp for Pamphlet of Sixty

Pages.

GILMORE & CO.,

629 F. Street, N. W.,

Washington, D. C.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

THO. J. PENNIBOY, A. B. GOSDER,

PENNIBOY & GOSDER,

ATTORNEYS AT LAW

SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY.

OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and

Allegany Counties, the adjoining Counties of

West Virginia, and in the Court of Appeals

of Maryland.

S. A. COX, H. WHEELER COMBS,

COX & COMBS,

ATTORNEYS AT LAW

SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY.

Office, Alder street, Oakland, Garrett county,

Maryland.

Will practice in all the Courts of Maryland

and adjoining counties of West Virginia, and

in the Court of Appeals of Maryland.

1878-79.

CHAS. H. HAMILL,

ATTORNEY AT LAW

AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.

OFFICE IN DEWEY'S BUILDING,

Lower Floor.

Particular attention given to conveying and vesting of land titles and collection of claims. Loans negotiated.

1878-79.

J. W. VEITCH,

ATTORNEY AT LAW

AND

SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.

OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MD.

Will practice in the Courts of Garrett County

and the adjoining Counties of West Virginia,

and in the Court of Appeals of Maryland.

Jan. 30-77.

DR. W. F. FUNDENBERG

Late Resident Surgeon, New York

Eye and Ear Infirmary.

HAS LOCATED PERMANENTLY in the

City of Cumberland, Md., for the EX-

clusive treatment of all diseases of the Eye and Ear, including those of the Nose and

Throat.

Office, No. 20 South Centre Street.

1878-79.

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE LESSONS.

SUNDAY, DEC. 21, 1879.

THE LAST WORDS.

GENERAL STATEMENT.

As the venerable apostle gazed upon the walls of the heavenly city, he is so transported with wonder that he falls down before the feet of his celestial guide, and is about to pay him divine honors. But the angel lifts him to his feet, and bids him worship God alone. He is commissioned to repeat among the Churches the revelation which he has just received, to proclaim that the King will soon appear, bearing in his hand the reward for every man's work. Side by side are announced the blessing and the curse, the admission to the New Jerusalem to the obedient and exclusion from its walls for the unobedi-

ent. Then with abundant invitation to the water of life, an emphatic warning against the revelation of the divine message, and an ardent expression of longing for the coming of the Lord, the benediction of God's Son is given and the "Amen" is uttered.

Rev. 22, 10-21.

Memory Verse, 16-21.

10. And he said unto me, Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book: for the time is at hand.

11. He that is unjust, let him be unjust still:

and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still:

and he that is righteous, let him be righteous

still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still.

12. And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be.

13. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last.

14. Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city.

15. For without are dogs, and sorcerers, and whore-mongers, and murderers, and idolaters,

and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie.

16. I Jesus have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches. I am the root and the offspring of David, and the bright and morning star.

17. And the Spirit and the bride say, Come.

And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is thirsty come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely.

18. For I testify unto every man that heareth

the words of the prophecy of this book, if any man shall add unto these things, God

shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book.

19. And if any man shall take away from the words of this prophecy, God shall take away his part of the book of life, and the city, and the things which are written in this book.

20. He which testifieth these things saith,

Surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

21. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

HOME READINGS.

M. The last words of the Bible, Rev. 22, 10-21.

N. The last words of Jesus, Gen. 48, 1-20.

O. The last words of Moses, Deut. 34, 1-20.

P. The last words of David, 1 Kings 2, 1-11.

Q. The last words of Stephen, Acts 7, 55-60.

R. The last words of Paul, 2 Tim. 4, 1-22.

S. The last words of Jesus

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

THE IRON PEN.

Many from a letter of Bonnard, the Prisoner of Chillon; the Handle of Wood from the Frigate "Constitution," and bound with a Circle of Gold, just with three precious stones from Sierra, Ceylon and Maine.

I thought this pen would arise
From the desk where it lies—
Of itself would arise, and write
My thanks and my surprise.

When you gave it me under the pine,
I dreamed those gems from the mines
Of Siberia, Ceylon and Maine
Would glimmer as thoughts in the lines:

That this iron link from the chain
Of Bonnard might retain
Some verse of the poet who sang
Of the prisoner and his pain.

That this wood from the frigate's mast
Might write me a rhyme at last,
As it used to write on the sky
The song of the sea and the blast.

But motionless as I wait,
Like a Bishop lying in state
Lies the pen, with its suite of gold
And its jewels invade.

They must I speak, and say
That the light of that summer day
For the gift, and the grace of the gift,
Shall not fade and pass away.

I shall see you standing there,
Crossed by the fragrant air,
With the shadow on your face,
And the sunshine on your hair.

I shall hear the sweet low tone
Of a voice before unknown.
Saying: "This is from me to you—
From me, and to you alone."

And in words not idle and vain
I will answer and thank you again
For the gift, and the grace of the gift,
O beautiful Helen of Maine!

And forever this gift will be
As a blessing from the dawn of the day
On the leaves of an aged tree
—Daisy, in London Notes, in Harper's Magazine
for December.

BUILDING THE NEST.

DAISY DRUMMOND's black eyes were flashing, and her cheeks were crimson as she stood listening to what Miss Gypsum said.

"It's not true—not one word of it is true, and I won't listen to such mean, venomous slander!"

She had a sweet, ringing voice. She was a graceful girl.

Her face was joyous and piquant, and very pretty, with saucy eyes and a dimpled chin; and yet she was nobody but Miss Josie Gypsum's seamstress for the time being.

She had been sewing merrily away, singing little snatches of songs, feeling so gay and happy, and thinking with all her heart of Dick Kenneth, when Miss Gypsum came into the room for a little chat with Daisy, that had turned quite naturally on Mr. Kenneth, whom Miss Gypsum had dared to asperse to Daisy's face.

"Well, you needn't look as if you were going to knock me down, Daisy. I'm sure I've only said what's the truth, and what everybody knows. Kenneth is a regular scoundrel, and I'm sure the crimson brightened on Daisy's cheeks and she sprang up from her chair.

"It is not true—not one word of it is true, and I won't listen to such slander!"

Miss Gypsum involuntarily settled further back in her chair.

"Dear me! you needn't be so touchy about it, need you?"

"Touchy! I am insulted, and you shall not repeat such cruel gossip to me!"

Miss Gypsum shrugged her shoulders.

"But suppose it's not cruel, but true kindness to tell you I am considerably older than you are—"

"I should say so!" flashed out Daisy, sarcastically.

"And have had more experience in the ways of the world," Miss Gypsum went on, disregarding Daisy's caustic little slashing, "and I tell you that when a young man of Kenneth's age begins to be as close and avaricious as he is—as everybody sees and knows—now, Daisy, I tell you he will end by being too contemptibly stingy and miserly to live with."

"But I tell you he is not close and avaricious!"

"Well, then," and Miss Gypsum's eyes twinkled maliciously, "why is it that on the salary we all know he gets, he never spends a penny on you? You never get an invitation to go on an excursion; he never gives you as much as a ribbon or a flower, and when the employees in his house contributed to the woman he was the only one out of a hundred who declined to give anything."

"That was his business, not yours," blazed out Daisy.

Frankie Welland lay down with a diaphanous and his own mother could not endure the child's agony and everybody else was frightened away, it was Miss Gypsum who watched three nights by the boy and held him in his arms when he died—so there, now!"

"O, of course, that was very nice indeed of him—very nice; but when it comes to the money question you'll find your Dick will not put his hand in his pocket. Mark my words, Daisy Drummond, you'd better stay as you are and earn your own dresses than to have your husband refuse to give them to you, and make you earn them after all."

Daisy swallowed a host of furious words that came rushing to her trembling lips.

Then she took off her little white ruffled apron and rolled it up.

"Miss Gypsum, you can find some one else to finish your sewing. When you insult my betrothed husband you insult me, and I will not stay where you are."

So she went away, trembling with anger and pain, leaving Miss Gypsum dumfounded and perhaps justly chagrined.

Daisy's cheeks were still crimson when she went into the tidy little sitting-room at home, where her mother sat.

"Daisy, what are you doing at home at this time of day? What is the matter?"

"That horrid Miss Gypsum! Such talk about Dick you never heard in your life! She dared to speak to me as if she were a privileged friend—the nasty, censorious creature!—and I'll never, never set another stitch for her as long as I live!"

Mrs. Drummond's thin lips compressed themselves into an unpleasant line and her forehead puckered itself into a frown.

"You are such a rash, hot-tempered child, Daisy, and to think you've lost so dearly; and do you think I will stand by and hear people talk about him—call him a mean, stingy, avaricious miser—and not say a word?"

Mrs. Drummond gave a little sigh that some how made Daisy feel uncomfortably vexed.

"Well, Daisy, I suppose you know your own business best, but other people besides Miss Gypsum have noticed how—well, how very economical Dick is. On Christmas I really felt ashamed to be obliged to say that he had made you no present."

Bright tears were sparkling on the girl's lashes.

"Dick and I perfectly understand each other, and if I am satisfied, I can't see who else need worry themselves about it. I didn't promise to marry him for what he should give me."

"If you had I'm afraid you'd find yourself mistaken. Are you going to stay at home the rest of the day or going to Mrs. King's?" asked her mother.

"I shall stay at home and make my black cashmere."

And she was sitting in the sunny window, busily sewing away, a few minutes before dinner, when her brother came in, and flung himself on the lounge.

"I've just left Kenneth, Daisy. What a mean stick he is! I asked him to join our club and he refused—couldn't afford it," he said. Rich, isn't it mother?—only himself to support. Wish you joy of your luck, Daisy!"

It was just the last straw on the camel's back.

Daisy rushed out of the room, the hot tears of vexation and indignation on her lashes.

"He's not stingy—he's not mean! He has his reasons; he is right in what he does, and I love him better than all the world. Only—"

The wistful shadow of that vague, troubled "only" was yet in her lovely eyes, when her lover came to her that night, an unusual gayety in his manner, and it seemed to her, an unusual tenderness.

"Shall you be busy to-morrow afternoon, Daisy?" he asked, as they stood saying adieu. "Because, if you can spare the time, I want you to take a ride with me into the country to-day. You've been here some anywhere with me yet, dear, because I could not afford to take you. But to-morrow I am going to be a little extravagant. Will you be ready at two o'clock?"

A radiant light suddenly dispelled that vague shadow that had been hiding in her eyes all the evening.

"O, I am so glad! What a lovely treat it will be! Indeed, I'll be ready."

She was thinking—loving, foolish little girl—that at last at last Dick was silencing gossiping tongues.

And he was thinking—well, he did not tell her what; only when he took her in his arms and kissed her good night, it seemed to Daisy he never had loved her so well.

The country was regally beautiful in its fresh green robes when they drove leisurely out from the noisy city streets that next day, Daisy looking like a blooming rose with her happy, flushed face and shining dark eyes, and Dick so proud of her sitting beside him.

It was a happy ride, only it seemed impossible when Dick, taking out his watch, said it was supper time.

"And I am hungry as a hunter, Daisy. This fresh, pure air is a capital tonic for an inhabitant of the city. How would you like to live in the country?"

Daisy laughed.

"How wicked you are to tempt me with such a question! You know it has always been the one dream of my life to have a home in the country, and when I—when we—get rich, Dick, we'll have it, won't we?"

She flushed in her sweet confession, and Dick smiled in her eyes as he reined in the pony at the roadside.

"I am going to get out here, Daisy, and ask the good people of this place to bestow a bowl of milk on us benighted travelers. Shall I tie the horse or will you hold her?"

Daisy preferred to hold her and Dick thought the very loveliest she had ever seen.

She watched Dick up the gravel walk to the house.

Such a beautiful little Gothic cottage as it was, with bay windows, where ruffled curtains fluttered in the soft spring wind, where everything around was in such spotless order and savored so of home.

It was so sweet, so restful to sit there in the flickering shade cast by a tree, and when at length Dick made his appearance she had quite forgotten that it was milk they wanted.

There was a curious gravity on his face as he came up.

"I find the people here unusually hospitable, Daisy. We are invited to rest and refresh ourselves. Come."

Leaving on her lover's arm, Daisy entered the lovely little hall, with its pink and gray Brussels carpet, its hat-rack and mirror, its stairs carpeted on each side with the parlor that opened on one side—a long room, into which Dick ushered her with an elaborate bow.

"And now, Miss Drummond, tell me what I shall order for you?"

Then, at her look of astonishment and alarm, she started, surprised, he suddenly caught her in his arms.

"Daisy, darling, this is the home I have been making for us; it is mine—ours, dear, ready and waiting for the hour when you shall be crowned queen over your kingdom. Now, you know, dear, why I have been so careful of my money. I wanted a nest for my bird!"

And Daisy sank down in a lovely little narrow-cushioned chair and cried for joy.

Then they went over the delightful little "nest," where everything was in the most perfect taste and, as Dick said, only waiting, as was the pleasant-faced girl in the kitchen, for the mistress to come.

"And for my special bridal gift, Daisy—the spoon present to you for your own exclusive use—his."

And he led her back to the pony and chaise, the rapturous tears so blinding her eyes she could scarcely see.

"O, Dick! Dick! I am not worth so much!"

He kissed her as he took his seat beside her.

"I am the best judge of that, my darling. Here, take the reins; Bess is yours on one condition; that my wife drives me to our dear little home in a month."

And Miss Josie Gypsum actually has the audacity to call occasionally on Mrs. Dick's husband, while Daisy's mother and brother insist that they always so honored Dick Kenneth—such a persevering, prudent, prosperous man as he always was, such a model husband and provider as he is.

"The Child on the Door-Step."

"Did she leave any children?"

"Yes, this bit of a child."

"And who'll take her?"

"I don't know. We are very poor around here, sir, but we must find her a place somewhere. God help the little girl for she is all alone now!"

The sexton had called at an old tenement house on Lafayette street east to take a body to a pauper's field—the body of one whose life had been worn out in the smoke mill of hunger and despair. Nobody knew that the mother was dead—hardly suspected that she was ill, until one morning this child appeared at a neighbor's door and quietly said:

"I've just left Kenneth, Daisy. What a mean stick he is! I asked him to join our club and he refused—couldn't afford it," he said. Rich, isn't it mother?—only himself to support. Wish you joy of your luck, Daisy!"

It was just the last straw on the camel's back.

Daisy rushed out of the room, the hot tears of vexation and indignation on her lashes.

"He's not stingy—he's not mean! He has his reasons; he is right in what he does, and I love him better than all the world. Only—"

The wistful shadow of that vague, troubled "only" was yet in her lovely eyes, when her lover came to her that night, an unusual gayety in his manner, and it seemed to her, an unusual tenderness.

"Shall you be busy to-morrow afternoon, Daisy?" he asked, as they stood saying adieu. "Because, if you can spare the time, I want you to take a ride with me into the country to-day. You've been here some anywhere with me yet, dear, because I could not afford to take you. But to-morrow I am going to be a little extravagant. Will you be ready at two o'clock?"

A radiant light suddenly dispelled that vague shadow that had been hiding in her eyes all the evening.

"O, I am so glad! What a lovely treat it will be! Indeed, I'll be ready."

She was thinking—loving, foolish little girl—that at last at last Dick was silencing gossiping tongues.

And he was thinking—well, he did not tell her what; only when he took her in his arms and kissed her good night, it seemed to Daisy he never had loved her so well.

The country was regally beautiful in its fresh green robes when they drove leisurely out from the noisy city streets that next day, Daisy looking like a blooming rose with her happy, flushed face and shining dark eyes, and Dick so proud of her sitting beside him.

It was a happy ride, only it seemed impossible when Dick, taking out his watch, said it was supper time.

"And I am hungry as a hunter, Daisy. This fresh, pure air is a capital tonic for an inhabitant of the city. How would you like to live in the country?"

Daisy laughed.

"How wicked you are to tempt me with such a question! You know it has always been the one dream of my life to have a home in the country, and when I—when we—get rich, Dick, we'll have it, won't we?"

She flushed in her sweet confession, and Dick smiled in her eyes as he reined in the pony at the roadside.

"I am going to get out here, Daisy, and ask the good people of this place to bestow a bowl of milk on us benighted travelers. Shall I tie the horse or will you hold her?"

Daisy preferred to hold her and Dick thought the very loveliest she had ever seen.

She watched Dick up the gravel walk to the house.

Such a beautiful little Gothic cottage as it was, with bay windows, where ruffled curtains fluttered in the soft spring wind, where everything around was in such spotless order and savored so of home.

It was so sweet, so restful to sit there in the flickering shade cast by a tree, and when at length Dick made his appearance she had quite forgotten that it was milk they wanted.

There was a curious gravity on his face as he came up.

"I find the people here unusually hospitable, Daisy. We are invited to rest and refresh ourselves. Come."

Leaving on her lover's arm, Daisy entered the lovely little hall, with its pink and gray Brussels carpet, its hat-rack and mirror, its stairs carpeted on each side with the parlor that opened on one side—a long room, into which Dick ushered her with an elaborate bow.

"And now, Miss Drummond, tell me what I shall order for you?"

Then, at her look of astonishment and alarm, she started, surprised, he suddenly caught her in his arms.

"Daisy, darling, this is the home I have been making for us; it is mine—ours, dear, ready and waiting for the hour when you shall be crowned queen over your kingdom. Now, you know, dear, why I have been so careful of my money. I wanted a nest for my bird!"

And Daisy sank down in a lovely little narrow-cushioned chair and cried for joy.

Then they went over the delightful little "nest," where everything was in the most perfect taste and, as Dick said,

only waiting, as was the pleasant-faced girl in the kitchen, for the mistress to come.

"And for my special bridal gift, Daisy—the spoon present to you for your own exclusive use—his."

And he led her back to the pony and chaise, the rapturous tears so blinding her eyes she could scarcely see.

"O, Dick! Dick! I am not worth so much!"

He kissed her as he took his seat beside her.

"I am the best judge of that, my darling. Here, take the reins; Bess is yours on one condition; that my wife drives me to our dear little home in a month."

And Miss Josie Gypsum actually has the audacity to call occasionally on Mrs. Dick's husband, while Daisy's mother and brother insist that they always so honored Dick Kenneth—such a persevering, prudent, prosperous man as he always was, such a model husband and provider as he is.

"The Child on the Door-Step."

"Did she leave any children?"

"Yes, this bit of a child."

"And who'll take her?"

"I don't know. We are very poor around here, sir, but we must find her a place somewhere. God help the little girl for she is all alone now!"

The sexton had called at an old tenement house on Lafayette street east to take a body to a pauper's field—the body of one whose life had been worn out in the smoke mill of hunger and despair. Nobody knew that the mother was dead—hardly suspected that she was ill, until one morning this child appeared at a neighbor's door and quietly said:

"I've just left Kenneth, Daisy. What a mean stick he is! I asked him to join our club and he refused—couldn't afford it," he said. Rich, isn't it mother?—only himself to support. Wish you joy of your luck, Daisy!"

It was just the last straw on the camel's back.

Daisy rushed out of the room, the hot tears of vexation and indignation on her lashes.

"He's not stingy—he's not mean! He has his reasons; he is right in what he does, and I love him better than all the world. Only—"

The wistful shadow of that vague, troubled "only" was yet in her lovely eyes, when her lover came to her that night, an unusual gayety in his manner, and it seemed to her, an unusual tenderness.

"Shall you be busy to-morrow afternoon, Daisy?" he asked, as they stood saying adieu. "Because, if you can spare the time, I want you to take a ride with me into the country to-day. You've been here some anywhere with me yet, dear, because I could not afford to take you. But to-morrow I am going to be a little extravagant. Will you be ready at two o'clock?"

A radiant light suddenly dispelled that vague shadow that had been hiding in her eyes all the evening.

"O, I am so glad! What a lovely treat it will be! Indeed, I'll be ready."

She was thinking—loving, foolish little girl—that at last at last Dick was silencing gossiping tongues.

And he was thinking—well, he did not tell her what; only when he took her in his arms and kissed her good night, it seemed to Daisy he never had loved her so well.

The country was regally beautiful in its fresh green robes when they drove leisurely out from the noisy city streets that next day, Daisy looking like a blooming rose with her happy, flushed face and shining dark eyes, and Dick so proud of her sitting beside him.

It was a happy ride, only it seemed impossible when Dick, taking out his watch, said it was supper time.

"And I am hungry as a hunter, Daisy. This fresh, pure air is a capital tonic for an inhabitant of the city. How would you like to live in the country?"

Daisy laughed.

"How wicked you are to tempt me with such a question! You know it has always been the one dream of my life to have a home in the country, and when I—when we—get rich, Dick, we'll have it, won't we?"

She flushed in her sweet confession, and Dick smiled in her eyes as he reined in the pony at the roadside.

"I am going to get out here, Daisy, and ask the good people of this place to bestow a bowl of milk on us benighted travelers. Shall I tie the horse or will you hold her?"

Daisy preferred to hold her and Dick thought the very loveliest she had ever seen.

She watched Dick up the gravel walk to the house.

Such a beautiful little Gothic cottage as it was, with bay windows, where ruffled curtains fluttered in the soft spring wind, where everything around was in such spotless order and savored so of home.

It was so sweet, so restful to sit there in the flickering shade cast by a tree, and when at length Dick made his appearance she had quite forgotten that it was milk they wanted.

There was a curious gravity on his face as he came up.

"I find the people here unusually hospitable, Daisy. We are invited to rest and refresh ourselves. Come."

Leaving on her lover's arm, Daisy entered the lovely little hall, with its pink and gray Brussels carpet, its hat-rack and mirror, its stairs carpeted on each side with the parlor that opened on one side—a long room, into which Dick ushered her with an elaborate bow.

"And now, Miss Drummond, tell me what I shall order for you?"

Then, at her look of astonishment and alarm, she started, surprised, he suddenly caught her in his arms.

"Daisy, darling, this is the home I have been making for us; it is mine—ours, dear, ready and waiting for the hour when you shall be crowned queen over your kingdom. Now, you know, dear, why I have been so careful of my money. I wanted a nest for my bird!"

And Daisy sank down in a lovely little narrow-cushioned chair and cried for joy.

Then they went over the delightful little "nest," where everything was in the most perfect taste and, as Dick said,

A Romance of the Frontier.

She was a little thing, with large luminous eyes, that, lighting up her features, rendered positively attractive a face that would otherwise be passed in a crowd without a second glance, and a wealth of coal-black hair, neatly arranged, except a single heavy lock that by its own weight had escaped from its fastenings. She seemed half frightened at her position, and her dark cheeks and forehead flushed to the roots of her hair as she stepped into the little room where the 'Squire sat dispensing justice. She seemed not over sixteen, and modesty was apparent in her very attitude, as she stood with folded hands awaiting the commencement of further proceedings.

Her companion was a grizzled, awkward, looking man, apparently fifty years of age, with an ugly scar stretching from the inner point of his left eye across his cheek to nearly the point of his chin, describing an arc, which had left a wide track bare of an otherwise luxuriant growth of gray whiskers. Hair matted and growing low down on his forehead, together with the distortion of his eye, caused each other to give his countenance a sinister leech, positively repulsive.

The ill-assorted pair stood for a moment while His Honor disposed of some papers before him, the man fumbling a worn-out felt hat under his arm, nervously twisted his fingers. As the Justice turned toward them expectantly, the man stepped to the desk, and leaning toward His Honor, said in a confidential, husky whisper:

"Squire, you marry people, I suppose?"

"Well, I reckon I can give you a little job this morning."

"Who are the parties?"

"His Honor pushed back his chair, put on his spectacles, and deliberately surveyed the man from head to foot. His inspection finished, he turned to the girl, whose blushes, under his earnest, inquiring gaze, caused each other to neck, cheeks and forehead, until she was one glow of burning color.

"See here, my man," said the 'Squire, "come into my private room for a moment. Take a seat, mites."

Leading the way to the inner room, His Honor closed the door and turned fiercely upon his companion. "Ain't you ashamed of yourself, you old scoundrel, to come here expecting me to marry you to a child like this?"

"Naw, don't get hot, Squire. I know I ain't much to look at, I've been told that since I was a kid, and this beauty spot," touching the scar, "ain't an improvement. An' it's all along of this that this 'ere circumstance has come about. This was the way of it: You see, what with being so ugly and awkward, and all of that, I ain't been the best man in the world. I never harmed anybody, but I generally kept pretty full, and if I got dead any why, it all went in a few days for liquor; and so I traveled round, and was never anything but a vagabond. Well, last spring I struck the camp, an' saw me making money, an' after a big drunk found myself without a cent. This ain't no place for a man when he's dead broke, an' I tumbled to myself an' chopped short. I worked a month in the Little Pittsburg, an' never got drunk once, an' then I took my money and laid in a two months' grub stake, an' went up South Evans an' took up a claim. There's where I first met Kitty, out there. Her father had the next claim to mine, an' we kept on working, an' he kinder liked me, and so he let me go to work with him. When I got broke I was down forty feet, an' the hole looked good. I worked for the Little Chief a month then, and then I went at it again. All that time I was drinking and drinking, and day after I went back to the hole Kitty's father sickened, and in three days he was dead. Me an' two or three others did all we could for the girl, but there wasn't many of us up there then, an' we was all poor. I took my money and moved to get away with, so I just moved my grub over to her cabin, an' I told her that if she'd do my cookin', an' I struck it, I'd share even with her. She couldn't do anything else, poor thing, an' so I went on working, an' in a month I got it. Of course I felt good, an' if I'd been broke it would have been all right. But I had a couple of dollars, an' I came to town, an' when the money was all gone, I was too good to go to that little gal; an' because I knew she'd come over to my cabin to call me to supper, I thought I'd go down the shaft an' sleep it off. But a drunken man can't calculate, an' I was too good to go. I went down the rope an' fastened it to the buckle, which was on the edge of the hole, and it came down on my face an' left this scar. I don't know how I got down the rope, but I know that I was. I got down I couldn't get up, an' I laid there without knowin' nothing, an' when I came to it was mornin', an' there was that little girl's face lookin' down the shaft. I thought it was an angel, an' kinder swooned off again, an' the next thing I knew someone was tyin' the rope around under my armpits, an' blessed if it wasn't that little gal. When she got through she just shinned up the rope and histed me myself. I don't know how she did it, but she got me out an' nussed me, an' I'm well. I sold my hole yesterday, an' got enough to keep us both comfortable, an' I've got used to her, an' don't know how we want to get married, an' that's the long an' short of it."

"But there's such a difference in your ages."

"Not so much 'Squire," said the man, with a movement of the head that would have been a wink had a wink been possible. "She's twenty-five and I'm fifty-two—the same figures you know."

"But is the girl entirely willing?"

"You can ask her," and as the old man spoke the door opened and the girl, who had become impatient at the long conference, walked in.

"There's nothing wrong about this, Judge," she broke out. "I'm hurrying to get married, an' I'm the kindest, best man in the world, an' I love him, an' though he don't say much, I know he loves me, an' we've got $20,000, an' we're going to get married unless," and here she broke down with a sob, "he changes his mind."

"I'll never change my mind, Kitty," said the old man, drawing her toward him.

In a few minutes man and wife went out of office, and the 'Squire, with a gratified smile pocketed the best fee he had received for a month.—Leadville (Col.) Herald.

Standing Armies of Europe.

THERE can be little question that the present prostrate condition of continental trade is in great measure due to the enormous burdens laid on the people by the military policy of their rulers. How heavy these burdens are some details taken from a report lately issued by the Hungarian ministry will show. According to this report (the object of which is to exhibit the relative weakness of the Austro-Hungarian forces and advocate an addition to them), the military strength of Russia consists of 3,046,800 men, of whom 600,000 belong to the reserve and 2,446,800 to the standing army. The regular army of France comprises 1,689,000 soldiers of all arms, the territorial army 1,208,000; total, 2,897,000, to be increased in 1892 by the addition of 200,000 reserve men to 3,097,000. The German power of all classes is represented by 2,004,300 men, of whom 1,076,200 belong to the standing army, 307,200 to the landwehr, and 620,900 to the reserve. Italy has an army of 698,000, and a militia of 310,000. In 1892, when the reserve will number 1,016,200, her total strength will reach 2,024,200. Austro-Hungary possesses a standing army of 800,000, a landwehr of 299,318, and a reserve of 95,000 men; total, 1,194,318. The grand total of all these forces amounts to 16,471,918, the standing armies alone numbering 7,925,000. But it must not be understood that all the latter are now under arms; at least half of them are on furlough. They form the first line, and all would, of course, be at once called out in the event of a general war. It is nevertheless true that the great military powers have at their disposal 16,471,918 men who have learned, or are now learning, the soldier's art, and are bound to re-enter the ranks when required. The mind refuses to grasp the full significance of these portentous figures; but it may be said that Europe is now so long as these bloated armaments are suffered to exist, Europe can count neither on lasting commercial prosperity nor on a long continuance of peace.—Geneva Cor. of Manchester Examiner.

Diogenes' Tub a Wine-Jar.

ANOTHER harmless and familiar delusion has been ruthlessly swept away by the restless broom of scientific investigation. The tub of Diogenes, so graphically depicted by Busch in his inimitable "Bilderbogen," has been relegated to the dismal limbo of discredited myths. Diogenes, so we are sternly informed by German archaeologists, never lived in a tub at all. The illustrious stoic resided in a jar—a sort of overgrown earthenware pitcher with a handle. Careless translators, who have recklessly rendered the Greek word for "wine-jar" by the comparatively modern substantive "tub," are responsible for the error in which humanity has been unwittingly plunged for ever so many hundreds of years. Pliny assures his readers, ancient and modern, that tubs are of Gallic origin. Diogenes can have known nothing of the tub. The Greeks kept their wine in jars, frequently bottomless, and thrust into the soil of their cellar floors, so that the liquor poured into them might not dribble out through inequalities in the lower rim of the amphora. It was in one of these bottomless pitchers that Diogenes took up his abode. Placed upon its side, he slept in it; set upright he walked about in it. There is monumental evidence extant to the fact that he chose for his dwelling a cracked and chipped jar, unfit for liquor-containing purposes, being prompted to this selection by his hatred of anything like luxury or wastefulness. In certain districts of Brazil the aborigines formerly buried their dead in jars exactly similar to Diogenes, earthenware freehold; and these quaint coffins are still not unfrequently found, containing mummified bodies of priests and warriors, with their ornaments and armaments, buried in the earth on the banks of the Parana, where abide the Coroades, a civilized Indian tribe.—London Telegraph.

Mishaps of a Turkey-Merchant.

The Yankton Press interviewed a traveler from Deadwood to Fort Pierre, and he remarked that the only discouraged man he met on the road was an individual who started from Yankton with 600 turkeys. From Yankton to Pierre the turkeys were carried by boat. From Pierre this poultryer intended to drive them to Deadwood. The first night out while still near the river, coyotes got among the flock and scattered it, many taking refuge in a brushy thicket in the river. The next morning he found all but 150 of his birds and started on. When met about half way between Pierre and Deadwood he had but thirty of his original flock left, but he could console himself with the thought that his loss was the infinite gain of the Pierreans. Every one there that could get a gun was out on that island hunting turkeys, and poultry for awhile was the cheapest meat in the market.

The World's Granary.

Till the comparison is made in figures it is not easy to appreciate how completely the United States overshadows England and the rest of the civilized world in its food producing power. England has 2,890,000 acres of wheat this year, and Australia supplements this with 2,600,000 acres. With the exception of Canada, these two countries contain all the wheat tillied by the English speaking races. The United States has the rest—34,000,000 acres and over. All Europe, including Russia, has barely 40,000,000, at a rough estimate based on the wheat production of the different countries. The United States alone has nearly as large an acreage, and at the annual rate of increase will soon have more.

FALSE HIPS are openly sold in San Francisco dry goods stores.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

—Graham flour must be kept bug-tight, or before you are aware, it will be full of webs and worms. A butter tub is very safe and convenient to store it in. Have a tight fitting cover, hoops tacked on and outside painted.

—Guinea fowls will keep all bugs and insects of every description off garden vines. They will not scratch like other fowls or harm the most delicate plant. Their eggs are valuable, and they lay often than the common hen.

—Chicken Pie.—Cut the chicken up, put it in a pan and cover it over with water; let it stew as usual, and when done make a thickening of cream and flour, adding a piece of butter and pepper and salt. Have made and bake a pair of shortcakes, made as pie crust, but roll thin and cut in small squares. This is much better than chicken pie and more simple to make. The crust should be laid on a dish and the chicken gravy poured over while both are hot.

—Scalloped Oysters.—Crush and roll several handfuls of Boston or other nice crackers; put a layer in the bottom of a buttered pudding dish; wet this with a mixture of the oyster liquor and milk, slightly warmed; next put a layer of oysters; sprinkle with salt and pepper and put bits of butter upon them; then another layer of moistened crackers, and repeat until the dish is full; let the top layer be of crumbs thicker than the rest, and beat an egg into a little milk and pour over them; put bits of butter thickly over it and bake half an hour.

—Reports from apiarists of various parts of the country appear to be in favor of wintering bees in cellars, instead of the old method of leaving them upon the stands where they are kept during the summer. The bees, when protected from severe cold, eat less and come out much stronger in spring. But it is quite important that the cellar in which the bees are stored should be perfectly dry and well ventilated, for unless these conditions are secured the combs become moldy and the bees perish.

—Lined oil is not only a valuable restorative for sick horses, but is exceedingly useful in cases of inflammation of the membranes, peculiar to the organs of respiration and digestion; it shields and lubricates the same, tranquilizes the irritable state of the parts, and favors healthy action. Put a couple of handfuls of seed into a bucket and pour a gallon and a half of boiling water upon it; cover it up a short time, and add a couple of quarts of cold water, when it will be fit for use. In case of an irritating cough add some honey.

—Pennsylvania Sponge Cake.—Seven eggs, one pound of white sugar, three-quarters pound of flour, one gill of warm water; put the sugar in a vessel and pour the water over it; stand it where it will get warm, not hot; break the eggs in a tin bucket and pour the heated sugar on it, beating with the egg-beater as you pour; it keeps the bucket containing the sugar and eggs over a vessel of hot water all the time you beat. Continue this for half an hour, then stir in very lightly the flour and flour, and bake immediately. This makes a large cake and very nice for a dessert, with either custard or sauce.

Treatment of the Hair.

How to preserve the hair is a subject which seems to interest almost everybody. If we may judge from the frequent inquiries from every direction which comes to this office, One wishes to know what will prevent baldness, another how to preserve their hair from turning gray, another how to eradicate dandruff, etc. Now, it is a delicate matter to recommend any special treatment, but Professor Wilson, of England, who is deemed high authority on the hair, condemns washing it, and advises, instead, thorough brushing. This promotes the growth of the hair, and is in all respects, he says, better than water.

Cutting the hair does not, as commonly thought, promote its growth. Most of the specifics recommended for the hair are of no use. Some are mere stimulants, and are seldom or never permanently successful. Some of them give rise to congestion of the scalp. When a stimulant is desirable, ammonia is the best. It is safe.

For falling out of the hair, Dr. Wilson prescribes a lotion composed of water of ammonia, almond oil and chloroform, one part each, diluted with five parts alcohol, or spirits of rosemary, the whole shaken vigorously, and rubbed into the scalp. Dab it on the skin, after thorough friction with the hair brush. It may be used sparingly or abundantly, daily or otherwise.

For a cooling lotion, one made of two drams of rose water and glycerine, and ounces of distilled water is effective, allaying dryness, subduing irritability and removing dandruff.

Both baldness and grayness depend on defective powers of the scalp skin, and are to be treated alike. What is needed is moderate stimulation, without any irritation. The following is good: Rub into the bare places daily, or even twice a day, a liniment of camphor, ammonia, chloroform and aconite, equal parts each. The friction should be very gentle.

Remarkable Presence of Mind.

Remarkable presence of mind was recently shown by a miner near Pottsville, Penn. He was employed in a shaft on Sharp Mountain. He had lighted a fuse and was climbing to the surface by means of pegs in the side of the shaft. When within a few feet of the top one of the pegs gave way, and the unfortunate man fell to the bottom thirty feet below. One of his thighs was broken and the splintered bones were pushed through two pairs of pantaloons. Notwithstanding his terrible injuries he had sufficient presence of mind to crawl to the lighted fuse, which had burned within a few inches of the charge, and snuff it out. If he had not done this he would have been blown to pieces when the explosion took place. He then crawled back to one of the earth-buckets, got into it without assistance, and was hoisted to the surface.

—Home rule—your wife's opinion.

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

ABRAM MORRISON.

Midst the men and things which will Hunt an old man's memory still,
Drooping, quivering, of them all,
With a boy's laugh I recall
Good old Abram Morrison.

Isish of the Indian Pipe not, priest and church were his;
Sister with his quietude,
Aster for the quietude,
On week days was Morrison.

Back and forth to daily meals
Made his cheerful pug on wheels,
And to all who came to see
Aster for the quietude,
Sure it is! said Morrison.

Well we loved the boy he told
Of a country strange and old,
Where the ladies danced till dawn;
And the golden Legation
Looked, we thought, like Morrison.

All his words have perished. Shame
On the well-to-do of France,
That they bring not to our time
One word of the quietude,
Made by Abram Morrison!

When, on calm and fair First Days,
Battled down our one-horse chair,
Through the blossomed apple-boughs
To the Quaker meeting-house,
There was Abram Morrison.

Underneath his hat's broad brim
Peered the power old face of him,
And with fresh jaunty
Seemed the vestals of the dress Worn by Abram Morrison.

Still, in memory, on his feet,
Leaving out the old, high seat,
Blushing with a solemn dream,
Celtic, accepts all his own,
Rises Abram Morrison.

On his well-worn, innocent,
Simple, child-like, innocent,
Heaven forgive the half-checked smile
Of our carousal, his own,
Listening to Friend Morrison!

After half a century's lapse,
We are now, now, perhaps,
But we miss our sweet and Something which the past has hid,
Lost with Abram Morrison.

Good-bye, never with the quiet
Character that old year,
Now the many are as one,
Broken is the quietude,
Men like Abram Morrison.

—John G. Whittier, in Atlantic for December.

THE CURATE'S SWEETHEART.

"A young woman with a pleasing face, who rarely smiles, and seems to show observation, and an old lady, who comes out very little and always veiled."

That was the description given to the Rev. Charles Grosvenor of the new occupants of the little cottage which lay so close to his vicarage that he could see the smoke from the chimney over the tops of the trees that skirted his lawn.

The Rev. Charles Grosvenor had been away from the scene of his labors at Chumleigh for a month. Chumleigh was a quiet, comfortable and healthy place, but he had been ordered seaward, and had taken the trip, leaving his by no means extensive flock to the care of a temporary shepherd.

The Rev. Charles Grosvenor was a young man, and Chumleigh was a first living. He was quite new enough to his work to take interest in it, and he was on intimate terms with all his parishioners.

Directly he heard of the new arrivals in the village, of course determined to call upon them, but he thought he would just inquire what sort of people they were.

The result was the above description
—a description vague enough in conscience, and sufficient at once to invest the heroines of it with a slight taint of romance.

The Rev. Charles Grosvenor had not so long left college life to bury himself among the pumpkins, but that he could divulge the piquancy which a little mystery lends to our ordinary humdrum existence.

Knowing that the young lady shunned observation, his curiosity was at once aroused, and he had her to his study the next morning, and with more than ordinary eagerness. As to the old lady —well, he was a young bachelor, remember, and however deeply old ladies may veil themselves, or however mysterious they may be, they cannot expect to command much attention when there is a younger lady in the case.

The curate called at Laburnum cottage the day after his return from the seaside. He found the Smiths very quiet and unassuming people. Mrs.
Smith said very little and sighed a good deal, and Miss Smith, though a fluent and agreeable speaker, as he could judge from the little she said, spoke only in answer to his questions, and kept her eyes fixed on the ground the whole time that he was talking to her.

"Something queer about these people," said the Rev. Charles Grosvenor to himself. "I wonder what it is. I must draw them out."

His notion of drawing them out was to engage their services in his parish work. The old lady sighed and consented. The young one colored, cast down her eyes, and said that she could not fit for such work. Not religious enough, she meant.

The Rev. Charles Grosvenor was much distressed to hear that Miss Smith was not religious. Here, at last, was a task congenial to his soul. He was quite willing to convert farm laborers and to reform market gardeners, but when a demure looking young lady, self, he could not refrain from looking forward to the prospect of higher and nobler work.

He talked seriously to Miss Smith,
and Miss Smith listened seriously—so seriously that the curate was taken by surprise. He was almost alarmed at the terrible earnestness with which the girl spoke of religious questions, asked for spiritual consolation and argued with him on the dread subject of the sinner's fate hereafter. The earnestness and the vehemence of his parishioner, however, only increased his interest in her.

Now, when Miss Smith called herself a miserable sinner, the Rev. Charles Grosvenor thoroughly believed that she was one. He accepted her confession in the same sense that he would have accepted it from the patron of his living, or his mother, or any of his lady parishioners. We are all miserable sinners, and being enjoined to say so, a clergyman cannot, for the sake of being coun-plimentary, refuse to believe a young lady when she affirms that she is no exception to the rule.

But as to attaching any really serious import to the confession of Miss Smith, that never occurred to him for a moment. He soothed her, offered her such consolation as he could, thought she was a most pious and interesting girl, and fell madly in love with her.

From the moment he made the discovery his conduct to her altered. He tempted her to talk less about herself and to be cheerful. He didn't want the girl he was in love with to be too persistently a miserable sinner. She was so charming and so nice that he felt she might very well keep that in the background a little.

A white tie and a clerical coat do not alter a man's nature; and when a man falls madly in love with a woman, he likes to imagine her as near perfection
as possible.

Miss Smith's manner changed also.
She discovered the parson's secret before it was many days old. She was still pleased to see him, but she avoided
all reference to her sins.

Once he questioned her about her past life. For a moment she went deadly pale, then the color rushed to her cheeks, and she stammered out a remark which turned the conversation.

Miss Smith said that the Rev. Charles Grosvenor was at her mercy. It was only a question of time when he would make the avowal. Should she encourage him, or discourage his secret, and stop it while there was yet time?

In her difficulty she laid the case before her mother, and asked her advice.
The old lady was frightened out of her wits. She dare not think about such a thing, she said. Of course it would be the making of her if she could marry a clergyman, but how could it be done? He would have to know the history of her life first, and then:

"And then he wouldn't have me," answered the girl, passionately.

"Of course not, my dear," said Mrs.
Smith, "at least I should think not."
"Shall I tell him?" Shall I confess all the next time he comes?"

Again Mrs. Smith was frightened.
She does not like to think what the result of that confession will be. There was a danger at last to find a spot where they can live quietly and unknown,
why must all the miserable story be brought up again?

Miss Smith failing to get any practical advice from her mother, thinks the matter over quietly by herself, and by the time she sees her admirer again
she settled on her course of action.

She meets him in the field that leads to the church.

It is a bright summer morning, and
they pause by a stile to look at the yellow and red of the far stretching fields.

The Rev. Charles Grosvenor commences by talking about nature, and gradually comes down talking about
himself—his aims and prospects in life.
Little by little the conversation slides
into the groove he wished, and in five minutes his hand and fortune have been laid at the feet of the lady listener.

He hadn't meant to be so abrupt, he had meant to keep his secret a little longer, but it had popped out accidentally among the poetry and domestic details, and he was very glad it was over.

Miss Smith was of course very much surprised. The curate had caught her hand as his accents grew more impassioned, but she allowed him to retain it till he had finished, then drew it gently
away.

"Mr. Grosvenor," she said, quietly,
"I will answer you fairly and frankly.
Before you made me such an offer you should have ascertained to whom you were speaking."

"What do you mean?"
"You do not know who or what I am."

"I know that you are an angel," Miss Smith's lip curled slightly, but
her voice trembled as she answered:

"As you have gone so far it is only right you should know something about me. My name is not Smith. That is a false name."

"A false name?" the parson gasped.
"Dear me! why do you want a false
name?"

"Listen, and I will tell you. Did you ever hear of a terrible crime, for which
two men and two women were condemned to death? It was called a 'mystery' at first. But when the facts came to light it was called a 'murder.' One man starved his wife to death, and the other people held him. He wanted to marry a younger woman, and this younger woman was one of the accused."

"I remember the case," stammered
the curate. "It was very awful; but I don't see what you've got to do with it."

The perspiration stood on his brow,
and he began to mop it with his pocket-
handkerchief. He half expected to hear that Miss Smith was a relative of one of the criminals.

"You remember," continued the girl, speaking rapidly now and without emotion, "that all four were condemned
to death, but the young girl was at the last moment granted a free pardon and allowed to return to the world and her friends."

"Yes," gasped the clergyman, "I remember; but what has all this business to do with you?"

"This," answered the lady whom he had just made an offer of marriage; "I was the girl that allowed the murdered
woman's husband to love me—I was the girl for whose sake the murder was committed—I was the girl who was
condemned to be hanged by the neck, and then granted a free pardon! I am—"

She stopped. The Rev. Charles Grosvenor had reeled back against the stile
and closed his eyes.

"Excuse me," he muttered; "a little faintness that's all."

He pulled himself together, stammered a little, coughed, and for a minute seemed at a loss what to say.

She broke the silence first.
"I have told you now the secret of my life. I am here with my mother,
and here wish to remain—unknown,
forgotten by the world. We are bound to live under an assumed name. We should be hooted and stoned if it were known who we really are. Will you keep my secret?"

"Certainly stammered the curate;
"and I trust—"

"That I shall keep yours. Rest assured that, Mr. Grosvenor. I will forget that anything has happened this morning, beyond the ordinary interchange of courtesies between clergyman and parishioner."

She smiled and bowed, and passed on.

He walked back slowly to the church
muttering to himself. "What an escape—who'd have thought it?"

The Rev. Charles Grosvenor is still the curate of Chumleigh, and Miss Smith and her mother still live at Laburnum cottage. The parishioners, however, notice that the visits of the clergyman to the cottage are few and far between, and that when he calls he is generally accompanied by one or other of his lady visitors.

And old Dame Turvey, who knows everything about everybody, and is a great authority on village matters, assures all, for at one time she was quite sure the parson was sweet in that quarter, and she quite expected that Miss Smith would have presided at the parsonage tea table.

"Something must have happened
very unexpected to break it all off," concludes the worthy dame, "for it was all altered like in a minute."

Dame Turvey is right for once.
What happened was very unexpected, and it made such an impression on the Rev. Charles Grosvenor that he will remember it to the end of his life.

Vanderbilt's Great Ideal.

Mr. Gould's millions now crowd close to those of Vanderbilt. He is a man of finer texture than the old Commodore's son. He doesn't run to low houses, costly stables, and blooded steeds. At night when he dismounts he goes into his study, and there, in his own house in Fifth avenue, and enters up in a little book the telegraphic receipts of the various railroads which he owns,
he does not go to a club to carouse, to a banquet to steam up with champagne,
or to a theater; he retires to the recesses of a peaceful, library, and with his young sons about him, reads the Latin classics, the world forgetting, but not being forgotten, by a large majority.

When he is tired, he goes to bed, and he telegraphed about lightning service and he is sending an electric shock through Wall street as soon as the bulls and bears come into that field for pasture. Mr. Gould is a liberal man, and the time she sees her admirer again
she settled on her course of action.

He doesn't like to think what the result of that confession will be. There
was a danger at last to find a spot where
they can live quietly and unknown,
why must all the miserable story be
brought up again?

Miss Smith failing to get any practical advice from her mother, thinks the
matter over quietly by herself, and by
the time she sees her admirer again
she settled on her course of action.

She meets him in the field that leads
to the church.

It is a bright summer morning, and
they pause by a stile to look at the yellow and red of the far stretching
fields.

The Rev. Charles Grosvenor commences by talking about nature, and
gradually comes down talking about
himself—his aims and prospects in life.
Little by little the conversation slides
into the groove he wished, and in five minutes his hand and fortune have been
laid at the feet of the lady listener.

He hadn't meant to be so abrupt, he
had meant to keep his secret a little longer, but it had popped out accidentally among the poetry and domestic details, and he was very glad it was
over.

Miss Smith was of course very much surprised. The curate had caught her
hand as his accents grew more im-
passioned, but she allowed him to retain it
till he had finished, then drew it gently
away.

"Mr. Grosvenor," she said, quietly,
"I will answer you fairly and frankly.
Before you made me such an offer you
should have ascertained to whom you
were speaking."

"What do you mean?"
"You do not know who or what I am."

"I know that you are an angel,"
Miss Smith's lip curled slightly, but
her voice trembled as she answered:

"As you have gone so far it is only
right you should know something about me. My name is not Smith. That is a false name."

"A false name?" the parson gasped.
"Dear me! why do you want a false
name?"

"Listen, and I will tell you. Did you ever hear of a terrible crime, for which
two men and two women were condemned to death? It was called a 'mystery' at first. But when the facts came to light it was called a 'murder.' One
man starved his wife to death, and the other people held him. He wanted to marry a younger woman, and this
younger woman was one of the accused."

"I remember the case," stammered
the curate. "It was very awful; but I don't see what you've got to do with
it."

The perspiration stood on his brow,
and he began to mop it with his pocket-
handkerchief. He half expected to hear that Miss Smith was a relative of one
of the criminals.

"You remember," continued the
girl, speaking rapidly now and without
emotion, "that all four were condemned
to death, but the young girl was at the
last moment granted a free pardon and
allowed to return to the world and her
friends."

"Yes," gasped the clergyman, "I remember; but what has all this business to do with you?"

"This," answered the lady whom he had just made an offer of marriage; "I
was the girl that allowed the murdered
woman's husband to love me—I was
the girl for whose sake the murder was committed—I was the girl who was
condemned to be hanged by the neck,
and then granted a free pardon! I am—"

She stopped. The Rev. Charles Grosvenor had reeled back against the stile
and closed his eyes.

"Excuse me," he muttered; "a little faintness that's all."

He pulled himself together, stam-
mered a little, coughed, and for a minute seemed at a loss what to say.

She broke the silence first.
"I have told you now the secret of
my life. I am here with my mother,
and here wish to remain—unknown,
forgotten by the world. We are bound to live under an assumed name. We

VARIETIES.

—An ill wind always finds something to blow about.

—A breath of suspicion ruins a temperance lecturer.

—Hard wear—Tight boots.—Philadelphia Chronicle-Herald.

—It's soap deferred that maketh the heart sick—of the spectator.

—Industry needs not wish, and he that lives upon hope will die fasting.

—A stitch in time frequently saves
the entire garment.—Buffalo Express.

—Why a door-nail is any more dead than a door must be because it has been hit on the head.—New Orleans Picayune.

—You should never give advice. If the person to whom you offer it is wise
he doesn't need it, if he isn't he won't take it.

—Peterjohn says if he could have his way during life, he shouldn't care if his will were contested after his death.— Boston Transcript.

—In South Carolina a statute provides that all persons having no reasonable and lawful excuse shall attend
some religious service every Sunday.

—A mustard plaster is a good thing in its place; but the best place so far as our experience goes, is to have the mustard plaster on a ham sandwich.

—The world didn't come to an end,
as predicted, but we haven't yet seen anybody who paid his debts in anticipation of the event.—N. Y. Express.

—It is a happy provision of nature that people do not know when they lose their senses, and fools do not miss the absence of brains.—New Orleans Picayune.

—New Orleans has a depraved school girl, who, instead of passing her gun around for the other girls to chew on sawdust, instead when her jaws get tired.

—Of course, the journal who said it doesn't mean anything when it says,
"Our country is founded on compromise."
Other laws are made by Congress.

—A chap at Circleville, Ohio, smoked a pipe over an open keg of powder to show how brave he was, and yet when his wife called "Henry!" from a back gate he turned as white as snow.—Free Press.

—"Death is the great commander," says a Boston paper. This will settle a vexed question in many Detroit households. Heretofore it has been a hard struggle to see who should boss the job.
—Free Press.

—A country correspondent sends us
the following soul-horrorizing conundrum. Why do pigs thrive better on sour milk than they do on sweet? And the answer is because they get more of it.—Lookport Union.

—An exchange published an article boasting of "What a single bean can produce." It is amazing. Fired from a bean-shooter into a man's car, it can produce some of the worst language
man is capable of uttering.

—Benjamin Franklin wanted the turkey selected for the emblematic bird of America instead of the eagle—and this it will be remembered, was a long, long time before a trade dollar was thought of.—Rochester Herald.

—Alfonso was obliged to borrow two million dollars for his wedding expenses. If a fellow in this country could borrow a couple of millions on such an occasion the Boston Transcript thinks there would not be a neglected spinster from Maine to Texas.

—Mamma. "What's the matter, darling? You don't seem pleased to see me." Precious Darling; "No, I am not, mamma. I find you have gone and engaged yourself to be married again without my approval, which had I promised you to one of my girls' uncles."

—When you see a man with a gun on his shoulder and three dogs at his heels making across the country, you needn't feel bad for the rabbits. He'll miss a crow or two, but a few frozen quail fallen into a creek and return home believing he has had a thundering big time.—Free Press.

—Prof. Proctor has been delivering a lecture in New York on "The Immensity of Space." Can Mr. Proctor tell us what space is?—Evening Journal.

First tell him whether you mean a three cent, thin, or hair space.—Albany Times.
Let him sit between two stout women in a narrow-seated enter.—Free Press.

—S. T. S.—We are sorry that you don't like the paper. We publish it simply and solely to come down to the office and edit it, only that if you did some inquisitive idiot might write to you how much better he could do it himself, and that would probably annoy
a nervous person like you.—Puck.

Men's Fashions.

To plunge headlong into the delicate mysteries of the toilet. Colored underclothing and lisle thread stockings of every hue, worked with silk embroidery in various devices, are dictated by the present fashion. Collars are of every shape and size, but most of them are standing collars open at the throat.

Quite a number of men wear the military collar, that meets, in fact almost laps over, in front. There is a wide range of colors are concerned, though the universal shape is the flat scarf that covers the whole shirt front. Upon the varied background of these variously beautiful contrivances can be displayed all sorts of pins, according as good taste dictates. That is from nose at all, or scarcely any, to horseshoes studded with the diamonds, whips, spurs, girths and ladders, plain gold or silver balls and horses made of three horseshoe nails. The fashion of men's outer garments has undergone a decided change for the better—so the delighted young men say. No longer does one see the huge check and tremendous plaid.

Plain dress and subdued colors rule.
As women vie with plaid colors and richer so they say do men, but the women have the advantage of being able in many cases to alter their own clothes, and by adding a piece of velvet here and a bit of fur there produce new lamps for old. Men, it is said, cannot do this. As his clothes are made so must he wear them or not at all, and whatever may be the truth as to buttons, men, it is believed, do not venture to take in tucks in the slack of their trousers, or alter the cut of their coat lapels. There are said to be brilliant exceptions to this rule. It is reported that a certain man recently made a bet that he would not only make himself a suit of clothes, but would wear it at his club, and that it would not attract attention by its peculiarity of cut or mistake in sewing, or lead to researches in his family history. This bet was taken, and the suit was made and passed the ordeal. Upon close examination afterward, however, it was discovered that the pockets had been left out.

The run on some of the tailors up town this year is almost unprecedented.
One man is happy over orders received this fall for sixty odd dress suits, not to speak of the innumerable sack and cutaway suits for morning wear and the dignified frock coat for taking the afternoon airing. Men seem to be laying in a stock of clothes of all kinds,
as if they thought that the present prosperous times would not last forever. Nearly all the orders received by tailors have been for sack suits of
one color or material, or a dark mixed
cloth, or of some quiet pattern. In afternoon suits, such as frock coats and
three buttoned cutaways, the trousers
are of different material and color from
the coat. At afternoon weddings,
"gris" pearl gloves are worn by the
groom and ushers, and by whosever
takes a prominent place in the ceremony. Nearly all the orders received
by tailors have been for sack suits of
one color or material, or a dark mixed
cloth, or of some quiet pattern. In
afternoon suits, such as frock coats and
three buttoned cutaways, the trousers
are of different material and color from
the coat. At afternoon weddings,
"gris" pearl gloves are worn by the
groom and ushers, and by whosever
takes a prominent place in the ceremony. Nearly all the orders received
by tailors have been for sack suits of
one color or material, or a dark mixed
cloth, or of some quiet pattern. In
afternoon suits, such as frock coats and
three buttoned cutaways, the trousers
are of different material and color from
the coat. At afternoon weddings,
"gris" pearl gloves are worn by the
groom and ushers, and by whosever
takes a prominent place in the ceremony. Nearly all the orders received
by tailors have been for sack suits of
one color or material, or a dark mixed
cloth, or of some quiet pattern. In
afternoon suits, such as frock coats and
three buttoned cutaways, the trousers
are of different material and color from
the coat. At afternoon weddings,
"gris" pearl gloves are worn by the
groom and ushers, and by whosever
takes a prominent place in the ceremony. Nearly all the orders received
by tailors have been for sack suits of
one color or material, or a dark mixed
cloth, or of some quiet pattern. In
afternoon suits, such as frock coats and
three buttoned cutaways, the trousers
are of different material and color from
the coat. At afternoon weddings,
"gris" pearl gloves are worn by the
groom and ushers, and by whosever
takes a prominent place in the ceremony. Nearly all the orders received
by tailors have been for sack suits of
one color or material, or a dark mixed
cloth, or of some quiet pattern. In
afternoon suits, such as frock coats and
three buttoned cutaways, the trousers
are of different material and color from
the coat. At afternoon weddings,
"gris" pearl gloves are worn by the
groom and ushers, and by whosever
takes a prominent place in the ceremony. Nearly all the orders received
by tailors have been for sack suits of
one color or material, or a dark mixed
cloth, or of some quiet pattern. In
afternoon suits, such as frock coats and
three buttoned cutaways, the trousers
are of different material and color from
the coat. At afternoon weddings,
"gris" pearl gloves are worn by the
groom and ushers, and by whosever
takes a prominent place in the ceremony. Nearly all the orders received
by tailors have been for sack suits of
one color or material, or a dark mixed
cloth, or of some quiet pattern. In
afternoon suits, such as frock coats and
three buttoned cutaways, the trousers
are of different material and color from
the coat. At afternoon weddings,
"gris" pearl gloves are worn by the
groom and ushers, and by whosever
takes a prominent place in the ceremony. Nearly all the orders received
by tailors have been for sack suits of
one color or material, or a dark mixed
cloth, or of some quiet pattern. In
afternoon suits, such as frock coats and
three buttoned cutaways, the trousers
are of different material and color from
the coat. At afternoon weddings,
"gris" pearl gloves are worn by the
groom and ushers, and by whosever
takes a prominent place in the ceremony. Nearly all the orders received
by tailors have been for sack suits of
one color or material, or a dark mixed
cloth, or of some quiet pattern. In
afternoon suits, such as frock coats and
three buttoned cutaways, the trousers
are of different material and color from
the coat. At afternoon weddings,
"gris" pearl gloves are worn by the
groom and ushers, and by whosever
takes a prominent place in the ceremony. Nearly all the orders received
by tailors have been for sack suits of
one color or material, or a dark mixed
cloth, or of some quiet pattern. In
afternoon suits, such as frock coats and
three buttoned cutaways, the trousers
are of different material and color from
the coat. At afternoon weddings,
"gris" pearl gloves are worn by the
groom and ushers, and by whosever
takes a prominent place in the ceremony. Nearly all the orders received
by tailors have been for sack suits of
one color or material, or a dark mixed
cloth, or of some quiet pattern. In
afternoon suits, such as frock coats and
three buttoned cutaways, the trousers
are of different material and color from
the coat. At afternoon weddings,
"gris" pearl gloves are worn by the
groom and ushers, and by whosever
takes a prominent place in the ceremony. Nearly all the orders received by tailors have been for sack suits

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.50
Six months, .85
Three months, .45
INvariably in advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, 5¢ per square of 10 lines;
50 cents per square for each additional insertion. Special contracts for advertising longer
than three months.
Correspondents must enclose full name and
address, not necessarily for publication, but
as a private guarantee of good faith. Rejected
communications will not be returned.

SATURDAY, DEC. 20, 1879.

Here's gratitude for you. The man whom the Republicans helped to elect Governor of Maine, is now counting them out of their legal seats.

The Maryland Legislature will meet on the first Wednesday of January. Governor-elect Hamilton will be inaugurated on the Wednesday following.

The exodus of colored people from North Carolina and other Southern States continues with slight signs, if any, of slackening up. Many plans have been presented to head off the stampede, but as yet without success. The one most likely to succeed is for the whites of those States to accord the colored people their just rights and to treat them with proper consideration. The days of slavery have passed.

The St. Michael Comet and Advertiser says: All the tax-collectors of Harford county who are in arrears in their payments to the County Commissioners, the School Commissioners, or the Comptroller, have been indicted by the Grand Jury, whether they have collected the taxes and failed to pay them over, or whether they are simply indulging the tax-payers by waiting.

Democratic journals speak of the proposition to change the method of electing presidential electors in New York State as "revolutionary." This is false. New York has twice changed her method of electing presidential electors, and can do so again when she chooses. The only thing revolutionary about it is that it would revolute the Democracy out of the possibility of securing a president.

At Baltimore Wednesday night of last week Bishop Pinkney (Protestant Episcopal) delivered a lecture on temperance before the Church of the Ascension Temperance Society, Lafayette Square. He urged upon those present the desirability of abstaining from the use of alcoholic liquors, even if it did not injure them, on account of their example affecting those who had less control of themselves.

Mr. Hamilton's friends insist that that gentleman will not be a mere passive spectator of the coming fight between Senator Whyte and Mr. Gorman for the United States Senatorship, but that he will let his influence be felt in the contest in a manner that will surprise and astonish some people. It is not definitely known on which side Mr. Hamilton will range himself, but judging from former associations and sympathies it would seem as if Senator Whyte has the best reasons to expect his support. With Mr. Hamilton's aid, Senator Whyte's chances for re-election will be greatly improved and strengthened.

Some time ago a suggestion was made that as the result of the presidential vote in New York next November is doubtful, the state legislature, which has a large Republican majority, should change the existing law, as it has the constitutional right to do, and elect the 35 presidential electors of the state itself. A new plan has now been developed which will accomplish the same purpose as the other one, and will meet with less opposition. It is that the legislature shall change the law so that each legislative district shall elect its own elector, thus dividing the electoral vote of the state and giving the Republicans a large majority of the thirty-five New York electors, without all of which it will be impossible for the Democrats to elect a President next year. If such a plan as this was executed it would ensure enough electoral votes to elect a Republican President next year; and this would of itself go far toward breaking up the solid South, and probably make the electoral votes of Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, and perhaps two or three other states, Republican. On general principles, there are few objections to the plan proposed for New York, and if such a plan was selected in all the states the election of a President in the face of a large popular majority against him would be impossible.

A Storm Brewing.

Baltimore American of Sunday.

The Chesapeake and Ohio canal has for so long a time been considered pre-eminently a political institution that the politicians of all degrees throughout the State will be startled to learn a bit of news which the American vouchsafes to tell them this morning, being nothing more nor less than that a determined movement is now being made by the bondholders to take the canal out of its present management. Such action, if successful, would probably result in a general smashing up of the states made up by political managers since the election, and it is believed that its effect on State politics will be felt to a very great extent. It is stated on excellent and most trustworthy authority that in the course of a week or ten days a bill will be filed in the United States circuit court, before Judge Hugh L. Bond, on behalf of the holders of the $1,700,000 of first preferred mortgage bonds of the canal, asking for the appointment of a receiver for the company. The bill will attack the validity of the repair bonds issued under power conferred by the act of 1878, and which are a lien upon the corpus or body of the canal and all that such a lien implies, whereas the first preferred mortgage bonds are held only as a lien on the revenues and tolls of the canal, and they therefore ask the court to restrain the company from issuing any more of such bonds, on account of their illegality. The other allegations in the bill will be of a very comprehensive character, and will relate to the general management of the company, which, the bondholders claim, has been managed in the interest of politics and politicians, and not in the interest of the bond and stockholders. It will assert that officers have been multiplied far beyond the necessities of the company; that the money has been wasted to award politicians and offices created for partisan purposes; that large and unnecessary improvements had been made under the name of "repairing damages," and that the entire management of the canal has not been such as to protect the interests of the bondholders, and that it has not been conducted on strict business principles. The bondholders state that they have been paid no interest on their bonds since 1876, more than three years ago, that they desired a change and were determined to have it, and want some return for their investment. During President Clark's administration of the canal they received interest on their bonds, which was continued for the first two or three years of Mr. Gorman's administration of the canal; but, as above stated, since 1876, they had not been made the recipient of any return on their investment. The fact that the last legislature had given the company the right to issue repair bonds as a lien on the body of the canal, when the first mortgage bonds are only a lien on the revenues of the company, is, they think, another step in a direction which may have the effect of keeping them for a long time from sharing any returns of the revenues of the canal. The Act of Assembly authorized the company to issue these bonds to the amount of $500,000 for the purpose of repairing damages on the canal, and of this amount about $80,000 of the bonds were sold, and nearly $200,000 are held as collateral for money borrowed on the repairs of damages. Some of the representatives of the first preferred bondholders state that if they allow the balance of the bonds to be issued, and the company at some time hereafter may not be able to pay interest on them, the holders of the repair bonds would foreclose the canal, and thus jeopardize the interests of the first preferred mortgage bond owners. They say that it is a fact patent, well known to every Marylander, that the canal has for a long time been managed as a machine for partisan and personal ends; that revenues, instead of going to pay interest on the company's bonds, had been used to pay salaries to politicians; and they think that it would be well to have the canal managed as a business enterprise for the interest of the bondholders and stockholders. The interest of the State of Maryland in this canal amounts to over twenty millions of dollars.

The bondholders agree with Gov. Bewie, who in a special message to the legislature in 1870, said of the canal: "It stands in melancholy contrast with its great and powerful contemporary, the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, a monument of the radical error of its past administration, and admonishes us of the necessity of divorcing all great works of internal improvements from the blighting influences of politics if we would have them judiciously, economically, honestly and successfully administered."

When it is borne in mind that the bondholders, by their timely advances, were tempted to come forward and rescue from total loss the State, etc., it is impossible that gentlemen having the honor and the interest of their State to preserve and protect can turn a deaf ear to this application for relief. That relief, the success of the canal and the advancement of the large interest of the State of Maryland in this great work, can only be attained by removing its management from the field of politics and the hands of politicians. * * * As the canal is now managed, the board of public works changing every two years, the direction of the canal changes with it. Their interest is partisan, and they, for the most part, represent partisan interests. The evils in its management are, first, partisan control, and second, constant change of administration."

It is stated that no objection can be made to the bringing of the suit in to the United States court, as the first preferred bondholders are non-residents, located in different sections of Maryland, in Virginia, and also in the District of Columbia. It is understood that the counsel having the matter in charge are Messrs. Marshall & Fisher, Johnson & Poe, Archibald Stirling, Jr., and Geo. Iry-an, of Richmond. The Baltimore lawyers are among the first attorneys in this city. Immediately after the bill is filed, the officers of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal will be served with a notice to show cause why a receiver should not be appointed for the company as prayed for. The bondholders say that all they desire is to have the canal managed on business principles, and not as a political machine.

Of course, such action will have a great effect on the politics of the State. Governor-elect Hamilton, as is well known, has been promised that he would have the naming of the president of the canal, and in return he is expected to take no share or interest in the election of the various offices of the legislature. This matter may, however, change the phase of Democratic party politics, and the end of it no man can foretell. The Democrats in Western Maryland—among them Mr. Hamilton, Mr. John Ritchie and others—have all along condemned the management of the canal, and they, of course, will have no cause to shed tears over the turn affairs will take at this juncture. There is no doubt that the suit growing out of this affair will be quite interesting, and will, doubtless, result in some spicy developments.

New York's Electoral Vote.

The Washington correspondent of the New York Herald says: The project which has been mooted by some Republicans in New York—that the legislature of the state shall, when it meets in January, change the method of choosing Presidential electors—finds general favor here among Republican congressmen, and some Western men are particularly active in its advocacy. They urge that New York is now a decidedly doubtful state; that the proposed change would give a large majority of its electoral vote certainly to the Republicans, and that it would thus settle before-hand, and almost beyond doubt, the result of the next year's election, and give the Presidency securely to the Republicans. The plan, as it is here urged, is to let the voters in each congressional district choose a Presidential elector, the two electors-at-large to be chosen either by the legislature or by the body of the district electors. Some Western Republicans think that this plan ought to be recommended to the Republicans of the New York legislature as a party measure; and it is even said to be to meet here next Wednesday, should consider the propriety of a public declaration on the subject. It is feared by those who favor it that the New York Republicans will be timid about acting, unless they are caused to feel that they have the consent of the party in other states. In conversation about this project, a Republican congressman said to-day: "No one can deny that the legislature has the constitutional power to adopt such a regulation. It would, in fact, be only the revival of an old law which was in force in New York in the presidential election of 1828, when the electoral vote of the state was divided between General Jackson and John Quincy Adams. In my belief, it would be a wholesome regulation for all the states, because it would secure the minority, so often very large in a state, a fair representation and voice in the election of a President, and would thus more readily satisfy the country with the result. To carry a presidential election by a narrow and perhaps a doubtful majority in a single state would be the cause of great excitement—possibly of great and injurious public anxiety and of lasting political bitterness. To have that state New York, which is predominantly Democratic at one end and predominantly Republican at the other, and where each party is prone to charge the other with fraud or wrongful conduct, would only increase the trouble. New York has now four millions of people, so evenly divided in political sentiment that it may possibly be carried next year by one party or the other, by a majority of only a few hundred, in which case the voters, representing nearly two millions of inhabitants, would see themselves left without influence in the result. But to allow each Congressional district to choose an elector is to split the electoral vote of the state, and to secure to each party a share of the electoral vote and a representation in the Electoral College.

The Maine Coup D'Etat.

We congratulate the Democrats on their work in Maine. They have consummated the fraud they set out to accomplish, and counted in a majority of the legislature with as much sang froid as if they were doing a simple sum in arithmetic. It is not worth while wasting time in trying to bring them to a sense of the error of their ways. As Senator Hamlin says: "There was a time when I thought that the illegal and arbitrary use of power to perpetrate frauds would produce some revulsion of feeling in a state, but it seems to me now as though the worse the frauds committed by the Democrats the more popular the party becomes." It is worth while considering, however, what will be the effect of this conspiracy upon the country at large. Let us call to mind at the outset, then, that whatever strength the Democratic party has shown during its long exiles from power has been displayed as an opposition party. Necessarily it has had no administrative measures of its own upon which to base an appeal to the country, and it has existed solely on the capital it has been able to make out of its assaults on the policy and acts of the Republican party. When it has struck out into paths of its own creation it has invariably gone hopelessly astray. Its course on the financial side into a labyrinth of follies from which it has even yet but partially emerged; and when it imprudently forced an issue with the President at the extra session and attempted to override his prerogative, it simply initiated the folly of the goat which butted his empty head against a stone wall. It confidently boasted that the country would sustain its course and rebuke the President's obstinacy; but, the country having done neither, it is now chiefly anxious to avoid a reopening of the contest. The truth is, that when President Hayes came in and reorganized the departments under officers of unquestioned probity, he trumped the opposition's best trick, and there being no longer any abuses to expose, the Democrats were no longer able to expose any. Since that day there has been but one issue upon which the Democratic party has been able to unite with any effect, or with which to assume the offensive. That issue was the one raised by the electoral contest of 1876-7.

It is idle to retrace the history of that fierce struggle, for it has been forever adjudicated by the Electoral Commission, with the advice and consent of the Democrats; but it is undeniable that during this period public opinion was not clearly divided then ever before in the memory of the present generation, and that the charges of fraud which the Democrats then brought against the Republican leaders, found ready believers. In the light of subsequent investigations which disclosed the plotting of Mr. Tilden's lieutenant through a series of infamous cipher telegrams to corruptly purchase a majority of the electoral votes of the country, public opinion has undergone, however, a radical change, and this last shameful debauchery of the ballot in Maine was the only thing needed to complete the revolution. In resorting, for the purpose of maintaining their political ascendancy, to the same measures which they have for nearly four years denounced the Republicans for adopting—their own with no such proof of the fact as this case presents—the Maine Democrats have deliberately sacrificed their last hold upon the people, and thenceforth stand confessed hypocrites before the country. They have squandered the little political capital they still retained, and, bankrupt in honor, will go down to history in disgrace. Is it for this that Mr. Tilden's wounds have been kept open to the public gaze these many months, and that his orators have appealed to his fellow citizens to redress his wrong? Is this the stigma which his party were to set in blistering letters upon the forehead of fraud? Let the Democratic Governor of Maine and his council answer.—Ballo, American.

With the exception of iron we know of no article that has advanced more in price, in the last two or three months, than printing paper. The Cincinnati Gazette says that the advance up to this time has been about thirty-three per cent. Notwithstanding this fact we meet persons every day who think the price of Newspapers ought to come down! A dollar and a-half a year for a good Weekly paper—less than three cents a week—they think is an exorbitant price. A man ought to be ashamed to ask a publisher to take less than that, and we don't think much of one who will do so in these times. There are always some, however, who think the articles they have to sell ought to be all the time going up while everything they have to buy should be as constantly going down.

TELEGRAPHIC.

OPENING A RAILROAD.

CUMBERLAND, December 15.—The Pennsylvania Railroad in Maryland was opened this morning, the first passenger train for the North and East leaving here this morning at 8:15 o'clock arriving in New York at 10:05 p. m. The train was under the charge of Conductor G. B. Kauffman, of Bedford, and there were quite a large number of persons present to witness the first regular departure, although the weather was very disagreeable. The express train which left New York 8:25 last night arrived here at 1 p. m. to-day. The train consisted of engine No. 507, with T. M. Wolfkiel, engineer, and B. C. Becket fireman, J. B. Cannon, of Bedford, conductor, and Frank V. Thrall, of Cumberland, baggage master, M. P. Heckerman, express agent, and D. M. Painter, route agent. There were twenty-four passengers including P. F. Smith, superintendent, and C. S. Bretz, train master, of the Bedford division of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. An immense crowd of people, including quite a number of ladies, were at the depot when the train arrived, among the number Mayor Wm. S. Read, Hon. Henry W. Hoffman, City Attorney; Col. James M. Schley, President, and James A. Millholland, General Superintendent of the Pennsylvania Railroad; Rev. S. C. Thrall, D. D., and others.

As the freight train engine No. 32 was leaving here at 1 p. m., she struck an old man by the name of John Beall, sixty years of age, of Allegany county, at a point beyond the Narrows, injuring him severely. He is not dangerously hurt, but is suffering now from the shock, no bones being broken.

Boston, December 16.—Despatches from Maine up to midnight give little additional information regarding the action of the Governor and Council in changing the political complexion of the legislature beyond stating the feeling that exists in the state regarding the movement.

Telegrams from Republican sources declare that there is universal indignation among members of that party throughout the state, and that it is by no means confined to active Republicans, but extends to all who have voted that ticket. An Augusta special to the Journal, after reciting the prevalence of sentiment of intense bitterness among Republicans against the Democratic leaders, concludes as follows: "The end is not yet. Plans have not been fully matured; but it is safe to predict that prompt measures will be taken to either counteract the folly, or fully expose the infamous intrigues of the Fusion leaders." A despatch from Portland says ex-Mayor Putnam, of that city, who is a prominent Democrat, declares that the Governor and Council have acted neither according to law nor justice. L. D. M. Sweat, Democratic ex-member of Congress, deprecates taking away Portland's representation, when it was evident who had been elected.

The Council were engaged to-night in issuing the remaining certificates, which have not been sent out up to this time (midnight). Members of the Council say the official list will not be given in the public list tomorrow. They say the House will stand; 61 Republicans, 78 Fusionists, and 12 vacancies; and the Senate, 29 Fusion and 11 Republicans.

The report that the certificates of election were to be issued to senators and representatives yesterday was incorrect. The certificates will not be issued until tomorrow.

The council have completed their official report. It confirms the figures in a previous despatch. No decision has yet been reached upon county officers.

FRAUD TRIUMPHANT.

Boston, Dec. 15.—Despatches from Augusta, Me., assert that a count has been made by the Governor and Council of the election returns, which will result in the delivering of certificates to-morrow to a sufficient number of Democrats to give that party a majority in both branches of the legislature. The despatches assert there is great feeling among the Republicans owing to this condition of affairs.

An Advertiser special from Augusta says: "The Republican majority in both branches of the legislature has been counted out. The Republican members have been counted down from 90 to 58 and the Democrats counted up from 61 to 75. It is claimed that this was done on technicalities and informalities in the returns."

The Senate, under the count, will have a Democratic majority of 9, there being, under the count, 30 Democratic Senators and 11 Republican Senators. The Governor and Council count out three Senators from Cumberland, one each from York, Lincoln and Washington, and two from Androscoggin. The Democrats will have a majority large enough in the House to give a quorum if none of the Republicans should appear and take their seats. They have thrown out Republican Representatives from Portland, Bath, Saco, Rockland and Lewiston and other towns enough to nake vacancies in the representative districts.

PORTLAND, ME., Dec. 15.—A special to the Argus (Dem.) says: The Council have not completed the canvass. A few districts remain unsettled. It is expected the result will be reached by Wednesday. Democratic as well as Republican returns have been thrown out.

It is thought the House will be 77 fusion and 62 Republicans, with 12 vacancies. Senate, 19 fusion and 12 R. publicans.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 15.—Information has been received here this evening of the action of the Maine state officials in the matter of the legislature. It causes a feeling of intense indignation among all Republicans; and such Democrats as could be seen did not exhibit any exultation, but rather mortification. A prominent Democratic member of the House said that he was inclined to think those who had done this thing have proceeded on technically legal grounds; but, nevertheless, it was a great blunder in a political sense, and would work harm to the party in the country at large.

A NOVEL MEMORIAL.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 11.—In the Senate to-day Mr. Withers presented a novel memorial, signed by Commodore Wm. B. Whiting, of the U. S. Navy. The memorialist requests the Senate to authorize the president of the United States to issue a proclamation inviting the governments of all nations on this continent to unite in a confederation for mutual support, offensive and defensive. Each government is to remain independent in the administration of its own affairs, but to be otherwise subordinate to the general government of the confederacy, which shall have exclusive right to declare war, to proclaim peace, to maintain armies and navies, and to regulate commerce. In order to organize this confederacy, he suggests the assembling of a grand congress of delegates from each government, who shall draw up a constitution to be submitted for ratification to the nations represented in this congress; ratification by two-thirds to be binding upon the whole number. The memorialist mentions that Great Britain has many colonies on this continent, which are to day in peaceful accord with the mother country, and desire no separation from her; but, it is believed that she will cheerfully relinquish her hold upon them if they wish to join such a confederacy. The memorial was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

CANVASSING THE NEW YORK RETURNS.

ALBANY, Dec. 12.—The Board of State Canvassers met at noon, and proceeded to canvass the returns of the late State election. After canvassing the votes on each candidate, certain imperfect ballots were allowed to the candidates they were intended for. These consisted chiefly of ballots with initials instead of names. Resolutions were then adopted declaring elected the candidates receiving the greatest number of votes. It was found, as already published, that all the Republican candidates, except the candidate for State Engineer and Surveyor, were elected, and they were declared elected. Horatio Seymour, Jr., Democratic candidate for State Engineer and Surveyor, was declared elected. George C. Hoskins, the Republican candidate for Lieutenant Governor, was declared elected.

THE NEGRO EXODUS.

WASHINGTON, December 14.—Colonel Holloway, of Indiana, is here. He says that the Democratic press East and West are thoroughly uninformed as to the character of the negro exodus from North Carolina to Indiana. Mr. Holloway gives the following explanation: The statement that the colored immigration to Indiana is instigated by Republicans is not true. Some time ago two colored men, Perry and Williams, came from North Carolina representing an organization of two hundred families who desired to emigrate North. Lamsdale, editor of the Greencastle Banner, announced the fact, and used his paper in securing homes for them. Fifty-six heads of families came first, were taken to Greencastle and immediately found homes. With them were three or four colored stragglers who did not belong to the organization, and who declined to work. These stragglers fell into Democratic hands, and have been used by Democrats for political purposes. They could neither read nor write, but despatches were sent by Democrats from Indiana, purporting to be signed by these colored men, stating that they were suffering for food and shelter; that the climate was severe, and that by a clause in the constitution of Indiana—inserted by Democrats in 1852—immigration of colored people to that state was forbidden and punishable with imprisonment, and that the colored people from the South would be persecuted under the clause of the constitution. There is, in fact, no foundation for this statement.

Misnamed Articles.

An exchange says: Why should trade not have a Johnson or a Webster to classify and correct the mass of inconsistencies that go to make up its nomenclature? We not only tax our brains to invent "fantastic" names to every new fabric varied perhaps only by a thread or a shade from what our grandparents wore a century ago, but there are in use positive misnomers for many staple articles of merchandise. The following imperfect list, culled from sources ready at hand, will give a faint idea of them:

Acid (sour) applied in chemistry to a class of bodies to which sourness is only accidental, and by no means a universal characteristic. Thus rock, crystal, quartz, flint, etc., are chemical acids, though no particle of acidity belongs to them.

Black lead does not contain a single particle of lead, being composed of carbon and iron.

Brazilian grass does not come from Brazil, or even grow there; nor is it grass at all. It consists of strips of palm leaf (Cenchrus argentea) and is imported chiefly from Cuba.

Burgundy pitch is not pitch, nor is it manufactured in or exported from Burgundy. The best is a resinous substance prepared from common frankincense and brought from Hamburg, but by far the greater quantity is a mixture of resin and palm oil.

China, as a name for porcelain, gives rise to the contradictory expressions, British china, Dutch china, Chelsea china, etc., like wooden milestones, iron milestones, brass shoe-horns, iron pens, steel pens.

Cuttle bone is not bone at all, but a structure of pure chalk, once embedded loosely in the substance of certain extinct species of cuttlefish. It is enclosed in a membranous sac, within the body of the fish, and drops out when the sac is opened, but it has no connection whatever with the sac or the cuttlefish.

Galvanized iron is not galvanized. It is simply iron coated with zinc, and this is done by dipping it in a zinc bath containing muriatic acid.

German silver is not silver at all, nor was the metallic alloy called by that name invented by a German, but has been in use in China time out of mind.

Honey soap contains no honey, nor is honey any way employed in its manufacture. It is a mixture of palm-oil soap and olive-oil soap, each one part, with three parts of curd soap or yellow soap, scented.

Japan lacquer contains no lac at all, but is made from a kind of nut tree called anacardium.

Kid gloves are not made from kid skin, but of lamb or sheep skins. At present many of them are made of rat skins.

Meerschaum is not petrified "sea-foam," as its name implies, but is a composition of silica, magnesia and water.

Mossie gold has no connection with Moses or the metal gold. It is an alloy of copper and zinc, used in the ancient museum or totem work.

Mother of pearl is the inner layer of several sorts of shells. It is not the mother of pearl, as its name indicates, but in some cases the matrix of pearl.

Pen means a feather (Latin penna, a wing). A steel pen is not a very choice expression.

Salad oil is not oil for salad, but oil for cleaning salades, i. e., helmets.

Whalebone is not bone at all, nor does it possess any of the properties of bone. It is a substance attached to the upper jaw of the whale, and serves to strain the water which the creature takes up in large mouthfuls.

In a Bear's Clutches.

About a month ago Miss Alice Corey, of New York City, came to visit her uncle, a German, who owns a small farm in the mountains, six miles north of this place. Miss Corey is about sixteen years old, and her parents are well to do. Her uncle has a daughter, Clara, also aged about sixteen years. Her father having but one son, Clara has for years helped to do the work on the farm, and she has become an expert shot with a rifle. She has a gun for hunting, and she frequently goes into the forest in search of game.

A few days ago Clara invited her cousin to accompany her on a hunting expedition. They started from the house shortly after breakfast, Alice with a double-barreled gun and Clara with a rifle. After scouring the woods for several hours without much success they visited "Dark Swamp." This swamp embraces several acres, is densely wooded, and bears a name of some note. The girls reached the edge of the swamp at noon, and started into the thicket. They had gone but a short distance when Miss Corey, who was walking a few yards behind her cousin, heard a cracking noise in the bushes, and she turned back. Looking around, she saw a large black bear coming toward her. Clara, who had frequently encountered these shaggy monsters, called to her frightened cousin to come to her. She then drew her rifle to her shoulder and, taking deliberate aim at the animal, awaited until it came within easy range, and then fired. The bear uttered a howl of pain and fell bleeding. As Clara's rifle was a single-barreled one, she seized the double-barreled gun from her cousin and discharged both barrels at the infuriated animal, in the hope of killing it outright. But, with the disappearance of the smoke from the gun the bear was seen writhing, but not dead. The brave young woman then approached cautiously to within reaching distance of the wounded animal, and, taking from a large leather belt encircling her waist a bone-handled deer knife, plunged it to the hilt into the bear's neck. At this moment the dying monster gave a sudden lunge and fastened its sharp claws into the girl's skirts, pulling her down. Her frightened cousin ran about wildly and screamed at the top of her voice; but, as there was no house within two miles, her cries were not heard. She then returned to where Clara was still struggling with the animal. The bear still held the girl in its grasp, but was rapidly growing weaker. The girl was all the time using her knife with good effect. She dealt the dying animal blow after blow, until it finally released its hold and rolled over dead. Though very much exhausted and considerably scratched by the bear's claws, Clara, with the assistance of her cousin, was soon able to walk. They marked the spot where the dead bear lay, and then returned home. Clara's father and brother drove to the swamp and brought the bear in, which, when dressed, weighed 340 pounds. The skin is to be sent to a New York taxidermist to be stuffed, and it will be kept by the young woman as a souvenir of her terrible struggle and fortunate escape.—Hunter's Range, Pa., Cor. N. Y. Sun.

How Arrow-Heads Are Made.

Mr. B. B. Redding has had the good fortune of personally witnessing the process of making arrow-heads as it was probably conducted by the prehistoric man in the stone age. He describes the operation with great minuteness in the current number of the American Naturalist. The mechanic was Consolida, the aged chief of the Wintoon Indians. His implement consisted of a piece of deer-horn prong, split lengthwise, four inches long, half an inch thick, with the ends at right angles to the sides, and of course semi-circular; two deer-horn prongs, one smaller than the other, with the ends rounded down to the shape of a square sharp-pointed file, and a piece of well-tanned buckskin, thick, soft and pliable. Laying a lump of obsidian, about a pound in weight, in the palm of his left hand, he placed between the first and second fingers of the same hand the semi-cylindrical deer-horn implement so that the straight side of one of the ends rested about a quarter of an inch from the edge of the obsidian.

With a small water-worn stone, a wound in weight, in his right-hand, he struck the other end of the prong and a flake of obsidian was severed, well adapted for the arrow-head. It required, he could split up all of the obsidian in a few minutes in the same way. On the buckskin in the palm of his left hand he then laid the obsidian flake, which he held in place by the first three fingers of that hand, and took himself such a position on the ground that the left elbow could rest on the left knee and obtain a firm support. Holding in his right hand the larger of the two pointed prongs, just as a wood engraver holds his cutting instrument, and resting his thumb on the side of his left hand, he served as a fulcrum, he brought the point of the prong about one-eighth of an inch within the edge of the flake, and then exerting a firm downward pressure, fragment after fragment was broken off with the side of the arrow was made straight. As all the chips came off the lower edge, the cutting edge was not yet in the centre of the side. The Indian, however, rubbed the side of the prong repeatedly over the sharp edge of the flake, and resuming the chipping as before, brought the cutting edge to the centre. In a similar manner the other side and the concave base of the arrow-head were finished. The flake between the slots in the sides near the base for the retention of the tendons to bind the head of the arrow securely to the shaft, apparently the most difficult stage, was in reality the easiest. The point of the arrow-head was held between the thumb and finger of the left hand, while the base rested on the buckskin cushion in the palm. The point of the smaller deer-horn prong, not exceeding one-sixteenth of an inch square, was brought to bear on the part of the side where the Indian considered the slot should be. A sawing motion made the chips fly to right and left, and in less than a minute the slot was cut to the necessary depth. As one side was slotted so was the other. The arrow-head was finished in about forty minutes. As this note has outgrown the length usually assigned to a single subject in this column, the compiler refrains from identifying some of the methods employed by this survival of prehistoric armorer with those pursued by the recent manufacturers of now obsolete flints for fire-arms.

President's Wives.

European Queens all live in history, but the wives of American statesmen pass away almost without record. Unlike female rulers in foreign countries, they have no political rights, and only govern by their graces in social and domestic life. James Parton has done more than any man living to freshen the fading lines in the lives of our lady Presidents. That incomparable biographer, in a volume not yet published, now-days, though printed in 1868, "The People's Book of Biography," tells us that Mrs. Martha Washington was a plump, pretty, sprightly little woman in youth, but settled down into a plain, domestic wife who looked shyly after the servants; she was far from an educated woman, and though she kept her own accounts, was a very poor speller. Parton quotes Mrs. Bremer, the authoress, who relates a "certain lecture" of the great man by Martha, which she overheard in the sleeping room. Martha was angry and scolded a long time. The General listened in silence till she was done and then mildly closed the scene with "Now good sleep to you, my dear." General Washington was very rich; Mrs. Washington was very rich; Mrs. Washington by her first husband were heirs of great wealth. Washington's mother was a plain, illiterate, energetic, strong-willed lady, who preferred her own broad acres, and declined to go and live with her great son. "I thank you, George," said she, "but I desire to be independent." And when General Lafayette called she was at work in her garden with her old sunbonnet on; so she came to him, saying, "I could not pay you so poor a compliment, Marquis, as to stay to change my dress." Thomas Jefferson, like Washington, married a widow, Mrs. Maria Skelton, who had considerable property; but that did not save her great husband, who died deeply in debt, owing to his slavish devotion to his country. She was a lady of extraordinary beauty of face and form and singularly competent to adorn and conduct a great household. A little above the medium height, fair complexion, eyes large, dark and expressive, auburn hair, and a daring horsewoman and full of talent. She played, danced and sung well, and had literary tastes. When Jefferson courted her he was twenty-eight and she was nineteen. He played the violin and sung well, and as he had money then, and a high position, he distanced all rivals. They had a great wedding. She had an immense responsibility managing her husband's great estate, had six children, of whom only two survived, and died before he rose to his great renown, mourned by him to the last. He remained a widower for forty-four years, down to his death. Of course she never saw him in the White House. Dolly Payne was a Quaker, and a widow when she married James Madison, and the daughter of a Virginia planter, born in North Carolina. Her father and mother set their slaves free and moved to Philadelphia, and here Dolly married a lawyer named Todd. She was twenty, and he died three years after, leaving her with a son and no wealth. Her mother kept boarders while Congress sat here, and she helped her mother to keep the establishment. Among these boarders were Aaron Burr, then a Senator from New York, and James Madison, a member of Congress from Virginia. Dolly was very beautiful and accomplished, and when she married Todd, she was twenty-three, and he was twenty-five. They had no children. When he became President, in 1809, the White House received its lovely mistress, who enjoyed its attractions for eight years. She died in Washington in 1849, aged eighty-two years, surviving her husband thirteen years. "I have spoken of Mrs. Andrew Jackson more than once. She was the wife of another man, Lewis Holston, of Kentucky, when young Jackson was a boy, and she loved her. Her mother, Mrs. Donelson, was keeping a boarding house at the time, having returned to Tennessee with Mr. and Mrs. Roberts, and Jackson lived in her house. He was really granted, and then Jackson married the "grass widow," but the rumor proving false, they lived together two years before a divorce could be really granted, and then they were married again. The first husband lived early, and these peculiar circumstances led to many bitter quarrels between Jackson, who grew into a great reputation, and his enemies. She was a stout, great housekeeper, very religious, very illiterate, kind to her slaves and full of anecdote and fun. She had no children, and died in December, 1828, just after her husband was elected President.—Penny's Progress.

A Remarkable Bank Note.

Not long ago a well-known collector of curiosities in Paris, who had devoted considerable sums of money to the gathering together of bank notes of all countries and all values, became the possessor of a Bank of England five-pound note to which an unusually strange story was attached. This note was paid into a Liverpool merchant's office in the ordinary way of business sixty-one years ago, and the cashier, while holding it in his hand to test its genuineness, noticed some faint red marks, which, on closer examination, proved to be semi-effaced words scrawled in blood between the printed lines and upon the margin of the note. Eventually the following sentence was made out:

"If this note should fall into the hands of John Dean, of Long-hill, near Carlisle, he will learn thereby that his brother is languishing a prisoner in Algiers."

Mr. Dean was promptly communicated with by the holder of the note, and he appealed to the Government of the day for assistance in his endeavor to obtain his brother's release. The prisoner, who, as Madison, subsequently appeared, had traced the above sentence upon the note with a splinter of wood dipped in his own blood, had been a slave to the Dey of Algiers for eleven years, when his strange message first appeared at the scene with a bag of Rs. 1,000, which obtained an instant release for the moribund artilleryman.

Arrow Poisons.

THIS rude knowledge of toxicology possessed by certain savage tribes has enabled them to compound various deadly poisons which have defied every attempt at analysis upon the part of the most skillful chemists. The various ingredients have been combined that the most delicate quantitative analysis has failed to reveal the character either of the curare or worari of South America, the curaro, or the more deadly Upas poison.

Curare, which comes to us as a resinous substance of a dark color, is contained in gourd or rude earthenware pots, and is full of impurities of various kinds, but chiefly of a vegetable character, and it is necessary to subject it to careful treatment with acidulated water to obtain the substance in anything like a pure condition. Professor Jobert, of Paris, when at Caldera, Brazil, succeeded in bringing an Indian of the Tecuna tribe to disclose the secret of its preparation. He found it to be made of wari uva, a climbing plant of the order described by Weddell as the Strigolium cicutine (Delphinium cicutine), and three of the piperece of the genus Arnica, and a plant called Tanagers, or tocan's tongue. The powdered outer bark of the two former are ground together, and the leafy twigs of the latter are boiled together, and the other ingredients added. The product is a dark, muddy substance, which is curare.

Physiology has profited by the peculiar properties of some of these substances, and to the use of worari some of the most valuable experimental results are due. For instance, when a very small quantity of this substance (less than a grain) is injected beneath the skin of a living animal there follows an utter oblivion of motor power, the motor nerves being paralyzed, while sensibility is preserved. Respiration is stopped, so that no evidence of breathing is to be perceived; but the heart still beats, and if the dose be not too large, and artificial respiration be kept up, the animal will probably recover. The state is one of trance, consciousness probably being retained, while all the motor organs of expression are paralyzed, and the animal is helpless and powerless and inactive. Curare, it is said, has no effect if taken into the stomach.

Its physiological effects have suggested its use in medicine, and quite recently it has been employed in several convulsive and spasmodic diseases. Epilepsy, tetanus or lockjaw, and even hydrophobia have been cured, but great care should be taken in its administration.

The best plan is to make a solution in water acidulated with hydrochloric acid, and this, when mixed with glycerine and thrown beneath the skin daily, or several times a week, sometimes effects a cure.

It is occasionally possible to procure curare from the poisoned javelins which are brought here by travelers, but this is not often. A lance of this description is from six to eight feet long, and is made of some strong, tough wood, and in a fissure at one end a sharp spike, made of a thorn or very hard species of black wood, is bound by grass ends. The spike is usually incrustated with a deposit of curare, about the sixteenth of an inch thick, and covered by a cap of resin, which prevents any danger of accident. A wound ever so prodigious death, and that of the most horrible kind, when we remember that consciousness and sensation are in no degree obliterated, and the individual must appreciate the condition he is in.

The Upas poison is obtained from a tree growing in the East, known botanically as the Antiaris leucocarpa. The expressed resinous substance possessing the poisonous properties is an oily, greenish fluid, and a very minute quantity is sufficient to produce instant death by paralysis of the heart. The position of the individual who thought that the individual who ventures into the valleys in which these trees grow, or sits beneath the trees themselves, is certain to lose his life in the attempt, is in every sense erroneous, and these stories must be accepted only as "travelers' tales." It is probable that the only risk run by the individual is that which is incurred in subjecting himself to any malarial influence.

Among various curious tribes, notably the Australian natives who inhabit the lower Murray District, who are called Narringiri, the custom of killing their enemies with instruments known as nielgeri, is much in vogue. The specific poison is derived from the decomposing fluids of the human body, and the corpses of the dead are kept unburied for some time, until the process of decomposition has advanced to the proper point. From our knowledge of the human body, it is not surprising that wounds it would appear as if death by a wound of this kind would be exceptional, but such is reported to be the case, and a seraph by the nielgeri, which is first dipped into the fluid fluids of the body, is said to be rapidly fatal.—Scientific American.

Afghan Justice.

The method of dispensing justice and carrying the law into execution in Kabul seems to be somewhat primitive, judging from the following incident, which is supplied by a correspondent of the Lahore paper: In a quarrel between two artillerymen, and by a sort of accident of a kind that sometimes happens on purpose, the one man became implanted in the stomach of the other, inflicting a wound that resulted fatally. The friends and relatives of the deceased declared that they would only be satisfied by the life of the delinquent being left in their hands, according to the usual custom in such cases the prisoner was made over to them to do what they liked with him. It was immediately agreed that hanging was the most appropriate, and all the necessary preparations for the execution were completed, when one of the relatives, more bloodthirsty than the rest, demanded the privilege of cutting the unfortunate man's throat. At this interesting period of the tragedy the Colonel of the prisoners' military arrived on the scene with a bag of Rs. 1,000, which obtained an instant release for the moribund artilleryman.

How Far Can We Hear With the Telephone?

This is a question frequently asked, but we believe has not yet been definitely settled. The longest distance that we have seen mentioned is given in the item below, namely, two thousand miles. But perhaps Mr. Edison has had more extended experiences. If so we should be glad if he would let our readers know.

An exchange states that Mr. Robert A. Packer, superintendent of the Pennsylvania Railroad, is at present hunting with a party of gentlemen in Nebraska. A few days ago he conversed pleasantly with his wife and friends at Sayre, Pa., his brother at Mauch Chunk, Pa., and friends along the line. The medium was the railroad and Western Union telegraph wires and Edison's telephone. At the office in Bethlehem, Pa., connection was made with the Eastern and Amboy wire, and at Perth Amboy with a Western Union wire, and thence to Chicago and North Bend, Nebraska, where the distance was about two thousand miles, and every whisper was audible.—Scientific American.

PERPETUAL motion has been discovered again. This time in Liverpool. It goes by water, and can be made to produce a power sufficient to drive all the engines in Liverpool.

TEAMSTERS along the Gila River, Arizona, complain of the large herds of wild camels that have lately taken possession of the main roads to the consternation of horses and mules.

"WHAT are the best stories?" "That depends. When you are telling them, the long ones are; when you are listening, the short ones."—Parisian.

Our Young Folks.

THE FUNNY MANDARIN.

There was a funny mandarin Who had a funny way, Of sliding down the balustrade A dozen times a day. With arms in air and streaming hair, Around and round the winding stair He slid the rail again. The "surer" aim may miss the game, And one mistake will bring to blame The wisest man in town. And thus it ran, that daring man, Who never thought to fail. At last, in spite of every plan, Went sliding off the rail. The servants then, unluckily men, Began to laugh and grin, Which, like a lion in its den, Brought down that mandarin. "Ho, ho!" said he, "you laugh at me? Now, slaves, you each shall slide!" And when they all had met a fate He laughed until he cried.—Palmer Cox, in St. Nicholas for December.

ABOUT THE STARS.

Harry Newman is a bright little boy about twelve years old, who lives with his father and mother in a fine old New England town, where the trees are so full and grand their foliage forms beautiful arches over every street. Harry's father teaches astronomy in a large college near by, and there is nothing Harry likes better than to listen to stories about the stars from his papa. The way he came to like them so much was this:

One pleasant afternoon last August, Mr. Newman and Harry set out for a walk into the country. When they had walked on for a long while, Mr. Newman said: "It is time for us to turn back Harry; the sun will go down now before we reach home."

As they turned their faces homeward Harry said: "Papa, does the sun really go down, or didn't you tell me once that the earth moves and the sun stands still?"

"You are right, my boy," said Mr. Newman; "the sun stands still, and the earth and the other planets move around it. A long time ago people thought that the earth was a great flat plain and that the sun and all the stars moved around it once in twenty-four hours."

"O, papa!" cried Harry, "how could they think the earth was flat when they could see how the lower part of a ship goes out of sight before the top does, as you showed me last week at Old Orchard Beach?"

"It does seem strange," said Mr. Newman, "but it was true, and the man who first declared that he believed it round was laughed at by everybody for holding such an absurd idea. The earth turns round on her axis, and this makes day and night, you know. Then it goes around the sun once a year, and by changing its position at different times, gives what we call our seasons. But before we talk more about the earth, I will tell you something about the sun, if you want to hear it."

"I do," said Harry, "very much."

"Well," continued his father, "you will hardly believe me when I tell you that the sun is so far off that if you could take passage in a car going from here there at the rate of thirty miles an hour, and start on the next New Year's day, 1890, you would not reach the sun till the middle of the year 2218—430 years from the time you start—in other words, the sun is about 24,000,000 of miles away."

"Why," said Harry, "I should have to be as old as Methuselah."

"And the sun is so large," continued Mr. Newman, "that in this same car you would be ten years in going around it, while you would travel around the earth at that rate in about a month. It takes 1,200,000 earths to make one sun, or, if you call a good-sized orange the sun, the earth would be no larger in proportion than the point of a pin."

"What is the sun made of?" asked Harry.

"The best astronomers," answered Mr. Newman, "say that the whole inside is a kind of hot gas, and that the surface is a great ocean of fire which is all the time boiling and seething and sending up huge jets of flame thousands of miles high—the most glorious fireworks one could dream of. If a firework of this mass should be blown over the United States at the rate at which it moves on the sun, it would be thirty seconds in rushing from the Gulf of St. Lawrence to the Gulf of Mexico, leaving the whole country not only a mass of ruin, but of glowing vapor, while the ashes of New York, Boston and Chicago would only be one small cloud. You will get a little idea of how hot it is up on the sun when I tell you that if the earth were made of ice, and the whole heat of the sun put upon it, it would take but two minutes to melt, and ten minutes longer to boil the water which it would then consist of, and thirteen minutes more to convert it all into steam."

"O, said Harry, "I never would have believed that yellow ball over there in the sky could be so big, or so far off, or so hot as you say; but I don't see how you find out all these things."

"By-and-by," continued his father, "when you grow older, you will understand some of the wonderful ways in which astronomers make these discoveries."

"I wish I were old enough now," said Harry. "But, papa, if the sun is so large, he must be big as the moon, and look about the same size."

"Why, my dear boy, it would take sixty millions of our moons to make the sun! It looks so much larger because it is so much nearer us. It is about 240,000 miles from us, and revolves around us once in a month, as we do around the sun once a year. A curious thing about the moon is that no one ever has seen the other side of it, and many astronomers have conjectured that the other side is like the earth and that people live there; but it is clearly known now that there is neither air nor water there; so, of course, no one could live on the moon. I will show you a little how the surface of the moon looks as seen through a telescope."

As Mr. Newman spoke, he picked up a handful of pebbles from the ground and threw them into a soft bed of mud which they had just reached. "These pebbles sink in the mud," said he, "look very much like the flat craters in the middle of the mountains of the moon, these little mounds of mud around them represent the curious shapes of the mountains themselves. One of these days I will show them to you through my telescope, and some of the planets too."

"How many did you say there were, papa?" asked Harry.

"Seven besides the earth," replied his father. "The one nearest the sun is called Mercury. It is about one-third the size of the earth and is forty millions of miles from the sun. Next comes Venus, that beautiful bright star you have so often seen near sunset time. The Greeks a long time ago called it 'Hesperus,' or the evening star, and also 'Phosphorus,' or the morning star; for part of the year it is seen in the morning. It is about as large as the earth and sixty-seven millions of miles from the sun."

"When does the earth come in, papa?" asked Harry.

"Next to Venus, my boy," replied his father, "and then comes Mars, which is only half the size of the earth, and yet is one hundred and forty-one millions of miles from the sun, and takes two of our years to go around it; so if you were born on Mars you would only be six years old, instead of twelve of ours. You can tell Mars from the other stars by its shining with such a red light. About two years ago an astronomer in Washington, Prof. Hall, was looking at Mars with his telescope, and he found it had a little bit of a moon, only about fifteen or twenty miles in diameter, and pretty soon he discovered another a little larger, so that Mars has the two smallest moons ever known."

"Have the other planets any moons, papa?" said Harry.

"Yes, Jupiter, the next planet, has four. Two of them were discovered by Galileo, who lived a long time ago. No one would believe he had seen any moons, and one old astronomer wouldn't look into a telescope for fear he should see them and be convinced. He died not long after, and Galileo, who was as sharp with his tongue as with his eyes, said: 'I hope you saw them on your way to heaven.' Jupiter is much greater than all the rest of the planets put together, and is thirteen hundred times as large as our earth. It would take a rod 85,000 miles long to run through it from opposite sides. I can show you with the telescope great belts across it which are supposed to be made of clouds."

"What comes 'after Jupiter'?" said Harry.

"Saturn," said his father, "which, though only one-third as big as Jupiter, is three times as large as the other six planets put together. It has eight moons and two rings around it. So, if you could make a flying saucer, with some fine night, you would have a magnificent sight, when you arrived, of the sky lit up by these eight moons—some full, some new—and the two glorious golden rings reaching from one side to the other, and all the rest of the stars beside."

"O, I'd like to go there!" said Harry. "Can't Mr. Edison make a flying-machine, papa—he can do everything?"

Even if he could," said Mr. Newman, "you would have to be several hundred years old, before you could reach Saturn, and, besides, you could not live outside our atmosphere. Beyond Saturn comes first Uranus, with four moons, and then, away beyond that, Neptune, which was discovered by two men about the same time—an Englishman and a Frenchman."

"But we are now nearly home, so I shall only have time to tell you about the telescopes that were so big a while ago sat inside it. It was built by Sir William Herschel, and after a good many years, when it was no longer used, he dismantled it, and with a very funny family celebration, he carried up the tube. On New Year's eve the whole family—father and mother and all the little children—climbed into the tube and sang this song, which I learned by heart several years ago:

THE OLD TELESCOPE TUBE WENT,
In the old telescope tube went,
And the shades of the past around us sit;
His requiem sing we with shout and shout,
While the old year goes out and the New comes in.

Chorus—Merrily, merrily let us all sing,
And make the old telescope rattle and ring.

Full fifty years did he laugh at the storm,
And the blast could not shake his majestic form;
Now prone he lies where he once stood high,
And searched the deep heaven with his broad, bright eye.

There are wonders no living sight has seen,
Which within this holp have pictured been;
Which mortal record can't tell,
And are known to him only who makes them tell.

Here watched our father the wintry night,
And his gaze has been fed with prodigious light;
His labors were lightened by sister's love,
And united, they strayed to the vision above.

He has stretched him quietly down at length,
To bask in the sunlight his giant strength;
And Time shall here a tough morsel find,
For hissted-decorating teeth to grind.

He will grime it at last, as grind it the must,
And its brass and its iron shall be clay and rust.

But countless ages shall roll away,
And nurture its frame and its form's decay.
Chorus—Merrily, merrily let us all sing,
And make the old telescope rattle and ring.

As Mr. Newman finished, and they entered their gate, Harry ran to his mother, who was waiting for them on the piazza, and exclaimed, "O, mamma! I have had such a nice time, and when I grow up I mean to be an astronomer and have a telescope myself."

Since then his papa and he have had many good talks about the stars, and Harry never wearies of hearing about them.—N. Y. Observer.

FORTY-FOUR and four-tenths per cent. of the white people who took the yellow fever during the late epidemic in Memphis are said to have died; of the black people 16-10 per cent. died. There were altogether 1,537 cases of fever and 487 deaths, a total death percentage of 31-6-10.

POROUS plasters were marked down to fifteen cents by a Danbury druggist, yesterday. This is much cheaper than an undershirt, to say nothing about the saving in washings. Besides, you always know where it is.—Danbury News.

LIGHT literature—A bank book with no balance.—N. Y. Telegram.

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

WHEN THE GOOSE CAME HOME.

AS the solemn hour of twilight falls
On kitchen, garden and dead brick walls,
And the elevated train half stops
For men from the office and girls from the shop
I watch the goose in Indian file, Welcoming homeward, cackling the while,
And lissing loud at the passerby
Or the clothes on the line hanging out to dry.
And then to myself I say, says I,
As I watch the growing green of the sky,
And the dim horizon of dusty road,
And the meadow, struggling on with his load:
"O, why do the geese make their painful way
In their unblinking eyes at the close of day?
Why does the soul like the long day gloom
At the simple words 'when the goose came home'?"
And then I think, with all heart and soul,
Of the solemn child and his sugar-cake
That the geese have rubbed, as in baby-play
He took them for angels and stopped their way.
I think of the yellow curls in the dust,
The little fat feet in the air up-thrust,
And the nose of the goose, with now harsh notes
Because of the crumbs that filled their throats.
And again I think that at early dawn,
When the geese shall welcome the coming morn,
And the milkman shall stop at the corner pump
And raise a rattle that makes me jump,
I shall wake from dreams of another day,
Of losing potatoes and making hay.
For when the sun is low and the world round,
And I, with a stick, would drive them home,
I dream of the school-house under the hill,
Of the hushed red that was never still;
Of the little girl all smiles and eyes,
And a genius for flitting beyond her years;
Of geese that buzzed her and tore her frock;
And I think to myself, "I will, then!
In those children home I could not swear."
Alas! for the geese, and alas! for the girl,
With their sweet feet and her sweet curls!
The geese have been eaten for years, I know,
And the girl is a mother of ten I know.
But I still young as I feel shall be,
No wife on wicker or bankrupt me.
I think of the gutter of free life's foam
And smile at the time when the geese came home.
—An old Bachelor in the N. Y. World.

MY OWN SUICIDE.

I HAD resolved to kill myself, there was no longer any doubt that Amelia was faithful to me.
Let me be sure about it—was it Amelia her name was? To think that she once held my life, as it were, in her little hand, and I, a poor fellow, to save my soul what her name was.
Anyhow, whoever she was, she had proved false to me, and, as I was very young at the time, I had promptly come to the resolution to destroy myself.
My first intention was to go and blow out my brains all over her stair carpet, but then I reflected that every one would know that Henrietta—come to think of it, her name was Henrietta—had infatuated me and turned my head.
"No," said I to myself, "no scandal, no publicity! Let me imitate the wounded stag, which, seeking to hide its fatal hurt, betakes itself to the most secret thickets, there to perish far from all human eyes."
In this cloglike disposition I took the 5:30 train for Melno, which sat me down just at dusk within a few steps of the Golden Lion, a very well kept inn with clean beds and a capital table.
"What will monster have for supper?" said a charming little mistress.
"Nothing—supper would be a mockery. Show me my tomb—my room, I mean."
I retired to my couch, but not to sleep. In my fevered dreams I beheld Victoria—I am confident it was Victoria after all—passing, leaning upon the arm of my hated rival. I clutched madly at his throat and seized—the iron railing of the bedstead, or the marble slab of the little table by my bedstead. I rose unrefreshed, but mad matters that—I was about to die—half to die.
Having dressed myself I went in search of a rope. You may think that when a person wants to hang himself nothing is easier than to find a rope, but I had to hunt the hotel high and low before I could find one.
"What on earth do you want of a rope, monster?" said the pretty mistress when finally she found me one.
With the precious bit of hemp in my pocket, I took my way towards a thickset not far from the hotel in a little wood whose paths were familiar to me. There was one lonely and gloomy copse there where I well knew my lifeless body would swing for weeks ere it was discovered.

Upon the road I thought of Bertha—I was wrong before; come to think of it, it was Bertha—and cursed her with all the bitterness of which my soul was capable. I then tested my cord. It was not such an agent of self destruction as I would have chosen had I had an assortment from which to make a selection. It seemed to me both short and not up to my weight. I was annoyed. You cannot tell how a trifle like that will affect a person's temper at such a moment.
A further disappointment was in store for me. On arriving at the spot I had selected in advance, I was disagreeably surprised to find some one else there. An individual whose back only I could see was occupied in fastening a rope to the most eligible branch of my tree.
"Hello! what are you doing there?" I cried.
He turned round.
"What business is it of yours, any way?" he said.
"But, don't you think I know what you intend doing?"
"Well, and supposing I wanted to hang myself—it is my own funeral—suicide, I mean."

I regarded him narrowly. He was a handsome and manly young fellow of about my own age, with a frank and winning countenance. He was dead pale.
"This young man," said I, lifting my hands to heaven, "was going to take his life—his own precious life—all for the sake of a worthless jilt!"
"Sir!" he cried.
"Poor, silly fool!" I went on, commencing with myself aloud, "he would undertake to defend her. All lovers are the same. Will you," I continued, "take my advice—the advice of a well-wisher? Just leave that cord there (it was a stonter rope than mine, I had observed) and go quietly home like a good fellow. When you are yourself you will thank me for having given you such good advice."

He shook his head gloomily. "I desire to die," he muttered.
"Don't let yourself be goaded into taking a step that if you were alive you would regret to-morrow." I went on with a benevolent persistence—(you see the fellow had pre-empted the only really eligible bough in the wood).
"When you are dead it will be too late to change your mind!"
"You speak to me without knowing what misfortune has happened to me."
"I can guess it."
"No, you cannot guess it. Sir, a woman that I loved, a woman for whom I was ready to die, has just died."
And he went on to tell me his story, which, singularly enough, was precisely like mine. The coincidence made me pause a moment to collect my thoughts.

"I see," said Charles (he had told me in the course of his painful story that his name was Charles), "that your silence justifies me."
"By no means," I cried. (You will observe that it wouldn't have been dignified for me to abandon at once my former position on the subject of suicide). "There is nothing whatever in all that you have told me to justify you in taking your life. Come, my friend," said I, becoming really interested in his case, "come, let us reason the matter out. Why should you complain because you have been unfortunate in love? Don't you know what the poet says—
The lot of girls was to desire,
Since winter first was snowy,
Women have been false to their lovers from all time, women will be false to their lovers to all time."
"But no woman has ever been so false to her lover as this woman was to me."
"Lots of 'em have,"
"No, none could be,"
"But I tell you thousands of 'em have. I know one whose conduct towards—towards an intimate friend of mine was— Why should you kill yourself because one pretty woman has played you false? Seek another one—
"In vain, in vain," he groaned; "she was the only woman in the world that I cared for—the handsomest woman in all Paris, she."
"O, bosh. I know of a hundred handsomer and more tender than she ever could be. You may think in the first moments of soreness that there are no other women in the world, but in a month from now you'll be prepared to admit how silly it was to entertain such a thought."

My eloquence seemed so convincing and my position so sound that it was a pleasure to me to listen to myself. I went on:
"What good will it do you to hang yourself? Tell me, if you can, what useful purpose will be subserved. Either the woman has a heart or she has not. If she has no heart—
"Of course she has none. Therefore your death will only be agreeable to her—will only flatter her. It is a big advertisement for a woman to have a man kill himself on her account. What will the public say—the boys? They'll say, 'Charles was an idiot, a silly fool.' Yes, Charles, everybody will say you were a silly fool, and everybody will be right in saying so."
I waxed eloquent; in point of fact, for some moments it had occurred to me that I was arguing my own case, pleading for my own life. I heaped fact upon fact, added argument to argument with such earnestness and closeness of reasoning that my friend Charles at last fell into my arms and cried: "You are right, you are right; bid me to do whatever you would and I will obey you."
"All right," said I, "let us go and get some breakfast."

I brought him back to the Golden Lion. I was terribly hungry.
The table at which we seated ourselves was nearly set, and, amid the clatter of his appetizing orders and staining our knives with its vermeil essence, and we had tasted the first glass of some remarkably particular Bordeaux, we were rapturously silent, but our quaking eyes said, nay, shouted, "Well, life isn't such a bad thing, after all."
"If I hadn't met you," said Charles, reaching across the table to squeeze my hand.
"If I hadn't met him," I thought, as I returned his cordial grasp.
"It was the most remarkable piece of luck I ever heard of," he continued; "I don't suppose that a human being goes through that copse twice in a month."
I remained discreetly silent.
"But, I say, you know," he went on, as if a sudden light had flashed upon him, "what were you doing in that lonely part of the wood at that early hour of the morning?"
I could not help blushing guiltily.
"You were going to hang yourself, too?"
"I was—upon the very same tree. Here's the rope I had in my pocket."
"The best joke I ever heard of," said Charles, as we clinked our glasses.—Adapted from the French for the N. Y. World.

A Strange Story.

In the December number of the Atlantic is told a story from true life which has not many equals for oddity in fiction. As the tale goes, one day a man pretty well on in years came into the Police Headquarters, and asked to have the officers take down a description of his wife and children, who had disappeared from their home. The man told his story in such a simple, unaffected way that he made a deep impression upon those who heard it. He lived in a small town in Connecticut, and had been married five or six years to a woman considerably younger than himself, and by whom he had had two children. On returning from his daily business a few nights before he found his home deserted; wife and children had evidently gone out, dressed in their best clothes, leaving no word of explanation. It struck him as being very strange; but, although disturbed, he was not seriously alarmed, as he concluded they must have gone to a friend's house. He got his own tea, and then smoked his pipe, expecting momentarily to hear them at the door. It was late in the evening before his anxiety drove him out to look for them among the neighbors. The next day he learned that they had been seen in the railway station at the next village, and that they had taken the cars going East. That was all he knew about it. He and his wife, he said, had got on pretty well together. He was perhaps too old to be much society for her, but she never complained. Since she had gone off he remembered that she had been very melancholy and moping for some time past. He thought that she had "sort of dwelt on things, been so much alone," that she had become "crazy-like," and had started off with the idea of going to see some people in New Hampshire whom she had known before she was married. But the New Hampshire folks had not seen her or had of her, and so she had come back. "More like she'd gone off with a younger man." "But you see," said the deserted husband, "that ain't likely, as she wouldn't have taken the train for her own sake, and she was in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped, and in the presence of his patient whose daughter, grand-daughter, great-granddaughter and great-great-granddaughter he had encountered. He found her so reduced by disease and old age—she was ninety-seven years old—that he saw no chance of her living more than a week. He told the family so, but at their request he left medicines and directions. Some three weeks after he was driving by and saw an old lady picking up her things. He stopped,

The Republican.

JAS. A. HAYDEN, Publisher.
OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

THE LOST KISS.

I put by the half-written poem,
While the pen, idly trailed in my hand,
Wrote on, "Had I words to complete it,
Who'd read it or would understand?"
But the little bare feet on the stairway
And the faint, unsteady laugh in the hall,
And the earnest lip on the silence
Cry up to me over it all.

So I gather it up—where broken
The faded thread of my theme,
Telling how one night I sat writing
A fairy tale from my dream.
A little ingenuously fair—
Of the sun in her hair and the dew
Blue eyes of the fairies of old.

'Twas the dear little girl that I loved—
"For was it a sister like this
I said—When she knew I was busy—
To come romping in for a kiss?"
Come romping up from her mother,
And clambering there at my knee
For "One little kiss for my baby,
And one little nuzzle for me!"

God pity the heart that repelled her
And the cold hand that turned her away,
And taste from the lips that denied her
This unrequited love of today.
Take, Lord, from my heart forever
That painful loss of despair,
And the pater and pater of the little bare feet
And the one pining cry on the stair!

I put by the half-written poem,
While the pen, idly trailed in my hand,
Wrote on, "Had I words to complete it,
Who'd read it or would understand?"
But the little bare feet on the stairway
And the faint, unsteady laugh in the hall,
And the earnest lip on the silence
Cry up to me over it all.

A GILF'S TRIAL.

"My darling, this makes me realize that in only two weeks' time you will be married, and I shall be without my granddaughter."

"Yes, but you will have gained a noble grandson," softly whispered Eleanor,
her sweet voice like a bird's.

Mrs. Hamilton bent her gray head fondly and kissed the speaker's soft cheek.

The old lady and her grandchild stood before a lounge upon whose crimson cushions lay Eleanor's wedding dress, which had just arrived, a delicate marvel of satin and lace.

Of course it must be tried on, and with the assistance of Margaret, Eleanor's maid's dress, the young girl
soon stood before the mirror blushing at her own loveliness.

Just then a knock came upon the door. It was a servant with a letter.
Eleanor, heedless of the superscription,
without recognizing the writing,
opened it.

"It is not from Ralph," she said, in reply to her grandmother's questioning look.

After the bridal costume had been pronounced a perfect fit and entrusted to Margaret to be replaced in the cedar chest, Eleanor took up the letter and broke the seal.

She read the first few lines carelessly, then into the brown eyes a look of unspeakable horror came.

"What is it, Eleanor?" exclaimed
Mrs. Hamilton, as she saw her agitation, but without speaking, the young girl rapidly read on to the end. Then, with a sobbing, long-drawn breath, she threw herself into her grandmother's arms.

"Read!" she cried. "Is this true what is written here, or is it the plot of some enemy to crush out my happiness?"

As Mrs. Hamilton perused the letter a pallor settled over her features. What she had always dreaded had come at last! O, if it might have been only two weeks later. One glance at the impertinent face, and she saw that the truth could be withheld no longer.

"Grandma, speak! I—Ralph's promised bride—the child of—O, for pity's sake, tell me I am dreaming!"

Then Mrs. Hamilton spoke.
"Eleanor, be calm, and I will tell you the truth. You know that your mother, my only child, died at the early age of twenty; but you have not heard that she died of a broken heart.
When the man whom she married against her parents' wishes, abused her, she bore it without complaint, never letting us dream of her unhappiness;
but when, after being his wife only three years, she discovered that her husband was a criminal, living upon his ill-gotten gains, then she left him, fleeing with her babe to our protection.
Not long after, your father was arrested for a bank robbery, and imprisoned.
The shock was too much for your mother's frail strength, and after lingering some time she passed away. After her death your grandpa saw your father and obtained from him a promise never to disclose himself to you. But, alas!
he has broken that promise, and now Eleanor, for thus keeping you in ignorance of what would have always clouded your life. We thought we did it for the best."

The young girl listened with bent head and tightly clasped hands. As her grandmother paused she looked up.
A woe-fraught change had come into the round, blooming face.

"Grandma," she said, and her voice was low and strained, "does any one know of this?"

"Only one—your friend, Mr. Stearns, your grandfather's lawyer."

"And Ralph—does he not know?"

"I do not think he does."

"O! (the young voice was very piteous) it was a cruel kindness to keep it from me. Now I shall never be Ralph Ogden's wife."

"Eleanor," expostulated her grandmother, winding her arms around the drowning figure, "he need never know.
You can go and see your father. He says it will be the last time he will ever send for you."

Drawing herself away, Eleanor looked firmly into the tearful face near her own.

"Grandma, I will not bring a tainted name to him I love. I can never marry Ralph Ogden."

That evening Mrs. Hamilton sent for Mr. Stearns, and the two old friends had a long consultation together. The kind lawyer's eyes moistened as he heard of Eleanor's grief.

"The second trial," he ejaculated,
"after running one life, could he not have held his peace and refrained from blighting another? But stay," he said, taking up the letter again and reading:
"I have fought against the longing to see you, my daughter, but I can no longer restrain myself. I promise you that if you come to me this once it will be the last time you shall ever hear from your wretched father." This looks to me as if it must be very sick—perhaps dying."

"So Eleanor thinks, and the noble child persists in saying that she will go at once to him. She declares it is her duty. Poor, poor girl! I see now that this concealment has been very wrong."

"Do not fret, my friend; you and your good husband could not look into the future. You did as you thought for the best. So Eleanor has written about it to Mr. Ogden. She is a noble creature, and if he is what he ought to be,
it will bring him on the wings of the wind."

The next day a heavily-veiled, girlish figure and an old, gray-haired gentleman were led through a gloomy corridor, and into a prison cell.

Eleanor moved as in a dream. She was dimly aware of a long, narrow,
iron bedstead upon which lay a prostrate, quiet form.

Two gentlemen, a doctor and a cler-gyman, were the only other occupants of the room. The latter rose as she entered and came forward.

"Is this Miss Moore?" he said, gravely. "My child, I fear you are too late—your father has been in this unconscious state for hours."

Eleanor gave one long, earnest look into the pale, drawn face with its closed eyes.

This then was her father! An eye hand seemed to clutch her heart. Her father! and dying thus!

"Courage! my brave little Eleanor," whispered Mr. Stearns. With an effort the girl looked up into her old friend's face, as if to gain strength from his sympathy; then she went steadily forward to the bedside.

As Eleanor gazed down at the face which still retained many traces of the manly beauty which had won her mother's love, and realized that she was indeed his daughter, all the strength and nobility of her soul rose to the surface. Stopping she laid her soft hand upon his cold forehead.

"Father!" The pitying tone pronouncing that word so sacred, and so wound around the tenderest fibres of our human natures, forced tears into all eyes.

"Father, it is Eleanor—your daughter!—can you not speak to her?"
The call pierced the apathy of death.

The dying man's eyes opened and fastened upon her face. A wave of his home-convict's child, still other trouble wrung the poor girl's heart. Before long the invitations to the wedding would have to be countermanded, and then the broken engagement would be the common remark which would be passed, and shrank from the curious words and looks she knew would follow her wherever she went.

"Had I not you grandpa, and my Bible," she said, despairingly, "I should surely die. It is almost more than I can bear."

Mrs. Hamilton kissed the quivering lips; she knew carresses would help
where words might only wound.

Thursday morning arrived, and the expected letter he had come himself.
Eleanor received his card, and read the
and for a moment a film came before her eyes, and all grew dark before her;
then, white as death, but very calm,
she went down into the library, where he waited her.

She had always known the intense love of fatherly which had filled the hearts of all the Ogden race, and of their pride in a name which had never been sullied by aught dishonorable; and until a short time before, she had thought she bore a name as stainless as theirs. Now she knew differently.

The library door swung back on its hinges to give entrance to the slender, dark-robed figure which falteringly went forward.

Eleanor passed, and the next Eleanor found herself clasped in a close embrace.

"My precious Eleanor!" Ralph exclaimed in a low voice, but with every word distinct and clear, "if I loved you when I bade you 'good-bye' one long month ago, I worship you now! When I read your letter I lost no time in coming to you; as if anything could make you less dear to me! And beside, my darling, all that you wrote in that letter I knew long ago!"

Then Eleanor found her voice:
"You knew long ago?"

"Yes; when your grandfather first surmised that I loved you, he told me all under promise of secrecy. Now is my Eleanor content?"

With a long sigh of perfect happiness,
Eleanor suffered herself to be drawn once more into her lover's arms, and in her hushed eyes, uplifted to his face, which filled her heart, and which had only been intensified by the trials she had undergone.

Although Eleanor's sensitive nature shrank from the idea of a joyful wedding festivity so soon after the sad death scene she had witnessed, she could not withstand Ralph's loving entreaties; and no one ever guessed that the sweet face beneath the bridal veil (which it was a little pale), had lately been clouded by a depth of anguish such as few in a long lifetime ever know.

"Did I not tell you, Mrs. Hamilton," said old Mr. Stearns, "that if young Ogden was what he ought to be, how it would end? I see he is of the right stuff. Let me congratulate you, my dear friend, on the surety of your grand-daughter's future happiness."

Curing the Products of the Hog.

The season for curing meats for family use is now at hand, and although many formulas are yearly given a few hints embracing all that is really necessary on the subject may be welcome to a large class of readers. In the first place it is important that hogs after the killing shall hang where they will thoroughly cool through previous to being cut up and packed. Hogs ought never to be slaughtered except on a dry, frosty day. Neither should they be exposed to an atmosphere so cold as to cause the outside to become frozen
before the animal heat has all escaped.

Freezing the outer surface of dressed meat surrounds the interior of the flesh with a wall, through which the animal heat still remains, and in and around the bones cannot escape, and the result will be souring and speedy decay at the center of hams, shoulders and the like,
which outwardly appear in good condition.

For pickled pork cut the middles crosswise into pieces about five inches wide, taking out the back bone and ribs, which leaves the meat in convenient condition to cut in suitable pieces when required for use. Now packages are to be preferred, but old ones may be employed repeatedly if clean and sweet. Avoid using, however, old pork barrels for beef and the beef tub for pickling pork. Salting with and without brine are both satisfactory methods when properly accomplished, but the preference is most generally given to the latter, as the brine or pickle used insures immunity from insects during the pickling process. When the pork is ready for packing sprinkle the bottom of the barrel liberally with coarse salt of good quality. Pack the pieces on their edges, forming a ring around the inside of the barrel, with the skin outward. Fill the ring in the same way until a complete layer is gained, then press or pound it down gently if necessary. Next apply a generous layer of salt; follow this with a layer of meat placed according to directions given for the first layer, and so on until the barrel is filled, taking care that the last layer of meat is well covered with salt.

If the weather is cool the meat may stand several days in this condition, the best rule, it is safer to wait until the brine, which should be made strong enough to float an egg. Let the seam rise to the top and skim it off before applying the brine. Cover the meat entirely and if in open package weight down to keep it from rising above the pickles. Employ enough salt so there will be some not dissolved in the barrel when the meat shall have been used up. The brine extracts blood and other juices from the meat, which, when in contact with the surface, and in warm weather it is possible there to decompose
and contaminate the contents of the cask.

To avoid trouble in this direction, farmers occasionally draw off the brine and subject it to boiling, skimming off the impurities. When this is done great care should be observed that the brine is entirely cool before again pouring over the meat. When barrels containing pickled pork are headed up it is best to lay them on their sides and turn them over occasionally.

Bacon, as it is commonly termed, is the same portion of the hog used for pickled pork, though differently treated.
For the pork barrel there is no danger of too much salt, but as the best bacon that is presented alternate strips of lean and fat, too much salt makes the lean part stringy and tough.

Dry salting is usually resorted to in making side-bacon. In dry-salting, whether in barrels, boxes or piles,
without the addition of water to form a brine, it is of the utmost importance that no chance be afforded for flies to deposit eggs or maggots on the meat.
If flies have been present, they will have laid eggs on the pork it cannot be saved unless at once put into brine.

A simple way in which to dry-salt any portion of the hogs carcass is to spread a layer of salt on a clean board, and lay the meat on it, and then cover it with a layer of salt, and so on until all is packed and the top well covered with salt.—N. Y. World.

The Finger Nails.

There is a person in New York who makes a specialty of attending to the finger nails. A Sea reporter who in his own right is a well-furnished parlor, but a small portion of which, behind a green silken screen and near a window, was set apart for the practice of her profession. Behind that screen on a small table were displayed various gleaming hand-knives and files, boxes of cosmetics and polishing powders, bottles of perfume, and an infinity of other tools and materials for the treatment, upon correct method of the art, of the finger nails.

The manicure herself,
seated on a low stool in the window, was a large, fine-looking woman, very tastefully dressed, apt of tongue and deft of hand while playing her jewel of the hand, and richly furnished with armchair for the person to be operated upon.

"Yes," said she, looking up pleasantly, "I was the first, and I believe am still the only, manicure in New York. It is wonderful to me that there are not more here to practice the art.
In France manicures are as common as barbers in New York, and there should be enough demand for their services to bring them to the front here.
As a mark of refinement, of good breeding, careful keeping and beautification of the finger nails is as essential as the care of the teeth. Perhaps it is even more so, for taking care of the teeth is in large part a matter of selfish interest to the owner of the teeth, but in caring for the finger nails we do so out of consideration for decency, love of the beautiful and regard for the feelings of those with whom we are brought in contact. Nails, you know, will not ache, even though they may be in permanent mourning, bitten as ragged as the edge of a saw and fringed with frayed curls and hang nails. Perhaps that is why so many people neglect them. But I cannot complain. When I started in business, two years ago,

within some days before my first customer came—a lady, who paid me a dollar for putting her nails in order—and now I have as much as I can attend to, as many as twelve, fourteen and even sixteen a day, and an average one takes an average of three-quarters of an hour, my hands are kept pretty busy all day long. A great number of my customers are regular. That is, instead of coming in for an occasional fixing up of their nails, as a man goes into a barber shop for a shave, they take regular courses of treatment, for three months at a time, coming to me once a week.

Those who artistically beautify their digits are of the very best class of society. They are ladies of the highest families, gentlemen of the most aristocratic clubs, bankers, brokers, and merchants. I know of but one politician among them.

"My principal customers are ladies of wealth and refinement. All the members of four of the wealthiest families of New York, from the children up to the grandparents, come to me once a week. One of these families has been very unfortunate in its nails.
I have had to cure them of almost every blemish, defect and bad habit possible, but at last I am happy to say, have got them in beautiful condition."

"What do you mean by blemishes, defects and bad habits?"

"Blemishes include discolorations, white spots, and opacity; brittle and bad-growing nails are defective habits, among the many bad habits are pinching
at the matrix at the base of the nail until it is rough and raised in an unsightly and often painful manner, as that practice is a prolific cause of hang nails; biting one's nails, and visit me often to have rough edges and ugly shape; tearing and clipping the thickened cuticle at the sides of the nails, and cleaning underneath the nails with sharp instruments, which should never be used for that purpose. All these things I cure; and no matter how unsightly the nails may be, I can guarantee giving them, in a reasonable time, beauty of form and color. After they are once put in good condition it is not difficult to keep them so. The services of the manicure are not necessary often more than once a week, although some ladies come to me regularly twice a week.

As a rule, those who are most careful of their nails and visit me often are the very ones who are most likely to unobtrusively rob me of the credit of my work by claiming it for themselves. 'What beautiful nails you have! You must have been to the manicure,' says one lady to another, who has just left my house. 'O, dear, no!
I have no occasion to go to the manicure,' replies the dear, artless creature.
But I have my consolation in my work of the beautiful, and my dollar and a half. It is not true, you know, that nails grow beautiful and perfect naturally. At least, I have never seen any that did. Nature is not to be trusted implicitly for the fashioning of the human form, divine, as you may have suspected if you have ever contemplated a lot of sea-bathers."

"Do fashions in nails change, like those in bonnets, for instance?"

"Certainly not. There is a standard of the beautiful and artistic which cannot change. The nails should be long, almond-shaped, pink at the base, white at the point free from spots, perfectly smooth and highly polished. Where one cannot grow long nails, round oval ones must be accepted. Abroad it is regarded as a mark of high breeding to have long pointed nails, the assumption being that the pleasure of the manicure cannot cherish and preserve
such brittle bodies of rank.

In China that idea is carried to such an extremity that mandarins often grow nails three or four inches long, which they protect continually by gold sheaths.
"Come, sit down here and let me show you what will improve your nails are susceptible of, and as I operate on them you can see what my processes are. First, the fingers are soaked in a bath of perfumed medicated water and dried. Then, with this file I give the nail the desired almond shape, so.
Now, with these delicate curved scissors
I trim off the superfluous cuticle about the nails and remove the hang nails.
As this point I would remove the discolorations and blemishes in tint.
Next, to polish, I spread this nail polish on this emery-silk and polish and apply briskly. See how the nails shine now, almost like diamonds. Then I want a little deeper tint, one that will resemble the exquisite roseate flush on the inside of a sea shell. This pink cosmetic will bestow it, and at the same time will give pliability to the nails and keep the cuticles soft and supple. Once more the fingers go into a bath of perfumed water, and then the nails are re-polished, and if you thought they shone before, what do you think of them now?"

"Beautiful," of course, they are, thanks not to nature but the manicure. Last of all—the finishing touch—the customer must be perfumed. And you see that I must keep busy to get through it all in three-quarters of an hour."

"Are you not afraid that a process so simple as this seems to be will be taken out of your hands by your customers for themselves or by rivals who will learn it from you?"

"Not at all. All I could teach them would not harm my business. Not one person in ten thousand can use the left hand so lightly, steadily and effectively as would be required to put the nails of the right hand in order. Two hands are needed for the job. And, as for educating other manicures, I have no fear. Indeed, I would be pleased to see more, as they would tend to euli-vate the public appreciation of the importance of the art I practice, and I have no reason to fear competition.
Nobody can shape the nails as I can.
It is not so simple a thing as people generally imagine. There is something, too, in the knowledge of my recipies. 'Do I use blistering things on my fingers to break the habit of biting the nails?' No, not at all. I simply make the nails so beautiful that even a thoughtless child will have sufficient force of will to refrain from spitting them. Look at your nails now, sir, and bite one of them if you can find the heart to do so. I defy you to do it!" N. Y. Sun.

Death by Decapitation.

The Paris Figaro recently sent a special reporter to witness the execution at Beausais of an atrocious un-derman named Premier. The moment that the guillotine and dome its work the body and head were placed in a basket and were taken to the cemetery, where Drs. Evard, Le Sage, Chevalier, Lesguillon, Rochu and Decaise were present. M. Evard had asked for and obtained the body of the felon for experiments, "which," says the reporter,
"we followed with deep interest, for,
besides their purely scientific character,
they related to a question so often discussed—does life survive decapitation?
Five minutes had elapsed since the moment when the head was separated from the trunk, and it was placed on a stone in the open air in front of the little chapel of the cemetery. Comparatively little blood had flowed, and some drops were running from the carotid artery.
Although the neck was very clean,
Pinched, stuck with needles, submitted to the most painful experiments, the head never moved; the face remained unaltered, not a muscle quivered. The left ear was completely calcined in the flame of a candle without obtaining the smallest appearance of sensibility. They then divided the skin of the head into four parts, and, using the hammer, scalpel and saw, they took away the upper portion of the skull and withdraw the brain. This occupied ten minutes.

They immediately began being submitted to an electric battery the remains of the head at once displayed nervous contractions—the teeth chattered, the mouth shut, the eye and the cheek
made those grimaces which are observed in dying people when they are flicked with a feather. With the body the same result was obtained. It was absolutely without feeling. It was opened, the heart, lungs and intestines were removed, and then, on being placed in contact with the electric battery, the arms and legs instantly moved.
At this moment Dr. Evard asked me what o'clock it was, and it appeared that forty minutes had elapsed since the time of the execution. Lastly came the action of the battery a shroud of hanging flesh, displaced by the operations, stood on end, oscillated and quickly placed itself back on the spot from which it had been cut out."

The conclusion of the experiment was that the movements observed in the bodies of persons guillotined on being subjected to the action of electricity are absolutely mechanical, and display neither any consciousness, nor self-sensation. The experiment will be the subject of a memoir, which will shortly be presented to the Academy of Medicine by M. Evard, and in which he will demonstrate that death by decapitation is instantaneous.

The Milk Dairy.

There is no branch of dairying that more requires the cooperation of the producers and the purity of the milk to the consumer. Great populations in our cities are grossly cheated with an impure article of milk, at a high price, and the milk dairymen are best induced to sell it for, and the middlemen combine to force their terms upon the milk farmers. Were these milk farmers as well educated in their business as are the middle-men in theirs,
they would not find means to demand a reasonable compensation for their product? Here co-operation would not only accomplish this, but it is necessary they might depend upon the middle-men altogether.
It would not require a high degree of business ability to organize and execute a plan for delivering the milk to consumers. These milk dairymen have not the time to attend to their own business, and can either dictate the price to middle-men or deliver their own milk.
The dishonest practices of these milk venders largely reduce the demand for milk, and thus bring a second injury to the milk farmers. Does it not show a great lack of business and organizing ability in these milk farmers to allow themselves to be thus dealt with? If five hundred dairymen could organize to run a dairy on the same plan, why not a number, or twice that number,
be organized for the delivery of milk to consumers in cities? Certainly they form an association of all or nearly all those who produce milk in the city of New York, and a central depot, and distributed in sealed glass bottles.
—National Live Stock Journal, Chicago.

Stumbling Into a Marriage.

A comely young maiden, fresh from the shores of Old England, arrived in this city on her way West to join her brother, who lives in a small town in Ohio. When she arrived here she concluded to stop over one train and visit her cousin, who is employed at the coke ovens on Mount Washington.
After the greetings were exchanged she went to the depot and found that she had missed the train. As she was a stranger in the city she determined to return to her cousin's boarding-house and await the next train. She again ascended the mountain, and while on her way she passed around the corner of a stable and stumbled against a stalwart paddy, who is likewise a German,
and bears the name of Latherbaugh,
and who was coming from the opposite direction. He apologized for the accident, and being struck with the English maiden's appearance, stopped for a moment. Then a conversation was had, which ended by Latherbaugh accompanying her to her cousin's house. In half an hour after they had reached the boarding-house they were brothered. The happy German immediately started out in quest of a minister, and in a few moments the silken knot of matrimony was tightly tied.
—Pittsburg Gazette.

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

—The number of students in American Colleges in 1886 was 8,438; about 30,000 are now in attendance.

—Since its organization 250 unmarried lady missionaries have gone out under the auspices of the American Board of Foreign Missions.

—The Cornell Review is responsible for the statement that Columbia College has an endowment fund of $5,000, 000; Johns Hopkins University, $3,000,
000; Harvard, $2,500,000; Cornell, $2, 000,000; Princeton, $1,000,000; Yale, $350,000.

—The Disciples of Christ, or Campbellites, as they are generally called in the West, have missions in England, Denmark, France, and Constantinople, with about 594 members. The money raised the past year for these missions amounted to $12,547.

—The Boston Pilot calls attention to the rapid increase of Roman Catholic dioceses in this country. During the reign of Pius IX., thirty new dioceses were erected in the United States.
There are now sixty-one dioceses. At the opening of the century there was only one.

—There are 675 colored schools in Virginia, taught by 415 colored teachers. The average salary of male teachers is $30.05 per month; of female teachers, $24.73. There are 35,763 colored children enrolled in the schools of which number 21,231 are in average daily attendance. In the 1,816 white schools, 72,306 white pupils are enrolled; 14,540 are in average daily attendance. The schools during the past year cost $511,902.53.

—In this city there are 355 Protestant Sunday-schools. Seventy-five of the number are connected with the Protestant Episcopal Church, 70 with the Presbyterian, 57 with the Methodist, 41 with the Baptist, 20 with the Reformed, 15 with the Lutheran, 7 with the Congregational, 6 with the Unitarian, 5 with the Friends, 4 with the Unitarian and 2 with the Moravian.
There are also 29 Catholic Sunday-schools and 4 which are classed as miscellaneous.—N. Y. Tribune.

—A certain Professor Knapp, who is the proprietor of an English and German school in Baltimore, has introduced an entirely new system for the education of the deaf and dumb. It is that the pupils answer the questions propounded to them by closely watching the motions of the lips. At an examination in the German Orphan Asylum of Baltimore, the system of Secretary Schurz examined some of Professor Knapp's pupils. One young lady, addressing the Secretary, asked him very distinctly his name and residence. She also called out the names of the States and their Capitals, indicating at the same time their location on a map on the blackboard with a pointer. Other pupils answered the questions of visitors, recited poetry, solved correctly mathematical problems, and announced the answers, to the delight of the spectators. Professor Knapp entirely discards the old method of signs manual, and the organs as designed by the Creator are substituted. By a movement of the lips, precisely the same as in oral language, and with a barely perceptible sound, the spell is broken that held the mutes in thrall-dom. In this connection, it is a curious fact, that toward the latter part of his life, the celebrated English comedian, Buckstone, was literally "as deaf as a post." On the stage he could not hear a word; nevertheless, by watching the motions of their lips and the gen

THE REPUBLICAN.

OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

JAS. A. HAYDEN,
Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.
One copy, one year, $1.50
Five copies, one year, $7.50
INvariably in Advance.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING.
First insertion, 50 cents per square of 8 lines;
Second insertion, 40 cents per square;
Third insertion, 30 cents per square;
Fourth insertion, 20 cents per square;
Fifth insertion, 15 cents per square;
Sixth insertion, 10 cents per square;
Seventh insertion, 8 cents per square;
Eighth insertion, 6 cents per square;
Ninth insertion, 5 cents per square;
Tenth insertion, 4 cents per square;
Eleventh insertion, 3 cents per square;
Twelfth insertion, 2 cents per square;
Thirteenth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Fourteenth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Fifteenth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Sixteenth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Seventeenth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Eighteenth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Nineteenth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Twentieth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Twenty-first insertion, 1 cent per square;
Twenty-second insertion, 1 cent per square;
Twenty-third insertion, 1 cent per square;
Twenty-fourth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Twenty-fifth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Twenty-sixth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Twenty-seventh insertion, 1 cent per square;
Twenty-eighth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Twenty-ninth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Thirtieth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Thirty-first insertion, 1 cent per square;
Thirty-second insertion, 1 cent per square;
Thirty-third insertion, 1 cent per square;
Thirty-fourth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Thirty-fifth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Thirty-sixth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Thirty-seventh insertion, 1 cent per square;
Thirty-eighth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Thirty-ninth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Fortieth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Forty-first insertion, 1 cent per square;
Forty-second insertion, 1 cent per square;
Forty-third insertion, 1 cent per square;
Forty-fourth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Forty-fifth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Forty-sixth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Forty-seventh insertion, 1 cent per square;
Forty-eighth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Forty-ninth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Fiftieth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Fifty-first insertion, 1 cent per square;
Fifty-second insertion, 1 cent per square;
Fifty-third insertion, 1 cent per square;
Fifty-fourth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Fifty-fifth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Fifty-sixth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Fifty-seventh insertion, 1 cent per square;
Fifty-eighth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Fifty-ninth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Sixtieth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Sixty-first insertion, 1 cent per square;
Sixty-second insertion, 1 cent per square;
Sixty-third insertion, 1 cent per square;
Sixty-fourth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Sixty-fifth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Sixty-sixth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Sixty-seventh insertion, 1 cent per square;
Sixty-eighth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Sixty-ninth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Seventieth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Seventy-first insertion, 1 cent per square;
Seventy-second insertion, 1 cent per square;
Seventy-third insertion, 1 cent per square;
Seventy-fourth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Seventy-fifth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Seventy-sixth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Seventy-seventh insertion, 1 cent per square;
Seventy-eighth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Seventy-ninth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Eightieth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Eighty-first insertion, 1 cent per square;
Eighty-second insertion, 1 cent per square;
Eighty-third insertion, 1 cent per square;
Eighty-fourth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Eighty-fifth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Eighty-sixth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Eighty-seventh insertion, 1 cent per square;
Eighty-eighth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Eighty-ninth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Ninetieth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Ninety-first insertion, 1 cent per square;
Ninety-second insertion, 1 cent per square;
Ninety-third insertion, 1 cent per square;
Ninety-fourth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Ninety-fifth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Ninety-sixth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Ninety-seventh insertion, 1 cent per square;
Ninety-eighth insertion, 1 cent per square;
Ninety-ninth insertion, 1 cent per square;
One hundredth insertion, 1 cent per square;

SATURDAY, DEC. 27, 1879.

"Max," who always courts notoriety, rushes into print in the Democrat of last week, for the purpose of boasting of his influence at Annapolis. The only thing that really disturbs "Max" in connection with the qualification of Judge Knoken is the fact that the Judge had the good sense to act upon the advice of the "Oakland Ring" and accept his commission, instead of refusing it, and thereby giving the "influence at Annapolis" an opportunity to appoint "Max" or some other Democrat in his place. If "Max" will attend to the bill about to be filed against the "canal ring," by the preferred bond holders, and devote himself to healing the little divisions which disturb the drug store Democracy of Garrett county, he will have quite as much as he can do, without interfering with what he is pleased to term "the Oakland ring."

The Appointment of Road Supervisors.

The most important item in the proceedings of the County Commissioners, which we give in another column, is the appointment of one road supervisor for each election district, instead of ten or fifteen, as heretofore. We understand there is some feeling against the Commissioners on account of this action. We think the Commissioners should not be blamed in the matter, for no one is more opposed to the change than they were, and they would not have done it if they could have avoided doing so. The Commissioners, in appointing one Supervisor for each district, have simply obeyed the law as they had sworn to do, and when the alternative was presented to them to follow the old practice, and violate their official oath, or to proceed to according law, no reasonable man can have a doubt as to which was their duty. The Commissioners had no discretion in the matter, and certainly ought not to be blamed for acting according to law. If the law as it stands is obnoxious to the people they have the right to petition the Legislature to amend it, and this is the only way they can get relief in the premises. Whilst the Commissioners are opposed to the present law they have no power to change it.

Found Dead!

Found dead! Two little words, but alas! how sad they are. It is sad even when an old man, aged and gray, grown old in the service of God, is called hence. Alone in his room, the messenger of death calls him, and he is found dead by those to whom he was near and dear. Sadder still is it when a strong man, who seems entirely exempt from disease, who is the picture of health, is struck down and is found dead.

But infinitely more sad is it when such a case as occurred in our midst a few days ago. A man, naturally healthy, possessing all his faculties unimpaired, is found dead, but not under such circumstances as previously mentioned. The verdict of the Jury, "death caused by excessive indulgence in alcoholic drinks." Saddest of all deaths. Alone, no one near, he is suddenly called hence. No one to smooth his pillow, no one to minister to his wants, no one to answer his calls for assistance, he dies. Where is the cause? It is seen around us every day. Does any one take warning? Is this example to influence no one? Will young men continue in the way they are going to the end of life, until they are found dead; until they are summoned hence? Young men, ere it is too late, think of your own case; think before it is too late, where you will end. Rum is the cause of great evil. Countless, innumerable, are the wrongs and woes caused by it. Is it any wonder that all should be opposed to it? If you would stop and seriously and soberly think of your course, of where it will end, certainly you would change it.

But we think the occurrence is of itself a sufficient warning without our pursuing the subject any further, and would only say, reflect on this sad affair.

Pay the Printer what you O him,

The Woodberry News appeared this week in a changed form, and otherwise improved.

The New York Tribune says: "What shall it profit a party if it steal one state in 1879 and lose a whole Union in 1880?"

As the Boston Herald remarks, the Maine swindle will make it easy for liberal Republicans, independent voters and law-abiding Democrats to vote the Republican ticket next year.

Ex-Governor Dingley, of Maine, in a private letter intimates that unless peaceable redress is forthcoming shortly, there may be a resort to force to seat the legislators who have been counted out by the Democrats.

The tone of Senator Hamilton's speech at the Republican indignation meeting Saturday evening, at Bangor, Me., and the resolution adopted by the assembly, seem to indicate that if the Governor and Council adhere to their programme of fraud the Republican members-elect of the legislature will not hesitate to resort to force to secure their seats, and that they will be sustained not only by local public sentiment, but by a body of armed men sufficient to cope with any resistance that fraud may make. That this movement is seriously contemplated is made still more evident by the expressions of the defamed legislators themselves. Mr. Andrew R. G. Smith, the Republican member-elect for Lincoln county, who was counted out by the Democrats, is quoted as saying last week: "I will be at the State House to take my seat on the first Wednesday of January, and will be backed by three hundred of my townsmen." Representative Weeks, who was not counted out, said to a reporter: "Men come into my office every day and say they are willing to fight. We will fight if it is necessary. The time will come about the meeting of the legislature if we don't have our rights there." It begins to look like business in Maine.

It is more than likely the Democrats will have a lively fight, when the Legislature meets, over the election of Treasurer and United States Senator. Governor-elect Hamilton cannot be an idle spectator in these contests. If he succeeds in having a Treasurer elected in sympathy with him, it will give him complete control of the Public Works; if the Canal Ring succeed, then Mr. Hamilton's wings will be clipped, and he will be compelled to fly low during his term of office. This would reduce him to a mere figure-head, to which, of course, he objects.

The contest for the Senate lies between Senator Whyte and Admiral Gorman. It is said Mr. Hamilton will throw the weight of his influence on the side of Whyte. For the credit of our State, since a Democrat must be elected, we hope the Legislature will re-elect Senator Whyte.

It has been intimated in some quarters as to an alliance between Republicans and Democrats in the fights above referred to. We don't believe any Republican will for a moment think of an alliance with either of the Democratic factions. An unholy alliance of this sort will weigh down the party in the future. Touch not the Babylonish garment or the wedge of gold, is the advice of the rank and file of the Republican party, and the man or men who would do so, will find awaiting them the fate of Achan—politically, we mean. Let the Democrats run their own machine and empty their garbage on their own lots.—Boonshoro Odd Fellow.

The Charleston election on Monday resulted in another "sad" victory for the bulldozing Democracy. All accounts of it which have come to hand are Democratic, but they reveal enough of the methods of procedure to show how the work was accomplished. The News and Courier says, "the work was well done;" that "by noon it was evident that the prompt arrest of negroes who had registered fraudulently would confine the vote within legitimate bounds." That admission is enough to show how the opposition vote was silenced. Enough negroes were arrested to scare away the larger part of the blacks from the polls. But there is stronger evidence yet. The same newspaper says that the city was crowded with "visitors from the interior who were loud and earnest in their expression of sympathy with the Democratic cause. They were ready to fight for us if it were necessary, and to vote for us if it were proper." It was the old Hampton plan over again, of overhauling the negroes by a "show of force." It was a "quiet and orderly" election; there were no "troops at the polls," and the "niggers" were shown once more that they have no rights which a son of chivalry is bound to respect. Yet if there should be a sudden exodus of negroes from Charleston presently, the chivalry would charge that it was instigated by Northern Radical lies.

LOCAL OPTION MOVEMENT.—The Maryland State Temperance Alliance is busy canvassing the State in the interests of Local Option. Prohibition is at present complete in Caroline, Calvert and Kent counties, and in four out of five districts in Talbot county, partly also in Somerset, Dorchester and Queen Anne's counties. Very large meetings have lately been held in Frederick city, and assurances have been received as to the county being ripe for Local Option. Cecil, Carroll, Montgomery, Charles and St. Mary's counties are also expected to give expression on the subject. Delegates to the Legislature from several of these counties are pledged in favor of Local Option. Leading temperance men believe that the chances are strong in favor of Washington, Allegany, Garrett and Baltimore counties passing prohibition by vote. Worcester county at present has high license. In Baltimore county prohibition prevails at Woodberry, Mt. Washington, Mt. Vernon, Warner Factory, and in Prince George's at Laurel Factory. No attempt will be made to secure prohibition for Baltimore city until the passage of a new registry law.—Baltimore Sun.

TELEGRAPHIC.

DAN RICE BECOMES AN EVANGELIST.—St. Louis, Dec. 20.—Dan Rice, the famous circus man, announced last night that he had been converted, and will at once enter the field as an evangelist. He has had an interview with Moody, who is now holding meetings here, and will probably begin his new career by speaking at Mr. Moody's meetings and then seek such fields as offer the best prospects of success in his new work.

Maine's People Aroused.

AUGUSTA, ME., December 19.—At the indignation meeting here to-night Senator Blaine was loudly called for, and took the platform amidst the wildest demonstration. He then reviewed at great length and with minuteness the grievance of which the people complain, saying that on the 8th day of September last the voters of Maine, in pursuance of their organic law, proceeded to elect a Governor and Senators and Representatives in the legislature. The election was preceded by a prolonged, through and somewhat exciting canvass of the state. Hon. Anson P. Morrill told me that he had voted for fifty-five consecutive years in Maine, and did not believe there had ever been a year in which every citizen of the state knew so well just what he intended by his vote as in the election of 1879. That would be the testimony of every honest and candid man in the state. The vote was full, free and fair. The result of that election, as shown by the official returns, was to give the Republican candidate for Governor a plurality of 21,000, votes over the Greenback candidate, and of 46,000 over the Democratic candidate. In the legislature, by the official returns, the Republicans chose 19 senators and the opposition 12 senators, and in the House the Republicans chose 90 members and the opposition 61. On the legislative ticket the Republicans had an absolute majority of nearly 5,000 on the popular vote. This was the result as shown by official returns made by the city and town clerks and immediately made public by the Secretary of State. When the sealed returns were opened some weeks later to be counted by the Governor and Council, they disclosed the same result that had been published from the clerk's returns; and common honesty and common decency, to say nothing of official integrity, required that the men chosen by the people should be declared selected and receive their certificates; but the Governor and Council have declared otherwise, and in collusion with other well-known men, they entered into a conspiracy to change the result and deprive the people of their choice; and when began the remarkable count which has just closed in the last disgraceful and disgrace of all who had a part or lot in it. They began to discover "fatal defects," as Governor Garcelon termed them, in the returns from Republican towns. Here and there an "X" was not dotted or a "P" not crossed, or a man had left off his name, or the initial letter of his middle name was wrong, or the ballot that elected him had names printed at right angles to the narrow side when they should have been parallel, or the signatures of all the town officers, to the acute eye of a single councillor without any other evidence, were written in the same hand, or the total number of votes was not filled out in the right part of the election blank, or one of the town officers was an alien, or the selectmen were permitted to swear away their own return by exparte affidavit, although they had once sworn the return was sealed in open town meeting they now swear it was not, or the return of cities was signed by only three aldermen, just according to the blank sent out from the office of the Secretary of State, after being prepared as a trap or pitfall.

These and numerous minor points of like value were freely used to destroy the popular vote and maintain in power the party and the men whom the people have rejected. The results of the whole of this pitiful and wicked pettifoggery was to change a Republican majority of seven in the Senate and twenty-nine in the House to a fusion majority of nine in the Senate and seventeen in the House, with five Republican cities completely disfranchised and denied by the Governor and Council the poor boon of a new election, so that Portland, Lewiston, Bath, Rockland and Saco are absolutely rendered incapable of taking any part in the organization of the legislature, or in the choice of governor, or in the election of state officers, or in the original composition of the House committees, which shape and practically control legislation. Perhaps if the representatives chosen by these five important cities will humbly petition the House and cool their heels in the ante-chamber of fusion greatness for three or four weeks they may be permitted to be sworn in, when they can no longer embarrass the progress of the conspirators' programme, and no longer be able to serve their constituents.

A great popular uprising, however, will avert these evils and restore honest government to Maine and the people, who are already moving. The indignation meeting was attended by an immense crowd. Delegates from various parts of the state were an imposing feature of the demonstration. Granite Hall, where the meeting was held, could not possibly accommodate the multitude. Ex-Governor Conner presided. The assemblage was called to order by Joseph A. Homan, who, upon taking the chair, made a speech expressive of the sentiments that demanded the meeting. Several letters of regret were read, speeches made and resolutions adopted condemnatory of the action of the Governor and Council. The enthusiasm was intense.

Grant in Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, Decem. 19.—The Philadelphia Commercial Exchange gave General Grant a public reception at noon to-day at the Exchange building, which was very beautifully decorated inside and out. In response to an address of welcome from Mr. Bailey President of the Exchange, Gen. Grant said:

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Commercial Exchange—Your President, in his welcoming address here last night, has delivered, does me a great deal more of honor than I feel to be just desert. But it is only in keeping with the reception that I have received at the hands of Philadelphia of all classes—the commercial classes, soldiers, ex-soldiers, and all the citizens. It makes me feel very grateful to Philadelphia to be always so welcomed by them. In the remarks that have been made about the extension of our commerce, my visit abroad has enabled me to see how, I think, our trade might be very much increased with the East. In Europe it is already taken care of, and I know of no change that can be made that can increase it any more rapidly than it is being increased. The merchants of our country have their correspondents all over Europe and understand exactly what they are to do to increase their trade in that quarter. But in the East America is beginning to be known and to be appreciated. It has now a history which all the Eastern nations are beginning to study and read. A little change and with a more positive American policy in the East, our trade there can be very much increased. We are badly represented and must continue to be badly represented until a new policy is adopted of at least fixing the duties of our consuls. There are a few of these ports at which such a salary is fixed sufficient to enable the President to appoint a competent consul, as the salary is regulated by fees, which, in many instances, amount to but a few hundred dollars, yet, in many places the fees might be increased until they would become very large. At all such places our consuls general are compelled to appoint some one to act as American consuls, and in almost every instance it is some English merchant who is a trader there, but not interested in extending the commerce of the United States. On the contrary he is interested in suppressing it and keeping it out of that country. The remedy for this, in my judgment, would be for Congress to authorize the consuls in the East to be agents for manufacturing and commercial interests in the United States and act for them, and say to the chambers of commerce of the United States, as I said to the religious societies of the country in appointing Indian agents, if you will appoint men whom you are willing to trust with your business, let them be appointed, and let them act as American agents for the merchants, manufacturers and commercial interests. In addition to the fees they get, they can earn such a percentage as would enable the government to get able, energetic men, such as we are willing should represent us as American citizens abroad.

Gentlemen, I had no idea of saying this when I came here. I am almost sorry that I did say it. All I intended to say was to thank you for the reception accorded me.

This address invoked a spasmodic round of applause. Very little hand-shaking was done, as it begins to be understood that General Grant is excessively bored by that sort of cordiality.

LETTER OF EX GOV. MORRILL.

AUGUSTA, ME., Dec. 20.—The letter of ex-Governor Anson P. Morrill, read at the Republican indignation meeting last night, after stating that "every honest man of whatever political party is interested in stamping out this latest treason," says: "Permit this movement to become a success, establish such a precedent and the end of our free elections has come. However the air may have been filled with the cry of fraud by certain papers and persons interested to pay the way for the grand larceny, which is now being developed, the governor and council base their action on no charge of fraud. They do not pretend to have discovered fraud in connection with any certificate they have rejected. I cannot believe that the conspirators are to be permitted to carry out their wicked purpose. Our good State must be saved from this infamy now threatened by the vile scheme of its rulers."

THE MAINE COUNT.

AUGUSTA, ME., Dec. 21.—It is ascertained that the Republicans elected to the Legislature from Litchon and Webster, in Androscoggin county, were counted out on the alleged ground that the returns of election were signed by one selectman acting for the three required by law. The selectmen have now made affidavit that each separately subscribed their names to the legislative returns, and one of the selectmen is a well-known Democrat.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—Telegrams were sent hence yesterday to Senator Blaine and other prominent Republicans in Maine to resist to the last what is alleged to be the illegal action of Governor Garcelon and his counsel in counting out enough Republicans, claiming to have been legally elected, to give a majority of the legislature to the Fusionists. A telegram sent last night to Senator Hamilton read in substance: "General Garfield advises resistance even to the extent of force. Mr. Garfield saw the President to-day and he says the President will recognize a Davis legislation if it is set up as the legal legislation of Maine by the Republicans."

It is known that General Garfield and other prominent Republicans are at work looking up the law and precedent to sustain the formation of a legislature by the Republicans.

If the Maine legislature should attempt to set at defiance the national recognition, the legislature recognition could call upon the President for national aid to disperse the legislature which was denied recognition. The statutes of 1795, in respect to such a condition of affairs, read as follows: "And in case of an insurrection in any State against the government thereof, it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, on application of the legislature of said State or of the executive, (when the legislature cannot be convened,) to call for such number of the militia of any other State or States, as may be applied for, as he may deem sufficient to suppress such insurrection."

It will be seen, therefore, that the matter after all is with the President to decide which is the legal legislature of Maine in case two bodies set up their claims. All the recent advice from Maine point conclusively to the fact that the Republicans feel themselves outraged at Governor Garcelon's action and do not propose to submit to it. The great probability is, therefore, that within the next three weeks the President will be called upon to decide upon the claims of the contending factions, and that the Maine swindle will become one of national importance.

FIGHTING BROTHERS.

NEW YORK, Dec. 22.—A special from Pittsburgh says: The people of this city are in a fever of excitement to-day owing to a listless fight which took place in the First Reformed Presbyterian Church last night. Some weeks ago the congregation voted for a pastor, Rev. Nevins Woodside receiving 167 votes, against 116 for other candidates. A majority of the trustees were bitterly opposed to Mr. Woodside. The majority of the congregation were determined that Woodside should be their pastor. An appeal was taken to the Synod, and since then there have been bitter quarrels among the members of the church. The Woodside faction triumphed over their enemies, and on one occasion, notwithstanding the existence of an injunction restraining Woodside from preaching until the appeal was decided, gained admission to the church by strategy, held the place all day, and listened to a sermon by the pastor in the evening. Last night the quarrel culminated in a free fight. There were rumors during the day that serious trouble was brewing. Both factions were present in full force, and there was a large attendance. Woodside wanted to preach but his opponents had another clergyman present. Both parties were hot, and the excited spectators gave vent to their feelings in remarks designed to encourage their favorites. The trustees and Sunday school teachers took sides, and shouted excitedly. One of the parsons essayed to mount the rostrum. He was seized by his antagonists and roughly hustled from the steps. This led to a general fight. It was thickest round the altar, but all over the church was heard the sound of blows. Many of the women screamed and fainted, but some of the stronger minded encouraged the combatants with cheers. Two or three females, it is said, took advantage of the confusion to settle old scores among themselves. For a quarter of an hour the battle raged furiously. Heads were punched, eyes were blackened, arms broken, and women knocked down. The girls and screams were frightful. The police were called in and, after some difficulty, succeeded in quelling the riot. Several arrests were made. The church this morning presents a sorry appearance. Pews are broken, the remnants of gas globes strew the floor, hymn books and Bibles are scattered in all directions as if they had been used as missiles, and a large quantity of hair-pins and bangs have been gathered up. The rival pastors were in the thickest of the fray.

THE FEELING IN WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, December 20.—The feeling here among Republicans is very strong over the Maine outrage. The Democrats generally attempt to defend it, though a few of them denounce it. Among the latter is Senator Beck, who expresses the opinion that it will seriously damage the Democratic cause throughout the North. The German Democratic paper here also denounces it in the most vigorous manner, and calls attention to the fact, which Maine Democrats are trying to conceal, namely, that they do not charge fraud in the election, but only small technical inaccuracies in making up the formal record of the vote. Maine Republicans are expecting those who have been refused certificates to appear and demand their seats, while the indignity of Republicans in each branch will unite to prevent any organization or business until those rightfully elected are given their seats. It is not believed that the Democrats in the body will stand together to exclude any considerable portion of those whom the Governor has refused to recognize. When Senator Hamilton left for Maine, it is reported a consultation was held here of persons most influential in Republican councils, at which it was suggested that the proper course for the Republicans in Maine to pursue would be something like this: To exhaust every possible legal means by appeals to court for injunctions or other writs to prevent the fusion members of the legislature who have been counted in from taking their seats. Failing in this, that the Republican members who were actually elected—a majority of both houses—should bivecome at the capitol, with sufficient force to enter the two chambers, take their seats and keep them, and organize the legislature which the people elected. Then, if the fusionists choose to meet elsewhere and organize, the case of a dual government can be sent to Washington, and the administration could decide between them as it has hitherto done in similar cases in the Southern States.

EDISON'S TRIUMPH.

NEW YORK, December 21.—The Herald of to-day has an illustrated description of Edison's machinery for utilizing the electric light, which is now patented in its perfect state. The electric light, incredible as it may appear, is produced from a little piece of paper, a tiny strip that a breath would blow away. Through this little strip of paper is passed an electric current, and the result is a bright, beautiful light like the mellow sunset of an Italian autumn. He makes this little piece of paper more insubstantial than platinum and more durable than granite by baking it in an oven until all its elements have passed away except its carbon framework. The latter is then placed in a glass globe connected with the wires leading to the electricity-producing machine and the air exhausted from the globe. It gives out a light that produces no deleterious gases—a light that is a globe of sunshine, and produced cheaper than the cheapest oil.

LOCAL NEWS.

—The B. & O. R. R. pay car passed west on Friday morning.

—Local option petitions are being numerous signed in Garrett county.

—An oyster train was badly wrecked at Portland last Saturday morning.

—White McWilliams shipped a car load of hoop-poles east on Saturday morning last.

—Mr. John Harned had a severe attack of pneumonia, but is now out of danger.

—The Maryland State Temperance Alliance is busy canvassing the State in the interests of local option.

—The material for the iron bridge over the Yough river at Sang run, arrived at Oakland Friday of last week.

—Mr. B. F. Harvey, of district No. 8, this county, butchered a beef a few days ago, which netted 1,131 pounds. Hard to beat.

—Mr. Ralph Thayer has been re-appointed postmaster of Oakland for four years from December 11th instant.

—Mr. George Bell, son of James Bell, Esq., who has been absent in the west more than a year, arrived at home this week.

P. T. Thierthright, Esq., of Mineral Springs, this county, will please act as agent for THE REPUBLICAN in his neighborhood.

—Drop into our office when you come to town, tell us the news of your neighborhood and let us take a look at your new pocket-book. At times old ones are also curiosities.

—Wm. Turney, of Addison, Pa., killed for Mr. Kerr, of Garrett county, Md., a spring calf which weighed 337 lbs. net. The hide weighed 56 lbs. Who can beat it?

—An effort was made Sunday night to steal a valuable horse from Mr. G. W. Legg's stable. A lock on the outside was pryed off the door, but a bar on the inside prevented its being opened.

—Mr. John A. Grant and wife arrived in Oakland Sunday morning. They will for the present board at Mrs. Bell's. They were serenaded by the Oakland Cornet Band Monday evening.

—An exchange solemnly avers that a certain man in a country town who never advertises, was recently found dead on his counter, where he had been lying two days. People had forgotten where his store was, and a stranger looking for a storehouse was the discoverer of the deceased proprietor.

—Adjutant General Bond has informed Capt. Johnson that he has brevetted him Lieutenant Colonel, in consideration of his services in the field and in the Maryland National Guard. This is a great compliment, and is more highly appreciated as coming from an ex-convict soldier. —Cumt. News.

—A second meeting of the Board of County Commissioners was held yesterday for the purpose of organizing as a body. There were present Messrs. Frost, Hitchens, Clarke, Rouzer and Herzog. After considerable balloting they elected as their president Mr. A. E. Hitchens. They then elected as clerk Mr. L. T. DeWitt, of Frostburg, and as their attorney Mr. Wm. Brace. —Cumt. News.

—The contract made by the late County Commissioners for an iron bridge over Castleman's river, in Grantsville district, called for a bridge 63 feet long, but when the bridge was finished and brought to the ground it was found that it was 21 feet too long, and it was necessary to take that much out of the middle, which was a dead loss to the county of nearly two hundred dollars.

—The Cumberland News of Wednesday says there is not much warrant for the assumption that the two Cumberland military companies will attend the inauguration of Governor Hamilton, "as neither company is likely to be fully equipped and uniformed in time, and it is feared that the proficiency in drill, notwithstanding good progress has been made, will hardly warrant so public a display, although the members would enjoy the trip keenly."

—Garrett county is claimed by many to possess one of the most delightful summer climates between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, and bids fair in course of time to become one among the most popular of summer resorts. Its elevated location facilitates a free circulation near the surface, removing malaria, and conducting to general health, both of animal and vegetable organic life, at the same time its pure and dry atmosphere and rich soil gives it luxuriant and vigorous vegetation. Locally, the climate is varied and changeable, yet such is the dryness and purity of the air, that these rapid alternations of temperature is scarcely noticed, and do not have any injurious effect on man or beast; these fluctuations, however, are much greater in winter than in summer. The days in winter, with few exceptions are not too cold to render outdoor work pleasant and agreeable. In summer the nights are delightfully cool, and the heat of the summer sun is tempered with an almost unrelenting breeze. There is no section of country perhaps, that offers greater inducements to the emigrant, or possesses more natural advantages than this. The land that is embraced within the limits of the mountain plateau consists of a series of beautiful glades or valleys, alternated with hills and rising ground, of which a great deal is rough and of a rocky surface, but is readily utilized for pasture lands. A marked feature in the formation of the Glades is the almost total absence of timber and in many cases brushwood. The Youghiogheny valley is a section of country that in point of scenery and attractions has few parallels. The land in general is rich and productive bottoms and thickly settled by a class of enterprising and prosperous farmers. —Woodberry News.

Church Services—Sunday.
Lutheran Church.—Preaching in the morning at 10, by Rev. O. C. Miller.
Stone Church.—Preaching at 7 o'clock by Rev. John S. Lefevre.

Masonic Festival.
The Masonic Lodge of this town will hold a festival at the Glades Hotel in Oakland Tuesday night, Dec. 30th, supper at 9 o'clock. A lecture will be delivered by Col. J. M. Schlegel, in the M. E. Church, beginning at 7 o'clock. A general invitation is extended to the friends of the fraternity.

Home for the Holidays.
Prof. W. O. Ison, Arthur Townshend, W. C. Davis and Delpha Castled, of the West Va. University, Miss Laura Stalnaker, of the Westminster Academy, and Ed. Sineell, of St. John's College, Annapolis, are at home and will remain during the holidays.

Hotel Management.
Mr. John Bailey, of the Glades Hotel, Oakland, and Mr. M. W. Lambert late manager of the B. & O. R. R. hotels, have leased the celebrated Bedford Springs, Pa., and will make it one of the most attractive winter resorts in the country. This arrangement will not interfere with Mr. Bailey's management of the Glades. We wish them abundant success.

Christmas Doings.
Christmas day was rather dull in Oakland. The streets were generally closed, and the streets presented anything but an animated appearance. The Oakland Cornet Band played a few pieces on the streets. The Christmas tree exercises were held in the Lutheran Church Wednesday evening, and in the Presbyterian and M. E. churches on Christmas night. They were largely attended, and the children seemed to enjoy themselves hugely.

List of Letters.
List of letters remaining unclaimed in the Post Office at Oakland, Dec. 27th, 1889:
Persons calling for them will please say they are advertised.
Elizabeth Bittinger, H. H. Bird, Rev. Wm. C. Butler, Mrs. Eli S. Bond, M. S. Davis, Wm. Faherty, Thos. Gilbert, Henrietta Goodwin, H. M. Harden, Matilda Hetrick, Edna Hall, P. F. Koontz, Thos. F. Lish, J. M. Miller, Miss Annie McFarland, Bettie Morris, Miss Lizzie Oger, Ed. Waters.

R. THAYER, P. M.
Pushing Advertising too Far.
"Bless my soul!" said Col. Crawford last Sunday morning. "This is too bad! Here's Bull's Cough Syrup in the Bible!" The Colonel took off his specs, rubbed them carefully and looked again. "Yes! here in the 23d chapter of Isaiah, 15th verse,—'Over 500,000 bottles of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, &c. Well, I thought that Bull got everywhere else except in the Bible. Now I'll give it up; it must be a good thing.'" Mrs. C. came in and explained that she had cut the slip out of a newspaper and put it in her Bible for safe keeping and it had stuck to the leaf. So the Colonel was satisfied. —Stanton (Va.) Vindicator.

Joe Ashby's Remains Found.
We learn from the Kingwood Journal of last week, that the remains of Joe Ashby were found at the bottom of Shaft No. 1, of the Kingwood Tunnel, on Saturday, December 13th, by Sheriff Ford and others of Preston county. Ashby was last seen alive about six weeks before. The opening of the shaft is near a path across the mountain, and the supposition is that he walked in to the opening on a dark night. The shaft is 130 feet deep. The coroner's jury say the B. & O. R. R. Co. is guilty of gross negligence in allowing the shaft to remain without an enclosure at the mouth. Sheriff Ford, as the next friend of Mrs. Ashby, will bring suit against the railroad company for heavy damages. Ashby was about 45 years of age, and leaves a wife and four children.

Real Estate Transfers.
The following is a list of real estate transfers filed for record in the office of W. H. Tower, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, for the week ending December 22:
C. W. Friend and wife to Z. Taylor Friend, tract of land containing 77 acres and a tract called "Whit-poorwill," containing 109 acres, and another tract containing 50 acres; $1,275.
Wm. R. Getty and wife to Henry Wagner, tract of land called "Cornucopia," and "Youghiogheny Mill Seat Enlarged," 48 acres; $1,400.
Henry Richter and wife to John L. Richter, lot in Accident; $28.66.

Silver Ore in Western Maryland.
Considerable excitement is prevailing among the residents of Savage mountain, about eight miles west of Lonaconing, over the supposed discovery of silver ore. Several veins have lately been discovered which showed evidence of containing good silver ore, a piece of which Mr. Geo. Garlitz sent to Philadelphia for analysis, and was informed that it would yield $17.50 to the ton. A company of New York capitalists, have purchased about 900 acres of the Anderson tract, and a party of men from Leadville, Colorado, arrived on the site Monday and went to work. Mr. Garlitz owns 333 acres, which also contain a large amount of the ore. —Lonaconing Times.

Died in the Lock-Up.
Thomas Tracy, who has been making his home with a relative residing near Oakland, was arrested by officer Crim, Monday last about noon, and confined in the town lock-up on a charge of drunkenness. Mr. Crim visited his prisoner about dusk and found him dead in the cell. He informed Esquire Osborn, who had a jury of inquest summoned as follows: D. E. Offutt, foreman, A. C. Brooke, D. H. Lear, John Shatzer, Joseph Martin, Alex. Fleckenstein, W. M. Wagner, Thos. Coddington, Lloyd Chambers, J. C. Dundan, Mesack Mattingly and John P. White. The jury after hearing the testimony of Dr. E. H. Parsons and others and viewing the remains rendered the following verdict: "That Thomas Tracy came to his death from apoplexy, superinduced by excessive indulgence in alcoholic liquors." Tracy was a single man, between 35 and 40 years of age, and was a very quiet and peaceably disposed citizen.

Band of Hope.
The regular monthly meeting of the Band of Hope was held in the M. E. Church, Thursday evening of last week, which was the third anniversary of the Society. The constitution provides that the Pastor of the M. E. Church shall be President, and the new Pastor Rev. H. C. Sanford, being unacquainted with the duties and requirements of the position, Mr. Thos. J. Peddicord, at the request of vice President Davis, explained the objects and aims of the Band. The regular programme was then taken up. But two were present and prepared, namely: Declaration, Master Willie Scott, Selection, Miss Nellie Peddicord. President Sanford addressed the meeting at considerable length, on the temperance question, after which officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: Vice Presidents, John M. Davis and W. H. Tower; Secretary, W. P. Townshend; Committee on Programme, J. A. Enlow, Geo. W. Mason, P. P. Arnold, Miss Lou A. Thayer and Miss Jennie Delawder.

Orphans' Court.
The Orphans' Court for Garrett County was convened on Tuesday, 23d inst. Present, Hon. Isaac H. Kooker, Chief Judge, and Hons. Joseph DeWitt and Wm. Harvey, Associate Judges, and Wm. H. Hagens, Register.
Among others were the following proceedings:
Letters testamentary were granted to Thos. B. Frantz and Henry Frantz, upon the estate of John Frantz, of Joseph, late of Garrett Co., dec'd.
Letters of Administration were granted to Elizabeth Smith and Daniel R. Smith, upon the estate of Daniel Smith, late of Garrett county, deceased.
Margaret A. Walter, administratrix of Henry Walter, settled her first account.
Court adjourned to meet Tuesday, January 13th, 1890.

Nothing Short of Unmistakable Benefits.
Conferred upon tens of thousands of sufferers could originate and maintain the reputation which AYER'S SARSAPARILLA enjoys. It is a compound of the best vegetable purgatives, with the benefits of Purgative and Iron, and is the most effectual of all remedies for scrofulous, mercurial, or blood disorders. Uniformly successful and certain in its results, it cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood. Its invigorating effects it always relieves, and cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases, and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood. It cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases, and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood. It cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases, and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood.

Nothing Short of Unmistakable Benefits.
Conferred upon tens of thousands of sufferers could originate and maintain the reputation which AYER'S SARSAPARILLA enjoys. It is a compound of the best vegetable purgatives, with the benefits of Purgative and Iron, and is the most effectual of all remedies for scrofulous, mercurial, or blood disorders. Uniformly successful and certain in its results, it cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood. Its invigorating effects it always relieves, and cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases, and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood. It cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases, and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood.

Nothing Short of Unmistakable Benefits.
Conferred upon tens of thousands of sufferers could originate and maintain the reputation which AYER'S SARSAPARILLA enjoys. It is a compound of the best vegetable purgatives, with the benefits of Purgative and Iron, and is the most effectual of all remedies for scrofulous, mercurial, or blood disorders. Uniformly successful and certain in its results, it cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood. Its invigorating effects it always relieves, and cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases, and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood. It cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases, and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood.

Commissioners Meeting.
The new Board of County Commissioners met in their office Wednesday morning, Dec. 17th, present a full Board.

Road petition of P. Hamill and others for change or relocation of Meadow Mountain road running through lands of J. O'Brien and others, to Mrs. Brobst's, was taken up and laid over until next meeting.
Notice was received from T. M. Nelson, reporting bridge over Castleman's river completed. The Commissioners appointed the 30th day of December, 1879, to inspect said bridge and the clerk was ordered to notify T. M. Nelson and E. B. Fuller to be present if they desire.
Petition of Francis McCrobie and others, asking for change of road levy from Wm. Warnick to David J. Bever, laid over to next meeting, and the Clerk was ordered to notify Mr. Warnick to be present to answer said petition.
Petition from Mrs. Merrill and A. E. King, asking for pensions, laid over till June levy.

The following Road Supervisors were appointed to serve for two years from Jan. 1st, 1880:
No. 1.—S. W. Friend.
No. 2.—Isaac Myers.
No. 3.—Peter J. Stephens.
No. 4.—David Evans.
No. 5.—Wm. Inglehart.
No. 6.—Elijah Hoyer.
No. 7.—W. M. Coddington.
No. 8.—John G. Knauer.
No. 9.—Andrew Blocher.

The following orders were passed:
Ordered, That all Road Supervisors are hereby required to report, in writing, to the County Commissioners, on the second Tuesday of May, 1880, and on the same day in each year thereafter, the condition of all the roads and bridges in their respective districts; and it is further ordered, that whenever any one of the said supervisors has worked one, or more than one of the roads in his district, he may report to the Commissioners, in writing, stating, under oath, what roads have been worked, and the number of hands and teams employed by him, with a full account of the money or labor, or both, expended or performed on said roads and bridges in the employment of deputies, agents, contractors, laborers and materials; and when the report is made if the Commissioners are satisfied that the said Supervisor has fully discharged his duty as such, they shall cause to be paid to him such compensation as he may be entitled to receive. All Supervisors shall complete the roads and bridges in their respective districts, and make a final report as hereinbefore provided for on or before the first Tuesday of October in each year.

Ordered, That the room adjoining the Commissioners' office in the court house, which is now occupied, be rented to H. Wheeler Combs and Thomas J. Peddicord, attorneys to the Board, for the sum of thirty six dollars per annum, from Jan. 1st, 1880.

Items from District No. 8.
Thieves have been operating in our District to some extent for some time. During the past summer parties visited Mrs. Mary Yutzy's milk house and helped themselves to some fifteen pounds of fresh butter, a new tin bucket and a window curtain.

A few weeks since Mr. Robt. Lee butchered and was minus a meat tub. Having some 16 bushels of oats in the spring house loft he thought he would empty one, but to his surprise they were empty.
They also visited Mr. Christian Martin and helped themselves to a quantity of oats.
H. A. Snider, Esq., who resides about three miles south of the Red House, in the Ganer settlement, is erecting a new saw mill, an improvement very much needed in that neighborhood.

I have been informed that one of our go-ahead and enterprising citizens intends to erect a steam grist and saw mill on the Northwestern pike, near the Virginia line.

There has been and is at present a great deal of sickness in this neighborhood. Persons are taken with sore throat, severe headache and vomiting.
Mr. John F. Sanders' family have been sorely afflicted during the past summer and fall. Mr. Sanders was sick and not able to do any work nearly all summer. During his illness one of his older daughters suffered with a gathering on her face. One of his younger daughters cut her wrist severely with an ax, and quite lately his youngest child was severely burned.

Wolf Lot.
By virtue of a writ of Perpetua issued by Alexander L. Osborn, a Justice of the Peace of the State of Maryland, in and for Garrett county, and do hereby certify that the said Wolf Lot, containing one-half acre, on which is erected a two-story frame dwelling house, is situated in the town of Oakland, Md., and is owned by J. S. JOHNSON, Constable.

Wolf Lot.
By virtue of a writ of Perpetua issued by Alexander L. Osborn, a Justice of the Peace of the State of Maryland, in and for Garrett county, and do hereby certify that the said Wolf Lot, containing one-half acre, on which is erected a two-story frame dwelling house, is situated in the town of Oakland, Md., and is owned by J. S. JOHNSON, Constable.

Wolf Lot.
By virtue of a writ of Perpetua issued by Alexander L. Osborn, a Justice of the Peace of the State of Maryland, in and for Garrett county, and do hereby certify that the said Wolf Lot, containing one-half acre, on which is erected a two-story frame dwelling house, is situated in the town of Oakland, Md., and is owned by J. S. JOHNSON, Constable.

Wolf Lot.
By virtue of a writ of Perpetua issued by Alexander L. Osborn, a Justice of the Peace of the State of Maryland, in and for Garrett county, and do hereby certify that the said Wolf Lot, containing one-half acre, on which is erected a two-story frame dwelling house, is situated in the town of Oakland, Md., and is owned by J. S. JOHNSON, Constable.

Wolf Lot.
By virtue of a writ of Perpetua issued by Alexander L. Osborn, a Justice of the Peace of the State of Maryland, in and for Garrett county, and do hereby certify that the said Wolf Lot, containing one-half acre, on which is erected a two-story frame dwelling house, is situated in the town of Oakland, Md., and is owned by J. S. JOHNSON, Constable.

mortgaged premises. As they now stand the poor borrower whose misfortunes compel him to use the exorbitant interest by borrowing money is completely at the mercy of his hard-hearted and merciless creditor. Should he be so unfortunate as to be in arrears in his interest, or not able to pay at the day of maturity, it only takes four short weeks to clean him out of his little all, and the mortgage comes in and oftentimes takes property that cost the borrower four times the amount borrowed upon it. These men who loan money generally have about one-third of the value of the property mortgaged. So when the mortgage is foreclosed and the mortgagee buys it, as he generally does, he makes a good thing by robbing the poor borrower of the hard earnings of many years, and should the poor man be able to raise money before the day of sale he is required to pay a bill of costs amounting to a year's salary, the largest item of which is the commission of about seven per cent. allowed to the mortgagee for his attorney for working about two hours. In Iowa, where they have gotten over the old foggy way of doing things, the costs, including commission, do not amount in any case to over ten dollars, and the party has a right to redeem his property any time within two years and during the said two years remains in possession and enjoys the profits and income. We should have just such a law here, that our unfortunate citizen might have a chance to redeem his property. It is no hardship to the man who loans the money because he in time gets his own with all the interest the law allows him. The law as it now stands is all in the interest of the capitalist and should be so changed as to give the poor borrower some chance to save his own. This is equity and just and is founded on the Divine Law, which not only commanded that the land should be redeemed, but also commanded that when he who purchased it should sell it again he should hand the surplus to the former owner."

Senator Dawes on the Retraction of Greenbacks.—The Washington correspondent of the Boston Traveller asked Senator Dawes on Monday whether or not he thinks it wise to attempt the retirement of the greenbacks. He replied: "As to that, if we can't have the co-operation of the Republican party in general it may not be wise, for the few that are ready, to fight alone. And yet it may be their duty to do so. I regret exceedingly that the Republican party as a whole is not up to the point of going forward resolutely in its work of retiring the currency upon a sound foundation, so that no fluctuation in the fortunes of parties shall again disturb it. I do not understand that the Republican Senate committee of nine are going to attempt to make it a caucus-binding policy, but to leave every one free to act according to his own convictions. So I propose to vote my convictions, and I think there never was so grand an opportunity for the Republicans, if they could be united on the President's policy, with the help of Mr. Bayard and his followers on the Democratic side, to put the financial question forever beyond the reach of any party medicine treatment."

Calling on General Grant to Speak Out.—The New York Tribune editorially avows its reliance on Gen. Grant's persistent reticence on the question of a presidential nomination, and thinks the time is come when he ought to, he must—speak out. The Tribune, among other things, says:

"He (Grant) has preserved a dignified silence thus far, while the whole country has been guessing at his intentions. The time has perhaps come when true dignity requires speech rather than silence. It may be said that he can neither accept nor refuse a nomination until it has been offered him. But, though the nomination is yet uncertain, the candidacy for Grant has already gone very far, and Gen. Grant, either with or without his consent, has been one of the foremost competitors. In a case of this kind silence will not only be interpreted as an acceptance, but silence is an acceptance. Gen. Grant cannot honorably allow his friends to make such extraordinary exertions for him, and then, at the last moment, in case of something better offering, throw them over, with a protest that they acted without his authority."

Nothing Short of Unmistakable Benefits.
Conferred upon tens of thousands of sufferers could originate and maintain the reputation which AYER'S SARSAPARILLA enjoys. It is a compound of the best vegetable purgatives, with the benefits of Purgative and Iron, and is the most effectual of all remedies for scrofulous, mercurial, or blood disorders. Uniformly successful and certain in its results, it cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood. Its invigorating effects it always relieves, and cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases, and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood. It cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases, and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood.

Nothing Short of Unmistakable Benefits.
Conferred upon tens of thousands of sufferers could originate and maintain the reputation which AYER'S SARSAPARILLA enjoys. It is a compound of the best vegetable purgatives, with the benefits of Purgative and Iron, and is the most effectual of all remedies for scrofulous, mercurial, or blood disorders. Uniformly successful and certain in its results, it cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood. Its invigorating effects it always relieves, and cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases, and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood. It cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases, and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood.

Nothing Short of Unmistakable Benefits.
Conferred upon tens of thousands of sufferers could originate and maintain the reputation which AYER'S SARSAPARILLA enjoys. It is a compound of the best vegetable purgatives, with the benefits of Purgative and Iron, and is the most effectual of all remedies for scrofulous, mercurial, or blood disorders. Uniformly successful and certain in its results, it cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood. Its invigorating effects it always relieves, and cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases, and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood. It cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases, and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood.

Nothing Short of Unmistakable Benefits.
Conferred upon tens of thousands of sufferers could originate and maintain the reputation which AYER'S SARSAPARILLA enjoys. It is a compound of the best vegetable purgatives, with the benefits of Purgative and Iron, and is the most effectual of all remedies for scrofulous, mercurial, or blood disorders. Uniformly successful and certain in its results, it cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood. Its invigorating effects it always relieves, and cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases, and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood. It cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases, and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood.

Nothing Short of Unmistakable Benefits.
Conferred upon tens of thousands of sufferers could originate and maintain the reputation which AYER'S SARSAPARILLA enjoys. It is a compound of the best vegetable purgatives, with the benefits of Purgative and Iron, and is the most effectual of all remedies for scrofulous, mercurial, or blood disorders. Uniformly successful and certain in its results, it cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood. Its invigorating effects it always relieves, and cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases, and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood. It cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases, and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood.

Nothing Short of Unmistakable Benefits.
Conferred upon tens of thousands of sufferers could originate and maintain the reputation which AYER'S SARSAPARILLA enjoys. It is a compound of the best vegetable purgatives, with the benefits of Purgative and Iron, and is the most effectual of all remedies for scrofulous, mercurial, or blood disorders. Uniformly successful and certain in its results, it cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood. Its invigorating effects it always relieves, and cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases, and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood. It cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases, and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood.

Nothing Short of Unmistakable Benefits.
Conferred upon tens of thousands of sufferers could originate and maintain the reputation which AYER'S SARSAPARILLA enjoys. It is a compound of the best vegetable purgatives, with the benefits of Purgative and Iron, and is the most effectual of all remedies for scrofulous, mercurial, or blood disorders. Uniformly successful and certain in its results, it cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood. Its invigorating effects it always relieves, and cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases, and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood. It cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases, and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood.

Nothing Short of Unmistakable Benefits.
Conferred upon tens of thousands of sufferers could originate and maintain the reputation which AYER'S SARSAPARILLA enjoys. It is a compound of the best vegetable purgatives, with the benefits of Purgative and Iron, and is the most effectual of all remedies for scrofulous, mercurial, or blood disorders. Uniformly successful and certain in its results, it cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood. Its invigorating effects it always relieves, and cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases, and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood. It cures Liver Complaints, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases, and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood.

New Firm.
The undersigned having purchased the Drug Store owned by George W. Merrill & Co., in Oakland, hope to continue the patronage of the public.

E. P. CHISHOLM & Co.
—200 sacks G. A. Salt for sale at Wm. P. Tatten's Cheap Cash Store; Oakland, Md. a26-tf.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.
Constable's Sale.

By virtue of three writs of fieri facias, two issued by Alexander L. Osborn, and one by Richard B. Jamison, Justices of the Peace of the State of Maryland, in and for Garrett county, two in the suit of George W. Legg, and one in the suit of J. B. Knott, against the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of Alexander C. Good and Mary E. F. Good, his wife, I have seized and taken in execution all the right, title, interest and estate, both at law and in equity, of the said Alexander C. Good and Mary E. F. Good, his wife, in and to the following real estate, to-wit:

Military Lots Nos. 31, 32, 33, 54, 62, 258, 373, 477, 1256, 1521, 1613, 1802, 1818, 1909, 1910, 1912, 2317, 2518, 2523, 2555, 3556, 3567, 4000, 2105, 220, 1473, 1102, 2164, 1889, 1288, 2536, 908.

being the same lots obtained from John Scott and wife by deed dated December 7th, 1871, and recorded in Liber W. H. T. folio 621, one of the land records of Garrett county, Md. Said Military Lots are situated in Garrett county Md.

And I hereby give notice that on SATURDAY, January 17th, 1880; at 2 o'clock P. M., in front of Coddington's Hotel in the town of Oakland, Md., I will offer at public sale the property so seized and taken in execution, to the highest bidder, for cash, to satisfy said judgments and costs thereon.

JAS. S. JOHNSON, Constable.

ORDER NISI.

In the Circuit Court for Garrett county, No. 131. Equity.

JOHN S. COMBS, Assignee of William E. Henshaw, vs. JOHN TIGHE and LEXA M. TIGHE, his wife.

ORDERED. By the Circuit Court for Garrett county, this 23d day of December, 1889, that the sale made and to be made by the above entitled cause, by John S. Combs, Assignee of William E. Henshaw, be null and void unless cause to the contrary be shown on or before the 1st day of January, 1890; provided, that all persons having claims against the said estate, or who are indebted to it, or who are indebted to the subscribers, with the vouchers thereof, legally authenticated, shall order by the 23d day of January, 1890. They may thereafter by law be excluded from all benefits of the said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment. Given under our hands this 23d day of December, 1889.

THOS. B. FRANTZ, HENRY FRANTZ, Executors.

Estate of John Frantz, of Jos. dec'd.
The subscribers have obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, Maryland, Letters Testamentary on the estate of JOHN FRANTZ, late of said county, deceased. All persons having claims against the said deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same to the subscribers, with the vouchers thereof, legally authenticated, on or before the 23d day of January, 1890. They may thereafter by law be excluded from all benefits of the said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment. Given under our hands this 23d day of December, 1889.

ELIZABETH SMITH, DANIEL R. SMITH, Executors.

Estate of Daniel Smith, deceased.
The subscribers have obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, Maryland, Letters Testamentary on the estate of DANIEL SMITH, late of said county, deceased. All persons having claims against the said deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same to the subscribers, with the vouchers thereof, legally authenticated, on or before the 23d day of January, 1890. They may thereafter by law be excluded from all benefits of the said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment. Given under our hands this 23d day of December, 1889.

ELIZABETH SMITH, DANIEL R. SMITH, Executors.

NOTICE.
All persons knowing themselves indebted to the undersigned will please call and settle on or before the 1st day of January, 1890, otherwise their accounts will be placed in the hands of an officer for collection.

A. LOEWENSTEIN.

COMMISSIONERS' MEETING.
OFFICE OF THE GARRETT COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, OAKLAND, MD., Dec. 17, 1889.

Notice is hereby given that the County Commissioners of Garrett county will meet at their office in Oakland, on the First Monday of January, 1890, for the transaction of such business as may come before the Board.

By order,

F. A. THAYER, Clerk.

Constable's Sale.

By virtue of a writ of fieri facias issued by Alexander L. Osborn, a Justice of the Peace of the State of Maryland, in and for Garrett county, and do hereby certify that the said Wolf Lot, containing one-half acre, on which is erected a two-story frame dwelling house, is situated in the town of Oakland, Md., and is owned by J. S. JOHNSON, Constable.

Wolf Lot.
By virtue of a writ of fieri facias issued by Alexander L. Osborn, a Justice of the Peace of the State of Maryland, in and for Garrett county, and do hereby certify that the said Wolf Lot, containing one-half acre, on which is erected a two-story frame dwelling house, is situated in the town of Oakland, Md., and is owned by J. S. JOHNSON, Constable.

Wolf Lot.
By virtue of a writ of fieri facias issued by Alexander L. Osborn, a Justice of the Peace of the State of Maryland, in and for Garrett county, and do hereby certify that the said Wolf Lot, containing one-half acre, on which is erected a two-story frame dwelling house, is situated in the town of Oakland, Md., and is owned by J. S. JOHNSON, Constable.

Wolf Lot.
By virtue of a writ of fieri facias issued by Alexander L. Osborn, a Justice of the Peace of the State of Maryland, in and for Garrett county, and do hereby certify that the said Wolf Lot, containing one-half acre, on which is erected a two-story frame dwelling house, is situated in the town of Oakland, Md., and is owned by J. S. JOHNSON, Constable.

Wolf Lot.
By virtue of a writ of fieri facias issued by Alexander L. Osborn, a Justice of the Peace of the State of Maryland, in and for Garrett county, and do hereby certify that the said Wolf Lot, containing one-half acre, on which is erected a two-story frame dwelling

VARIETIES.

—The truth is mighty—mean some times.—Metropolitan News.

—Skates—go-as-they-please—with a green hand.—Free Press.

—The first step toward admission to the bar is to get on the good side of the barkeeper.

—A young lady in Brooklyn calls her beau a spark from the wires, because he's a telegraph operator.

—The most powerful of existing telescopes is now in use at Melbourne, which magnifies 8,000 times.

—An ounce of keep-your-mouth-shut is better than a pound of explanations after you have said it.—Free Press.

—In Sweden a bride has her pockets filled with bread. Carameis are good enough for the girls in this country.

—Some people judge an umbrella by the handle. The best way is to tickle it in the ribs.—New Haven Register.

—The Philadelphia Chronicle says that youth and toothless are synonymous terms in the annals of a man's life.

—The rats of Illinois eat up and destroy 100,000 bushels of corn every year, and the query with is whether to stop raising corn or rats.

—A Wetzel County girl says she has worth a dozen love letters. They cannot be introduced as evidence in a branch of promise suit, either.

—The Detroit Free Press says that no woman should ever give a pump "no" to an offer of marriage. "Hold on to even a poor one, and use it for a bait."

—Everything, says a Western paper, "has recently advanced in price except liberty, which remains at eternal vigilance, with liberal reductions to the trade."

—Vague reports of troubles in Spain have reached this country. It is possible that Alfonso has already refused to get up first and start the first.—Chicago Tribune.

—After a Texas jury had stood out for ninety-six hours the Judge got a verdict out of them in two minutes by sending them word that a circus had come to town.

—"Cher" is a curious name for a young lady, but that is what an Irvington young man calls his queen. We suppose because he is so wrapped up in her.—Yonkers Statesman.

—The thoughtful girl who tells her gentlemen callers that her other gentleman friends are going to give her Christmas is taking time by the top-knot.—Andrews' American Queen.

—What is the difference between the masons and their tenders, asked Mr. Practical, "so long as they get the same pay?" "The difference lies in the tools," replied John, the Britisher.

—Child of seven, before being brought into the drawing-room. Row heard outside room. Scream from child. Child in also: "Tompany (company) or no tompany, I won't have my face washed with spit."

—Poor England! War in Zululand and Afghanistan, land troubles in Ireland, and now comes the melancholy intelligence that the next six days' walk for the Astley belt is to be held in London.—Chicago Tribune.

—The idea of teaching a girl music because she may some day have to depend on herself is a good one. If she had to depend on herself and knew how to make her own dresses it would be outrageous.—Free Press.

—There was never any situation so bad that it could not be worse," says an American philosopher. For instance, a man on the gallows might be lost in the woods without even a dog for company.—Free Press.

—A Yankee woman recently married a Chinese laundryman, and in three days thereafter the unhappy Celestial appeared at a barber's shop and ordered his pigtail to be cut off, saying, in explanation: "Too muchee yank."

—Don't be alarmed young man, if about this season of the year you discover the lid of your alleged suitcase lying idly on your feet during one of your visits to her. She is only sizing them up for a pair of slippers that you can never wear.

—Of course, says the Boston Transcript, we all love our neighbor as ourselves; but when our neighbor is full and his empty stomach the news of an advance in coal doesn't make us look half so glum as when the conditions of the respective colliers are reversed.

—The Trenton (N. J.) Gazette says that Professor Cook has sent to the Geological Museum at the State House in that city several large slabs of stone containing imprints of bird's feet, which were found at a great depth in a Morris County quarry.

—The following list of articles have been found in the Detroit drinking water: Nitrochia curvula, cymatopleura elliptica, stauroncha, punctata, pleurosigna sponcerii and rhyzolenia eriensis. And yet they have temperance societies there.—Albany Journal.

—An emaciated humorist, who had been sick for a long time, was required by his doctor to have a large mustard-plaster put on his chest. "Look here, doctor! isn't there a great deal of mustard in the quantity of meat taken into consideration?" asked the sufferer.

—"Don't you love her still?" asked the Judge of a man who wanted a divorce. "Certainly, I do," he said. "I love her better still than any other way; but the trouble is she will never be still." The Judge, who is a married man himself, took the case under advisement.

—King Cetewayo is said to have astonished people by his courteous manner and his liking for cleanliness. When Sir Bartle Frere asked him if there was anything he wished for, the savage answered that he would like to have the floor of his room cleaner. He suffers somewhat from rheumatism. He takes an interest in illustrated papers, and when he was shown one of them with a picture of himself sharpening a knife to kill Grandier, he burst out laughing, and said he never knew that a real he was until he saw that.

—"Just now, in at Smith's," said Jones, his face flushed with the proud consciousness of a good deed done, "my honesty had a severe strain. A fellow went out just after I came in, and I noticed he left half a dollar of his change on the counter. My first thought was to pocket it. Sorry to say it, boys, but it is a fact. I didn't think, thank heaven! No; I just put my fingers near it when Smith handed me my cigars, and by a curious coincidence it was just the right change. Seemed sort of providential, didn't it. Yes," he continued, "there's no doubt about it; honesty is the best policy."—Boston Transcript.

A Chapter on Sleep.

From an English review of J. Mortimer Granville's new work on "Sleep and Sleeplessness" we extract the following:

The most perfect and refreshing—in a word, natural—sleep is that which combines the whole series in such healthy proportions as an orderly and active life will establish, by a constitutionally equal distribution of work, looking to the comparative powers of the several parts of the system, the opportunities for rest, the food supply, and the measure of strength each department of the mental and physical organism of the individual enjoys. This wise adaptation of work to the different energies, so that each shall lighten the others, it is a duty to self which every step forward in the march of intellect and progress of civilization seems to make it increasingly difficult to discharge.

To sum up, sleep is a rhythmic function of life. It is performed by the nervous system either through a single center or by the several centers connected with various parts or organs of the body, from the supreme cerebral centers which control the immediate apparatus of intentional thought to the ganglia that regulate the work of viscera. I believe the sympathetic system plays a conspicuous part in the production of the phenomenon, and this is why the due performance of the function is so readily prevented as it is by disorderly action in almost any part of the body, even when there is no suggestion of pain or of uneasiness at the seat of the disturbance. People who do not sleep well and regularly are peculiarly liable to functional disorders; and, conversely, those who are subject to the anomalous maladies and symptoms too often set down to fancy, but actually existing and traceable with care to some special ganglion of the sympathetic system (for example, uneasiness in the "pit of the stomach," or aching pains in the lower lumbar region of the spine), are disturbed or disordered sleepers. Sleep is a nerve state, whether the part sleeping be the brain or certain parts of the organ, the muscular system or the viscera. The modifications which take place in the vessels supplying the organ or system that sleeps are the effects or consequences, instead of the causes, of its condition.

The author devotes a chapter to the subject of going to sleep, and for the purpose of inducing it, observing that "the state they produce is not sleep, but a condition of narcotism that counterfeits sleep," adding, "When a man says, 'I want a quiet night; I will take a sleeping draught,' he speaks in parables. To express the facts plainly he should say, 'I want a quiet night; or, I am afraid to trust to the chances of natural rest, so I will poison myself a little, just enough to make me unconscious or slightly paralyze my nerve-centers, not enough to kill.' If this fact should be kept clearly before the mind, the reckless use of drugs which produce a state of mock sleep would be limited." The state of inaction which is brought about by natural sleep is very different from that which is produced by paralysis of any degree. The following remarks are impressive: "Habit greatly helps the performance of the initial act, and the cultivation of a habit of going to sleep in a particular way, at a particular time, will do more to procure regular and healthy sleep than any other artifice. The formation of the habit is, in fact, the creation or development of a special center, or combination, in the nervous system, which will henceforward produce sleep as a natural rhythmic process."

This was more generally recognized, persons who suffer from sleeplessness of the sort which consists in being simply "unable to go to sleep" would set themselves resolutely to form such a habit. It is necessary that the training should be specific, and include attention to details. It is not very important what a person does with the intention of going to sleep; but he should do precisely the same thing, in the same way, at the same time, and under as nearly as possible the same conditions, night after night for a considerable period, say three or four weeks at least. The result will amply reward the effort.

The doctor remarks, very wisely, that "sleep is not induced by the instinct acting in response to the sense of fatigue, or in obedience to the impulse of habit; but when the orderly performance of a natural process has been interrupted, it is difficult to restore the rhythmic sequence of cause and effect." As he truly remarks, "the sufferings and discomfort of those who find the act of going to sleep difficult, are many and various." We can hardly, from our point of view, agree with the opinion which Dr. Mortimer Granville expresses, that "it is a mistake, and tends to the mischievous habit of partial sleep, to seek sleep as a relief from trouble, worry or pain." He holds that we should seek relief both for the mind and the body before sleep is sought, because "if this precaution be not taken, the sleep induced will be only loss of consciousness, or, perhaps, automatic, muscular or visceral, but not natural, and general sleep which alone gives general repose." We content ourselves with asking whether cases are not frequently arising in which the only chance apparently of gaining relief from pain of body and mind is by obtaining, first of all, a little sleep of some kind? But we will quote from this really interesting little book a valuable passage:

A constrained or uncomfortable posture will often prevent repose. Lying flat on the back, with the limbs relaxed, would seem to secure the greatest amount of rest for the muscular system. This is the position assumed in the most exhausting diseases, and it is generally hailed as a token of revival when a patient voluntarily turns on the side; but there are several disadvantages in the supine posture which impair or embarrass sleep. Thus, in weakly states of the heart and blood vessels, and in certain morbid conditions of the brain, the blood seems to gravitate to the back of the head, and to produce troublesome dreams. In persons who habitually in their gait or work, stoop, there is some distress consequent on straightening the spine. Those who have contracted chests, especially persons who have had pleurisy and retain adhesions of the lungs, do not sleep well on the back. Nearly all who are inclined to snore do so when in that position, because the soft palate and uvula hang on the tongue, and that organ falls back so as to partially close the top of the windpipe. It is better, therefore, to lie on the side, and in the absence of special chest disease, rendering it desirable to lie on the weak side so as to leave the healthy lung free to expand, it is well to choose the right side, because when the body is thus placed the food gravitates easily out of the stomach into the intestines, and the weight of the liver does not compress the upper portion of the intestines. A glance at any plate of the visceral anatomy will show how this must be. Many persons are deaf in one ear, and prior to lie on a particular side; but if possible, the right side should be chosen, and the body rolled a little forward so that any saliva which may be secreted shall run easily out of the mouth, if not unconsciously swallowed. Again, sleeping with the arms thrown over the head is to be deprecated; but this position is often assumed during sleep, because circulation is then free as if going on the mare, and the neck and the muscles of the chest are drawn up and fixed by the shoulders, and thus the expansion of the thorax is easy. The chief objections to this position are that it creates a tendency to cramp and cold in the arms, and sometimes seems to cause headaches during sleep and dreams. These small matters often make or mar comfort in sleeping.

A Knapsack Drill.

"A. L. B." of Westfield, Ind., sends the following anecdote of his military experience:

Let me give you an anecdote of some of the jovial and lively boys whose presence in a company did more to promote health and happiness than the hospital, quinine and opium pills. In the old Twelfth Indiana Regiment there were four or five of these kind of men, full of life and fun. Here is one, of Enoch Taylor's "Gauge games," as he called it. If Taylor is living he may remember me, and I hope he will forgive me for using his name.

While at camp in Darnestown, Md., in 1861, an order was issued for knapsack drill every afternoon. The men here the use of various devices and means to get into the habit of doing it. The state they produce is not sleep, but a condition of narcotism that counterfeits sleep," adding, "When a man says, 'I want a quiet night; I will take a sleeping draught,' he speaks in parables. To express the facts plainly he should say, 'I want a quiet night; or, I am afraid to trust to the chances of natural rest, so I will poison myself a little, just enough to make me unconscious or slightly paralyze my nerve-centers, not enough to kill.' If this fact should be kept clearly before the mind, the reckless use of drugs which produce a state of mock sleep would be limited." The state of inaction which is brought about by natural sleep is very different from that which is produced by paralysis of any degree. The following remarks are impressive: "Habit greatly helps the performance of the initial act, and the cultivation of a habit of going to sleep in a particular way, at a particular time, will do more to procure regular and healthy sleep than any other artifice. The formation of the habit is, in fact, the creation or development of a special center, or combination, in the nervous system, which will henceforward produce sleep as a natural rhythmic process."

This was more generally recognized, persons who suffer from sleeplessness of the sort which consists in being simply "unable to go to sleep" would set themselves resolutely to form such a habit. It is necessary that the training should be specific, and include attention to details. It is not very important what a person does with the intention of going to sleep; but he should do precisely the same thing, in the same way, at the same time, and under as nearly as possible the same conditions, night after night for a considerable period, say three or four weeks at least. The result will amply reward the effort.

The doctor remarks, very wisely, that "sleep is not induced by the instinct acting in response to the sense of fatigue, or in obedience to the impulse of habit; but when the orderly performance of a natural process has been interrupted, it is difficult to restore the rhythmic sequence of cause and effect." As he truly remarks, "the sufferings and discomfort of those who find the act of going to sleep difficult, are many and various." We can hardly, from our point of view, agree with the opinion which Dr. Mortimer Granville expresses, that "it is a mistake, and tends to the mischievous habit of partial sleep, to seek sleep as a relief from trouble, worry or pain." He holds that we should seek relief both for the mind and the body before sleep is sought, because "if this precaution be not taken, the sleep induced will be only loss of consciousness, or, perhaps, automatic, muscular or visceral, but not natural, and general sleep which alone gives general repose." We content ourselves with asking whether cases are not frequently arising in which the only chance apparently of gaining relief from pain of body and mind is by obtaining, first of all, a little sleep of some kind? But we will quote from this really interesting little book a valuable passage:

A constrained or uncomfortable posture will often prevent repose. Lying flat on the back, with the limbs relaxed, would seem to secure the greatest amount of rest for the muscular system. This is the position assumed in the most exhausting diseases, and it is generally hailed as a token of revival when a patient voluntarily turns on the side; but there are several disadvantages in the supine posture which impair or embarrass sleep. Thus, in weakly states of the heart and blood vessels, and in certain morbid conditions of the brain, the blood seems to gravitate to the back of the head, and to produce troublesome dreams. In persons who habitually in their gait or work, stoop, there is some distress consequent on straightening the spine. Those who have contracted chests, especially persons who have had pleurisy and retain adhesions of the lungs, do not sleep well on the back. Nearly all who are inclined to snore do so when in that position, because the soft palate and uvula hang on the tongue, and that organ falls back so as to partially close the top of the windpipe. It is better, therefore, to lie on the side, and in the absence of special chest disease, rendering it desirable to lie on the weak side so as to leave the healthy lung free to expand, it is well to choose the right side, because when the body is thus placed the food gravitates easily out of the stomach into the intestines, and the weight of the liver does not compress the upper portion of the intestines. A glance at any plate of the visceral anatomy will show how this must be. Many persons are deaf in one ear, and prior to lie on a particular side; but if possible, the right side should be chosen, and the body rolled a little forward so that any saliva which may be secreted shall run easily out of the mouth, if not unconsciously swallowed. Again, sleeping with the arms thrown over the head is to be deprecated; but this position is often assumed during sleep, because circulation is then free as if going on the mare, and the neck and the muscles of the chest are drawn up and fixed by the shoulders, and thus the expansion of the thorax is easy. The chief objections to this position are that it creates a tendency to cramp and cold in the arms, and sometimes seems to cause headaches during sleep and dreams. These small matters often make or mar comfort in sleeping.

Let me give you an anecdote of some of the jovial and lively boys whose presence in a company did more to promote health and happiness than the hospital, quinine and opium pills. In the old Twelfth Indiana Regiment there were four or five of these kind of men, full of life and fun. Here is one, of Enoch Taylor's "Gauge games," as he called it. If Taylor is living he may remember me, and I hope he will forgive me for using his name.

While at camp in Darnestown, Md., in 1861, an order was issued for knapsack drill every afternoon. The men here the use of various devices and means to get into the habit of doing it. The state they produce is not sleep, but a condition of narcotism that counterfeits sleep," adding, "When a man says, 'I want a quiet night; I will take a sleeping draught,' he speaks in parables. To express the facts plainly he should say, 'I want a quiet night; or, I am afraid to trust to the chances of natural rest, so I will poison myself a little, just enough to make me unconscious or slightly paralyze my nerve-centers, not enough to kill.' If this fact should be kept clearly before the mind, the reckless use of drugs which produce a state of mock sleep would be limited." The state of inaction which is brought about by natural sleep is very different from that which is produced by paralysis of any degree. The following remarks are impressive: "Habit greatly helps the performance of the initial act, and the cultivation of a habit of going to sleep in a particular way, at a particular time, will do more to procure regular and healthy sleep than any other artifice. The formation of the habit is, in fact, the creation or development of a special center, or combination, in the nervous system, which will henceforward produce sleep as a natural rhythmic process."

This was more generally recognized, persons who suffer from sleeplessness of the sort which consists in being simply "unable to go to sleep" would set themselves resolutely to form such a habit. It is necessary that the training should be specific, and include attention to details. It is not very important what a person does with the intention of going to sleep; but he should do precisely the same thing, in the same way, at the same time, and under as nearly as possible the same conditions, night after night for a considerable period, say three or four weeks at least. The result will amply reward the effort.

The doctor remarks, very wisely, that "sleep is not induced by the instinct acting in response to the sense of fatigue, or in obedience to the impulse of habit; but when the orderly performance of a natural process has been interrupted, it is difficult to restore the rhythmic sequence of cause and effect." As he truly remarks, "the sufferings and discomfort of those who find the act of going to sleep difficult, are many and various." We can hardly, from our point of view, agree with the opinion which Dr. Mortimer Granville expresses, that "it is a mistake, and tends to the mischievous habit of partial sleep, to seek sleep as a relief from trouble, worry or pain." He holds that we should seek relief both for the mind and the body before sleep is sought, because "if this precaution be not taken, the sleep induced will be only loss of consciousness, or, perhaps, automatic, muscular or visceral, but not natural, and general sleep which alone gives general repose." We content ourselves with asking whether cases are not frequently arising in which the only chance apparently of gaining relief from pain of body and mind is by obtaining, first of all, a little sleep of some kind? But we will quote from this really interesting little book a valuable passage:

A constrained or uncomfortable posture will often prevent repose. Lying flat on the back, with the limbs relaxed, would seem to secure the greatest amount of rest for the muscular system. This is the position assumed in the most exhausting diseases, and it is generally hailed as a token of revival when a patient voluntarily turns on the side; but there are several disadvantages in the supine posture which impair or embarrass sleep. Thus, in weakly states of the heart and blood vessels, and in certain morbid conditions of the brain, the blood seems to gravitate to the back of the head, and to produce troublesome dreams. In persons who habitually in their gait or work, stoop, there is some distress consequent on straightening the spine. Those who have contracted chests, especially persons who have had pleurisy and retain adhesions of the lungs, do not sleep well on the back. Nearly all who are inclined to snore do so when in that position, because the soft palate and uvula hang on the tongue, and that organ falls back so as to partially close the top of the windpipe. It is better, therefore, to lie on the side, and in the absence of special chest disease, rendering it desirable to lie on the weak side so as to leave the healthy lung free to expand, it is well to choose the right side, because when the body is thus placed the food gravitates easily out of the stomach into the intestines, and the weight of the liver does not compress the upper portion of the intestines. A glance at any plate of the visceral anatomy will show how this must be. Many persons are deaf in one ear, and prior to lie on a particular side; but if possible, the right side should be chosen, and the body rolled a little forward so that any saliva which may be secreted shall run easily out of the mouth, if not unconsciously swallowed. Again, sleeping with the arms thrown over the head is to be deprecated; but this position is often assumed during sleep, because circulation is then free as if going on the mare, and the neck and the muscles of the chest are drawn up and fixed by the shoulders, and thus the expansion of the thorax is easy. The chief objections to this position are that it creates a tendency to cramp and cold in the arms, and sometimes seems to cause headaches during sleep and dreams. These small matters often make or mar comfort in sleeping.

Let me give you an anecdote of some of the jovial and lively boys whose presence in a company did more to promote health and happiness than the hospital, quinine and opium pills. In the old Twelfth Indiana Regiment there were four or five of these kind of men, full of life and fun. Here is one, of Enoch Taylor's "Gauge games," as he called it. If Taylor is living he may remember me, and I hope he will forgive me for using his name.

While at camp in Darnestown, Md., in 1861, an order was issued for knapsack drill every afternoon. The men here the use of various devices and means to get into the habit of doing it. The state they produce is not sleep, but a condition of narcotism that counterfeits sleep," adding, "When a man says, 'I want a quiet night; I will take a sleeping draught,' he speaks in parables. To express the facts plainly he should say, 'I want a quiet night; or, I am afraid to trust to the chances of natural rest, so I will poison myself a little, just enough to make me unconscious or slightly paralyze my nerve-centers, not enough to kill.' If this fact should be kept clearly before the mind, the reckless use of drugs which produce a state of mock sleep would be limited." The state of inaction which is brought about by natural sleep is very different from that which is produced by paralysis of any degree. The following remarks are impressive: "Habit greatly helps the performance of the initial act, and the cultivation of a habit of going to sleep in a particular way, at a particular time, will do more to procure regular and healthy sleep than any other artifice. The formation of the habit is, in fact, the creation or development of a special center, or combination, in the nervous system, which will henceforward produce sleep as a natural rhythmic process."

This was more generally recognized, persons who suffer from sleeplessness of the sort which consists in being simply "unable to go to sleep" would set themselves resolutely to form such a habit. It is necessary that the training should be specific, and include attention to details. It is not very important what a person does with the intention of going to sleep; but he should do precisely the same thing, in the same way, at the same time, and under as nearly as possible the same conditions, night after night for a considerable period, say three or four weeks at least. The result will amply reward the effort.

The doctor remarks, very wisely, that "sleep is not induced by the instinct acting in response to the sense of fatigue, or in obedience to the impulse of habit; but when the orderly performance of a natural process has been interrupted, it is difficult to restore the rhythmic sequence of cause and effect." As he truly remarks, "the sufferings and discomfort of those who find the act of going to sleep difficult, are many and various." We can hardly, from our point of view, agree with the opinion which Dr. Mortimer Granville expresses, that "it is a mistake, and tends to the mischievous habit of partial sleep, to seek sleep as a relief from trouble, worry or pain." He holds that we should seek relief both for the mind and the body before sleep is sought, because "if this precaution be not taken, the sleep induced will be only loss of consciousness, or, perhaps, automatic, muscular or visceral, but not natural, and general sleep which alone gives general repose." We content ourselves with asking whether cases are not frequently arising in which the only chance apparently of gaining relief from pain of body and mind is by obtaining, first of all, a little sleep of some kind? But we will quote from this really interesting little book a valuable passage:

A constrained or uncomfortable posture will often prevent repose. Lying flat on the back, with the limbs relaxed, would seem to secure the greatest amount of rest for the muscular system. This is the position assumed in the most exhausting diseases, and it is generally hailed as a token of revival when a patient voluntarily turns on the side; but there are several disadvantages in the supine posture which impair or embarrass sleep. Thus, in weakly states of the heart and blood vessels, and in certain morbid conditions of the brain, the blood seems to gravitate to the back of the head, and to produce troublesome dreams. In persons who habitually in their gait or work, stoop, there is some distress consequent on straightening the spine. Those who have contracted chests, especially persons who have had pleurisy and retain adhesions of the lungs, do not sleep well on the back. Nearly all who are inclined to snore do so when in that position, because the soft palate and uvula hang on the tongue, and that organ falls back so as to partially close the top of the windpipe. It is better, therefore, to lie on the side, and in the absence of special chest disease, rendering it desirable to lie on the weak side so as to leave the healthy lung free to expand, it is well to choose the right side, because when the body is thus placed the food gravitates easily out of the stomach into the intestines, and the weight of the liver does not compress the upper portion of the intestines. A glance at any plate of the visceral anatomy will show how this must be. Many persons are deaf in one ear, and prior to lie on a particular side; but if possible, the right side should be chosen, and the body rolled a little forward so that any saliva which may be secreted shall run easily out of the mouth, if not unconsciously swallowed. Again, sleeping with the arms thrown over the head is to be deprecated; but this position is often assumed during sleep, because circulation is then free as if going on the mare, and the neck and the muscles of the chest are drawn up and fixed by the shoulders, and thus the expansion of the thorax is easy. The chief objections to this position are that it creates a tendency to cramp and cold in the arms, and sometimes seems to cause headaches during sleep and dreams. These small matters often make or mar comfort in sleeping.

Let me give you an anecdote of some of the jovial and lively boys whose presence in a company did more to promote health and happiness than the hospital, quinine and opium pills. In the old Twelfth Indiana Regiment there were four or five of these kind of men, full of life and fun. Here is one, of Enoch Taylor's "Gauge games," as he called it. If Taylor is living he may remember me, and I hope he will forgive me for using his name.

While at camp in Darnestown, Md., in 1861, an order was issued for knapsack drill every afternoon. The men here the use of various devices and means to get into the habit of doing it. The state they produce is not sleep, but a condition of narcotism that counterfeits sleep," adding, "When a man says, 'I want a quiet night; I will take a sleeping draught,' he speaks in parables. To express the facts plainly he should say, 'I want a quiet night; or, I am afraid to trust to the chances of natural rest, so I will poison myself a little, just enough to make me unconscious or slightly paralyze my nerve-centers, not enough to kill.' If this fact should be kept clearly before the mind, the reckless use of drugs which produce a state of mock sleep would be limited." The state of inaction which is brought about by natural sleep is very different from that which is produced by paralysis of any degree. The following remarks are impressive: "Habit greatly helps the performance of the initial act, and the cultivation of a habit of going to sleep in a particular way, at a particular time, will do more to procure regular and healthy sleep than any other artifice. The formation of the habit is, in fact, the creation or development of a special center, or combination, in the nervous system, which will henceforward produce sleep as a natural rhythmic process."

This was more generally recognized, persons who suffer from sleeplessness of the sort which consists in being simply "unable to go to sleep" would set themselves resolutely to form such a habit. It is necessary that the training should be specific, and include attention to details. It is not very important what a person does with the intention of going to sleep; but he should do precisely the same thing, in the same way, at the same time, and under as nearly as possible the same conditions, night after night for a considerable period, say three or four weeks at least. The result will amply reward the effort.

The doctor remarks, very wisely, that "sleep is not induced by the instinct acting in response to the sense of fatigue, or in obedience to the impulse of habit; but when the orderly performance of a natural process has been interrupted, it is difficult to restore the rhythmic sequence of cause and effect." As he truly remarks, "the sufferings and discomfort of those who find the act of going to sleep difficult, are many and various." We can hardly, from our point of view, agree with the opinion which Dr. Mortimer Granville expresses, that "it is a mistake, and tends to the mischievous habit of partial sleep, to seek sleep as a relief from trouble, worry or pain." He holds that we should seek relief both for the mind and the body before sleep is sought, because "if this precaution be not taken, the sleep induced will be only loss of consciousness, or, perhaps, automatic, muscular or visceral, but not natural, and general sleep which alone gives general repose." We content ourselves with asking whether cases are not frequently arising in which the only chance apparently of gaining relief from pain of body and mind is by obtaining, first of all, a little sleep of some kind? But we will quote from this really interesting little book a valuable passage:

A constrained or uncomfortable posture will often prevent repose. Lying flat on the back, with the limbs relaxed, would seem to secure the greatest amount of rest for the muscular system. This is the position assumed in the most exhausting diseases, and it is generally hailed as a token of revival when a patient voluntarily turns on the side; but there are several disadvantages in the supine posture which impair or embarrass sleep. Thus, in weakly states of the heart and blood vessels, and in certain morbid conditions of the brain, the blood seems to gravitate to the back of the head, and to produce troublesome dreams. In persons who habitually in their gait or work, stoop, there is some distress consequent on straightening the spine. Those who have contracted chests, especially persons who have had pleurisy and retain adhesions of the lungs, do not sleep well on the back. Nearly all who are inclined to snore do so when in that position, because the soft palate and uvula hang on the tongue, and that organ falls back so as to partially close the top of the windpipe. It is better, therefore, to lie on the side, and in the absence of special chest disease, rendering it desirable to lie on the weak side so as to leave the healthy lung free to expand, it is well to choose the right side, because when the body is thus placed the food gravitates easily out of the stomach into the intestines, and the weight of the liver does not compress the upper portion of the intestines. A glance at any plate of the visceral anatomy will show how this must be. Many persons are deaf in one ear, and prior to lie on a particular side; but if possible, the right side should be chosen, and the body rolled a little forward so that any saliva which may be secreted shall run easily out of the mouth, if not unconsciously swallowed. Again, sleeping with the arms thrown over the head is to be deprecated; but this position is often assumed during sleep, because circulation is then free as if going on the mare, and the neck and the muscles of the chest are drawn up and fixed by the shoulders, and thus the expansion of the thorax is easy. The chief objections to this position are that it creates a tendency to cramp and cold in the arms, and sometimes seems to cause headaches during sleep and dreams. These small matters often make or mar comfort in sleeping.

Let me give you an anecdote of some of the jovial and lively boys whose presence in a company did more to promote health and happiness than the hospital, quinine and opium pills. In the old Twelfth Indiana Regiment there were four or five of these kind of men, full of life and fun. Here is one, of Enoch Taylor's "Gauge games," as he called it. If Taylor is living he may remember me, and I hope he will forgive me for using his name.

While at camp in Darnestown, Md., in 1861, an order was issued for knapsack drill every afternoon. The men here the use of various devices and means to get into the habit of doing it. The state they produce is not sleep, but a condition of narcotism that counterfeits sleep," adding, "When a man says, 'I want a quiet night; I will take a sleeping draught,' he speaks in parables. To express the facts plainly he should say, 'I want a quiet night; or, I am afraid to trust to the chances of natural rest, so I will poison myself a little, just enough to make me unconscious or slightly paralyze my nerve-centers, not enough to kill.' If this fact should be kept clearly before the mind, the reckless use of drugs which produce a state of mock sleep would be limited." The state of inaction which is brought about by natural sleep is very different from that which is produced by paralysis of any degree. The following remarks are impressive: "Habit greatly helps the performance of the initial act, and the cultivation of a habit of going to sleep in a particular way, at a particular time, will do more to procure regular and healthy sleep than any other artifice. The formation of the habit is, in fact, the creation or development of a special center, or combination, in the nervous system, which will henceforward produce sleep as a natural rhythmic process."

This was more generally recognized, persons who suffer from sleeplessness of the sort which consists in being simply "unable to go to sleep" would set themselves resolutely to form such a habit. It is necessary that the training should be specific, and include attention to details. It is not very important what a person does with the intention of going to sleep; but he should do precisely the same thing, in the same way, at the same time, and under as nearly as possible the same conditions, night after night for a considerable period, say three or four weeks at least. The result will amply reward the effort.

The doctor remarks, very wisely, that "sleep is not induced by the instinct acting in response to the sense of fatigue, or in obedience to the impulse of habit; but when the orderly performance of a natural process has been interrupted, it is difficult to restore the rhythmic sequence of cause and effect." As he truly remarks, "the sufferings and discomfort of those who find the act of going to sleep difficult, are many and various." We can hardly, from our point of view, agree with the opinion which Dr. Mortimer Granville expresses, that "it is a mistake, and tends to the mischievous habit of partial sleep, to seek sleep as a relief from trouble, worry or pain." He holds that we should seek relief both for the mind and the body before sleep is sought, because "if this precaution be not taken, the sleep induced will be only loss of consciousness, or, perhaps, automatic, muscular or visceral, but not natural, and general sleep which alone gives general repose." We content ourselves with asking whether cases are not frequently arising in which the only chance apparently of gaining relief from pain of body and mind is by obtaining, first of all, a little sleep of some kind? But we will quote from this really interesting little book a valuable passage:

A constrained or uncomfortable posture will often prevent repose. Lying flat on the back, with the limbs relaxed, would seem to secure the greatest amount of rest for the muscular system. This is the position assumed in the most exhausting diseases, and it is generally hailed as a token of revival when a patient voluntarily turns on the side; but there are several disadvantages in the supine posture which impair or embarrass sleep. Thus, in weakly states of the heart and blood vessels, and in certain morbid conditions of the brain, the blood seems to gravitate to the back of the head, and to produce troublesome dreams. In persons who habitually in their gait or work, stoop, there is some distress consequent on straightening the spine. Those who have contracted chests, especially persons who have had pleurisy and retain adhesions of the lungs, do not sleep well on the back. Nearly all who are inclined to snore do so when in that position, because the soft palate and uvula hang on the tongue, and that organ falls back so as to partially close the top of the windpipe. It is better, therefore, to lie on the side, and in the absence of special chest disease, rendering it desirable to lie on the weak side so as to leave the healthy lung free to expand, it is well to choose the right side, because when the body is thus placed the food gravitates easily out of the stomach into the intestines, and the weight of the liver does not compress the upper portion of the intestines. A glance at any plate of the visceral anatomy will show how this must be. Many persons are deaf in one ear, and prior to lie on a particular side; but if possible, the right side should be chosen, and the body rolled a little forward so that any saliva which may be secreted shall run easily out of the mouth, if not unconsciously swallowed. Again, sleeping with the arms thrown over the head is to be deprecated; but this position is often assumed during sleep, because circulation is then free as if going on the mare, and the neck and the muscles of the chest are drawn up and fixed by the shoulders, and thus the expansion of the thorax is easy. The chief objections to this position are that it creates a tendency to cramp and cold in the arms, and sometimes seems to cause headaches during sleep and dreams. These small matters often make or mar comfort in sleeping.

Let me give you an anecdote of some of the jovial and lively boys whose presence in a company did more to promote health and happiness than the hospital, quinine and opium pills. In the old Twelfth Indiana Regiment there were four or five of these kind of men, full of life and fun. Here is one, of Enoch Taylor's "Gauge games," as he called it. If Taylor is living he may remember me, and I hope he will forgive me for using his name.

While at camp in Darnestown, Md., in 1861, an order was issued for knapsack drill every afternoon. The men here the use of various devices and means to get into the habit of doing

OAKLAND REPUBLICAN

JANUARY 7, 1879

TO

DECEMBER 27, 1879

MISSING: NONE

MdBE

END